I. BORNEFORD AND PACKINGTON'S CASE.

Custom of Free-Bench.

In trespass, It was found by special verdict, that the defendant was seised of the manor of B. whereof the place where is parcel, demised and demiseable by copy, &c. And that B. the grandfather of the plaintiff was seised of the place where, &c. according to the custom of the said manor, in fee-simple, and that within the said manor there is this custom, that if any copy-holder dieth seised, his wife over-living him shall hold all the land during her widowhood as free-bench, and shall be admitted tenant to the lord, and that the heir shall not be admitted to it during the life of his mother: and found also another custom within the said manor, that if any copy-holder be convicted of felony, and the same be presented by the homage, that then the lord might seize, &c. And it was further found, that the grandfather of the plaintiff took a wife, and died seised, having issue A. father of the plaintiff. The wife is admitted to her free-bench, A. is convicted of felony, and that is presented by the homage; and afterwards A. died, after which the wife died, &c. It was argued by Atkinson, that A. is not within the danger of this custom, for during the life of his mother, who by a claimer is tenant to the lord, and admitted to it, she is copy-holder; and it is not like to the case lately adjudged of possessio fratris, without admittance, for there the party was admittable, and so he was not here: And also it appeareth by the custom as it is found, that the lord upon such matter shall seize, and therefore we ought to make construction that this custom doth not extend to cases where the lord cannot seize; but in the case at bar, the lord cannot seize by reason of this free-bench; and we ought not by any construction to extend a custom beyond the words in which it is conceived, but it shall be taken strictly, and not be supplyed by equity with a custom in the place of a seisure. But notwithstanding all this, afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

A copy-holder doth surrender to the use of one A. upon trust, that he shall hold the said land until he hath levyed certain monies, and that afterwards he shall surrender to the use of B.; the monies are levyed, A. is required to make surrender to the use of B. he refuseth, B. exhibits a bill to the lord of the mannor against the said A. who upon hearing of the cause decrees against A. that he shall surrender; he refuseth, now the lord may seize, and admit B. to the copy-hold, for he in such cases is Chancellor in his own Court, per totam curiam.

III. WADE AND BEMBOES CASE.

In a writ of error by Wade against Bembo upon a judgment given in the Court of the City of Bristol, the case was, that Bembo was plaintiff in the said Court against Wade in an action of covenant, and declared of a covenant made by word by the testator of Wade with Bembo; and declared also, that within the said city there is a custom, that conventio ore tenus facta, shall bind the covenantor as strongly as if it were made by writing: and it was holden by the Court, that that custom doth not warrant this action, for the covenant binds by the custom the covenantor, but doth not extend to his executors, and a custom shall be taken strictly, and therefore the judgment was reversed.

IV. THE LORD PAGET AND SIR WALTER ASHTONS CASE.

The Lord Paget brought an action of trespass against Sir Walter Ashton, who justified because he is seised of three messuages to him and his heirs, and that he and all those whose estate he hath, &c. have had the woodwardship of the forrest of C. within which, the place where, &c. and also have had within the said forrest estovers without number: And that one Rowland Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield was seised of the forrest aforesaid in the right of his church, and by indenture betwixt him and Sir Edw. Ashton his ancestor, whose heir he is, setting forth that divers debates had been betwixt the said parties concerning some profits within the said forrest; it was agreed betwixt them, that the said Sir Ed. Ashton should release unto the said Rowland all his right in the said office and estovers, and that the said Rowland should grant de novo unto the said Edw. and his heirs the said office, and one hundred loads of estovers per annum out of the said forrest: after which the said Ed. according to the said agreement, did release to the said bishop ut supra, after which the said bishop by indenture reciting the said former covenants in compl. indenturæ prædict. convent. did grant to the said Sir Ed. the said office and estovers pro easiamento dicti Edwardi, & hæred. suorum by assignment of the officers of the said forrest; and if the assignment be not made within ten days after request, that then the said Ed. and his heirs should cut down wood where they pleased; and averred, the things released were of as great value as the things granted: and upon this matter the plaintiff did demurr in law, and it was adjudged for the plaintiff, for here no inheritance in the things granted passed to the said Sir Ed. but only an interest for his own life; for the grant was to Sir Ed. only without the word, heirs; and the reference to the indentures, by which the bishop hath covenanted to grant the inheritance, nor the words in the grant imply an estate in fee, s. pro easimento dict. Ed. [3] & hæred. suorum, and that in default of assignment it should be lawful for Sir Ed. and his heirs, shall not supply the defect of the words in the grant.

V. GILBERT AND SIR GEORGE HARTS CASE.

Escape.

Gilbert brought debt upon escape against Sir George Hart Sheriff of Kent, and declared, that he recovered a certain debt against A. who was taken in execution, &c. And the case was, that the said A. was taken in execution in the time of the old sheriff, and escaped also then: and afterwards the defendant being sheriff, the plaintiff again sued a scire facias against the said A. upon the judgment aforesaid, upon which execution was awarded by default, and thereupon issued a capias ad satisfaciendum, by which A. was taken, and escaped: and by the opinion of all the justices, the defendant in this case shall be charged for notwithstanding that A. was once in execution, which was determined by escape in the time of the old sheriff, yet when execution was now awarded against him upon his default in the scire facias, the same shall bind the sheriff out of whose custody he escaped.

VI. MOOR AND FARRANDS CASE.

Condition where shall not bind Administrators.

Moore leased lands to Farrand upon condition that he, his executors or assigns should not alien without the leave of the lessor; Farrand died intestate, his wife took letters of administration, and aliened without leave, and by Periam Justice, she is not within the penalty of the condition, for the administrator is not meerly in by the party, but by the ordinary: and by Meade and Periam, if a lease for years upon such a condition be extended upon a recognizance, the same is not an alienation against the condition: but if feme lessee for years upon such condition taketh a husband and dieth, the husband is within the danger of the condition, for he is assignee: if the King grant to a subject bona & catalla felonum, and the lessor for years upon such a condition be out-lawed, upon which the patentee enters, now by Periam the patentee is not bound by the condition. Mead, contrary, for the condition shall go with the land.

VII. MAYNYES CASE.

Dower. Attainder where an Estoppel.

Mayney seised of lands in fee, took a wife, made a feoffment to a stranger, committeth treason, and thereof is attainted, and hath a charter of pardon and dieth. It was moved by Plowden in the Exchequer, if the wife of Mayney shall have dower against the feoffee: Manwood Chief Baron, by reason of this attainder dower cannot accrue to the wife, for her title begins by the enter-marriage, and ought to continue and be consummated by the death of the husband, which cannot be in this case; for the attainder of the husband hath interrupted it, as in the case of elopement: and this attainder is an universal estoppel, and doth not run in privity only betwixt the wife and him to whom the escheat belongs, but every stranger may bar her of her dower by reason thereof; for by the attainder of her husband the wife is disabled to demand dower as well as to demand his inheritance; and he cited the resolution of all the justices of England in the case of the Lady Gates, 4. Ma. Dyer. 140. and the pardon doth not help the matter, for the same extends but to the [4] life of the offender, but doth not take away the attainder by which she is barred to demand dower during the said attainder in force: see the statute of 5. Leases for three lives of Copy-hold estate are not within Stat 41. Eliz. Copy-holders Interest.

In the Exchequer it was found by special verdict, that the guardians and chanons regular of Otlery, were seised of the mannor of O, &c. and that 22 H. 7. at a Court holden there, granted the lands in question to W. and W. his son for their lives by copy, according to the custom of the said mannor, and that afterwards 30 H. 8. they leased the lands by indenture to H. rendering the ancient and accustomed rent, and afterward surrendered their colledge, &c. and afterward W. and W. dyed: and if that lease so made during the customary estate for life, notwithstanding the statute of 31 H. 8. be good or not, was the question, being within a year before the surrender, &c. It was argued by Egerton sollicitor, that the said lease is void by the statute; the words of which are (whereof or in the which any estate or interest for term of life, year, or years, at the time of the making of any such lease, had his being or continuance, and was not then determined finished, or expired) and therefore we are to see, if that right or possession which W. had at the time of the making of the lease were an interest, or an estate for life: And as to this word (estate) it is nothing else than measure of time, for an estate in fee-simple is as much as to say, an interest in the lands for ever, and the like of other estates, and therefore here W. and W. had at the time of the making of this lease an estate for life in the thing demised: And although such customary tenants are termed in law tenants at will, yet they are not simply so, nor meerly tenants at will, but only tenants at will, secundum consuetudinem manerii, which custom warrants his possession here for his life, and therefore it is a more certain estate than an estate at will, for the copyholder may justifie against his lord, so cannot a tenant at will, whose estate is determined at the will and pleasure of his lessor: and although this estate is but by custom, and by no conveyance the estate is raised; it is as material, so as it be an estate: and this estate being supported by custom is known in law an estate and so accounted in law; and the law hath notably distinguished copy-hold tenancies by custom, and tenancies at will by the common law; for a copy-holder shall do fealty, shall have aid of his lord in an action of trespass, shall have and maintain an action of trespass against his lord, his wife shall be indowed, the husband shall be tenant by the curtesie without new admittance: and it was adjudged in the Common Pleas, 8. Eliz. that if a copy-holder surrender to the use of another for years, the lessee dieth, his executors shall have the residue of the term without any admittance, M. 14. and 15. Eliz. a copy-holder made a lease for years by indenture warranted by the custom, it was adjudged that the lessees should maintain ejectione firm. although it was objected, that if it were so, then if the plaintiff doth recover, he should have habere facias possessionem; and then copyholds should be ordered by the laws of the land, 10. Eliz. lord and copy-holder for life, the lord grants a rent-charge out of the mannor, whereof the copy-hold is parcel, the copy-holder surrenders to the use of A. who is admitted accordingly, he shall not hold it charged, but if the copy-holder dieth so that his estate is determined, and the lord granteth to a stranger de novo to hold the said lands by copy, this new tenant shall hold the land charged: and so was it rated and adjudged in the Common Pleas. It was adjorned.

IX. THE LORD PAGET AND THE BISHOP OF COVENTRY AND LEICHFIELDS CASE.

Endictment. Challenge.

The Bishop of Coventry and Leichfield was endicted of trespass in the county of Stafford, of breaking and entring of the close of Thomas Lord Paget, called the Vineyard; the bishop traversed the endictment, and at the day of appearance of the jury, the bishop challenged the array, because that he being a peer of Parliament, no knight was returned, &c. Upon which challenge the Queens Counsel did demur in law, but at last, for expedition, &c. the Court delivered to the councel of the bishop, a bill sealed to save him the advantage of the said challenge: and the enquest was taken, de bene esse, who found, that one A. by the commandment of the bishop entred into the said close called the Vineyard, being then in the occupation of one B. at will, of the said Lord Paget, and did the trespass, viz. digged a turff there, and there left it, and so departed. The matter of challenge was many times argued, and it was argued against the said challenge, because that the King is party, against whom no lord of Parliament shall have such prerogative. To which it was answered on the other side, that so much the rather the challenge lyeth in the case, for where a peer of the Parliament is to be tryed upon an endictment of treason or felony, it shall be per pares; if upon appeal of murder, or felony by ordinary tryal, see 33. H. 8. Br. Tryal 42. and Br. Enquest, 49. It was said on the plaintiffs side, that here the bishop is quodam modo, and the venire facias issued at his own sute, and therfore the mismaking of the pannell is his own fault; but by Gaudy Justice, the venire facias in this case is reputed in law, the sute of the Queen, notwithstanding that the party endicted for his expedition, doth pay the fees for the process, for that the Clarks of the Court have encroached for their gain, for otherwise there should be none paid by the Queen; and by the better opinion of the Court, the challenge was holden good. Another matter was moved, because the endictment is (clausum Domini Paget) and it appeareth by the verdict, that the said close at the time of the trespass was in the occupation of B. at the will of the Lord Paget: for the Lord Paget cannot have an action of trespass against the said bishop, or the said A. upon the matter; and by Wray, the Lord Paget cannot have trespass, Quare clausum fregit & intravit upon this matter; but for digging upon the land, demised, or cutting of trees, an action lyeth, 19 H. 6. Tit. trespass, 36. But here the endictment is, that one F. entred by the commandment of the bishop, upon which matter no action lyeth against the bishop, by the Lord Paget, and especially in this case where the said A. did not carry away the said turff from thence. But by Wray; notwithstanding that the action of trespass doth not lye for the lessor, yet it is well enough by way of endictment. Another exception was taken to the endictment, because it is alleadged, that A. by commandment of the bishop entred, and did the trespass, and no place is shewed where the commandment was, and for this cause the bishop was discharged.

X. STONLEY AND BRACEBRIDGES CASE.

Livery, where it prevents operation of an Enrolment.

In ejectione firmæ, by Stonley against Bracebridge, the case was, Thomas Bracebridge father of the defendant was seised of the mannor of Kingsbury, to him and to the heirs males of his body, and 32 H. 8. leased a field called Stalling, parcell of the said mannor, to Tho. Coke for years, and afterwards, 4 E. 6. leased the said field (the first lease be-[6]-ing in esse) to Sir Geo. Griffith for seventy years, who assigned the same to A. Bracebridge brother of the lessor, and to Joyce wife of the lessor, and afterwards, 5 E. 6. the said Tho. Bracebridge, the lessor, by his deed indented, gave the said mannor to the said Sir George by these words (dedi, concessi, barganizavi, & vendidi) proviso, and upon condition, that the said Sir George, should pay to the said Thomas Bracebridge, within fifteen days after, ten hundred pounds, and if he fail of payment thereof, that then after the said fifteen days, the said Sir George should be seised of a tenement, parcel of the said mannor of the yearly value of three pounds (now of late in the occupation of Thomas Smith) to the use of the said Thomas Bracebridge for his life, and after to the said Sir George, until he had levyed five hundred pounds for the payment of the debts, and the education of the children of the said Thomas Bracebridge, and after to the use of the defendant in tail: and of the residue of the said mannor, to the use of the said Tho. Bracebridge, and of the said Joyce his wife for their lives, &c. Tho. Bracebridge, made livery to the said Sir George, in one place parcel of the said mannor, which was in his own occupation in the name of the whole mannor: the fifteen days incur without payment of the said ten hundred pounds, the indenture is enroled, Coke attorns, Joyce dyes, Tho. Bracebridge grants the lands to a stranger by fine, and before proclamations, Thomas his son and heir apparent, within age, enters in the name of the feoffees by reason of the forfeiture, proclamations are made, Tho. Bracebridge the father dyeth, the term of Coke expireth, A. enters, and leaseth to the plaintiff, who enters, upon whom Tho. Bracebridge the son enters, upon which entry the action is brought, it was argued by Beamount the elder: although here in the indenture of bargain and sale, there is not an express consideration set down in the common form of a consideration, yet because the consideration is implied in the condition, it is good enough (see the proviso and condition, ut supra, that the said Sir George should pay, &c.) As if I bargain and sell to you my land, proviso that you pay to me for the same at such a day one hundred pounds, that consideration set down in the form of a condition is as effectual, as if it had been formally expressed in the usual terms. As to the second payment, where a man bargains and sells his lands by deed indented to be enroled, and before enrolment he makes livery to the bargainee, and afterwards the indentur is enroled, the Court discharged Beamount from the arguing of that point, for by Wray, the livery doth prevent the operation of the enrolment, and Sir George shall be accounted in by the livery, and not by the bargain and sale; for livery is of more worth, and more worthy ceremony to pass estates, and therefore shall be preferred: and then the livery being made in such part of the mannor, which was in the possession of the feoffor in the name of the whole mannor, no more of the mannor passeth but that which was then in the possession of the feoffor: and the reversion of such part of the mannor which was in lease shall not pass without attornment, but when the enrolment cometh, now the whole passeth, and then the reversion being setled by the enrolment, the attornment coming afterwards hath no relation: see 48 E. 3. 15. 16. The jury here have found the default of payment, whereby the conditional use which passed by the bargain and sale, upon the condition broken, shall be reduced to the bargainor without any entry, and then the uses limited after are void, for an use limited upon an use cannot rise; quod fuit concessum per totam curiam: then Bracebridge the father, having the inheritance of the said mannor in his own right, and the interest de futuro for years in the right of his wife joyntly with the said A. when he sells the said mannor by deed indented and enroled now thereby the interest for years which he hath in the right of his wife doth not pass, for a bargain and sale is not so strong a conveyance as a livery. As if I have a rent-charge in the right of my wife, out of the manor of D. which manor [7] afterwards I purchase, and afterwards by deed indented and enroled, I bargain and sell the said manor, &c. the rent shall not pass. Then the said Thomas Bracebridge the father having the said right of an entail to him and to the heirs males of his body, and being tenant for life, by his own conveyance, the remainder in tail to his son and heir apparent, the now defendant, when he levyeth a fine, and the son enters for forfeiture before proclamations pass, and his father dyeth, in that case the defendant is not remitted unto the first entail, although after proclamations pass in the life of the father, and so he shall not avoid the leases; for notwithstanding that the issue in tail by that entry hath defeated the possession which passed by the fine, yet as to the right of the old entail, the fine doth retain its force, and so he entred, quodam modo, in assurance of the fine: as if tenant in tail doth discontinue and disseiseth the discontinuee, and levieth a fine with proclamations, and the discontinuee enters within the five years, now although the fine as to the discontinuee be avoided, so as the possession which passed by the fine is defeated, yet the right of the entail doth continue bound: Egerton solicitor contrary: and he conceived, that all the mannor doth pass by the livery to Sir George, and nothing of it by the enrolment, and that the meaning of the parties was, that all should pass by the livery, for if the assurance should enure by the bargain and sale, then the second uses limited upon default of payment, should never rise; for an use upon an use cannot rise, and then the said uses limited for the payment of the debts of the feoffor, &c. should be defeated; and also where at the begining of the assurance, the condition was entire, the warranty entire, &c. and if such construction should be allowed, here shall be a divided condition, a divided warranty: and also the meaning of the parties that the whole mannor should pass, by such construction should be dismembred, and part pass by the livery, and part by the bargain and sale, and we ought to make such constructions of deeds, that things may pass by them according to the meanings of the parties; as if I be seised of a mannor to which an advowson is appendant, and I make a deed of feoffment of the same mannor, cum pertinencijs, and deliver the deed to the party, but no livery of seisin is had, the advowson shall not pass, for then it should be in gross, whereas the meaning of the parties was, that it should pass as appendant, and that in such case cannot be, for there is no livery, therefore it shall not pass at all, and so it hath been adjudged: so if I bargain and sell my mannor of D. and all the trees in the same, and I deliver the deed, but it is not enrolled, the trees shall not pass, for the intent of the parties was, that the trees should pass, as parcel of the free-hold and not as chattels. And as to the remitter, I conceive, that the heir entring as heir, by the law is remitted, but where the entry is given by a special statute, there the entry shall not enure further than the words of the statute; as land is given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the husband, the husband levieth a fine and dieth, the wife entreth, this entry shall not avail to the issue in tail, for the entry is given to the wife by a special law: and he cited Sir Richard Haddons case, the husband alienes the lands of his wife, they are divorced, the husband dieth, the wife shall not enter by 32. H. 8. but is put to her writ of cui in vita ante divor. And afterwards the same term the justices having considered of the case, delivered their opinions upon the matters by Wray chief Justice, viz. that the one moyety of the lease was extinct by the livery, viz. the moyety of Ioyce the wife of the lessor; and as to the other moyety it is in being, for here is no remitter; for if any remitter had been in the case, it should be after the use raised, which is not as yet raised, for the land ought to remain in Sir George until the said five hundred pounds be levyed, and that is not found by the verdict, and therefore for the said moyety, the plaintiff had judgment.

[8] MICH. 25 & 26 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

XI. TRESHAMS CASE.

Fine for Alienation without Licence. Entry for Condition, what acts it shall defeat. Condition shall not avoid an Interest vested.

Sir John Tresham seised of the manor of D. holden of the King in capite by knights service, 4 H. 7. enfeoffed Edmund Earl of Wilts and N. Vaux knight, who gave the said manor to the said Sir John in tail, upon condition that he should not alien, &c. quo minus, &c. John Tresham dyed seised, by whose decease the manor descended to Tho. Tresham, who entred, and 18 H. 8. aliened with licence, by recovery, &c. N. Vaux the surviving feoffee died, having issue W. Lord Vaux; the purchasor died seised, his son and heir 14 Eliz. levied a fine sur conusans de droit, &c. and that fine was levied to the use of the conusee, &c. and that without licence: the Lord Vaux within five years after the fine levied, entred for the condition broken: and now issued forth a scire facias against the conusee for that alienation without licence, who made default, whereupon issued process to seize the lands; whereupon came Sir Tho. Tresham, and shewed the whole matter aforesaid, and prayed to be discharged. It was said, that this prerogative to have a fine for alienation without licence, had lately beginning upon the original creation of seignories, so as this prerogative is as it were paramount the seignory, and shall go paramount the condition, as well as the condition is paramount the alienation, but if the disseisor of the tenant of the King maketh a feoffment in fee, now upon the entry of the disseisee, the person of the feoffee shall be charged with a fine, but the land by the re-entry of the disseisee is discharged: and such is the opinion of the Lord Frowick, in his Reading upon the Statute of Prerogativa Regis, and the reason is, because the disseisor is not tenant to the King, and so when he aliens, it cannot be said an alienation by the Kings tenant. See 45 E. 3. 6. If the tenant of the King in chief leaseth for life with licence, and afterwards grants the reversion over without licence, the tenant for life is not bound to atturn in a quid juris clamat; wherefore it seems, that if such tenant doth attorn, the King shall seize presently. This entry for the condition broken is not to have so violent a retrospect to the first livery to which the condition was annexed, that it shall defeat all things mean between the creation and the breach of the condition, but it shall defeat all mean things which rise upon the act of the party, as kent, dower, &c. But charges which accrue by reason of tenure, do remain, notwithstanding the entry for the condition broken: as if such a tenant of the King maketh a feoffment in fee upon condition, which is broken, the feoffee dieth seised, his heir of full age, the feoffor re-entereth, this re-entry by force of the condition broken hath not so avoided the descent, but the King shall have relief upon the said descent, for the relief is paramount the livery, and the condition. So if a feoffee upon condition disclaim in avowry, by which the lord brings a writ of right sur disclaimer, and hath judgment; the feoffee entreth for the condition broken, the said re-entry shall not avoid the interest of the lord by the judgment on the writ of disclaimer, but he may enter at his pleasure; and it was moved by Plowden who argued for Tresham, that if the tenant of the King, being non compos mentis, makes a feoffment in fee, and dieth, his heir entring upon the feoffee shall not pay a fine for the alienation of his father, but the person of the father shall be charged with it. And at the end of this term, after many arguments and motions, judgment was given for the Queen, that she should seize the land and hold the same for the fine, and that she should not be driven to sue the person of the feoffee or conusee: and by Manwood chief Baron, at the Common Law in many manors, tenant in [9] soccage upon every alienation shall pay a fine, nomine relevii, a fortiori, in the Kings case, and therefore he was of opinion, that this prerogative to have a fine for alienation without licence is by the common law, and not by any statute.

Mich. 25 and 26 Eliz. in the Exchequer Chamber.

XII. Caters Case.

Intrusion. Error. Privy Seal. Fugitives.

A bill of intrusion was in the Exchequer against Cater, who pleaded the grant of the Queen, the plaintiff replicando said, that before the Queen had any thing, &c. Sir Francis Englefield was seised of the manor, of which, &c. and he being beyond the seas, the Queen sent her letters under the Privy Seal, quod ipse in fide, & legeantiâ quâ dictæ Reginæ tenebatur, indirecte rediret in Angliam, prædict. tamen Franciscus (spretis mandatis dict. Reginæ) venire recusavit, for which a certificate was by the said Queen into the Chancery, quod dictus Franciscus in portibus transmarinis sine licentia dict. Reginæ remansit; and thereupon a commission was awarded to seize the lands of the said Sir Francis, which was entered in the replication in hæc verba, reciting also the Queens Privy Seal, and that the said Sir Francis did stay there (spretis mandatis, &c.) for which the Queen seised and granted to the plaintiff: and afterwards the statutes of 13 and 14. Eliz. were made: after which the said grant was made to the defendant, upon which matter there was a demurrer and judgment given for the plaintiff. And now Cater brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber, and it was first assigned for error, because that the record is entered inter Johannem Cater present. hic in curia by I.S. attornatum suum, and that cannot be, for it is oppositum in objecto, that one can be present in Court and also by attorney, simul & semel, for the attorney is to supply the default of the personal presence. To which it was said by Wray, Anderson and Periam, that the matter assigned was no error, for there are many presidents in the Exchequer of such entries, which were openly shewed in Court 48 E. 3. 10. R. 2. 20 H. 7. 20 H. 8. And by Manwood chief baron it is not so absurd an entry as it hath been objected, for if one hath an attorney of record in the Kings Bench, and he himself is in the Marshalsey, there is an action against him, he is present as prisoner, and also by attorney, and by them, notwithstanding that here appeareth a contrariety for such entry properly is (presentem hic in curia in propriâ persona sua) yet because many proceedings are according, it is the more safe course to follow them, for if this judgment be reversed for this cause, many records should be also reversed, which should be very perillous: an other error was assigned, because it is not alledged in the replication, of what date the Privy Seal was, nor that any notice of the said Privy Seal was given to Sir Francis, to which it was said, that the Privy Seal need not any date, especially in this case, for the matters which are under the Privy Seal are not issuable. See 2 Eliz. Dyer. 177. nor any traverse can be taken to it; and this Privy Seal is not as other writs and præcipes are, returnable in any Court, but the Queen her self from whom originally it came shall receive it, and also the message upon it, and she her self in such case is judge of the contempt, and no record of that Privy Seal doth remain in any Court, but the Queen her self shall keep it, and then when the Queen is informed of the contempt, she makes a warrant sometimes to the Chancellor to award a commission, sometimes to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer to the same purpose to seize the lands, and that warrant is signed, with the seal manual of the Queen, and the Queen may certifie, and set down the cause of such seizure in such warrant, and no other certificate is made by the Queen, and the Queen may certify the same commission by word of mouth, and if the other party will say that the Queen hath not certified it, he shall be concluded by the commission which is under the Great Seal, and di-[10]-vers prsidents were shewed openly in Court to that effect. And all the matter aforesaid, was agreed by the Chancellor, Treasurer, and the said justices, and no certificate at all needs to be in the case, and then a superfluous certificate being nought, shall not hurt: for nugation is surplusage. Another matter was to consider, what interest the Queen hath in the lands of fugitives by the common law; and as to that they were all clear of opinion, that the Queen in such case as aforesaid may seize, and assign her interest over: and that such assignees may grant copy-holds, parcel of the manor assigned, which grants shall bind him who cometh in after, cum manus domini regis amoventur; and also when the statutes of 13 and 14 Eliz. come, the statutes do not amend the estate of the Queen, but the estate of the Queen doth continue as before, and all the estates under it. And there was shewed unto the Court divers presidents of seizures in such cases, 18 E. 2. Edmond de Woodstock, Earl of Kent, went beyond sea without licence of the King, and he went with Robert de Mortimer, and the King did certifie the same into the Chancery, reciting that he had sent his Privy Seal, &c. but that the said Edmond (spretis mandatis nostris redire recusavit) upon which issued a commission to seize, &c. And it was holden that the Queen having seised by force of the common law, and making a grant of a copyhold out of it, now when the statutes of 13 & 14 Eliz. are made, she hath not any estate thereby, for she had such interest before, and this new seisure after the statutes works nothing, and nothing accrues to her thereby, whereof she can make a seisure: for she hath departed with the whole before, see 23 Eliz. Dyer 376. And note, that the grant of the Queen in the case at bar was, quamdiu in manibus nostris fore contigerit. And afterwards judgment was given, that judicium prædictum in omnibus affirmetur.

XIII. SUTTON AND DOWSES CASE.

Tithes.

Sutton, vicar of Longstoke, libelled against Dowse in the Spiritual Court, and shewed in his libel, that upon the erection and endowment of his vicaridge, four quarters of corn were assigned to the vicar out of the granary of the prior of B. of the tithes of the parson of Longstoke, and that the parson or fermor of the said rectory of Longstoke, had always paid the said four quarters of corn to the said vicar and all his predecessors, and alledged further, that the Lord Sands was seised of the said rectory, and leased the barn and tithe-corn parcel of the said rectory, to the said Dowse, his wife and son, habendum to Dowse for term of his life, the remainder to the wife for term of her life, the remainder to the son for life: and shewed further, that the said Dowse had covenanted with the said Lord Sands, to render the said four quarters of wheat to the vicar and his successors, upon which Dowse procured a prohibition, and Sutton prayed a consultation, and it was moved in stay of the consultation that the vicar had libelled upon a covenant wherein Dowse is taxed to pay the said corn, and that is a lay title, and determinable by the law of the land, and not in the Ecclesiastical Court: but as to that the opinion of the Court was, that the libel is not grounded upon the covenant, as the sole title to the said corn against Dowse, but upon the endowment of the vicaridge, and the lease by which Dowse is become fermor of the rectory. Another matter was moved, because that upon the libel it appeareth, that the lease aforesaid made by the Lord Sands was made to Dowse his wife, and his son, joyntly, in the premises, habendum ut supra, in which case it was objected, that Dowse his wife, and his son, are all three fermors of the said barn and tithes joyntly in possession, against all whom Sut-[11]-ton ought to have libelled, &c. and not against Dowse only, for the habendum hath not severed their estates which were joynt before, quod tota curia negavit, for the habendum hath severed the joynt estates limited by the premises, and hath distinguished it into remainders, but if the habendum had been habendum successive, the estate had remained joynt: another matter was moved, because it appeareth upon the libel, that the parson, or fermor of the said rectory ought to pay to the vicar the said corn, and also it appeareth upon the matter that Dowse is not parson, nor fermor of the said rectory, for the Lord Sands had leased to Dowse and his son, only the barn and the tith-corn parcel of the said rectory; so as Dowse is fermor but of parcel of the rectory, and the residue of the rectory doth remain in the Lord Sands, in which the said Sut. ought to have libelled against the Lord Sands, and Dowse, and not against Dowse only; and for that cause the consultation was denyed. And in this case it was further agreed by the Court, that if upon a libel in the Spiritual Court, the defendant makes a surmise in banco to have a prohibition, if such surmise be insufficient, the other party needeth not to demur upon it, and to have it entered upon record, but as amicus curiæ, he shall shew the same to the Court, and the Court shall discharge him.

XIV. PUNSANY AND LEADERS CASE.

Prescription of Foldage.

Osmond Punsany brought an action upon the case against Leader, and declared, that one Bedingfield was seised of the manor of D. and that he and all those whose estate he hath in the said manor time out of mind have had libertatem faldagij & cursum ovium, in the town of D. & pro meliori pasturatione omnium ovium suorum, the inhabitants of the said town having any lands within the said town, every second year left their lands to lye fresh and untilled, and prescribed further, that the tenants of the lands within the said town might erect herdals in their lands, with the licence of the lord of the said manor, and not otherwise: and further declared, that the said Bedingfield had let to him the said manor, and that the defendant had erected herdals upon his lands without licence, so as the profit of his foldage is impaired by it: and all this matter was found by verdict: and it was objected in stay of judgment, that the prescription is not good, for it is against law and common right to abridge the subject of the profits of his lands: but the whole Court was clear of opinion, that the prescription is good enough, as 15 E. 2. Prescription 51. prescription to have common appendant in other land after that the hay is cut, and v E. 1. Prescription, 55. A. seised of lands may plow it and sow it, and cut and carry away the corn, and afterwards when the corn is carried, B. by prescription may have the said land as his several, and the other who sowed it cannot meddle with that land, but to plow and sow it in season, &c. And the cattel cannot eat and pasture in the land when they come to plow or sow it, or to carry it away, nor have any profit but the corn, and yet the free-hold of the land is in such person, &c. and that was holden a good prescription, and a difference was taken by the Court, where one doth prescribe to take away the whole interest of the owner of the land, and where a particular profit is restrained: and here this prescription doth not extend but to restrain the ter-tenant to erect herdals, which is a reasonable prescription, see 1 H. 7. 24. The lord of the town doth prescribe to have free foldage of the beasts of his tenants in D. and see there, that libera falda is not any other, but to hav the beasts of the tenants to manure the lands of the lord, &c. And afterwards Punsany the plaintiff had judgment to recover.

In the Dutchy Chamber, the case was, that King E. 6. leased for years certain lands parcel of his dutchy of Lancaster, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry, and that a lease was made to one Bunny; it was found by office that the rent was arrear, and by another office, that the servant of the said lessee, had tendered the rent in his absence, and by the commandment of his master, and that afterwards one I. S. receiver general of the dutchy, received the said rent, and had accounted for it, and upon his account it was allowed; and this matter was opened at Serjeants Inn in Fleet-street, before Wray, Anderson, Manwood, Clench, Rhodes, Plowden, and Stanhop; and it was argued by Shuttleworth, that in this case of rent reserved upon a lease for years, made by the King of dutchy land, the King is not bound to demand it, but he may for default of payment of it, re-enter without demand, and that the lessee is tied to tender it at his peril, as well as if the Queen had been seised of the said land in the right of her Crown; and as to that payment, the statute of 1 H. 4. is to be considered, by which it is enacted, that the possessions of the said dutchy taliter, & tali modo, & per tales officiarios & ministros in omnibus remaneant, deducantur, & gubernentur sicut remanere, deduci, & gubernari debuissent, si ad culmen regis dignitatis assumpti non fuissemus, and these words ought to be intended of things which concern the lands themselves, but this act of demand is a personal thing, and concerns the person of the King, and toucheth the majesty, and dignity of the King, and in all cases of the dutchy the person of the King shall hold his priviledge, notwithstanding that the possession of the land be carried in the course of a private person: and therefore if the Queen will alien lands parcel of her dutchy, she ought to make livery, for now she meddles with the possession it self: but if the Queen will sue for parcel of her dutchy, non omittas shall be in the writ, for she cannot sue but as Queen, and the Queen hath such prerogative, that none shall execute her writs of her own sute, but the officer of the Crown, 21 E 4. 60., for livery, if it be not land within the county palatine, and for the residue, see 10 H. 4. 7. 3. Eliz. 216, 217. Plowden, lessee for years of lands of the dutchy, shall have aid of the King before issue joyned, &c. And if the King make a feoffment of lands of his dutchy out of the county palatine, to hold of him in capite, the feoffee shall hold it so, and a feoffment of such lands upon condition that the feoffee shall not alien is a good condition, and lapses shall not bind the Queen in case of an advowson which the Queen hath in the right of the dutchy, and if the villain of the Queen in the right of the dutchy purchaseth lands in fee, and aliens, yet the Queen shall seise, and that hath been adjudged in the Exchequer Chamber; and if the Queen make a lease of such land, and afterwards makes another lease of the same land without recital of the first lease, it hath been adjudged that the second lease is void. It was argued contrary by Beamount the younger, that this condition which goeth to the realty, to reduce the land again, ought to be ordered and governed by the Queen, as it ought to be by a subject; and therefore, if the Queen will take advantage of this condition, she ought to make a letter of attorney under the dutchy seal, to her own officer, authorizing him thereby to make demand of the said rent, &c. And by Shuttleworth here be two offices, the one contrary to the other, the best shall be taken for the Queen, 14. E. 4. 5. in Skreens case in the end of it: And if the rent of the kings farmor be behind, now although that after the receivor of the dutchy doth receive it yet the same doth not purge the forfeiture, as if the bayliffs of a manor receive rent of a new feoffee, the same will not change the avowry of the [13] lord without notice given to him, 41 E. 3. 26. And if a copy-hold escheat, the steward without a special warrant cannot grant it over de novo.

XVI. REARSBIE AND REARSBIES CASE INTRAT. TRINIT. 25 ELIZ. ROT. 746.

Construction of Devise. Distress.

Replevin by W. Rearsbie against A. Rearsbie, and L. Rearsbie, who avow the distress, because that one W. Vavasour was seised of the manor of Deniby, whereof the place where, &c. is parcel in his demesne as of fee, and so seised gave the said manor to one L. Rearsbie father of the plaintiff, and of the avowants and Jane his wife, and to the heirs of Lyonel, who by his will devised unto A. Rearsbie a rent of four pounds out of the said manor, with clause of distress, for his childs part, to be yearly paid, Lyonel the father died 3. Eliz. and afterwards, 22. Eliz. Jane died, and for the arrearages of the said rent encurred mean between the death of Lyonel and Jane his wife, &c. upon which avowry the plaintiff did demurr in law, for the rent doth not begin in effect, but after the death of the wife of the devisor, for such construction ought be made of the devise, as not to charge the inheritance with the whole arrearages, &c. and it was argued to the contrary, that the defendant might well avow the distress for these arrearages; for if he in the reversion upon a lease for life grant a rent charge after the death of the grantor, the grantee shall distrein for all the arrearages encurred after the grant, etiam, during the life of the grantor, quod curia concessit: and it was said by the council of the avowant, that the case at bar is a stronger case, for this rent, as it appeareth by the words of the devise, was devised to the avowant for his livelihood, and for his childs part, which words imply a present advancement, and these words yearly to be paid are strong & pregnant to that intent. It was adjourned.

Account.

The Earl of Northumberland brought debt upon arrearages of accompt, the defendant shewed that before the accompt, the plaintiff of his own wrong did imprison the defendant, and assigned auditors to him being in prison, and so the accompt was made by duress of imprisonment: and the same was holden a good plea by all the justices of both the benches. And judgment was given accordingly.

Forman and Bohans Case.

Replevin. Averment. Reputation. Rent charge parcel of a Mannor. Reputation. quid.

Replevin by Forman against Bohan, the defendant avowed for a rent charge, and shewed, that one Wingfield was seised of the manor of Wesham, whereof the place where, was parcel: and 33 H. 6. made a feoffment in fee of the place where, &c. to one Orlow, rendring rent and sute at the court of the said manor, and that the said Wingfield was seised of the said rent and sute accordingly, and died thereof seised, and that the same descended to Anthony Wingfield as son and heir, &c. who was seised of the said rent as parcel of the said manor, and that the said Anthony, so seised of the said manor and rent, bargained and sold the said manor and rent, 26 H. 8. to Nicholas Bohan father of the avowant, by these words; Manerium de Wesham, & omnes omnimodos redditus, reputed, deemed, or adjudged part or parcel of the said manor, who entred, and died seised, and the same descended to the now avowant, as son and [14] heir, &c. and averred, that the said rent at the time of the bargain and sale aforesaid, & diu ante, was reputed parcel of the manor aforesaid: upon which avowry, the plaintiff did demur in law, and it was argued by Gawdy serjeant for the plaintiff, and he took an exception to the avowry, because the avowant sheweth, that Anthony Wingfield 26. H. 8. bargained and sold the said manor to Bohan, virtute quar. bargaine & venditionis, & vigor. cujusdam Actus Parliamenti 27 H. 8. de usibus, &c. the said Bohan was seised, &c. where he ought to have said; by force of which bargain and sale the said Anthony Wingfield was seised of the said manor aforesaid, to the use of the said Bohan, and that afterwards by reason of the said statute of 27 H. 8. the said Anthony then seised to the use aforesaid, the said Bohan was seised in his demesne as of fee: for it might be for any thing appearing in the avowry, that before the said statute of 27 H. 8. Anthony Wingfield had made a conveyance upon consideration to him who had not notice of the use, so as the use being suspended, when the statute came, it could not be executed, for there was not any seisin to the use, and to that purpose he cited the case of 7 H. 7. 3. where a gift of trees by cestuy que use is pleaded, without alledging that the feoffors were seised to the use of the donor at the time of the gift: to that exception it was answered by Popham attorney general, that there is a difference betwixt the case at bar, and the case of 7 H. 7. for where a man entitles himself by cestuy que use, he ought to maintain such title by every necessary circumstance, which the law without expressing will not intend; but where a man alledgeth a matter, which is but a conveyance, there needs no especial recital; as if a man will pretend the grant of a reversion, and that the lessee for years did attorn, he needs not to shew, that at the time of the attornment the grantor was seised, &c. and he cited the case of 10 E. 4. 18. In trespas, the plaintiff by way of replication made to him a title, that A. was seised and leased to him at will, by force of which the plaintiff was possessed, until the defendant did the trespass, and exception was taken to it, that the plaintiff in his replication had not averred, that A. was alive at the time of trespass, and it was not allowed, for the subsequent words (by force of which the plaintiff was possessed until the defendant did the trespass) do amount unto so much, for the plaintiff could not be possessed by force of the said lease at will if A. were not alive. So here, Bohan could not be here seised by force of the said statute, if the seisin of the use which was raised by the bargain and sale had not continued until the coming of the said statute: as to the matter in law, Gawdy conceived that the averment in the perclose of the avowry is contrary to the matter of the avowry, for the creation of the rent set forth in the avowry proves, that the rent is not parcel of the manor, but a rent in gross, and then the general averment, that the rent is parcel of the manor, without shewing how, against the special matter of the avowry, is not receivable. And also nothing can be by reputation parcel of a manor which in rei veritate cannot be parcel of a mannor, but a rent charge cannot be in rei veritate parcel of a manor, ergo, nor by reputation: Popham contrary; that the averment is not contrary to the matter of the avowry, for the matter disclosed in the avowry proves, that it is not rei veriate parcel of the manor, but it doth not exclude reputation, and the averment doth not extend ad veritatem facti, which is set forth in the avowry, but only to reputation, and so both stand together well enough: and that a rent charge may be parcel of a manor, see 22 E. 3. 13. 31. E. 3. 23. in the Lord Tiptofts case, where it is ruled, that title made to a rent charge as parcel of a manor is a good title, and the assize awarded upon it, and in our case the reputation is enforced by the sute at the Court, which was also reserved upon the said feoffment together with the said rent, so as the intent of the parties to the feoffment was, that this rent so reserved and accompanyed with the said [15] sute shall be esteemed a rent service, and so parcel of the manor; and as to the continuance of reputation it sufficeth, if at the time of the bargain and sale aforesaid, which was 26 H. 8. it was by many reputed parcel of the manor, and he cited the case of the Marquess of Winchester. The king gave to his ancestor the manor of Dale and all lands then antea reputed parcel of the said manor, and in a bill of intrusion against the said marquess he pleaded the grant with averment, that the land then antea reputed parcel manerii prædict. And because he did not shew certainly at what time the land was reputed parcel of the manor, judgment was given for the Queen; for it might be for any thing in his plea, that the said land was reputed parcel of the said manor before time of memory, which reputation would not serve: but such reputation ought to be within time of memory and understanding: he cited also the case of the Earl of Leicester. King Edward the sixth seised of the manor of Clibery, of which a wood was parcel, granted the said wood in fee, which afterwards escheated to the King for treason; Queen Mary granted the said wood to another in fee, who granted it to the now Queen, who granted the said manor & omnes boscos modo vel ante hac cognit. vel reputat. ut pars, membr. vel parcel. maner. prædict. to the Earl of Leicester, and it was resolved in the Exchequer, that by that grant the said wood did pass to the earl, and judgment was given against the queen, for it was part of the manor in the time of E. 6. at which time (ant' hac) without the word (unquam) shall be extended ad quoddamcunque tempus præteritum. and reputation needs not so ancient a pedigree for to establish it; for general acceptance will produce reputation: as the house of the Lord Treasurer now called Tibould was of late a private manor, but now hath a new name by which it is known, and that within these twenty years, which is not so long a time as we have alleged for our reputation, and would pass in a conveyance by such name; so none-such. But as to reputation, I conceive that reputation is not what this or what that man thinketh, but that which many men have said or thought, who have more reason to know it; & quænam est inter illos reputatio, there was a case ruled in the Exchequer 13 Eliz. in a bill of intrusion; the case was, that King Hen. 6. was seised of a manor, to which a neif was regardant, who purchased lands, which the King seised, and let by copy as parcel of the said manor, and so continued until the time of E. 6. who granted the same to Alice Hardwick, and all lands, tenements, reputed parcel of the said manor; and it was adjudged, that the said land so purchased by the said neif, and demised by copy, did pass by the said grant to Hardwick. And afterwards, the same term, the justices, without any solemn argument, shewed their opinions in the principal case, viz., that this rent did not pass by the bargain and sale made as above, by Anthony Wingfield, to Bohan father of the avowant; for here in the premisses of the avowry is not any matter set forth importing reputation, or by which it may appear that the rent in question was ever reputed parcel of the said manor, but rather to the contrary; and the bare averment of reputation in the conclusion of the avowry is not sufficient to induce reputation. But if the avowant had set forth in his avowry any special matter to induce the Court to conceive a reputation upon the matter of the avowry, as to shew that the bayliffs of the said manor had always received the said rent as parcel of said manor, and as bayliffs of the said manor had accounted for it, as parcel of the manor, and that the lessees of the said manor had enjoyed the said rent as parcel of the said manor, the same had been good matter to induce a reputation, & to have incorporated the said rent with the said manor; and so judgment was given against the avowant; and [16] of such opinion (as was affirmed by Wray) was Anderson, chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and Manwood, chief Baron of the Exchequer.

XIX. Cham and Dovers Case.

Ejectione firmæ. Custom ad pasturandum, non ad colendum. Dower discharged of a grant of Copyhold.

In an ejectione firmæ, the case was, that one Michel was seised of the manor of D. within which diverse parcels of land, part of the said manor, where customary tenements demised and demisable by copy, &c. according to the custom of the said manor for one, two or three lives, within which manor there was a custom, scil. that the lord of the manor, for the time being, might grant copy-hold estates for life in reversion; the lord granted such lands for life by copy in possession, took a wife, and granted the same copy-hold to a stranger in reversion for life, and died, the copy-holder in possession died, the land demised by copy is (inter alia) assigned to the wife for her dower, who had judgment to recover in a writ of dower, who entred and made a lease thereof to the defendant, who entred, against whom, the lessee of the copy-holder brought ejectione firmæ, and all this matter was found by verdict, and further found, that every copy-holder of the said manor, might lease his copy-hold for a year, ad pasturandum, sed non ad colendum, and that the lease made to the plaintiff was for a year, ad pasturandum. Popham Attorny General, of council with the defendant, took exception to the declaration, because the plaintiff had declared a lease at the common law, and the jury have found a lease by the custom, which cannot stand together: and such a verdict doth not maintain the declaration, as if the plaintiff had declared upon a lease for years of lands, and the jury found a devise for years, &c. but the exception was disallowed by the Court. As to the matter in law he argued, that the tenant in dower should hold the land discharged of the copy-hold for her life, and he put this case, if the lord of such a manor taketh a wife, a copy-holder for life dieth, the lord grants a rent-charge out of the customary land, and afterwards grants the said land by copy for life, & dieth, the wife shall hold the land discharged of the rent, but the copy-holder shall be charged, and he put a difference where the lord grants such copy-hold in possession, and where in reversion, for in the first case the wife shall hold charged, but contrary in the last: and he cited the case of one Slowman, who being lord of a manor (ut supra) by his will devised, that his executors should grant estates by copy, and died having a wife, the executors make estates accordingly, the wife in case of dower shall avoid them: Plowden contr. the lord of such a mannor is bound by recognisance, and afterwards a copy-holder for life of the said mannor dieth, the lord grants his copy-hold, de novo, the said new grantee shall hold his copy-hold discharged of the recognisance, which Gawdy Justice granted, and by Wray, if the lord of such a manor grants a copy-hold for three lives, & takes a wife, the three lives end, the lord enters and keeps the lands for a time, and afterwards grants them over again by copy, and dieth, the copy-holder shall hold the land discharged of the dower, and this is a clear case, for the copy-holder is in by the custom which is paramount the title of dower and the seisin of the husband; and by him in the case of the Earl of Northumberland, 17 Eliz. Dyer 344. that the grant of a copy-hold in reversion by the Earl of Northumberland, doth not make such an impediment as was intended in the condition there, for it is by the custom, and not by the act of the party; and afterwards, the same term judgment was given for the plaintiff, that he and his lessor should hold the lands discharged of the dower.

XX. FRINGE AND LEWES CASE.

Debt. Uncore prist a good Plea.

Debt by Fringe against Lewes upon a bond who pleaded, that the condition was, that whereas the defendant was executor to one Morris Degle, that if the defendant should perform, observe, fulfil, and keep the will of the said Morris Degle in all points and articles according to the true intent and meaning thereof, that then, &c. and pleaded further, that the said Morris by the said will bequeathed to the poor of such a town ten pounds, to be distributed amongst them, and also to the church-wardens of the parish ten pounds, and to I. S. three pounds, and that he had distributed the said ten pounds to the poor, and that he had paid the ten pounds to the church-wardens, and as to three pounds, he said that he is and always was ready to pay the same to the said I. S. if he had demanded it, upon which there was a demurrer: And as to the ten pounds to be distributed amongst the poor, the same was holden good enough without shewing the names of the poor amongst whom the mony was distributed; so the pleading of the first payment to the church-wardens was sufficient without nameing of them, see 42 E. 3. brief, 539. scire facias out of a recovery against executors, and the writ was challenged, because it was scire facias executors, not naming their proper names; it was holden to be no exception, for executors are as a corporation known, in that they are executors; and as to the third part of the plea, scil. always ready and yet is, the plea is well enough, for this obligation (the condition of which being general to perform the will &c.) hath not altered the nature of the payment of the legacy, but the same remains payable in such manner as before upon request, and not at the peril of the defendant. See 22 H. 6. 57, 58. 11 E 4 10. 6 E 6. Br. Tender 60. And afterwards the same term, the Court was clear of opinion, and so delivered the law to the counsel on both sides; that in this case the legacies are to be paid upon request, and not at the peril of the executors in such manner as they were before the obligation, and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

XXI. SIR JOHN SMITH AND PEAZES CASE.

Covenant. Averment. Averment where superfluous.

Sir John Smith brought debt upon an obligation against Peaze, who pleaded, that the bond was upon condition to perform covenants contained in an indenture, and shewed what, and that he had performed them, the plaintiff assigned the breach of one covenant, that where the plaintiff had leased to the defendant for years, certain messuages by the same indenture, the defendant by the same indenture, did covenant to repair all the said messuages, alia quam quæ appunctuatæ forent divelli per script. dicti Johannis Smith, and shewed further, that the defendant had not repaired the said messuages to him demised as aforesaid, and averred that the said house in which the breach of the covenant is assigned, non fuit durante termino prædicto appunctuata divelli, and upon that matter of reparation they were at issue, and found for the plaintiff: it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the averment in the replication was not sufficient, for the lease was made in November to begin the Michael. and after it might be that the messuage, in the not repairing of which the breach of the covenant is assigned, was appointed to be pulled down, scil. divelli, before the term for years began, and then the defendant is not bound to repair it, and then the breach of the covenant is not well assigned, and so the aver-[18]-ment doth not answer the exception, and because this clause (alia quam) is in the body of the covenant, it ought to be satisfied by him who pleads it, scil. by him who assigns

the breach in the covenant, in which the exception is contained; as by the Lord Dyer in his argument, in the argument of Stowels case, reported by Plowden 376. Where a man pleaded the feoffment of cestuy que use, he ought to plead, that cestuy que use, at the time of the feoffment was of full age, sanæ memoriæ, &c. for that is within the purview, contr. upon the statute of 4 H. 7. in pleading of a fine, for that is in a clause by itself, which conceit of Plowden, the Lord Wray denyed to be law, for he said, he that pleads the feoffment of cestuy que use, or a fine according to the statute of 4 H. 7. shall not be driven to shew that the feoffor, or conusor at the time of the feoffment, or fine levyed was of full age, &c. but he who comes in by such fine, or feoffment shall shew the same for his own advantage. And at last after many motions it was resolved by all the justices, that the averment aforesaid was superfluous & ex abundanti, for it had been sufficient for the plaintiff to have assigned the breach of the covenant in the not repairing the messuage without any averment, de non appunctuando, and if the house in the not repairing of which the breach of covenant is assigned, was appointed to be pulled down, the same shall come in on the defendants part to whose advantage it trencheth, for such appointment doth discharge the covenant as to that: in the same plea, it was moved in stay of judgment that one Sharp, solicitor of the said Sir John in the said suit, had given eight shillings to the jurors, mean betwixt the charge and their verdict, and that matter was testified by the oaths of two men, upon which the Court examined the said Sharp, who upon his oath denied the matter, and also the foreman of the jury to whom the mony was supposed to be given, who upon his oath denied the same: and it was moved, if receipt of mony by any of the jurors should make the verdict void; and by Wray it shall not, for it is but a misdemeanor, which is punishable on the person of him who takes the mony: but Gawdy and Ayliff Justices, the verdict is void. See 24 E. 3. 24. 14 H. 7. 1. 20 H. 7. 30. And for that cause the judgment was reversed.

XXII. CORDALL AND GIBBONS CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, upon not guilty pleaded the jury found the special matter, viz. that one Hierom Heydon was seised of two messuages, whereof the action is brought, and came to Cordall the plaintiff, and prayed him to lend him ten pounds; Cordall asked him, what assurance he would give him for the re-paymunt of it; he answered, that he would mortgage to him the said two messuages, whereupon Cordall lent him the money, and afterwards they both went to the said two houses, and being before the doors, of them, Heydon called, tenants at will of the houses, and said to them, Sirs, I have borrowed of this Cordall ten pounds upon these houses, and if I pay this mony at Michaelmas next, I must have my houses again, and if not, then I bargain and sell these houses to Cordall; and my will is, that you become his tenants, after which Heydon put the said Cordall into the houses, and seeing him in the houses, he put in the keys of the said Cordall, by the windows, &c. And it was adjudged by the whole Court, that this conveyance, by word of mouth, was good enough to pass the estate, ut supra, and the words of bargain and sale in this case, are as strong, as of gift and grant, see 38 E. 3. 11. 43 E. 3. 11. 27 E. 3. 62. 28 E. 3. 11.

XXIII. RICHARDS AND BARTLETS CASE.

Assumpsit.

Dorothy Richards, executrix of A. her former husband, brought an action upon the case upon a promise against Humfrey Bartlet, and declared, that in consideration of two weights of corn delivered by the testator to the defendant, he did promise to pay to the plaintiff ten pounds, to which the defendant said, that after the assumpsit the plaintiff in consideration, that the said two weights were drowned by tempest, and in consideration that the defendant would pay to the plaintiff for every twenty shillings of the said ten pounds three shillings four pence, scil. in toto thirty three shillings four pence, did discharge the said defendant of the said promise, and averred further, that he hath been always ready to pay the said sum newly agreed, upon which there was a demurrer. And the opinion of the whole Court was clearly with the plaintiff, first because that here his not any consideration set forth in the bar, by reason whereof the plaintiff should discharge the defendant of this matter, for no profit but damage comes to the plaintiff by this new agreement, and the defendant is not put to any labour or charge by it, therefore here is not any agreement to bind the plaintiff, see 19 H. 6. Accord, 1. 9 E. 4. 13. 12 H. 7. 15. See also Onlies case, 19 Eliz. Dyer, then admitting, that the agreement had been sufficient, yet because, it is not executed, it is not any bar: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

XXIV. LENDALL AND PINFOLDS CASE.

Trespass. Bar.

In trespass for breaking of his close, by Lendal against Pinfold, the case was, that two brake the close and entred, and did the trespass, the owner of the land brought an action of trespass against one of them, and had judgment, and execution accordingly, and afterwards brought trespass against the other, and declared upon the same trespass: And by Ayliff Justice, it is a good bar, and he likened it to the case of one Cobham, who brought an action of trespass of assault and battery, and recovered and had execution, and afterwards brought an appeal of mayhem against the same person upon the same matter, the said recovery and execution is a good bar, &c. so here as to the breaking of the close, but not as to the entry: But by Wray, it is a good bar for the whole, and he likened it to the case of Littleton, Pl. 376. A release to one of the trespassers, shall discharge both. Gawdy agreed in opinion with Ayliff.

XXV. KEMPE, AND HOLLINGBROOKS CASE.

Tithes. Tithes in London. Misnosmer.

In an ejectione firmæ for tythes, the case was upon the statute of 18. Eliz. cap. 6. by which it is enacted, that no masters, and fellows of any colledge in Cambridge, or Oxford shall make any lease for life or years of any farm, or of any their lands, tenements, or other hereditaments to the which any tythes, arable land, meadow, or pasture doth, or shall appertain, unless the third part at least of the accient rent be reserved, and payed in corn for the said colledges, [20] &c. otherwise every lease without such reservation shall be void, &c. If now, the said statute shall be construed to extend to leases of such extraordinary pecuniary tithes which are not natural or paid in kind. It was argued, that the said statute is to be intended of tithes in kind, and also of such things to be demised which render corn, hay, &c. But the tithes in London which is the thing demised in our case, doth not render any such thing, but only mony according to the decree made for payment of tithes in London in the time of E. 6. And although the words of the statute be (other hereditaments) to the which any tithes, &c. yet the said statute doth extend to tithes in gross, but they ought to be such tithes which are of such nature as tithe-corn, and tith-hay: and Manwood chief Baron held clearly, that the lease of these tithes is good enough, notwithstanding the defect by the special reservation which is limited and appointed by the statute, and so by him, a lease of a house, rent, mill, ferry, &c. are out of the said statute: and as to the tithes, notwithstanding the words of the statute are general, any tithes; yet he conceived, the statute ought to be intended of tithes of common right, and not of such customary tithes as those of London are, and therefore, if all the parishoners prescribe in modo decimandi, scil. to pay a certain sum of mony for all manner of tithes, upon demise of such a rectory, such special reservation is not necessary, for these are tithes against common right, and no tithes are within the purview of the said statute but those which are annual, and therefore a lease of tithe-wood is out of the meaning of this statute, for non renovantur in annum; and he said that upon a lease of the tithes of chery trees, a rent ought to be reserved according to the statute, and the farmer may bring his cheries to the market, and buy corn. Shute Justice contrary, for the words of the statute are general. And note, that this lease was of the rectory of Saint Lawrence in the city of London. There was another matter moved in this case, because the lease whereof the action is brought, was made by the name of master or guardian, and the fellows, whereas the true name of their colledge is master and fellows. And it was argued by Atkinson, that the same is not such a misnosmer which makes the lease void, for (sive custos) are words of surplusage, v. 7 H. 6. 13. And also the case of the Cooks, 20 Eliz. Plow. 531. The corporation was by the name of masters or governors and comonalty, mysterii coquorum, &c. And they made a conveyance by the name of masters or governors, and comunalty, artis sive mysterii, &c. the same is no such misnosmer as shall make void the conveyance, for art and mistery are both of one sense.

XXVI. Harvey and Harveys Case.

Consultation.

Clare Harvey, one of the daughters of Sir James Harvy alderman of London libelled in the Spiritual Court against Sebastin Harvy, son and executor of the said Sir James, for a legacy bequeathed to her by her father; Sebastian did not appear, for which he was excommunicated and taken by a writ of excommunicat. capiendo, and imprisoned; and afterwards he came into this Court, and surmised to the Court, that the said Sir James in his life had given to the said Sebastian all his goods and chattels, and was also bound unto the said Sebastian in a statute-staple of two thousand pounds, whereupon he had prohibition, and now the plaintiffs counsel prayed a consultation, quatenus non agitur ad validitatem facti, aut statuti. And Egerton solicitor of counsel with the plaintiff cited a judgment given in the like case betwixt Lodge and Luddington, where such a special consultation was granted: but Wray put a difference betwixt the said case and the case at bar, for here in this [21] case is a gift by the testator himself, but in the case cited, the gift was by the executor; and also here is a statute of two thousand pounds, in which case the obligations which could not pass by the deed, shall be subject to the said statute.

XXVII. The Duke of Northumberlands Case.

Bargain and sale.

The late Duke of Northumberland seised of five messuages in the parish of St. Sepulchres London, in the tenure of W. Gardiner, by deed intented and enrolled for money bargained and sold to I. L. all his tenements situate in the parish of St. Andrews in Holborn in the tenure of W. Gardiner, to have to the said I. L. for life, the remainder to K. his daughter in fee. Atkinson, the bargain and sale is void by reason of the misnosmer of the parish, notwithstanding the truth of the tenure, for by the grant and bargain and sale of all his tenements in the parish of St. Andrews nothing passeth, and the truth of the tenure subsequent shall not help it: and by Manwood chief Baron, the sale is utterly void, for the falsity doth preceed the truth and certainty: and it was argued, that I. L. entring by colour of the same bargain and sale is a disseisor; as the case is betwixt Croft and Howel, 20. Eliz. Com. 537. Yet if he was but tenant at will when he made the lease for years, the same was a disseisin to the said duke; and then the duke being disseised, he is attainted of treason, 10. Mariæ. And now we are to see what things accrue to the Queen by the said attainder: and as to that it was said, that at the common law a right of entry should escheat, but not without office found thereof, no more than lands in possession: and by the statute of 26 H. 8. it is enacted, that every person attainted of high treason, shall forfeit all his lands and tenements which he had of any estate of inheritance, by which statute a bishop, abbot or tenant in tayl in such case shall forfeit even without office: but in the statute of 33 H. 8. there is a saving to every other person all such right, possession, so as in that case by that statute the King shall not be in possession without office, but shall have a right, but cannot enter before office or after. And he is to have sci. facias against him, who hath the possession, and he shall make his defence as well as he can; and the words of the said statute, that the King shall be in actual possession, shall not be construed to extend to an actual and absolute possession, but such a possession, only which he had at the common law after office found, so as the statute doth not give to the King a larger possession but an easier, without the circumstance of an office: and of that opinion was Manwood chief Baron, and Shute second Baron: and then it was moved further by Cook, because that the Queen by the attainder hath but a right, and the Queen makes the grant of the messuages themselves, the same grant is void. And he granted that the Queen might grant a real action, and a right of entry; but such a grant ought to be conceived in special words, as to say, that the Duke of Northumberland was seised of five messuages, and by such a one disseised, and after the duke was attainted, and so granted; for the Queen may grant such a right by reason of her prerogative, and therefore the same ought to be granted by special words, as in the case of Mynes in the Commentaries, and according to that was the opinion of the justices in Cromers case, 8. Eliz. which case see reported by Coke in the case of the Marquess of Winchester.

XXVIII. DAYREL AND THINNS CASE.

Error. Certiorare. Diminution.

Edward Dayrel brought a writ of error against Sir John Thinn upon a judgment had by the defendant against the plaintiffs father of the manor of Mexden: And error was assigned for want of warrant of attorney. And the plaintiff prayed one certiorare to the chief justice of the Common Pleas, and another certiorare to the custos brevium, both which returned, non inveni aliquod warr. and now Sir John Thinn being dead, the plaintiff brought another writ of error by journeys accounts against John Thinn son and heir of the said Sir John Thinn, who appeared and alledged diminution, in hoc, that the warrant of attorney is not certified, and prayed another certiorare unto the chief justice of the Bench, and another to the custos brevium, and it was argued by Clark, that in this case certiorare ought not to be granted, for a certificate is in the nature of a tryal, which shall not be crossed in the same action: but the parties to the action, and their heirs shall be bound by it, especially when the matter is certified by one who is judge of the record, and that certiorare sued at the prayer of the plaintiff shall be as peremptory, as if it had been sued at the prayer of the defendant, for the plaintiff may alledge diminution as well as the defendant. 7 E. 4. 25. by Yelverton. And a man cannot have certiorare of a thing which is contrary to the record, which is certified, 11 E 4. 10 by Laicon: so diminution cannot be alledged in this warrant of attorney, because it hath been certified here, that no warrant of attorney is to be found, &c. 9 E. 4. 32. by Billing; Egerton sollicitor, contrary: for the certiorare obtained at the sute of the plaintiff, shall not prevent the defendant. And the course of proceeding in a writ of error, when error is assigned out of the record, and not of a thing within the record, is such: after error assigned, before that a sci. fac. issueth against the defendant ad audiendum errores, the plaintiff may pray a certiorare to the custos brevium, in whose hands such collateral things remain, for the Plea Roll doth remain in the custody of the chief justice, but the original writs, essoins and warrants of attorney remain in the hands of the custos brevium; and such a certiorare the Court may grant to the plaintiff, without making the defendant privy to it. And notwithstanding that the defendant hath pleaded, in nullo est erratum, and so hath affirmed the record to be such as is certified, yet the Court ex officio, shall award a certiorare to ascertain themselves if there be any such warrant of attorney or not: which see 9 E. 4. 32, by Billing, and therefore the certiorare being awarded ex officio, shall not prejudice the defendant; and to this purpose he cited the case betwixt the Lord Norris and Braybrook in a writ of error, where the Lord Norris being plaintiff prayed a certiorare to the custos brevium, to certifie an original writ, upon which a common recovery was had, and had it, and the custos brevium certified, that there was no original; and afterwards the defendant prayed another certiorare, and had it: and so in our case here especially, because the defendant was not party to the record, nor hath day in Court, at the time that the said certiorare was granted, for the defendant is not party before the sci. facias ad audiendum errores be issued forth against him: and therefore he comes timely enough to pray a certiorare. See 28 H. 6. 10. and 11. And I grant that the certificate upon a certiorare which was awarded after a sci. fac. ad audiendum errores is peremptory and final, but contrary where it is granted before the awarding of such scire facias: See Book of Entries 271. The plaintiff assigneth error in the original writ, & petit br. domini regis custodibus brevium, &c. ad breve illud origin. certificand. and up-[23]-on the return of the certiorare, the plaintiff prayed a scire facias ad audiendum errores. And see there 293, where it appeareth, fol. 272. that certiorare issued at the suit of the defendant in error after he had alledged diminution: and that is after scire facias ad audiendum errores returned; and see certiorare before sci. facias awarded 271, &c. and this certiorare is only ex officio, and awarded only to enform the Court: and in respect of the certiorare the chief justice of the Common Pleas, to whom the certiorare is directed, is but a minister, and not a judge. And as to the case of 9 E. 4. 32. before cited, he could not have a certiorare, for he could not alledge diminution, because he had pleaded in nullo est erratum, by which plea he had confessed the record which is certified to be a full and perfect record, and fully certified, and against that matter he shall not alledge diminution: And in our case there is not any such contrariety as hath been objected, for the return of the certiorare is, non inveni aliquod warrant. not precisely, quod non habetur aliquod warrantum; and therefore if the Court now at the prayer of the defendant grant another certiorare, upon which is a retorn (quod habetur warr. attornat.) the same is not contrary to the return of the first certificate, but they may both stand together, for upon further search such warrant of attorney may be found: so upon the matter the Court shall not be enveigled by any such contrariety, for (non inveni aliquod warrant.) returned upon the first certiorare, and (inveni quoddam warr.) upon the second certiorare are not meer contrary; and it seemed to Wray chief Justice, that it would be hard to grant a new certiorare in this case, but if any variance could be alledged it should be otherwise, as it was adjudged in the case of one Lassell, who certified no warrant of attorney, and afterwards it was moved for another certiorare, as it is here, and because the original was inter Johannem Lassels ar. executor. testi. &c. where he was not named executor in the first certiorare; upon that matter a new certiorare was granted.

XXIX. WITHY AND SAUNDERS CASE.

Tithes will not pass by grant without deed.

Withy libelled against Saunders in the Spiritual Court, and now came Saunders and surmised, that Withy had libelled against him for tithe-grass, and shewed, that all the claim that Withy had to the said tithes was by a grant without deed, and by the law such things would not pass without deed; and also that the Spiritual Court would not allow of this plea, and therefore prayed a prohibition: and the Court upon the first motion conceived a prohibition should pass, for if the grant be without deed, nothing passed, and then hath not Withy cause to claim these tithes against the said Saunders. And notwithstanding that tithes are quodam modo spiritual things, and so demandable in a Court of that nature, yet now in divers respects they are become a lay-fee, and lay-things, for a writ of assise of mortdauncester, and an assise of novel disseisin lyes of them, and a fine may be levyed of them. But it hath been doubted, whether tithes be devisable by will: but at another day the matter was moved, and the Court was clear of opinion, that a consultation should be awarded, for whether Withy hath right or not right to these tithes, Saunders of common right ought to pay his tithes, and he ought to sever them from the nine parts, and whosoever takes them, whether he hath right to them or no right, Saunders is discharged: but Saunders may prescribe in modo decimandi, without making mention of any severance, and may surmise, that the tithes do belong to I. S. with whom he hath compounded to pay such a sum for all tithes and afterwards a consultation was awarded.

XXX. STACY AND CARTERS CASE.

Averment. Bar.

Stacy brought an action of trespass for breaking his close against Walter Carter, and declared of a trespass in Somers-Land in Tunbridge; the defendant pleaded, that heretofore he himself brought an assise of novel disseisin against the now plaintiff, and supposed himself to be disseised of his free-hold in Lee juxta Tunbridge, and the land where the trespass supposed to be done was put in view to the recognitors of the said assise, and further averred, that the land where, &c. and the land then put in view is one and the same, &c. upon which there was a demurrer: exception was taken to the form of the demurrer, because in the perclose and conclusion of the demurrer these words are omitted, Et hoc paratus est verificare. But as to that, it was said by the Court, that the demurrer was well enough, with or without such averment in the conclusion of it, which see oftentimes in the Commentaries, &c. and in the Book of Entries 146. the greater part of the demurrers have not any such conclusion. Another exception was taken to the bar, because the defendant pleads, that heretofore Walter Carter had brought an assise against the now plaintiff, &c. and that the land put in view to the recognitors of the assise per præfatum Warrhamum Carter, &c. and the land where, &c. is all one, &c., here is Warrhamum for Walterum, and notwithstanding that it was after demurrer, and not after verdict, it was adjudged amendable; and as to the matter of the bar, it was said by the defendants council, that recovery of lands in one town, by præcipe quod reddat, is not a bar for lands in another town; but where the recovery is by assise it is otherwise, for there the plaint is general de lib. teñto, and the plaintiff shall recover per visum juratorum, and the view is the warrant of the judgment and execution. And therefore if a recovery in an assise be pleaded in bar, not comprised, is not any plea against it, as in the case of recoveries upon a præcipe quod reddat;

but not put in view, and so not comprised, &c. which proves that the record doth not guid the recovery, but the view of the jurors. See 26 E. 3. 2. Assise brought of lands in D. the tenant saith, that he holdeth the said lands put in view joyntly with A. not named in the writ, &c. and sheweth the deed of joynt-tenancy, which speaks of tenements in B. and the plea holdeth good, because he alledgeth the joynt-tenancy and the lands put in view: see 24 E. 3. It was said on the plaintiffs side, that recovery in Lee juxta Tunbridge could not extend to lands in Tunbridge, no more than a recovery of lands in one county can extend to lands in another county: see 23 E. 3. 16. Assise of novel disseisin brought of lands in N. the defendant pleads recovery in assise, &c. brought before by him against the now plaintiff of lands in H. and the same lands put then and now in view, and adjudged no bar. See also 16 E. 3. 16. in an assise of tenements in W. the tenant pleads a recovery of the same lands against one A. by assise brought of tenements in C. which was found by the assise, and that C. is a hamlet of W. and the plaintiff notwithstanding that recovery so pleaded had judgment, for a recovery of lands in one town shall not be a bar in an assise of lands in another town. See Br. tit. Judgment 66. 10 E. 3. And the whole Court was clear of opinion, that the plea in bar was not good, for in the assise which is pleaded in bar in the principal case, the tenant there, who is now plaintiff in this action of trespass, pleaded nul tort nul disseisin, which is no plea, as to the free-hold in Lee juxta Tunbridge, and therefore it cannot be like to the case which hath been put of 26 E. 3. for there the tenant pleaded, that he held [25] the said lands put in view joyntly, for there he agreeth with the plaintiff in the lands demanded, the which lands are put in view; but if in the case at bar the defendant being plaintiff in the assise, the now plaintiff being then tenant, had pleaded to the land put in view in bar, and the plaintiff in the assise had recovered, now in this action of trespass the plaintiff in the assise being defendant in the action of trespass, might well plead this recovery in bar, for by his plea in the assise he hath tyed himself to the view, and to the land put in view, but it is not so in the case at bar, where the tenant in the assise pleads, nul tort, nul disseisin, for there he doth not plead expressly to the land put in view, but to the supposal of the plaintiff, sc. de libero tenemento in Lee juxta Tunbridge: afterwards Wray, with the assent of the other justices awarded, that the plaintiff should recover his damages: see by Wray, 44 E. 3. 45. in assise of tenements in B. the plaintiff pleads, that he himself brought an assise of the same tenements, and his plaint was of tenements in E. and the same tenements put in view, and recovered, and holden a good plea, because the tenant hath said, that the same tenements were put in view, and that took by assise, upon which the plaintiff said, not put in view, and so not comprised.

XXXI. BENICOMBE AND PARKERS CASE.

Feoffments.

In an action of trespass the jury found this special matter, that the grandfather of the plaintiff was seised, and made a feoffment to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of John father of the plaintiff in tail, the grandfather died, the father entred, and by indenture by words of bargain and sale, without any words of dedi & concessi, conveyed the lands to the use of A. in fee, and in the same indenture was a letter of attorney to make livery, which was made accordingly; and the said A. by the said indenture covenanted, that if the said John should pay before such a day to the said A. forty shillings, that then the said A. and his heirs would stand seised, &c. to the use of the said John and his heirs; and if the said John did not pay, &c. then if the said A. did not pay to the said John within four days after ten pounds, that then the said A. and his heirs from thenceforth shall be seised to the use of the said John and his heirs, &c. and the said John covenanted further, by the said indenture, to make such further assurance as the council of the said John should advise. Each party failed of payment. John levied a fine to A. without any consideration; it was adjudged upon this matter a good feoffment well executed by the livery, notwithstanding that the words of the conveyance are only by bargain and sale; and that the covenant to be seised to the new uses upon payment, and not payment being in one and the same deed, should raise the use upon the contingency, according to the limitation of it; and judgment was given for the plaintiff accordingly.

XXXIII. MARSH AND SMITHS CASE.

Grants. Mannor. Mannor, what it is. Reputation. Grants of the King. Court Baron.

George Marsh brought a replevin against Smith and Paget, who make conusans as baylies to Ralph Bard, and upon the pleading the case was, that Sir Francis Askew, was seised of the mannor of Castord in his demesne, as of fee, which mannor did extend unto Daston, North-kelsey, South-kelsey D. and C. and had demesnes and services, parcel of the said mannor, in each of the said towns, and so seised, granted totum manerium suum de North-kelsey in North-kelsey, to the said Bard and his heirs, and granted further, all his lands tenements, and hereditaments, in North-kelsey; and to that grant, the tenants in North-kelsey did attorn; and the land in which the said distress was taken is in North-kelsey; the only question in the case was, if, by this grant to Ralph Bard, a mannor passed, or not: and the case was argued by the justices; and Periam Justice argued, that upon this grant no mannor passed, for before the grant, there was no mannor of North-kelsey, or in North-kelsey, therefore no mannor can pass, but the lands and services in North-kelsey shall pass as in gross, for they were not known by a mannor, but for parcel of a mannor: and a mannor is a thing which cannot be so easily created, for it is an hereditament which doth consist of many real things, and incorporated together before time of memory; common reputation cannot be intended of an opinion conceived within three or four years, but of long time; and appendancy cannot be made presently, but by a long tract of time: as an advowson in gross cannot be made by an act appendant, and the Queen herself by her letters patents cannot make a mannor at this day, à multo fortiori a subject cannot, and the Queen cannot by her letters patents without an act of parliament annex a mannor to the duchy of Lancaster, which see 1 Ma. Dyer 95. And where it is usual, that the Queen doth grant lands, tenendum de manerio suo de East Greenwich in communi soccagio, if upon the death of such a grantee without heir, the said land doth revert unto the Queen in point of escheat, the said land shall not be parcel of the said mannor, for the land was not parcel of the mannor in truth, but in reputation: and he cited a case, that the Lord Sturton was seised of the mannor of Quincamore, and was also seised of the mannor of Charleton which was holden of the said mannor of Quincamore: the Lord Sturton was attainted of felony; and afterwards Queen Mary gave the said mannor of Quincamore to Sir Walter Mildmay cum omnibus suis juribus & parcellis, it was adjudged that the mannor of Charleton did pass, for it is now become parcel of the mannor of Quincamore; and I grant, that things which go with the land shall pass well enough: as if the Queen grant to three coparceners of three mannors, the liberty of warren in all the said three mannors, they afterwards make petition so as each coparcener hath a mannor, and the one of them grants her mannor, the grantee shall have warren: but if the Queen grant a leet (ut supra) and the coparceners make partition, and each of them hath a mannor, she shall not have also a leet, but the leet which was granted doth remain in common, and there shall not be there, upon such partition, several leets: and also I grant that in the case of two coparceners of a mannor, if to each of them upon partition be al-[27]-lotted demeans and services, each of them hath a mannor, for they were compellable to make partition by the common law being in by descent, see 26 H. 8. 4. 9 E. 4. 5. contrary of joynt-tenants, for they are in by purchase, and were not compellable by the common law to make partition, and therefore upon partition betwixt them a rent cannot be reserved for the equality of the partition: and in every manor a court is requisite, for a court baron is incident to a manor, but a court cannot at this day be founded or erected, but it ought to be of long time: and in our case, no court hath ever been holden in North-kelsey; and if I be seised of the manor of B. which extends into C. and B. and I grant my manor of B. in D. now a manor passeth, and both extend into D. and the residue which is in C. shall remain in me in gross, v. 9 E. 4. 17. Catesby; and if I be seised of a manor which doth consist of services, and of twenty free-holders, and one hundred acres of demesnes, and I grant the services of my twenty free-holders, and forty or twenty acres of the said one hundred acres, a manor shall pass, although it was not granted by the name of a manor; but if I grant the services of three, four, or five of my free-holders, and forty or twenty of the said one hundred acres, upon such a grant no manor shall pass: Windham Justice contrary, We are not here to speak of the creation of a manor, that is a forraign matter, but we are here to consider upon the division, and apportionment of a manor. They that have argued in this case at the Bar, have stood much upon the words of the conveyance, manerium suum de North-kelsey, and that Sir Fr. Askew at the time of that assurance, had not any manor of North-kelsey, or in North-kelsey, but that is not any reason, for if cestuy que use (mean between the statute of 1 E. 3. & 27 H. 8.) will make a feoffment of the manor which was in use, by these words, manerium suum, the same had been good, and yet it is not manerium suum, but the manor of the feoffees, but it may be said suum, by receiving of the profits according to the trust and confidence reposed in the feoffees; so in our case, in as much as Sir Fr. Askew had before this grant as well demesnes as services in North-kelsey, it may collaterally be said a manor there, and notwithstanding that tempore concessionis (proprie loquendo) no manor was in North-kelsey, yet now upon operation of the law, upon this grant a new manor shall rise; for in divers cases where a thing which was not in esse before, upon a grant may rise; as if I grant unto you out of my land a rent de novo; and also a thing which was not in esse before, may upon a grant take upon it a new nature; as if I. seised of a great wood, grant to you estovers out of it, they were not before in me but as woods and trees, now by this grant they are become estovers in the grantee, so as they are in the grantee in another nature, than they were in me: so in our case, although North-kelsey was not a manor in Sir Fr. Askew, yet now upon the grant it is a manor in bard, 9 E. 4. 17. And as to the matter which hath been objected, because a court cannot now begin, the same is not any reason, for the court baron is incident to the manor, and also to every part of the manor, and transitory through the whole manor, and if Sir Fr. Askew had sold all the demesnes of the manor in Castord, where the court baron for the said manor had always been held and not else-where, yet such a court might be holden in any part of the demeans in any other of the said towns: the Lord Anderson, to the same purpose, it hath been argued of the other side, that the manor doth not pass, because the grant is in these words, manerium de North-kelsey, in North-kelsey, I conceive that these words, (de North-kelsey) are void, as matter of surplusage, and the grant shall be construed as if the words had been manerium suum in North-kelsey: and a manor is such a thing, as may be determined, divided, and suspended: as if the lord of a manor leaseth for years all the demeans of the manor, the manor is suspended du-[28]-ring the term for years, as lately it hath been adjudged. And a warranty may be divided, as if a feoffment in fee be made to two with warranty, and the one of them releaseth the warranty: vide L. 5. E. 4. 103. A. seised of a manor which extendeth in four towns, B. C. D. and E. and he gives his manor in B. C. and D. by this gift the manor and all that is in the said four towns passeth. And he cited also a case 21 E. 4. 3. The lord of a manor erected a chapel within his said manor as a chapel of ease, &c. and afterwards it is a parish-church, now it is become presentable; an advowson appendant, as the soil upon the which the church is built is parcel of the manor. See 32 H. 6. 9. One manor may be parcel of another manor, as A. holdeth of B. twenty acres of land, as of his manor of C. which manor B. holdeth of D. as of his manor of E. B. dieth without heir, so as his manor of C. is escheated unto D. now the twenty acres are holden of the manor of C. as they were before, and the manor of C. is by the escheat become parcel of the manor of E. and by lease of the manor of E. it shall pass. And I do not know any difference between the case of parceners, and the case of Joynt-tenants, for now they are both equally compellable to make partition: and he cited the case of one estopp. lately adjudged, viz. the Queen was seised of the rectory of D. which extended into the counties of Lincoln and York, and the Queen granted her rectory of D. in Lincoln, these are several grants, and now upon the matter they are become several rectories. And as to that which hath been objected concerning a court baron which ought to belong to this new manor, and that such a court cannot now at this day be erected, and therefore here cannot be a manor; here needs not the erection of any new court, but forasmuch as the court baron before this grant might be by law holden in any place within the manor: therefore every part of the demeans of the manor is capable of a court to be holden there. As where one is seised of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, now is the advowson appendant, not only to the said manor, but to every part of it; for if he alien an acre, parcel of the manor with the advowson, the advowson is now appendant to the said acre: see 43 E. 3. 26. So in the case at Bar, because this liberty and franchise of a manor is throughout the whole manor, and in every part of the services and demesnes upon this grant of the services and demesnes in North-kelsey, and of his manor in North-kelsey, a manor passeth; which Windham also granted and agreed unto. Note at this time there were but three judges in this Court: and afterwards judgment was given for the defendant.

XXXIV. ALINGTON AND BALES CASE.

Arbitrament.

Alington and others, executors of Sir W. Cordel late Master of the Rols, brought an action of debt against Bales: the case was this, one Bream being seised of certain lands by indenture, bargained and sold the same to one Platt by these words (give, grant, bargain, sell) and by the said indenture covenanted with Platt, that the said Platt and his heirs should quietly enjoy the said lands without interruption of any person or persons: and afterwards certain controversies rising betwixt them concerning the said lands, the said Bream and Platt submitted themselves to the award and arbitrament of Sir W. Cordel, to whom they were bounden severally for the performance of such award, the which Sir W. amongst other things awarded, that the said Platt and his heirs should enjoy quietly the said lands, in tam amplo modo & forma, as the said land is conveyed and assured by the coveyance and assurance aforesaid: and the truth was, that the said Bream at the time [29] of the said assurance was bounden in a recognizance of six hundred pounds to one More, 15 Eliz. and afterwards More 16 Eliz. sued a sci. fac. upon the said recognizance; and 18 Eliz. the bargain and sale aforesaid was made; and afterwards 19 Eliz. More sued forth execution by elegit, and the moyety of the said land assured to Platt was delivered in execution to More. And if upon the whole matter the arbitrament was broken was the question. It was argued by Godfrey, that the plaintiff ought to be barred; and first, he conceived that these words in the indenture (give and grant) did not help the action, for the lands passed with a charge, and the general words dedi and concessi, do not extend to this collateral charge, but to the direct right of the land only; but if a stranger had put out the bargainee, there upon such general words, an action would lie, but as the case is, they do not give any cause of action, for the recognizance was a thing in charge at the time of the assurance: and yet see 31 E. 3. Br. Warr. Chartæ, 33. A. enfeoffeth B. with warranty, who brings a Warrantia Chartæ, and recovers pro loco & tempore, and afterwards a stranger doth recover against him a rent charge out of the said land, and it was holden, that upon the matter B. should have execution: the special words of the arbitrament, upon which the action is brought, are, that the said Platt and his heirs should enjoy the said lands in tam amplo modo & forma, as it was assured and conveyed to the said Platt; ergo, not in more ample manner; and the said land was conveyed to Platt, chargeable to the said recognizance, therefore if Platt enjoy it charged, there is no cause of action: and as to the covenant in the indenture, that Platt and his heirs should enjoy quietly the said lands without interruption of any person, the same is a collateral surety; and the words of the award are, that Platt shall enjoy it in tam amplo modo & forma, as it is conveyed and assured by the assurance aforesaid without interruption, these are not words of assurance, for the assurance doth consist in the legal words of passing the estate: scil. bargain, sale, dedi, concessi, and in the limitation of the estate, and not in the words of the convenant: and therefore it hath been adjudged, that if I. be bounden to A. in an obligation, to assure to him the mannor of D. &c. if A. tender to me an indenture of bargain and sale, in which are many covenants, I am not bound upon the peril of my bond to seal and deliver it. Also here doth not appear any interruption against the covenant in the Indenture, for here is not any lawful execution, for it appeareth here, that More hath sued execution by elegit 4 years after the judgment in the scire facias, in which case he shall be put to a new scire facias, for the sheriff in this case ought to have returned, that the conusor after the recognizance had enfeoffed divers persons, and shewed who, and upon that matter returned, the conusee should have a sci. facias against the feoffees, vide F. N. B. 266. And the Court was clear of opinion against the plaintiff.

XXXV. FLOUD AND SIR JOHN PERROTTS CASE.

Judgments in the Kings Courts not to be defeated by particular custom of places.

Floud recovered against Sir John Perrot, in an action upon the case upon a promise, eighty six pounds, against which Floud and Barlow affirmed a plaint of debt in London, and attached the said moeny in the hands of the said Sir John, and had execution according to the custom of London. And now the said Floud sued a scire facias against the said Sir John, who appeared, and pleaded the said execution by attachment; upon which Floud the plaintiff did demur in law: and it was adjudged no plea, for a duty which accrueth by matter of record cannot be attached by the custom of London. And notwithstanding that the custom of London be layed generally in aliquo debito, and damages recovered are quoddam debitum, as it was urged by the Coun-[30]-cil of the defendant: Yet the law is clear, that judgments given in the Courts of the King ought not, nor cannot by such particular customs be defeated and avoided, as it was lately adjudged in a western case, damages were recovered, the sheriff by virtue of a fieri facias levyed the money, which one to whom the plaintiff was endebted, did attach by the custom, in the hands of the sheriff; but it was adjudged the attachment was not good, for the custom of attachment cannot reach upon a thing of so high a nature as a record is; the same law of debt upon a recognizance and statute, &c. and it was affirmed by Wray chief Justice, that upon great deliberation it was agreed, by Bromley Lord Chancellor himself, the Lord Anderson, Mead and Periam Justices, that where a merchant, having in an action recovered certain damages, became bankrupt, upon which issued an commission upon the statute of 13 Eliz. of Bankrupts, that such commissioners could not entermeddle with such damages, to dispose of them to the creditors, according to the said statute: But now see the statute of 1 Jacobi. The commissioners have power to dispose of such debts, &c.

XXXVI. SIR WALTER HUNGERFORDS CASE.

Grants of the King. Election.

In a replevin by Sir Walter Hungerford, the case was this, the Queen being seised of a great waste called Ruddesdown in the parish of Chipnam, granted to the Mayor and Burgesses of Chipnam, the moyety of a yard-land in the said waste, without certainty in what part of the waste they should have the same, or the special name of the land, or how it was bounded, and without any certain description of it. And afterwards the Queen granted to the said Sir Walter the said waste, and afterwards the said mayor and burgesses by warrant of attorney under the Common Seal, authorized one A. to enter in the said waste, and in the behalf of the said mayor and burgesses to make election of the said moyety, &c. who did so accordingly. And upon this matter gives in evidence the parties did demur in law, and the jury were discharged. And it was holden and resolved by the whole Court, that the grant to the mayor, &c. was utterly void for the incertainty of the thing granted: and if a common person do make such a grant it is good enough, and there the grantee may make his choice where, &c. and by such choice executed, the thing shall be reduced into certainty: which choice the grantee cannot have against the Queen, which difference was agreed by the whole Court: and it was further holden, that this grant was not only void against the Queen her self, but also against Sir Walter Hungerford her patentee. It was further holden by the Court, that if a common person had made such a grant, which ought to be reduced to certainty by election, and the corporation to whom the grant was made (ut supra) should not make their election by attorney, but after that they were resolved upon the land, they should make a special warrant of attorney, reciting the grant to them, and in which part of the said Waste their grant should take effect, east, west, &c. or by buttals, &c. according to which direction the attorney is to enter, &c.

XXXVII. WATTS AND JORDENS CASE.

Error.

In debt by Watts against Jorden, process continued until the defendant was outlawed, and upon the capias utlagatum he appeared and pleaded to issue, which was found for the plaintiff, and judgment giv-[31]-en accordingly. And now came Jourden and cast in a writ of error, and assigned for error, that he appeared upon the capias utlagatum, and pleaded to issue, the original being determined, and not revived by scire facias, upon his charter of pardon; Anderson Justice was of opinion, that it was not error, for the statute of 18 Eliz. had dispensed with it, being after verdict; for the words of the statute are, for want of any writ original or judicial. Windham Justice contrary, for the statute doth not extend, but where the original is imbeselled, but in this case it is not imbeselled, but in law determined, and at last the writ of error was allowed:

XXXVIII. Trin. 23 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Fines levyed. Devise.

The case was, A. seised of lands by his will devised, that his executors should sell his lands, and died, the executors levy a fine thereof to one F. taking mony for the same of F. If in title made by the conusee to the land by the fine, it be a good plea against the fine to say, Quod partes ad finem nihil habuerunt, was the question. Anderson conceived that it was: but by Windham and Periam, upon not-guilty, the conusee might help himself by giving the special matter in evidence, in which case the conusee shall be adjudged in; not by the fine, but by the devise: as by Windham A. deviseth, that his executors shall sell a reversion of certain lands, of which he dieth seised; they sell the same without deed, and good; for the vendee is in by the devise and not by the conveyance of the executors: see 19 H. 6. 23. And by Periam the conusee may help himself by pleading, as he who is in by the feoffment or grant of cestuy que use by the statute of 1 R. 3.

[S. C. Cro. Eliz. 119. See Marquess of Abergavenny v. Bishop of Llandaff, 1888, 20. Q. B. D. 471.]

Quare impedit. Departure.

Albany brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of St. Asaph, who justified for lapse: the plaintiff by replication said that before the six months expired, he presented to the said bishop one Bagshaw, a master of arts and preacher allowed, &c. The defendant by way of rejoynder said, that the church upon the presentment to which the action is brought is a church with cure of souls, and that the parishioners there are homines Wallici, Wallicam loquentes linguam & non aliam. And that the said Bagshaw could not speak or understand the Welsh language, for which cause he refused him, and gave notice to the plaintiff of such refusal, and of the cause of it, &c. upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. And first it was agreed and resolved by the whole Court, that in the computation of the six months in such cases, the reckoning ought not to be according to the kalender, January, February, &c. but secundum numerum singulorum dierum, allowing eight and twenty days to every month: Walmesley Serjeant argued for the plaintiff, and he took exception to the rejoynder; for in that the defendant had departed from his bar; for in the bar the defendant intitles himself to the presentment by reason of lapse, and in the rejoynder he confesseth the presentment of the plaintiff, and pleads his refusal of his clark, and shewes the cause of it; sc. the want of the Welsh language, which is a departure: and he cited divers cases to the same purpose, 27 H 8. 3. In forfeiture of marriage, the defendant pleaded the feoffment of the ancestor of the heir to divers persons, absq; hoc, that he died in the homage of the plaintiff; the plaintiff by Replication said, that the said feoffment was made to the use of the said ancestor and his heirs:

the defendant by rejoynder saith, that [32] the said ancestor did declare his will of the said lands, the same was holden a departure, for he might have pleaded the same in bar, and 21 H. 7. 17, 18. & 37 H. 6. 5. in trespass the defendant pleaded, that I. S. was seised of the land where, &c. being land devisable, and devised the same to him and his heirs; the plaintiff by replication said, that I. S. at the time of the devise was within age, &c. The defendant by rejoynder said, that the custom there is, that every one of the age of fifteen years might devise his lands, &c. the same was holden a departure: but to this exception the Court took not much regard: but as to the matter in law, it was argued by Walmesley, that the defect of the Welsh language assigned by the defendant in the presence of the plaintiff is not a sufficient cause of refusal; for notwithstanding that it be convenient that such a presentee have the knowledge of such language, yet by the law of the land, ignorance of such language, where the party hath more excellent languages, is not any disability; and therefore we see, that many bishops in Wales, who have the principal cure of souls, are English-men; and the Welsh language may easily be learned in a short time by converse with Welsh-men: and the statute of 1 Eliz. which establisheth the Book of Common Prayer, ordaineth, that the said Book of Common Prayer shall be put in use in all the parish churches of Eng. and Wa. without any provision there for the translation of the said book into the Welsh language. But afterwards by a private act it was done, by which it is enacted, that the Bishop of Wales should procure the Epistles and Gospels to be translated, and read in the Welsh language, which matter our presentee might do by a curate well enough: and he conceived, that by divers statutes, aliens by the common law were capable of benefices. See the Statute of 7 H. 2. Cap. 12. 1 H 5. Cap. 7. 14 H. 6. Cap. 6. and before the said last statute Irish-men were capable of benefices. Gawdy Serjeant contrary: and he confessed, that at the Common Law the defects aforesaid were not any causes of refusal; but now by reason of a private act made, 5 Eliz. entituled, An act made for the translating of the Bible, and of the Divine Service into the Welsh tongue, the same defect is become a good cause of refusal; in which act the mischief is recited, viz. that the inhabitants of Wales did not understand the language of England, therefore it was enacted, that the bishops of Wales should procure so many of the Bibles and Books of Common Prayer to be imprinted in the Welsh language, as there are parishes and cathedral churches in Wales, and so upon this statute, this imperfection is become a good cause of refusal. And he likened it to the case of coparceners and joynt-tenants, who now, because that by the statute of 32 H 8. joynt-tenants are equally capable to make partition as coparceners were by the common law; now partition betwixt joynt-tenants within age is as strong as betwixt parceners within age. But as to that point it was said by the Lord Anderson, that it is very true, that upon the said statute the want of the Welsh language in the presentee is now become a good cause of refusal; but because the said act being a private act hath not been pleaded by the defendant, we ought not to give our judgment according to that Act, but according to the common law. Another matter was moved, because here appeareth no sufficient notice given to the patron after the said refusal, for the plaintiff did present the thirteenth of August (the church voyding the fourteenth of March before) the nine and twentieth of August the six months expired; the fourth of September the defendant gave notice to the patron of the refusal, and the fourteenth of September was the collation; and it was said by the Lord Anderson, that it appeareth here, that there are two and twenty days between the presentment and the notice; which is too large a delay: and the defendant hath not shewed in his plea any cause for the justifying or excuse of it [33] and therefore upon his own shewing we adjudge him to be a disturber: see 14 H. 7. 22. 15 H. 7. 6. and note by Periam, it was adjudged in the case of Mollineux, if the patron present, and the ordinary doth refuse, he ought to give notice to the person of the patron thereof, if he be resident within the county, and if not, at the church itself, which is void.

XL. MICH. 27 & 28 ELIZ. AT SERJEANTS INN.

This case was referred by the lords of council to the justices for their opinions, I. S. by indenture between the Queen of the one part, and himself of the other part, reciting that where he is indebted to the Queen in eight hundred pounds, to be paid in form following, twenty pounds at every Feast of St. Michael, until the whole sum aforesaid be paid, covenanted and granted with the said Queen, to convey unto the Lord Treasurer, and Barons of the Exchequer, and to their heirs, certain lands to the uses following, viz. to the use of the said I. S. and his heirs, until such time as the said I. S. his heirs executors or administrators shall make default in payment of any of the said sums; and after such default, to the use of the said Queen, her heirs and successors, until her heirs and successors shall have received of the issues and profits thereof such sums of money parcel of the said debt as shall be then behind and unpaid, and after the said debt so paid and received, then to the use of the said I. S. and his heirs for ever. I. S. levyeth a fine of the said land to the said lord treasurer and the barons, to the uses aforesaid; and afterwards being seised accordingly, by deed indented and enrolled bargains and sels the said land to a stranger: default of payment is made, the Queen seizeth, and granteth it over to one and his heirs, quousque the money be paid, and after the money is paid: and upon conference of the judges amongst themselves at Serjeants Inn, they were of opinion, that now I. S. against his indenture of bargain and sale, should have his lands again, for at the time of the bargain and sale he had an estate in fee, determinable upon a default of payment, ut supra, which accrued to him by the first indenture and the fine, which estate only passed by the said indenture of bargain and sale, and not the new estate which is accrued to him by the latter limitation after the debt paid, for that was not in esse at the time of the bargain and sale; but if the conveyance by bargain and sale had been by feoffment or fine, then it had been otherwise, for by such conveyance all uses and possibilities had been carried by reason of the forcible operation of it.

XLI. TAYLOR AND MOORES CASE.

Debt. Error.

Taylor brought debt upon an obligation against Moore, who pleaded in bar, upon which the plaintiff did demurre, and the Court awarded the plea in bar good, upon which judgment the plaintiff brought a writ of error, and assigned error in this, that the bar upon which he had demurred, as insufficient, was adjudged good: upon which now in this writ of error the bar was awarded insufficient, and therefore the judgment reversed: but the Court was in a doubt what judgment shall be given in the case, viz. whether the plaintiff shall recover his debt and damages, as if he had recovered in the first action, or that he shall be restored to his action only, &c. And Wray cited the case in 8 E. 4. 8. and the case of attaint 18 E. 4. 9. And at last it was awarded, that the plaintiff should recover his debt and damages: see to that purpose 33 H. 6. 31. XLII. HIGHAM AND HAREWOODS CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ the case was, that one Butty was seised of the land where, &c. and also of a messuage, with which messuage the said land had been usually occupied, time out of mind, &c. and being seised and lying sick, commanded a scrivener to be brought to him, and the said scrivener being brought to him, he gave him instructions to make his will, and amongst other things declared unto him, that his meaning was, that the said messuage, and all his lands in Westerfield should be sold by his executors; and the scrivener in making of the will penned the matter in this manner: I will that my house, with all the appurtenances, shall be sold by my executors: Butty died, the executors sell forty acres of the said land to the def. and all this matter was found by special verdict, and it was moved by the plaintiffs counsel, that the sale of this land by the executors is not warranted by the will: another matter was moved, scil. admitting that the executors have authority by the will to sell the land, if the sale of parcel of the land be good and warrantable: as if I make a charter of feoffment of ten acres, and a letter of attorney to make livery of them to the feoffee, if the attorney makes several liveries of the several acres the same is void: but by Cook the cases are not like, for in the case put he hath a special commission, in which the party to whom, and all the other circumstances are set down certainly, contrary in the case at the bar, there the commission is general, &c. and peradventure the executors shall never find a chapman who will contract with them for the whole. And afterwards upon conference amongst the judges, Clench, Gawdy, and Wray, it was resolved, that by this devise the lands do pass by the sale of the executors to the defendant, which sale also by process is warranted by the will, for by Wray, these words, with all the appurtenances are effectual and emphatical words to enforce the devise, and that doth extend to all the lands especially; because it is found, that the testator gave to the scrivener his instructions accordingly: and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff. See 3 Eliz. Plowd. 210. Betwixt Sanders and Freeman, there the devise is pleaded in this manner. Messuagium cum pertinentiis ad illud spectantibus in perpetuum in villa de Arthingworth.

XLIII. Watkins and Astwicks Case.

Tender to redeem a Mortgage.

In an ejectione firmæ, it was found by special verdict, that one Maynard was seised, and made a feoffment in fee upon condition of payment of mony on the part of the feoffor by way of mortgage at a certain day, before which day the said Maynard dyed, his son and heir being within age, afterwards at the day of payment limited by the mortgage, a stranger at the instance and request of the mother of the heir tendred the money to the mortgagee in the name of the heir being within age, who refused it. And it was resolved by the whole Court, that the same is not a sufficient tender to redeem the land, according to the mortgage, for it is found by the jury, that the heir at the time of the tender was within age, generally, not particularly of six or ten years, &c. then it might well stand with the verdict, that the heir at such time was of the age of 18 or 19 years, at which age he is by the law out of the ward of his mother, or any other prochein amy, in which [35] case it is presumed in law, that he hath discretion to govern his own affairs: and in this case the mother is but a stranger, for the law hath estranged the mother from the government of the heir; but if the jury had found that the heir at the time of the tender was of tender age, viz. within the age of fourteen years, in which case by law he ought to be in ward, in such case the tender had been good.

XLIV. LEPUR AND WROTHS CASE.

Replevin. Construction of Statutes. Leases.

A replevin by Lepur against Wroth, and declared upon a tortious taking in Burnham in the county of Essex; the case upon the pleading was, that Robert Earl of Sussex was seised of the manor of Burnham in fee, and leased the same to the King for one and twenty years, and afterwards the said earl died, by which the said manor descended to Thomas late Earl of Sussex, and he being seised, 4 and 5 Phil. and Mary it was enacted by Parliament, that the Lady Frances, wife of the said earl, by virtue of the said Act of Parliament should have, hold and enjoy; &c. during the widowhood of the said Frances, for and in consideration of the joynture of the said Frances the said manor: provided always, and it is further enacted, that it should be lawful for the said earl, by his writing indented, dimissionem vel dimissiones facere pro termino 21. annorum vel infra de eodem manerio pro aliquo redditu annuali, ita quod super omnes & singulos hujusmodi dimissionem & dimissiones antiquus redditus & consuetus vel eo major & amplior reservaretur, and that every such demise should be of force, and effectual in law against the said Frances for term of her life, if the said term should so long continue: and further the said act gave to the said Frances, distress, avowry, covenant, &c. against such lessee, and for the said lessee against the said dame; and afterwards the said Thomas, the said former lease not expired, leased the said manor to Wroth the defendant for one and twenty years, to begin at the Feast of St Michael next following (and note the lease was made the third of April before) rendring three hundred and forty pounds per annum, which was redditus amplior antiquo & usuali. Popham Attorney-General argued, that the said lease did not bind the said Lady Frances, and that for two causes: 1. because it is to begin at a day to come: 2. because it was made, a former lease being in esse, and he argued much upon construction of statutes to be made not according to the letter, but according to the meaning of them: and he cited a case upon the statute of 2 H. 5. 3. by which it is enacted, that in no action in which the damages do amount to forty marks, any person should be admitted to pass in trayl of it, who had not lands or tenements of the clear yearly value of forty shillings, yet the said statute shall not be by construction extended, where in an action between an English-man and an alien, the alien prayeth medietatem linguæ; and yet the statute is general. So in our case, although this private act doth not seem to provide expressly but for two things: 1. the number of the years, 21, & non ultra: 2. antiquus redditus vel eo amplior, yet in reason and good understanding we ought to think, that the intent of the act was, that the said manor should now come to the said Lady Frances surcharged with leases in reversion, or to begin at a day to come, for if by this act the said earl might make a lease to begin three months after, by the same reason he might make a lease to begin twenty years after, and also to begin after his death. It hath been objected, that the Lord Treasurer had a commission to make leases of the Queens lands, and that by virtue thereof he made leases in reversion: I know the contrary to that, for every such lease is allowed by a bill assigned, and not by the ordinary commission afore-[36]-said, the words of our act are, Dimissiones facere pro termino 21. annorum, that shall be meant to begin presently: as if I lease to you my lands for one and twenty years, it shall be intended to begin presently; and he cited the case betwixt Fox and Collier upon the statute of 1 Eliz. concerning leases made by bishops: that four years of a former lease being in being, the bishop leased for one and twenty years, the same was a good lease, notwithstanding the former lease, for the lease began presently betwixt the parties. And it hath been adjudged, that a lease for years by a bishop, to begin at a day to come, is utterly void. And he cited the case of the late Marquess of Northampton, who by such an Act of Parliament as ours was enabled to make leases of the lands of his wife for one and twenty years, and of the said lands an ancient lease was made before the said act, which was in esse, and before the expiration thereof he made a lease by virtue of the said Act to commence after the expiration of the former lease, and that lease was allowed to be a good lease warranted by the said statute, because that the first lease, which was in esse, was not made by force of the said act, but if the said former lease had been made by virtue of the said statute, the second lease had been utterly void.

Copy-hold Surrender by Attorney not good.

A copy-holder of the manor of the Earl of Arrundel did surrender his customary lands to the use of his last will, and thereby devised the lands to his youngest son and his heirs, and died, the youngest son being in prison makes a letter of attorney to one to be admitted to the land in the lords court in his room, and also after admittance to surrender the same to the use of B. and his heirs, to whom he had sold it for the payment of his debts: and Wray was of opinion, that it was a good surrender by attorney, but Gawdy and Clench contrary: and by Gawdy; If he who ought to surrender cannot come in Court to surrender in person, the lord of the manor may appoint a special steward to go to the prison and take the surrender, &c. and by Clench; lessee for years cannot surrender by attorney, but he may make a deed purporting a surrender, and a letter of attorney to another to deliver it.

The case was, that a copy-holder did surrender to the use of his will and thereby devised the land to his wife for life, the remainder over to his son in tail, and died, the wife entred, and died, a stranger did intrude upon the lands, and thereof made three several feoffments to three several persons, he in the remainder entred upon one of the said three feoffees in the name of all the lands so devised, and made a lease of the whole land: and by Clench and Wray it was a good entry for the whole, and by consequence, a good lease of the whole, Gawdy contrary: note, all the lands were in one county: see 16 Eliz. XLVII. Parmort and Griffina's Case.

Debt. Proviso taken strictly.

In debt upon an obligation by Parmort against Griffina a merchant-stranger, the defendant pleaded, that the obligation was made upon condition for the performance of certain covenants contained within certain indentures, and shewed what, &c. and alledged further, that in the said indenture there is a proviso, that if aliqua lis, vel controversia oriatur imposterum, by reason of any clause, article, or other agreement in the said indenture contained, that then, before any sute thereupon attempted the parties shall choose four indifferent persons for the ending thereof, which being done, the indenture and obligation shall be void: and in fact saith, that lis & controversia, upon which the action is brought, groweth upon the said indenture, upon which there was a demurrer in law. And because the defendant hath not shewed specially upon what controversie or strife, and upon what article certain: the Court was clear of opinion, that the bar was not good: and also the Court was of opinion, that the said proviso did not extend to subject and submit the breach of every covenant or article within the said indenture to the arbitrament of the said four persons, but only where strife and controversie doth arise upon the construction of any covenant, &c. within the said indenture; so as the defendant ought to have shewed such matter which fell within the arbitrament, by the meaning of the said indenture; and judgment was given against the defendant.

XLVIII. PARTRIDGE AND PARTRIDGES CASE.

Dower. Remitter.

In dower by Partridge against Partridge, the case was, that land was given to the father for life, the reversion to his son and heir for life, the remainder to the right heirs of the body of the father: the father and son joyn in a feoffment to the uncle in fee, scil. to the brother of the father. The uncle takes a wife, the father dieth, the son being his heir in tail, the uncle dieth without issue, so as the land descendeth to the son, as heir to his uncle, against whom the wife of the uncle brought dower: it was moved, if the son being heir in tail to his father, and heir also to his uncle, for the fee descended, be now remitted? for then no dower accrueth to the wife of the uncle, for the estate of which she demands dower is gone: but if the livery in which the son joyned with his father be the livery of the son, the same lies in his way in the impediment and preventing of the remitter, so as during his life he shall be adjudged seised of the lands in fee-simple by descent from his uncle; then dower lyeth, for the same estate is inherited, of which the wife demandeth her dower: and the Court doubted, if it were the livery of the son or not. And note, that the feoffment was without deed. See Dyer 16 Eliz. 339.

XLIX. THE QUEEN AGAINST THE LORD VAUX AND OTHERS.

Intrusion.

A bill of intrusion was brought for the Queen against the Lord Vaux, Rich. Vaux, & Hen. Vaux, supposing to have intruded into the rectory & parsonage of Ethelborough in the county of Northampton, & shew-[38]-ed that in the time of Hen. the Fourth, the Colledge of Saint Peter of Ethelborough was founded at Westminster, in the County of Midd. by the name of decani & capituli; and shewed further, that the rectory of Ethelborough, was appropriated to the said colledge, and that afterwards by the statute of 1 E. 6. the said colledge was dissolved, and the said rectory, amongst other possessions of the said colledge, came to the hands of the King, and that the defendants, 1 Eliz. intruded into the said rectory, and took one thousand sheep, one thousand calves, and one thousand loads of corn, bona & catalla dictæ Dominæ Reginæ provenientia ex decimis rectoriæ prædict. apud Westm. predict. The defendants pleaded, &c. that the said Colledge of Ethelborough was founded in Ethelborough, &c. per nomen Decani, canonicorum, & fratrum, &c. who leased the said rectory so appropriated to one Clark for forty six years, in Anno 30 H. 8. who assigned the same to the defendants, by force of which they justified the taking at Ethelborough, absque hoc, that the said Colledge of Saint Peter in Ethelborough, was founded, per nomen decani & capituli ecclesiæ sancti Petri de Ethelborough, at Westminster aforesaid, & absque hoc, that they took the said sheep, &c. at Westminster, &c. Upon which the Queens Attorny did demur in law. Manwood chief Baron argued; that judgment ought to be given for the Queen: exception hath been taken to the information, because mention is made in it of a colledge, and it is not shewed what person was the founder: and also an appropriation is alleadged of the rectory aforesaid to the said colledge, and the appropriation is not shewed certain, who was patron, ordinary, &c. as to that he argued that the alledging of the appropriation and foundation, is but matter of surplusage, and therefore the insufficiency of alledging the same shall not prejudice the Queen, for it had been sufficient to say, that the said Colledge of St. Peter, was seised of the rectory aforesaid, and then to shew the Statute of Chauntries, 1 E. 6. and the same is a good title for the Queen, the possession of the colledge, and the dissolution of it by the statute: for this bill of intrusion is but in the nature of a possessory action, as an action of trespass, in which case it is sufficient to make title to the possession only, without relying upon the right; but as to the curious and exact pleading of an appropriation, or a foundation, it needs not in this case; for admit that the colledge were not well and duly founded, yet such pleading is sufficient, for a colledge in reputation is within the statute of 1 E. 6. and where the party claims by or under such foundation, there the foundation ought to be certainly shewed, not precisely but conveniently, not as we plead a common recovery, but as we plead the creation of a bishop, scil. debito modo præfectus, without shewing the particulars of the creation, so if an abbot will plead in discharge of his house of a corody, he ought to shew the foundation, and convenient certainty, which see L. 5. E. 4. 118. Robert Milam founded the abby of Leicester, and conveyed the right of patronage and foundership to the King by attainder, and the same was good pleading, without shewing the particulars of the foundation specially, so 3. H. 7. 6. in the case of the priory of Norwich, the pleading is, quod prioratus de Norwich est de fundatione episcoporum Norwich, for in such case, refert quis sit fundor, so the King be not founder; but in our case, non refert quis sit fundor, for whosoever be founder, whether the King, or a subject, all is one, the statute in both cases gives the possessions to the King: and as to the case of appropriation, the pleading thereof is well, if it be conveniently shewed, in case where the party who shews it claimes by such appropriation, as 6 H. 7. 14. 11. H. 7. 8. concurrentibus his quæ de jure, &c. without shewing the particulars of the appropriation. Now in our case, the Queen is meerly a stranger to this appropriation, and she doth not claim by it, but the possession of the colledge is the title of the Queen, by the statute of 1. E. 6. and therefore it sufficeth for the Queen to shew that the colledge was seised, &c. [39] without making mention of the manner of the appropriation: and as to the traverse of the county, he conceived, that the county is not traversable in this case, for when the tithes are severed from the nine parts, they are presently vested in the party who hath right, and they are things transitory, and also the taking of them, for the party may take them in any place as well as in his own parish, scil. as well at Westminster, where the Queen supposeth the taking, as at Ethelborough where the defendant doth justify, &c. and in such cases the place where is not traversable. See 9 H. 6. 62, 63. by Babbington, 35 H. 6. 5. In trespass of goods taken in the parish of Saint Clements, in the county of Midd. the defendant did justify by buying in open market in the county of Essex, there needs no traverse, for the defendant hath made title by an open market, 34 H. 6. 15, 16. In trespass of battery at D. in the county of Essex, the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff made an assault upon him at B. in the county of Kent, and the defendant fled, and the plaintiff pursued him continually unto D. aforesaid, at which place the defendant did defend himself, and so the hurt which the plaintiff had was of his own assault; and demanded judgment if action, the same is a good plea without traversing of the county, for a battery may be continued from one county to another. And it was observed by Manwood in citing of that case, that although, prima facie mirum videri potest that a battery may be continued from Essex into Kent, because the river of Thames is betwixt them, and yet, re intellecta, it is plain, for one parcel of land containing thirty acres of lands of the coasts of Essex is within the county of Kent, see also 34 H. 6. 5. by Prisot, in trespass of goods taken at Coventry, the def. doth justify the taking because the plaintiff gave the said goods to the defendant at London, by force of which he took them at London, absque hoc, that he took them at Coventry, and that traverse not holden good, for the defendant by such a gift might justify the taking of the goods in any place as well as in the place where the gift was made; but if in such case the defendant had pleaded, that the plaintiff delivered the said goods to him at London to deliver them over to A. by force of which he took them at London, and delivered them over accordingly, in such cases the defendant may well traverse the place supposed by the declaration, for by his plea he hath confessed an immediate delivery of the said goods to him by the plaintiff; and the delivery and the taking all at one time and at one place, and it had not been a good plea for the defendant to say, that the plaintiff delivered to him the said goods at London, by force of which he took them at Coventry, for the possession is confessed by the first delivery of the goods at London; and the supposal of the plaintiff of a taking in Coventry, and the justification of the defendant of a taking by reason of a delivery at London, cannot stand together. But if the defendant plead, that the plaintiff gave to him the goods in London, by force of which he took them there, there he may take traverse to the place supposed by the declaration, for by the gift it is lawful to the defendant to take the goods in any place. So see 19 H. 6. 35. In false imprisonment supposed in the county of W. the defendant doth justify as sheriff of the county of B. by force of a writ to him directed to attach the plaintiff, and so he attached him and imprisoned him at C. in the county of B. there the defendant traversed the county supposed by the declaration, for otherwise he doth not meet with the plaintiff, and the authority of the defendant doth not extend to the county supposed by the declaration. See also to the same purpose 22 E. 4. 39. by Hussy, where the difference is taken when justification is by reason of a warrant to take goods in any place whatsoever, and where in a place certain, as to the traverse of the foundation, absq; hoc, quod prædict. collegium fundatum fuit per nomen decani, & capituli ecclesiæ collegiatæ sancti Petri de Ethelborough apud Westm. he hath [40] here traversed that which was not alledged, for the placing of the last words of the traverse, scil. apud Westminst. in the end of the traverse seems by common construction to be intended thereby, that there is no such colledge at Westm. and not that the colledge was not founded at Westm. for then the traverse should be, absque hoc, quod collegium prædictum fundatum fuit at Westminster, per nomen, &c. But the most proper traverse, that the defendant could have taken in this case had been, absque hoc, quod decanus & capitulum ecclesiæ collegiat. de Ethelborough was seised; for the corporation mentioned in the bill, and that which is mentioned in the bar, are not all one, but differ in this manner, scil. in the bill the dean and chapter, &c. in the bar the dean, cannons, and bretheren, and perhaps there are two such corporations, and then both cannot be seised, and therefore upon the seisin of one of them, the traverse shall be taken: and afterward judgment was given for the Queen.

It was also moved, if the Queen intituled to the presentment as above, pardoneth to the conusee all alienations without licence, and

A. dyed, if now Braybrook might enter for the forfeiture was the question: and it was agreed by the whole Court, that by that fine the remainder in fee is not touched, or discontinued, but because B. had done as much as in him lay for the disposing of fee-simple by the fine, and hath taken that upon him, the same amounts to a forfeiture: and it was also agreed by Anderson and Periam, that if tenant for life in possession leveyeth a fine, &c. if the lessor doth not enter within five years after, he shall be bounden: Windham contrary, for by him it is in the election of the lessor to re-enter immediately for the forfeiture, or to expect the death of the lessee.

LIII. HENLY AND BROADS CASE.

Trespass. Counts. Error.

Henly brought trespass against Broad in the Kings Bench, and declared, that the said defendant, simul cum quodam I. S. clausum suum fregit, &c. The defendant pleaded to issue, and it was found for the plaintiff, and it was objected in stay of judgment, that the count was not good, for it appeareth therein, upon the shewing of the plaintiff himself, that the action ought to be brought against another also, not named in the writ, and because the same appears of the plaintiffs own shewing, the declaration was not good, and notwithstanding that said exception, judgment was given for the plaintiff. Upon which Broad brought a writ of error, and assigned the same matter for error; and there the case of 2 H. 7. 16. 1 7. was cited, where a difference is taken, where the plaintiff declares, that the defendant with one B. did the trespass, him naming in certain, and where the declaration is, that the defendant, cum quibusdam alijs ignotis, &c. See 8 H. 5. 5. And at length all the Justices of the Common Pleas, and Barons of the Exchequer were clear of opinion, that by the common law the declaration was not good, for the reason, and upon the difference aforesaid: but if in trespass against one, who pleads that the trespass was done by himself and one B. to whom the plaintiff hath released, and the plaintiff traverse the release, in that case, for as much as the matter doth not appear upon the plaintiffs own shewing, but comes in on the part of the defendant, and not denied by him, the declaration is good enough: and it was further agreed by them all, that now this defect after verdict is helped by the statute of 18 Eliz. for it doth not concern substance but only form: and afterwards the first judgment was affirmed.

LIV. WOOD AND FOSTERS CASE.

Replevin.

Wood brought a replevin against Humfrey Foster and others, and made his plaint of the taking of one thousand cattle; Foster pleaded, non cepit, and the others, that the property was in another; upon which matters they were at issue. And as unto the first issue, the case upon the evidence was: that the late Lord Windsore was possessed of certain sheep, and by his will devised them unto Eliz. his daughter for her advancement in marriage, and of his will made his wife his executrix, and died, his wife took to her husband one Puttenham, who being thus possessed leased the said sheep with a farm for eleven years by indenture, upon which it was agreed between the said parties, that the lessee should keep so much of the rent reserved upon the said lease, to buy therewith so many cattle over, so as the whole stock of the said sheep upon the said farm should amount to the number of one thousand cattle; and the lessee also covenanted to yield and render to the said Puttenham at the end of the said term one thousand sheep between two years shorne, and four years shorne. Afterwards Puttenham by his deed gave unto one A. who had married the said Eliz. the said one thousand cattle, to have them after the said term; the term expired; Puttenham sold and granted them unto Wood, who brought them away with him. And the said A. pretending that the said sheep passed to him by the said grant of Puttenham during the said term, seised them, and the same was noctanter as they were driven in the high-way, undemagna contentio orta fuit between the said parties, the one charging the other with felony, whereupon the constable of the town where, &c. supposing the said matter would grow to an outrage, seised the said cattle as felons goods, and afterwards went to the house of the said Foster, which was near unto the high-way, and asked his advise upon the matter, but he would not meddle therewith: afterwards one Perkins, who had bought the said cattle of the said A. came to Foster, and shewed to him, that the high-ways there were not sufficient for pasturage of the said cattle until the said controversy be determined, and prayed that the cattle be delivered to him the said Perkins to keep in the mean time; to whom Foster answered, that if the said Perkins would find sufficient sureties to deliver back the cattle to him who had right, that he would be content the said Perkins should take them; whereupon the said Perkins was bound to Foster to that purpose, and took away with him the said cattle; and it was also given in evidence, that the servants of the said Foster had seised the cattle for the use of their master. And by the clear opinion of the Court upon the whole matter shewed, Foster non cepit, and according to such direction of the Court the jury found, that Foster non cepit; and as to the matter of property, the Court was clear of opinion, that the grant made by Puttenham of the said cattle, during the term, was utterly void, for Puttenham during the same term had not in the said cattle either a general or a special property, nor also after the term; but if after the term expired the lessee will not according to his covenant deliver to Puttenham one thousand sheep, then Puttenham is put to his action of covenant, for here the lessee was bound to deliver to Puttenham at the end of the term, not the same cattle which were leased, but such a number of sheep, and the same ought to be between two years shorne, and four years shorne, which could not be the sheep demised, for they did exceed such degree before the end of the said term, and then the grant of Puttenham during the term is meerly void: and then when after the term, the lessee, according to the covenant, delivered to Wood one thousand sheep, he might well sell them to the plaintiff; [43] and such was the opinion of the whole Court, and it was said by Justice Windham, that if I let certain sheep to one for two years, now upon that lease somewhat remains in me, but that cannot be properly said a property, but rather the possibility of a property which cannot be granted over. See 11 H. 4. 177. 178. 22 E. 4. 10. 11. In the same plea it was also holden, that in a replevin where the plaint is of one thousand beasts, and the defendant justifies by reason of property, upon which the parties are at issue; now upon the evidence the defendant may surmise a lesser number of beasts, and drive the plaintiff to prove a greater number than that which the defendant hath confessed upon the evidence; notwithstanding that the number set down in the plaint be by the plea of the Defendant quodam modo admitted, and the lesser number surmised, and the contrary not proved shall go in mitigation of the damages, and the jury shall conform their verdict in the right of damages, according to the proof of the number, notwithstanding that the number set forth in the plaint be not by the plea denied by the defendant, and so it was put in ure in this case: for the plaint was of the taking of one thousand cattle, but the proof extended but to eight hundred sixty five. Note also in the same plea it was holden, that whereas one Chock was returned upon several juries in two several courts at Westminster, and both the juries are adjourned to one day; now in which of the said two courts the said Chock was sworn, he shall be discharged of his attendance at the other court the same day.

LV. CARTERS CASE.

Assumpsit.

Carter brought an action upon the case against I. S. and declared, that A. was possessed of certain lands for years, the inheritance thereof being in the wife of the plaintiff, upon which lease a rent was reserved: the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff would procure the said A. to assign the said lease to the defendant promised to pay the said rent to the plaintiff for all the residue of the term: it was objected that upon this matter the action doth not lie, because that the plaintiff hath a higher remedy, scil. an action of debt or distress; but the opinion of the whole Court was that the action did lie, for here upon the promise an action is given to the husband alone in his own right, whereas the rent is due to the husband in the right of his wife in its nature, and the rent is also to be paid for the land. But upon this assumpsit it is payable to the person of the husband. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

LVI. KIMPTON AND BELLAMYES CASE.

Replevin. Traverse. Extinguishment.

George Kimpton brought a replevin against Wood and Bellamy, who make conusance as baylies to George Burgain for damage feasance. The plaintiff in bar of the conusance, sheweth; that he himself, and all those whose estate he hath in one hundred and forty acres of land time out of mind, &c. have had common for all manner of cattle in six acres of lands, whereof the place where, &c. is parcel, and so put in his cattle, &c. against which, the defendants say that the plaintiff, &c. had common in forty acres of land, whereof the said six acres are parcel, all lying in communi campo, and that the plaintiff, a long time before the taking, had purchased two acres parcel of the said forty acres, &c. upon which there was a demurrer in law; [44] it was argued by Serjeant Shuttleworth, that the replication to the bar to the avowry is not good, for in the bar to the avowry, the plaintiff hath shewed, that he hath common in six acres, and the same shall be intended common in six acres only, for common in forty acres cannot be the common in six acres; as 35 H. 6. 38. In debt for rent reserved upon a lease for years, the plaintiff declared that he leased to the defendant ten acres of land, rendring the rent in demand, the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff leased to him the said ten acres, and also such a rectory, rendring the same rent, the same is no plea without traverse, absque hoc, that he leased the ten acres only: see Dyer 29 H. 8. 32. And the whole Court was clear of opinion, that for want of such traverse, the plea is not good; for by Periam the common supposed in the bar to the conusans out of the six acres, cannot be intended the common supposed in the replication, scil. out of the forty acres. And by him if in trespass the defendant justifie by reason of common in six acres of land, upon which the parties are at issue; and the defendant in evidence shews, that he hath common in forty acres, whereof the said six acres are parcel, the same doth not maintain his title, but the issue shall be found against him: but by the Lord Anderson, because that this demurrer is general, the other party shall not take advantage of that defect of pleading, for the want of the traverse, and that by reason of the statute of 27 Eliz. for traverse is but matter of form, and the want of the same shall not prejudice the other party in point of judgment, but the judges ought to judge upon the substance, and not upon the manner and form of the pleading: And as to the matter of the common, the Court was clear of opinion, that by the purchase of the said two acres, the whole common was gone.

LVII. KNIGHTS CASE.

Debt. Abatement of Writ.

Knight brought debt against three executors, and now surmised by his counsel, that one of the executors is dead, pendant the writ; and prayed the opinion of the Court, if the writ should thereby abate or not; for by some it is not like where a writ is brought against two executors, for there if any of them dieth, pendant the writ, it shall abate, for now the plural number is gone, for there is but one executor, but in our case the plural number continues: but notwithstanding that, the Court was clear of opinion, that the writ should abate: wherefore the plaintiff seeing the opinion of the Court, prayed that upon his surmise aforesaid, he might have a new writ by journeys accounts, which was granted to him.

THE QUEEN AND MIDDLETONS CASE.

Quare Impedit. Where in pleading the party must make title to himself.

The Queen brought a quare impedit against Middleton, and counted, that W. Lord Say was seised of the manor of Bedington in the county of Hertford, to which manor the avowson of the church was appendant, & ad ecclesiam prædict. præsentavit coo clericum suum, and afterwards died seised, having issue two daughters, Mary married to the Earl of Essex and Ann to the Lord Mountjoy, who make partition, and the said manor of Bedington, inter alia, was allotted to the said Mary for her part; and afterwards the said earl and Mary died, having issue Ann, who took to husband the Marquess of Northampton, and afterwards 33 H. 8. a fine was levyed of the said manor inter &c. Querent. and the said marquess and Ann defor-[45]-ceants, by which fine the said manor was granted and rendred to the said marquess for term of his life, the remainder to the said Ann his wife in tail, the remainder over to Hen. the eighth in fee; the marquess is attainted of high treason, by which the King seised, and afterwards Ann died without issue, after which in the seisin of the Queen that now is the church voided, by which it belonged to the Queen to present; The defendant did confess the seisin of the Lord Say, and the whole matter contained in the count until the attainder; and pleaded further, that after the said attainder Queen Mary leased the said manor, with the advowson to Rochester and Walgrave for forty years, if the said marquess should so long live, who were possessed accordingly, and in their possession the church became void, to which avoidance one Twiniko did present the defendant, who upon his presentment was instituted and inducted: upon which plea the Queens Serjeant did demur in law. It was argued by Serjeant Shuttleworth for the Queen, that the counter-pleading of the title of the Queen by the incumbent, without shewing title in his own patron could not be good, notwithstanding the statute of 25 E. 3. cap. 7. before which statute, the incumbent could not plead any matter which went to the right of the patronage, but only in discharge or excuse of the disturbance, and therefore we ought to observe the words of the said statute, sc. the possessor shall be received to counter-plead the Kings title, and to have his answer, and to defend his right upon the matter, although he claim nothing in the patronage; upon all which words taken together it appeareth, that the incumbent ought not only to counter-plead the title of the King, but also to shew and defend his own right, and that hath not the defendant done here; For Twiniko, of whose presentment he is in the church, doth not claim under the lease made by Queen Mary to Rochester and Walgrave, but during their said lease and their possession of it, by usurpation presented the defendant, 46 E. 3. 13. by Finchden, the King brought a scire fac. upon a recovery in a quare impedit, the defendant being incumbent pleaded, that after the said judgment the King had presented to the said church I. S. his clerk, who was admitted accordingly; and exception was taken because the defendant did not shew a title in himself to maintain his possession, but it was not allowed; for a difference is taken betwixt a plea in a quare impedit, and a plea in a scire facias, for in a scire facias it is sufficient to extort the plaintiff of execution without any title, contrary in a quare impedit: and it is a general rule, that in all cases where an office is to be traversed, none shall be received to traverse the title of the King, without making a title to himself, which see 38 E. 3. 18. So in the case of the Lady Wingfield, 3 H. 7. 14. and Stamford 63, 64. And it is true in actions real it is sufficient to traverse the title of the demandant, without making title to the tenant himself: as in a formedon, ne dona pas; but in actions personal it is otherwise, as 2 H. 4, 14. In ravishment of ward, it is not sufficient to traverse the title of the plaintiff, but the defendant ought also to make title to himself. Fenner Serjeant contrary: who took exception to the writ, because it is brought against the incumbent only without naming the patron or ordinary: for here the defendant hath pleaded, that he is parson impersonee of the church aforesaid of the presentment of the said Twiniko, and that he is admitted, instituted and inducted, and hath continued in his church so many days and years, in which case the writ ought to have been brought as well against the patron and ordinary, as against him the incumbent: but in some cases it is sufficient against the incumbent only, as upon a collation by lapse, 9 H. 6. 32. by Babbington: so where the defendant is disturber without any presentment, 7 H. 4. 93. so where the defendant was deprived, and kept himself in 4 E. 4. 18. So where the pope makes provision, 11 H. 4. Quare impedit 120. So a scire facias upon a reco-[46]-very in a quare imped. shall be brought against the incumbent only 1 H. 5. 8. for by the judgment in the quare impedit, the right of the patronage is bound; and the scire facias is only for the possession, which concerns the defendant only, and no other. And to prove that by the common law, a quare impedit lay not (but upon such special matter) against the incumbent alone, it is clear upon the said statute of 25 E. 3. For before the said statute the incumbent could not plead any matter which did trench to the right of the patronage, and therefore we ought not to presume that the common law was so unreasonable to give an action against a singular person, who could not by the law shew and defend his own right, nor traverse the right of the other party: and as to the plea here, he conceived that the same plea which the patron might have now after the statute of 25 E. 3. the incumbent shall have; but he who is only a disturber not in by presentment, &c. he shall not plead any matter but in discharge or excuse of the disturbance, 47 E. 3. 8. The King in a quare impedit counted, that King H. was seised, and presented one A. King H. died, and the advowson descended to King E. 3. A. died, the now King presented B. and now B. is dead, so it belongs to the King to present; that the defendant being incumbent traversed the institution and induction of B. without making title to himself. So 44 E. 3. 19. in a quare impedit the King declared that he himself was seised and presented one B. who at his presentment was received, &c. B. died, by which it belonged to the King to present; to which the defendant being incumbent pleaded, that the said B. is yet alive, and that plea was allowed without other title made to himself. Note, that at the first argument of this case, that the Court was of opinion against the defendant, because he had not in his plea any interest in the advowson; and by Periam the patron himself could not have had such plea if he had been party to the writ, therefore not the incumbent; and it is no good pleading any in action, to discover in pleading any wrong, as force, disseisin, usurpation. But at length, mutata opinione, all the justices were agreed, that judgment should be given against the Queen: and the Lord Anderson shewed openly, the reason of their judgment, for here is not bare usurpation pleaded against the Queen, but also an estate, scil. a lease for years in the said advowson derived from Queen Mary, and that the avoidance upon which the action is brought falleth within the said term, so as the Queen who is plaintiff is encountred with the lease of her ancestor, against which she cannot make title to present, without special matter; wherefore judgment was given against the Queen.

LIX. Kynters Case.

Debt.

Kynter brought debt upon an obligation, the condition was, that whereas the plaintiff had bought of the defendant a ship, if then the defendant shall enjoy the said ship, with all the furniture belonging to the same without being disturbed for the said ship or any furniture appertaining to it; that then, &c. and the case was, that after the sale of the said ship a stranger sued the plaintiff for certain monies due for certain ballast bought by the defendant for the same ship and put into the said ship before the sale of it, and in the said suit the plaintiff obtained a judgment and execution, and thereupon the said ship was seised, and all the matter was, if ballast be furniture of a ship or not; and it was moved by Serjeant Gawdy, that it was; for ballast is as necessary to a ship as a sail; but the Court was against him, for somtimes a ship may sail without ballast, for it may be laden with such merchandizes which are convenient ballast in themselves, as coals, [47] wheat, &c. Periam at the first doubted of it: and by him, if I be bound upon condition, ut supra, I am bound to deliver the guns being in it at the time of the sale, but yet he conceived, that the plaintiff should be barred because he had not specially shewed, that at the time of the sale the ballast was in the ship.

LX. PENDLETON AND GUNSTONS CASE.

Pendleton informed against Gunston upon the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 5. for that, where the said Pendleton had before brought a plaint of debt against I. S. in the Guild-Hall of Norwich; upon which issued out of the said Court an attachment against the said I. S. by which the Sheriff of Norw. being ready by virtue of the said process to attach the said I. S. by his goods, there, the now defendant in disturbance of the said process and the execution of it, did publish and shew to the sheriff a conveyance, by which he claimed the said goods as conveyed to him by the said I. S., &c. and averred the fraud, &c. and it was moved by Serjeant Snagg, that the matter of which the defendant is charged is not within the said statute, because the avowing of the said conveyance doth not go in delay of the execution, for no judgment is given but only in delay of process; but the Court was clear of opinion to the contrary, and that by reason of the statute and the words of it, scil. delay, hinder, or defraud creditors of their just and lawful actions, sutes, &c. for here is a delay; for want of serving the said attachment, the appearance of I. S. to the sute of the plaintiff is delayed, which mischief is within the remedy of the said statute. And Periam and Rhodes Justices conceived, that such avowing of such conveyance, where no sute is depending is within the said statute, which Anderson doubted. Alien, Purchasor. Confirmation.

Fenner Serjeant moved this case. An alien purchaseth lands in fee; the Queen confirms it to the alien, office is found, if the confirmation shall bind the Queen, and it seemed to some that it should, for by the Lord Anderson, when an alien is enfeoffed he receiveth by the livery the fee-simple, of which he shall be seised, until office be found; and a præcipe quod reddat lyeth against him. And by Fenner an alien and denizen joynt-tenants are disseised, they both shall joyn in assize, vide 11 H. 4. 26. and by him, the Kings fief being an inheritrix takes a husband, and hath issue, office is found, the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy, which see 33 E. 3. Traverse 36. It was argued of the other side, that the estate of the alien is so feeble that a confirmation cannot enure upon it; for an alien cannot take but to the use of the King, and cannot be enfeoffed to another use; and if he be, such use is void, for there is not a sufficient seisin in the alien to carry an use. And it hath been adjudged in the case of one Forcet, that where an alien and the said Forcet were joynt-purchasors, and the alien died, Forcet had not the whole by the survivor, but that upon an office found, the Queen should have the moyety: see Dyer 11 Eliz. 283.

LXII. SIR ROGER LEWKNOR AND FORDS CASE.

Sir Roger Lewknor seised of the manor of Wallingford, leased the same to A. for years, and died, after which it was enacted by Parliament, that the said manor should from henceforth be deemed and reputed in the heirs of the body of the said Sir Roger, begotten upon Eliz. his wife, the said Sir Roger having three daughters only, without any other issue: the daughters married husbands and had issue: A. assigned his enterest in the said manor to B. C. and D. and also to one Shelley; B. C. and D. assigned their interest to one Sponer, one of the defendants, and Shelly assigned his fourth part to Ford another of the defendants, excepting the woods and underwoods. Wast is committed; one of the daughters having issue dieth, living her husband, the two surviving sisters and their husbands, the term being expired, brought a writ of wast, leaving out the husband of the third sister, who was tenant by the curtesy, against Shelley and Sponer, who tenuerunt, Shuttleworth, Serjeant took exception to the writ: scil. prædictus Rogerus cujus hæredes ipsæ sunt, which shall be intended heirs general, and by the declaration it appeareth, that the daughters have to them by Act of Parliament an especial inheritance as heirs in special tail, and that by a special conveyance: and therefore the plaintiffs ought to have brought a special writ, according to their case, as where cestuy que use, maketh a lease for years by the statute of 1 R. 3. and the lessee committeth wast, now the feoffees ought to have a special writ of wast, according to their case, 26 H. 8. 6. but that exception was disallowed, and the case cited out of 6 H. 8. is upon another reason, for in such case the estate of the lessee for years is created by the said statute. Another exception was taken to the writ, for the writ is tenuerunt, which shall be intended prima facie, conjunctim tenuerunt, and in the declaration it appeareth, that one of the defendants is assignee of three parts of the lands demised, and the other defendant of the fourth part, and so separatim tenuerunt, but that exception was also disallowed, because originally it was one and intirely demised interest and estate, and so it remaineth as to the plaintiffs, although it be devised by the lessee himself. Another exception was taken to the writ, because here it appears upon the plaintiffs shewing, that Sir Roger Lewknor had three daughters, and that they have all taken husbands, and that they have issue, and that one of the said daughters is dead, living her husband, who is not named in the writ, for which cause the writ shall abate: see 22 H. 6. 24. 25. But that exception was also disallowed; for as this case is, there is not any reason, that the tenant by the curtesy should joyn in this action, for no judgment shall be given here, that the plaintiffs shall recover the place wasted, for the term is expired, as it appeareth by the words of the writ, scil. quas tenuerunt, and the tenant by the curtesy is in possession, and where tenant by the curtesie and the heir joyn in an action of wast, tenant for life shall have locum vastatum, and the heir the damages, which see 27 H. 8. 13. As unto the matter of law, upon the exceptions of woods and underwoods, it was argued by Shuttleworth, that the action of wast was not well brought against Ford, &c. for the assignment made by Shelley to Ford was with an exception of all woods and underwoods, and therefore Shelley remained tenant, and he ought to answer for the wood and the underwood in the action of wast, for upon every demise of lands the woods there growing are as well demised as the land itself, for so it appeareth by the writ of wast in domibus & boscis dimissis ad terminum annorum, &c. which proves, that the trees are parcel of [49] the demise, and so may be excepted: see Dyer 28 H. 8. 19. by Shelley and Baldwin. A man leaseth a manor, except woods and underwoods, the lessee cuts the trees, an action of wast doth not lie against him for the same, for the thing in which the wast is supposed to be committed was not demised, &c. and therefore the lessee shall be punished as a trespassor and not as farmer: Fenner Serjeant contrary, and that the exception of the woods and underwoods is merely void; for Shelley who assigns his interest with the said exception, hath not any such interest in the woods and underwoods, so as he can make such exception, for he had but an ordinary interest in them as farmer, viz. house-boot, hedge-boot, &c. which interest cannot by any means upon an assignment be reserved to the assignor, in gross of the estate, no more than if one hath common appendant to his land, and he will make a feoffment of the land, reserving, or excepting the common. And he who hath the inheritance of the land, hath an absolute property in the trees, but the lessee hath but a qualified interest, and therefore 21 H. 6. 46. the lessor during the term for years may command the trees to be cut down: and 10 H. 7. 3. lessee for years hath not any interest in the trees, but for the loppings, and for the shadow for his cattle: and in the case cited, where lessee for life and he in the reversion make a lease for life unto a stranger, and wast is committed, and they bring an action of wast, the lessee for life shall have the place wasted, and he in the reversion the treble damages, for in him was the true and very property of the trees, and therefore the treble damages do belong unto him, and not to the lessee for life, who joyneth with him; and the reason wherefore the lessee for life or years shall recover treble damages against a stranger who cuts down any trees growing upon the land to him demised, is not in respect of any property that the lessee hath in the trees cut down, but because he is chargable over to his lessor in an action of wast, in which he shall render damages in such proportion. So see 27 H. 6. Wast. 8. A lease for life is made without impeachment of wast, a stranger of his own wrong cuts down trees, against whom the lessee brings an action of trespass; in such case he shall not recover treble damages, not for the trees, but only for the breaking of the close, and the loppings, for he is not chargeable over to his lessor for the same, because that his lease was made without impeachment of wast; and if the lessee hath such a slender interest in the trees where his lease is without impeachment of wast, his interest is less, where it is an ordinary lease without any such priviledge: and the property which the lessee for years hath in the trees in such case, is so appropriated to the possession, that it cannot be severed from it. Windham and Anderson Justices were of opinion, that the exception above is meerly void: for Ford the assignee of Shelly is now termer and farmer, who alone can challenge interest in the trees against all but the lessor, and Shelley after his assignment, is meerly a stranger. The interest of the lessee, and also of his assignee in the trees is of necessity, and follows the farm and the land as the shadow doth the body; and by him, where lessee for years by reason of his lease is to have wind-fals, yet he cannot imploy them but to the benefit and profit of his farm, for if he sell them or spend them elsewhere he shall be punished. Rhodes and Periam Justices, that the exception is good, as the fruits of the trees, shovelers, &c. And afterwards the case was adjudged upon another point in the pleading, so as the matter in law did not come to judgment: see Saunders case. 41 Eliz. Where lessee doth assign, excepting the timber trees, it is a void exception.

LXIII. GRAY AND JEFFES CASE.

Action of Assault and Battery.

In an action upon the case by Gray against Jeffe, the plaintiff declared, that where he had placed his son and heir apparent with the defendant, to be his apprentice, and to learn of him the art of a tailor: that the defendant had so beaten his son with a spade, that he thereupon became lame, by reason of which he could not have so much with his son in marriage of him as otherwise he might have, because the same lameness is a disparagement to his said son: and further shewed, that he himself might spend twenty pounds per annum in lands. Haulton argued for the plaintiff. The action quare filium & hæredem cepit & abduxit, is given to the father in consideration that the marriage of his son and heir doth appertain to him by the law, and here by the battery the son is become so lame, that he is not so commendable to a marriage as before; and if the father had lost the whole marriage, then the father should have had the action quare filium & hæredem, &c. but here he hath not lost the whole marriage, but the marriage is lessened by it, and therefore he shall have this action. Tanfield contrary; I confess, that the father ought to have the marriage of his son and heir so long as he is sub potestate patris; but here the father hath committed all his interest, power and authority in his son to the defendant his master, with whom he hath bound his son apprentice for seven years, during which term the father hath not any thing to do with his son or his marriage. Wray: The action quare filium & hæredem, &c. is not given to the father, because his marriage belongs to him, but because of the education; and such was the opinion of Clench Justice, and the marriage doth not belong properly to the father: for if the son marrieth himself without the leave of the father there is not any remedy for the father. And afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

Shuttleworth Serjeant; the traverse is not good, for by that means the intent of the party shall be put in issue, which no jury can try, but only in case of recaption. See 7 H. 4. 10i. by Gascoign. If the bayly upon the distress shews the cause and reason of it, he cannot afterwards vary from it, but the other party may trice him by traverse; but if he distrain generally without shewing cause, then he is at large to shew what cause he will, and the other party shall answer to it. And it was said by the Court, that when a bayly distreins, he ought, if he be required, to shew the cause of his distress, but if he be not required, then he is not tied to do it. Anderson, We were all agreed in the case betwixt Lowin and Hordin, that the traverse, as it is here, was well taken. The number roll of that case is M. 28, & 29 Eliz. 2494.

LXV. HUDSON AND LEIGHS CASE.

Process. Return of the Sheriff. Escape. Execution.

Hudson recovered against Leigh in an action of battery, for which a capias pro fine issued against Leigh; and also a capias ad satisfaciendum, returnable the same term at one and the same return: as to the capias pro fine the sheriff returned cepi, and as to the capias ad satisfaciendum, non est inventus: and for this contrariety of the return, the court was of opinion, that the sheriff should be amerced; but it was moved by the council of the sheriff, that the awarding of the capias pro fine was meerly void, for the fine is pardoned by the Parliament. And it is also enacted, that all process awarded upon such fines shall be void; and then the capias pro fine being void, it matters not how or in what manner it be returned, for the Court shall not respect such process, nor any return of it, and then the Court not having respect to that return, there is not any contrariety, for the capias ad satisfaciendum only is returned, and not the capias pro fine. And at another day it was moved again; the battery was supposed 1 Junij 1586. and judgment given the thirteenth of February the same year, upon which issued capias pro fine, and before the return thereof the Parliament ended, which pardoned such fines and made all process thereupon void: and it was said by the Court, that if the sheriff in such case takes the party by a capias pro fine, now upon that taking he is in execution for the party, and if the sheriff let him go at large, he shall answer for the escape: and in that case the capias pro fine was well awarded, and the Court ought to regard it, and the defendant lawfully taken by virtue of it, and also in execution for the party in judgment of law; and afterward, when the Parliament came and enacted ut supra, although the process be made void thereby, the same ought to be meant as to the interest of the King in the fine, and the vexation of the subject by it, but not as to the execution of the party, but the sheriff shall answer for that. And it was also holden by the Court, that if the plaintiff sueth an elegit, then upon the capias pro fine executed, the defendant shall not be adjudged in execution for the party, for he hath made his election of another manner of execution, scil. of the land, and he shall never resort to an execution of the body, 13 H. 7. 12. And as our case is there was an elegit obtained, but it was not on record, nor any record made of it, and therefore the election of the execution remained to the plaintiff. LXVI. POTTER AND STEDALS CASE.

Trespass.

In trespass by Samuel Potter against Stedal the case was, tenant for life of land leased parcel thereof to hold at will, and being in possession of the residue, levyed a fine of the whole, the lessor entered into the land which was let at will in point of forfeiture, in the name of the whole; it was holden the same is a good entry for the whole: but if the disseisor leaseth for years part of the land, whereof the disseisin was committed, and the disseisee afterwards entereth into the land which continueth in the possession of the disseisor in the name of the whole, the same entry shall not extend to the land leased; for here the lessee is in by title, but in the other case not, for when tenant for life leaseth it at will, and afterwards levies a fine, the same is a determina-[52]-tion of the will. 16 Eliz. Dyer 377. 1. In the same plea it was holden, that if there be lessee for life, the remainder for life, the remainder in fee, lessee for life in possession levyeth a fine sur conusans de droit, &c. to his own use, upon that fine a fee-simple accrues.

LXVII. LEIGH AND HANMERS CASE.

Debt upon a Recognizance.

Thomas Leigh Esquire brought an action of debt upon a recognizance in the nature of a statute staple against John Hanmer Esquire, before the Mayor and Aldermen of Lond. in camera Guild-hall civitatis præd. and demanded 1500 pounds, upon such recognizance acknowledged 20 November 20 Eliz. and upon default of the said Hanmer, according to the custom of London used in course of attachment, attached six hundred pounds in the hands of one W. Bolton of Grays-Inn, in part of satisfaction of the said debt of one thousand five hundred pounds; and now within the year came the said Hanmer, & ad disonerandum debitum prædict. had a precept of scire facias against the said Thomas Leigh, and after pleaded, and demanded oyer of the said recognizance, and had it, & quod ipse restitutionem of the said 600 pounds, in manibus dict. W. Bolton attachiat. habere debet: and upon the whole record the case was thus: Rowland Leigh Esquire, being seised of certain manors and other lands in the county of Glocest. had issue Eliz. his daughter and heir inheritable to the said lands, and by indent. dated 20 Maii 19 Eliz. granted custodiam, regulam, gubernationem, educationem, maritagium dict. Eliz. to the said Thomas Leigh, after which the said Thomas Leigh by indenture 14 Martii 29 Eliz. granted and assigned the said custody, rule, government, education, and marriage, and all his interest therein, and the said indenture, to Sir John Spencer, after which the said Sir John Spencer and Thomas Leigh, by their indenture the 26. of August 20 Eliz. granted and assigned to the said John Hanmer the said custody, rule, government, education and marriage of the said Eliz. and all their interest in the same, and all the recited indentures; by which last recited indenture 29 August, the said John Hanmer covenanted with the said Leigh, that Thomas Hanmer son and heir apparent of the said John Hanmer, maritaret & in uxorem duceret dictam Elizabetham ad vel antequam dicta Eliz. & dictus Tho. Hanmer perimplerint suas separales ætates 14 annorum, si dicta Eliz. ad id condescendere & agreare vellet; and afterwards before the said Tho. Hanmer and the said Elizabeth, suas separales ætates 14 annorum, perimplevissent, sc. 8 die Sept. 20 Eliz. the said Tho. Hanmer took to wife the said Eliz. the said Tho. Hanmer then being ætatis 13 annorum and no more, and the said Eliz. then being of the age of nine years and no more, and Tho. Hanmer aforesaid over-lived, &c. And pleaded further, that the said Tho. Hanmer after he attained his full age of fourteen years, and before any agreement or assent by the said Tho. Hanmer to the marriage aforesaid betwixt the said Tho. Hanmer and the said Eliz. had, at or after, idem Thomas Hanmer came to his age of fourteen years, scil. 10 die Sept. Anno 22 Eliz. ad dictum maritagium disagreavit, & maritagium illud renunciavit; and all this matter was pleaded in bar, as performance of the covenant contained in the indenture of defeazance made upon the recognizance, whereupon the action is brought. And concluded his plea, unde petit judicium si dictus Tho. Leigh actionem suam prædict. &c. Et quod ipse idem Johannes Hanmer restitutionem dict. 600 li. sc. ut præfert attachiat. habere valeat. And all the question here was, if this marriage had by this manner, and afterwards renounced as is aforesaid, be such a marriage as is intended in the covenant, so as the said covenant be satisfied by it. And it was argued before the Mayor Recorder, and Aldermen of [53] London, in their Guild-Hall by Angier of Grays-Inn, on the part of Leigh the plaintiff; and he in his argument did much rely upon the definition of marriage, by Justinian in his Institutions. Nuptiæ maris & fæminæ conjunctio individua continens viæ societatemu; and the marriage here in question is not according to the said definition, for the persons, parties to this contract, are not persons able by law to make such contract, because that non attigerunt annos nubiles, ergo nuptiæ esse non possunt, but only sponsalia, a step unto marriage; and there is also rendred one reason of the said definition upon the word individua, individuam dico, quia non nisi morte aut divortio separandum, but the marriage now in question might be dissolved without death or divorce, as it is in our case by disagreement: and see Jurisprudentiæ Romanæ, Lib. 1. cap. 33. Societas & consortium omni vita inter marem & fæminam ad concubitum, which is societatis hujus consummatio: and as every act doth consist upon three things, 1. Inceptio, 2. Progressio, 3. Continuatio, so is it in the case of marriage; but in this case when Thomas Hanmer took the said Eliz. to wife, that is but an inception, but the progression and consummation of it is cut off by the disagreement; and he much relyed upon the words of the covenant, si dicta Eliz. ad id condescendere & agreare vellet, so as there is not any liberty left to the defendant for the agreement or disagreement of the son, but he ought to agree at the peril of his father; but if Eliz. will not agree, then the defendant is not at any mischief, for in such case the covenant doth not extend to him; and also here the father is bound that his son, a stranger to the obligation should marry the said Elizabeth, which he ought to procure at his peril, or otherwise he shall forfeit his bond. Egerton Solicitor of the Queen argued to the contrary; this marriage as much as concerns this covenant, is to be considered according to the reason of the common law, and not according to the rules and grounds of the canon or civil law, not as a marriage in right but as a marriage in possession, and marriage in possession is sufficient always in personal things and causes, especially where the possession of the wife is in question, but where the possession of the husband is in question, there marriage in right ought to be, and where marriage in possession fals in averment, there it shall not be tried by the bishop, as in the case of a marriage of right, where, never accoupled in loyal matrimony, is pleaded, but by the country, for in case of wife in possession, never accoupled in matrimony, is no plea, but not his wife, which see 12 E. 3. br. 481. A. brought an action of trespass against B. and C. B. pleaded that C. is wife of the plaintiff, and demanded judgment of the writ; the plaintiff by replication said, never accoupled in lawful matrimony, but it was not allowed, but was driven to say, not his wife, for if C. was the wife of the plaintiff in possession or by reputation, it is sufficient to abate the writ: see also 49 E. 3. 18. by Belknap, the right of the espousal is always to be tried by the bishop, but the possession of the marriage; not as in assize by A. and K. his wife, the tenant demanded judgment of the writ upon special matter, and concluded, so is the said K. our wife, and not the wife of A. So in a cui invita by B. and C. his wife, the tenant pleaded, never accoupled in loyal matrimony, the same is no answer to the wife, for she demanded in her own right, and if he who aliened was her husband in possession, the wife could not have other action, for assize doth not lie, because he was her husband in fact at the said time in possession. And see also 50 E. 3. 20. adjudged according to the opinion of Belknap: and see also 39 E. 3. As to the marriage in right, as the case in question is; for upon such marriage, if the husband be murdred before disagreement, the wife shall have an appeal of murder, and a writ of dower: so where appeal is brought of the rape of his wife, although she be his wife but in possession, and not in right, 11 H. 4. 13. by Hulls 168. and by Littleton; if the wife be of the age but of nine years, she [54] shall have dower, which see also 35 H. 6. and yet dower shall never accrue but in case of marriage in right, for there, never coupled in marriage, is a good plea, see 12 R. 2. Dower 54. In dower the tenant pleaded, that the husband at the time of his death was but at the age of 10 years, and the demandant now but 11 years, and yet judgment was given for the demandant, for by Charleton the same was a marriage in right until disagreement, see 22 Eliz. Dyer 369. A woman at full age marrieth a husband of 12 years, who dieth before the age of consent, the same is a good marriage, and so ought to be certified by the bishop; and 7 H. 6. 11. by Newton, a woman married within age of consent may bring an action as a feme sole, and the writ did abate. Stamford Prerogat. 27. 19 E. 3. Judgment 123. In a writ of ward, the jury found, that the infant was of the age of 10 years, and no more, but they did not know whether she was married or not, but de bene esse, if she be married assess damages one hundred pounds, and if not, five pounds; upon which it appeareth that marriage at such an age is such a marriage upon which the lord shall recover damages; see 13 H. 3. gard 148. such marriage in the life of the ancestor, infra annos nubiles, if there be no disagreement shall bind the King: and after the death of the ancestor, the heir shall remain in custodia Domini Regis usq; ad ætatem ut consentiat, vel dissentiat, 45 E. 3. 16. In a writ of ward, the infant was found of the age of 12 years, and the jurors gave damages 300 marks, if he were married, and 27 H. 6. gard. 118. & 47 E. 3. Br. Trespass 420. and Fitz. Action upon the statute 37. Trespass de muliere abducta cum bonis viri, where the wife is within the age of consent: and if I be bounden unto another in an obligation, upon condition to pay a sum of mony upon the marriage day of I. S. now, if I. S. be married within the age of consent, I am bound to pay the mony the same day, although afterwards the parties do dissent, and the wife after such marriage shall be received in a plea real upon the default of her husband; and the words, si dicta Eliz. ad id condescendere & agreare vellet, are to be understood of an agreement at the time of the marriage, and here the time is limited for the solemnization of the marriage, scil. at or before they shall have accomplished their several ages of 21 years, makes the matter clear; for it is in the election of Hanmer the father, to procure this marriage, scil. that his son shall take to wife the said Elizabeth, at which of the two times he will, scil. at or before, &c. to the marriage before &c. is as effectual in respect of the performance of this condition, as if the marriage had been had after; and as the case is, the condition could not be better performed, for if the marriage had been stayed till after 14 years, &c. although the marriage doth not ensue, yet the obligation had been forfeited, and that the marriage be solemnized just at the age of both of 14 years, was impossible, for Thomas Hanmer was the elder by 2 years than the said Elizabeth, and therefore they ought to be married at such time which might stand with the condition, and the same is done accordingly: and as to that which hath been objected, that now by disagreement the marriage is determined, we ought to observe that Hanmer was bounden for the performance of the covenant, and that his son and heir apparent maritaret, & in uxorem duceret dictam Eliz. ad vel ante, &c. which is executed accordingly, and he is not bounden for the continuance of the said marriage, but the continuance of the same ought to be left to the law, which giveth to the parties liberty to continue the marriage by agreement, or to dissolve it by disagreement: and therefore if I am bounden to you, that I. S. (who in truth is an infant) shall levy a fine before such a day, which is done accordingly, and afterwards the same is reversed by error, yet notwithstanding the condition is performed, &c. and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

LXVIII. THE EARL OF WARWICK AND THE LORD BARKLEYS CASE.

Partition. Challenge.

Ambrose Earl of Warwick and Robert Earl of Leicester brought a writ of partition against the Lord Barkley, in which the parties pleaded to issue. And now at the day of the enquest the defendant did challenge, that in the whole pannel there were but two hundreders; and at the first it was doubted by the Court, if upon the statute of 27 Eliz. cap. 6. by which it is enacted; that no further challenge for the hundred shall be admitted if two sufficient hundreders do appear, the enquest shall be taken: but at length the whole Court was clear of opinion, that the said statute did extend but to personal actions; but this action of partition is a real action; and summons, and severance lieth in it, but not process of outlawry, and therefore here four hundreders ought to be returned; so in an action of wast, although it be in the personalty: and therefore the council of the plaintiffs prayed a tales.

Dyer 250. F. B. 22. That upon erroneous judgment given in the Kings Bench in Ireland, error shall be brought in the Kings Bench in England, 15 E. 3. Error 72. Fenner who was of council with the archbishop demanded of the Court how, and in what manner the record shall be remanded to the Justices of Assize, so as the archbishop might have execution; to which the Court said, that the surest way is to have a certiorare out of the Chancery into the Common Pleas directed to the judges there; and then out of the Chancery by mittimus to the Justices of Assize. But Fenner made a difficulty of it to take such course for the remanding of it, for doubt they would not allow it to be a record where it is not a record, for upon the matter the record is not removed, but remains with the Justices of Assize. Then Anderson said, Sue execution out of the said record; but because the record came before us by writ of error, it shall be also removed and remanded by writ: and so it was.

LXX. KEMPE AND CARTERS CASE.

Copyhold. Evidence of Customs.

Thomas Kempe brought trespass, for breaking of his close against Carter: and upon pleading they were at issue, if the lord of the manor aforesaid granted the said lands per copiam rotulorum curiæ manerii prædict. secundum consuetudinem manerii prædict. and it was given in evidence, that within the said manor were divers customary lands, and that the lord now of late at his court of the said manor granted the land, &c. per co-[56]-piam rotulorum curiæ, where it was never granted by copy before: it was now holden by the whole Court, that the jury are bound to find, dominus non concessit, for notwithstanding that de facto dominus concessit per copiam rotulorum curiæ, yet non concessit secundum consuetudinem manerii prædict. for the said land was not customary, nor was it demisable, for the custom had not taken hold of it. In the same case it was also shewed, that within the said manor some customary lands are demiseable for life only, and some in fee; and it was said by the Lord Anderson, that he who will give in evidence these several customs, ought to shew the several limits in which the several customs are severally running, as that the manor extends into two towns, and that the lands in one of the said towns are grantable for lives only, and the lands in the other in fee, and he ought not to shew the several customs promiscue valere through the whole manor: and he remembered a case of his own experience: scil. the manor of Wadhurst in the county of Sussex consisted of two sorts of copy-hold, scil. sook-land and bond-land, and by several customs disseverable in several manners: as if a man be first admitted to sook-land and afterwards to bond-land, and dieth seised of both, his heir shall inherit both; but if he be first admitted to bond-land, and afterwards to sook-land, and of them dieth seised, his youngest son shall inherit, and if of both simul & semel, his eldest son shall inherit; but if he dieth seised of bond-land only, it shall descend to the youngest: and if customary land hath been of ancient time grantable in fee, and now of late time for the space of forty years hath granted the same for life only; yet the lord may if he please resort to his ancient custom and grant it in fee. It was also moved in this case, if customary land within a manor hath been grantable in fee, if now the same escheat to the lord, and he grant the same to another for life; the same was holden a good grant and warrantable by the custom, and should bind the lord, for the custom which enables him to grant in fee shall enable him to grant for life: and after the death of the tenant for life, the lord may grant the same again in fee, for the grant for life was not any interruption of the custom, &c. which was granted by the whole Court.

LXXI. Walker and Nevils Case.

Dower. Damages.

Walker and his wife brought a writ of dower against Jervice Nevil, and judgment was given upon nihil dicit, and because the first husband of the wife died seised, a writ of enquiry of damages was awarded, by which it was found, that the land which she ought to have in dower, the third part was of the value of eight pound per annum, and that eight years elapserunt a die mortis viri sui proxime ante inquisitionem & assident damna to eight pounds; and it appeared upon the record, that after judgment in the writ of dower aforesaid the demandants had execution upon habere facias seisinam, so as it appeareth upon the whole record put together, that damages are assessed for eight years, where the demandants have been seised for part of the said eight years, upon which the tenant brought a writ of error, and assigned for error, because damages are assessed until the time of the inquisition, where they ought to be, but to the time of the judgment; but the exception was not allowed; another error was assigned, because that where it is found, that the land was of the value of eight pounds per annum, they have assessed damages for eight years, to eighty pounds beyond the revenue; for according to the rate, and value found by verdict it did amount but to sixty four pounds: but that error was not also allowed; for it may be, that by the long detaining of the dower, the demandants have sustained more damages than the [57] bare revenue, &c. Another error was assigned, because damages are assessed for the whole eight years after the death of the husband, where it appeareth, that for part of the said years the demandants were seised of the lands by force of the judgment and execution in the writ of dower; and upon that matter the writ of error was allowed.

LXXII. ARCHPOOL AGAINST THE INHABITANTS OF EVERINGHAM.

In an action upon the statute of Winchester of huy and cry by Archpool against the inhabitants of the hundred of Everingham, the jury found, that the plaintiff was robbed 2 Januarii post occasum solis, sed per lucem diurnam, and that after the robbery committed, the plaintiff went to the town of Andover, and advertised the baylies of the said town of the said robbery; and further found, that the said town of Andover is not within the said hundred of Everingham, and that there is another town nearer to the place where, &c. the robbery was done, than the said town of Andover within the said hundred, but the said town of Andover was the nearest place where, &c. by the Kings high-way: it was moved that upon this matter, the plaintiff should not have judgment, for that he hath not made his fresh sute according to the law, for he ought to have begun his fresh sute within the hundred where the robbery was done: and it was also objected, that the robbery was done post occasum solis, in which case the hundreders are not to pursue the malefactors. And Walmsley Serjeant cited a case out of Bracton: si appellatus se defenderit contra appellantem tota die usque ad horam in qua stellæ incipiunt apparere, recedat quietus de appello, and it is not reason to drive the hundreders to follow felons at such a time, when for want of light they cannot see them. And all the justices were clear of opinion, that if the robbery was done in the night time, the inhabitants are not bound to make the pursute: and by Rhodes, if in a præcipe quod reddat of lands, the sheriff summons the demandant upon the land in the time of night, such a summons is meerly void.

LXXIII. WISEMAN AND WISEMANS CASE.

Debt. Devises. Extent of an Habendum.

In an action of debt by Wiseman against Wiseman, the case was, that one Wiseman was seised of the lands, and by his will devised, 1. I will and bequeath unto my wife B. acre for the term of her life, the remainder to my son Thomas in tail: item I will and bequeath unto my son Thomas, all my lands in D. and also my lands in S. and also my lands in V. Also I give and bequeath unto the said Thomas my son all that my island or land enclosed with water which I purchased of the Earl of Essex: to have and to hold all the said last before devised premisses unto the said Thomas my son, and the heirs of his body: the only matter was, if the habendum shall extend to the island only, in which case Thomas shall have but for life in the lands in D. S. and V. or unto the island, and also to the lands in D. S. and V; in which case he shall have fee-tail in the whole. And it was argued by Fenner, that the habendum should extend to the island only; as he said, the opinion of the justices of this Court was in 4 Eliz. in another case. I devise my manor to D. my eldest son, and also my land in S. in tail, in that case the entail limited for the land in S. shall not extend to the [58] said manor, and of such opinion was Weston, Welsh, and Dyer; Brown contra, that the son hath tail in both. But if the words of the devise had been, I devise my manor of D. and my lands in S. to my son in tail, here the son had an estate tail in both. So it hath been adjudged, that if I devise lands to A. B. and C. successively as they be named, the same is good by way of remainder. Walmesley contrary, and he relied much upon this, that the words of the habendum are in the plural number, all the last before devised premisses, whereas the thing lately devised by the will was an island in the singular number, which cannot satisfie the habendum, which is in the plural number, and therefore to verifie the plural number in the habendum, the habendum by fit construction shall extend to all the lands in D. S. and V. and so upon his motion made at another day, it was resolved by all the justices, that the habendum should extend to all the said lands, and the habendum should not streighten the devise to the island only.

And Gent, and Manwood were of opinion, that the same was no attornment, because it was not made to the feoffee, scil. to the grantee of the reversion; and so it was ruled in this case, for attornment ought to be to the grantee himself, and not to cestuy que use.

LXXVI. THE PARSON OF FACKNAMS CASE.

Tythes, and where the Spiritual Court shall have jurisdiction of them.

The parson of great Facknam brought an action of trespass against the parson of Hannington, and the case was, if the parson of one parish claim by prescription a portion of tythes out of the parish of [59] another, if the Spiritual Court shall have the jurisdiction, for the tryal of it: and the opinion of the whole Court was clear, that it should, because that the matter is betwixt two spiritual persons, and concerning the right of tithes. As 35 H. 6. 39. I. Vicar of B. brought trespass for taking away of forty loads of beans, &c. The defendant pleaded, that he is parson of the said church of B. and the plaintiff is vicar, &c. and before the trespass, &c. the beans were growing in the same town, and severed from the nine parts, and he took them as belonging to his said church, and demanded judgment of the Court, &c. The plaintiff said, that he and all his predecessors vicars, &c. time out of mind, &c. have used to have the tithes of such a close, &c. belonging to his vicaridge, and within the said close the beans were growing and were parcel of his endowment; and that at the time of the taking they were severed from the nine parts, whereupon he took them. And it was holden by Ashton and Danby, because it is confessed on both sides that the beans whereof, &c. were tithes, the right of which would come in debate betwixt the parson and the vicar, and both are spiritual persons, that the tryal thereof doth belong to the Spiritual Court. See 6 E. 4. 3. 22 E. 4. 23. 24. in such a matter betwixt the parson and vicar there the Temporal Court was ousted of the jurisdiction. Pasch. 29 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

LXXVII. Bunny against Wright and Stafford.

Leases within 1 Eliz. and 32. 7, 8. made by Bishops.

In trespass the case was this: Grindal Bishop of Lond. leased parcel of the possessions of his bishoprick for one and twenty years, and afterwards ousted the lessee and leased unto another for three lives, rendring the antient and accustomed rent, which was confirmed by the dean and chapter. And afterwards Grindal is translated: Cook argued, that the lease is warranted by the statute of 1 Eliz. At the common law a bishop might make an alienation in fee-simple being confirmed by the dean and chapter: but by 32 H. 8. cap. 28. bishops without dean and chapter, or their confirmation may make a lease for one and twenty years, but with the confirmation of the dean and chapter may make a lease for one thousand years. But by the statute of 1 Eliz. the power of bishops in that right is much abridged, for now with confirmation or without confirmation they cannot dispose of their possessions but for one and twenty years or three lives; and this lease is in all points according to the statute of 1 Eliz. for first it begins presently upon the making of it: secondly, the antient rent is reserved payable yearly during the term; for although here be an old lease in esse, yet the rent reserved upon the second lease is payable during the second term, for payable is a word of power and not of action, as 1 H. 4. 1. 2. 3. lord, mesne, and tenant, the mesne gives the mesnalty in tail, rendring rent, it is a good rent, and well reserved, although here be not a present distress; yet it may be the tenancy will escheat, and then the donor shall distrein for all the arrearages: and so the rent is payable by possibility. And 10 E. 4. 4. A. leaseth for years, and afterwards grants the reversion to a stranger, if the beasts of the stranger come upon the lands during the term; A. may distrein for the arrearages incurred, and if he happen seisin, he shall have an [60] assise during the continuance of the first term. And he cited a case lately adjudged in the Exchequer. A lessor entred upon lessee for years, and made a feoffment rendring rent with clause of re-entry, the lessee re-entred, claiming his term, and afterwards during the said term for years, the rent reserved upon the feoffment upon demand of it is behind: now hath the lessor regained the reversion: and so a rent may be demanded although not distreinable. And all that was affirmed by Egerton Solicitor General: and see the words of the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 28. Rent reserved yearly during the said lease due and payable to the lessor, &c. such rent, &c. and yet by the said statute, such leases may be good, although there be a former interest for years in being, if the same shall be expired, surrendred, or ended within one year after the making such new lease, and so not expressly payable in rei veritate, annually during the term.

LXXVIII. BONEFANT AND SIR RICH. GREENFIELDS CASE.

Sale of Lands by the Executors of the Devisor.

Bonefant brought trespass against Sir Rich. Greenfield, and upon the general issue, this special matter was found: Tremagrie was seised of a manor, whereof the place where, &c. was parcel, in his demesne as of fee, and by his will devised the same to his four executors, and further willed, that his said executors should sell the same to Sir John Saintleger for the payment of his debts, if the said Sir John would pay for it one thousand one hundred pounds at such a day, and died, Sir John did not pay the mony at the day; one of the executors refused administration of the will, the other three entred into the land and sold it to the defendant for so much as it could be sold, and in convenient time. It was moved, that the sale was not good, for they have not their authority as executors, but as devisees, and then when one refuseth, the other cannot sell by 21 H. 3. cestuy que use wills, that is executors shall alien his land, and dieth, although the executors refuse the administration, yet they may alien the land. 19 H. 8. 11. 15 H. 7. 12 Egerton Solicitor argued, that the sale is good by the common law, and also by the statute 49 E. 3. 16, 17. Devise, that his executors shall sell his land, and dieth, and one of the executors dieth, another refuseth, the third may sell well enough, and the sale is good. See Br. Devise 31. 30 H. 8. 39 E. 3. Br. Assise 356. And he put a difference where an authority is given to many by one deed, there all ought to joyn; contrary, where the authority is given by will; and if all the executors severally sell the lands to several persons, such sale which is most beneficial for the testator shall stand, and take effect: and here it is found by verdict, that one of the executors, recusavit onus testamenti, ergo, he refused to take by the devise, for it was devised unto him to the intent to sell, therefore if he refuseth to sell, he doth refuse to take, and so it is not necessary that he who refuseth joyn in the sale, and although we are not within the express words of the statute, yet we are within the sense and meaning of it. And afterwards it was adjudged, that the condition, for the manner of it, was good.

LXXIX. GAMOCK AND CLIFFS CASE.

Ejectione firmæ. Conditions. Where the Tenant in Dower shall take advantage of a condition.

Ejectione firmæ was brought by Gamock against Cliff of the manor of Hockly, in the county of Essex, and upon the evidence the case was: [61] that the King and Queen, Philip and Mary, seised of the said manor of Hockley, leased the same to Edmund Terrel for years, exceptis & reservat. grossis arboribus super præmissis crescentibus & existentibus; proviso, that if the said lessee his executors, or assigns shall do any voluntary wast in any of the premisses before demised, that then the said demise shall be void and accounted none in law; the said King and Queen after that lease grant the reversion to the Lord Rich and his heirs, the lessee cuts down certain great trees, which at the time of the demise were not great, but little trees, but after, tractu temporis became great, and at the time of the cutting down were great, upon whom the Lady Rich, wife and widow of the said Lord Rich, being tenant in dower, the said manor (inter alia) being assigned to her in dower, did enter, for the condition broken: it was moved; if the exception did extend to the trees which at the time of the demise were but little trees, but afterwards at the time of their cutting down were become great; for if the exception do extend to such trees, then upon the matter they were not demised, and if so, then wast cannot be assigned in the cutting down of them, and then by the cutting of them, the condition is not broken: but if the exception shall be construed to extend to such trees only which were great tempore dimissionis, then those trees in which, &c. are demised, and by the cutting down of them, the condition is broken. And the Lord Anderson was of opinion, that the exception did extend to trees, which at any time dimissionis prædict. became great, although at the time of the demise they were but little, so as upon the matter, such trees were never demised, and so the condition doth not extend to them; otherwise it should be if the words had been modo crescentibus & existentibus. Another matter was moved, because if the Lady Rich, being tenant in dower, and so in by the law, not by the party, and so not privy, nor as assignee, could enter for the condition broken: and the Court was clear of opinion, that because, that the words of the condition are, Quando dimissio prædict. erit vacua, &c. and no clause of reentry is reserved, so that privity is not requisite, the Lady Rich shall take advantage of the condition, 11 H. 17. Where the words of a lease are, that upon the not going to Rome, that the lease shall cease; it was holden that the grantee of the reversion by the common law should take advantage of such a condition; contrary where the condition is conceived in words of re-entry, 21 H. 7. 12. It was moved further, that here is not any voluntary wast in the lessee as to the condition, because done by a stranger, and not by the lessee himself, and for that the condition is not broken, only the lessee is subject unto an action of wast; otherwise, if the lessee had expressly commanded the vendee to cut them down, or had given to him express authority. The sale was, all his woods growing, &c.

And, upon non assumpsit pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff, and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that here is not any consideration, for no time is limited for the forbearance, but generally, parvum tempus, which cannot be any commodity to the defendant, for the same may be, but punctum temporis, &c. It was moved by Fenner Serjeant, that the action did not lye, because the house became ruinous before his interest in the reversion; But the opinion of the whole Court was against him, for that the action is not conceived upon the ruinous estate of the house, or for the committing of waste, but for the not repayring of it within the time appointed by the covenant, after the warning, so as it is not material within what time the house became ruinous, but within what time the warning was given, and the default of the reparation did happen.

In a writ of dower, brought by a woman of the third part of certain lands, &c. the tenant pleaded; that the lands of which dower is demanded, are of the nature of gavel-kind, and that the custom of such land is, that dower ought to be demanded of the moity of it, and not of the third part, upon which the demandant did demur: And the opinion of Windham and Anderson Justices was; that such a woman of such land might at her pleasure demand her dower either according to the custom, or according to the common law; for by Anderson, the common law was before the custom, quod quære. And by Windham, if the demandant here recover her dower according to the common law, yet if she taketh another husband, she shall lose her dower as if she had been endowed according to the custom. Coke, an apprentice of the Inner Temple being at the Bar, when this case was moved, said unto Serjeant Shuttleworth, that the case had been adjudged against the demandant, and Scot Prothonotary did affirm, that the Lord Dyer was of opinion, that the woman ought to be endowed according to the custom, and not otherwise. LXXXIV. BEVERLIE AND CORNWALS CASE.

Beverlie brought a quare impedit against Cornwal, and had judgment to recover upon a demurrer in law: which see Mich. 28 & 29 Eliz. And now the Queen brought a scire facias upon the matter, that the said Beverly after the said judgment was out-lawed in an action of trespass at the sute of I. S. and upon that a scire facias issued, ad respondendum quare dicta domina Regina, should not have execution of the judgment aforesaid, by reason of the out-lawry aforesaid; and declared in all as aforesaid: and further, that the said Cornwal had resigned. Upon which Beverlie did demur in law. And this term it was argued by Puckering Serjeant for the Queen, that by that out-lawry the interest to present is transferred to the Queen. Which see 5 H. 5. 3. Tenant at will of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, is out-lawed in an action of trespass; the church voided; by award of the Court it belongs to the King to present: and see 8 R. 2. scil. Quare Imped. 200. A. seised of an advowson, the church becomes void. A. is out-lawed in a personal action; the King shall have a quare impedit in that case. And as to the exception taken, because the out-lawry is not sufficiently layed in the writ, but only generally, viz. utlagatus in Com. Lincoln, ad sectam. J. S. in placito transgressionis, without shewing the out-lawry at large. There is a difference where an out-lawry is pleaded by way of bar, and disability of the person, &c. and where it is set down in a writ, for a writ ought shortly and compendiously to comprehend the cause of the action, especially judicial writs which are not tied to any form certain, especially because that the out-lawry set forth in the writ is a record of the same Court: for the perclose of the scire facias is, prout per recordum hic in curia plenius apparet: and that record being in the Court the party cannot plead nul tiel record, as if the record had been in any other Court: but he ought to demand oyer of the record: Which vide 5 H. 7. 24. Walmesly Serjeant contrary. By out-lawry in an action personal, the King cannot seise land, but only take the profits of it, 9 H. 6. 20. 21 H. 7. 7. And as our case is, nothing doth accrew to the Queen by this out-lawry, for the Queen her self is seised of the advowson, because she, usurpando presentavit, and her clerk admitted; and although Beverlie hath recovered in a quare impedit against the presentee of the Queen, yet because he is not removed by a writ to the bishop, the Queen continues patron, and nothing remains in Beverlie that may be forfeited. But Rhodes and Periam contrary, for by Periam if after such recovery the incumbent dieth, the patron shall present, for by the judgment in the quare impedit for Beverlie, the patronage is revested in him without any other execution: And by Rhodes, if after such judgment the patron dieth, his executors shall have a writ to the bishop. And by Walmesley, the scire facias doth not lie for the Queen, for that writ always runs in privity of the record upon which it is grounded, to which record the Queen is a stranger, and by out-lawry in an action personal no action real shall escheat, and therefore this scire facias being in the nature of a quare impedit upon which it is grounded, which is a real action, or at at least a mixt, shall not be forfeited; and also it shall be absurd to grant now a writ to the bishop for the Queen; whereas judgment was given against the Queen, as in our case it hath been. And in no case the judges shall respect the title of the Queen, being a stranger to the writ: But where a title for the Queen doth appear [64] upon the pleading or otherwise within the record, 11 H. 4. 224. by Hankford. If a clear title for the King be confessed by the parties upon pleading, a writ to the bishop shall issue for the King; so if such matter appear in evidence, &c. the land in question is seisable into the Kings hands. See 9 H. 7. 9. 16 H. 7. 12. so 21 E. 4. 3. by Choke and F. N. B. 38. e. In a quare impedit betwixt two strangers if title doth appear to the Court for the King, a writ to the bishop shall issue forth for the King; but in our case nothing is within the record to intitle the Queen, but all the matter upon which a writ to the bishop is prayed for the Queen is out of the record, and a foreign thing. And as to the out-lawry, he conceived it is not sufficiently alledged; for he ought to have made mention of the exigent and of all the proceeding upon it, and the judgment of the coroners, and for defect of that no title is given to the Queen; and of that opinion was the Lord Anderson, and that it ought to be set forth in the writ in what term the said Beverly was out-lawed, and the number roll also, so that if Beverly had demanded oyer of the record, the Court might know it: and by Nelson chief Prothonotary, the term in which the out-lawry was, ought to be comprised in the scire facias. Vide Book of Entries 485 where in a quare impedit for the King upon such a title, the King shewed in his count, that A. was seised of such an advowson, and granted the next avoidance to B. and that afterwards one C. impleaded the said B. in a writ of account in such a court, where nihil was returned upon the summons, upon which issued forth a capias, upon which is returned, non est inventus, &c. upon which an exigent, upon which the sheriff did return, quod ad com. tent. &c. & ad v. comitat. tunc. prox. præcedent. the said B. exactus fuit, & non comparuit, & quia ad nullum eorundem comitat. apparuit, utlagatus fuit, and after the church voided, and that by reason thereof it did belong to the King to present: vide ibid. 196. accordingly. And as to the scire facias all the judges agreed, that upon the matter the writ lay well enough: and it is good discretion in the Court to grant such a writ: and by Rhodes, if two coparceners of an advowson make composition to present by turns, and afterwards one of them dieth, her heir within age, and in ward to the King; the church voideth, and the King is disturbed in his presentment, he shall have a scire facias upon such composition, notwithstanding that he be a stranger to it: see F. N. B. 34 H. And by all the justices, if one recover in debt upon a simple contract, and before execution the plaintiff is out-lawed in an action personal, the King shall sue execution: and see 37 H. 6. 26. where in debt upon an obligation it was surmised to the Court, that the plaintiff was out-lawed: and the Kings Attorney prayed delivery of the obligation, &c.

LXXXV. Moile and The Earl of Warwicks Case.

Quare Impedit. Office trove. A Record not to be brought into Court without a Writ. 63.

A quære impedit was brought by Walter Moile against Ambrose Earl of Warwick and the Archbishop of Canterbury. And now came the serjeants of the Queen, and shewed an office, to entitle the Queen to have a writ to the bishop, containing such matter, viz. that one Guilford was seised of the manor of D. to which the advowson of the church was appendant, and that manor was holden in chief by knights service, and that Guilford and his wife levied a fine thereof to the use of themselves for their lives, the remainder over in tail to their eldest son, and that Guilford is dead, but who is his next heir, ignorant: and it was shewed by the council of the other side, that the truth of the case was, that the said Guilford was seised of the said manor in the right of his wife, and so levied the fine, in which case the said conveyance is not within the sta-[65]-tute of 32 H. 8. for it was for the advancement of the husband, not of the wife, which Anderson granted. Vide Dyer 19 Eliz. 354. Caverlies case, but that is not in the office: and it was moved at the Bar, that the office is imperfect, because no heir is found. But Anderson, the office is sufficient for the King to seise, although it be insufficient for the heir, &c. And it was agreed by the whole Court, that the Court ought not to receive the office, although one would affirm upon oath, that it is the very Office, but it ought to be brought in under the Great Seal of England; and also the Court shall not receive it without a writ; and yet Nelson Prothonotary said, that the statute of Huy and Cry of Winchester was brought into the Court without a writ under the Great Seal, and that was out of the Tower: and in that case also the justices held, that if a record be pleaded in the same court where it abides, the other party against whom it is pleaded may plead nul tiel record, as if the said record had bin remaining in another court, which all the prothonotaries denied, & that always it had been used to the contrary. At another day the case was moved again. The plaintiff in the quare impedit counted, that Richard Guilford was seised of the said manor, &c. in the right of Bennet his wife, and so seised, they both levied a fine thereof to a stranger, sur conusans de droit come ceo, who rendred it to the husband and wife for their lives, the remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband; and they so being seised, the husband alone levied a fine to a stranger, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. and by the same fine the conusee rendred to the husband and wife in tail, the remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband, the husband died seised, the wife entred and leased the said manor to the plaintiff, and then the church did become void: and now the Queens serjeants came and shewed unto the Court an office, which came in by mittimus: in which writ the perclose is, mandamus vobis quod inspectis, &c. pro nobis sieri faciatis quod secundum leges & consuetudinem Regni nostri Angliæ faciend. statuetis; and the office did purport, that the said Richard was seised of the said manor, and held the same of the Queen, as of her Castle of Dover, by knights service in chief, and levied the fine, ut supra, and that the said Richard died, sed quis fit propinquior hæres dict. Ric. penitus ignorant; and upon that office prayed a writ to the bishop for the Queen: and two exceptions were taken to the office, first because it is not found by the said office that the said Richard died seised, in which case it may be for any thing that appeareth in the office, that the said Richard after the said fine had conveyed his estate in the said lands unto others, or that he was disseised, &c. See 3 H. 6. 5. If it be not found of what estate the tenant of the King died seised, the office is insufficient. But see there by Martin, that such an office is good enough for the King, but not for the heir to sue his livery upon it. And by Anderson, Periam, and Rhodes, that defect in the office is supplyed by the count, for there it is expressly alledged, that the said Richard died seised. Secondly, because no heir is found by the said office. To which it was said by the Lord Anderson, that peradventure at the common law the same had been material exception. But we ought to respect the statutes of 32 and 34 H. 8. of wills. And therefore as to the wife the Queen is entitled to primer seisin, because the conveyance was made for her advancement. And by Windham, the Queen in this case shall not have primer seisin, for by the statute the Queen shall not have primer seisin, but in such case, where, if no conveyance had been made, the Queen should have had primer seisin; but in this case for any thing that appears before us, if this conveyance had not been made the Queen should not have had primer seisin, forasmuch as no heir is found, and if he died without heir there is no primer seisin, because there is not any in rerum natura to sue livery. Rhodes, Periam, and Anderson contrary; admit-[66]-ting that Richard died without heir, the Queen shall have primer seisin against the wife of Richard, notwithstanding the escheat. Walmesley Serjeant, if the tenant of the King by knights service in chief dieth seised of other lands holden of a common person by knights service, without heirs, the King shall not have primer seisin of such lands holden of a subject, which Windham granted: but by Anderson the lord is put to sue an ouster le mayne of the land holden of him. And afterward exception was taken to the count, because the plaintiff hath not averred the life of the tenant in tail, that is, of Bennet the wife of Richard, to whom the land was entailed by the second fine: but that exception was disallowed by the whole Court, and a difference put by Anderson, where a man pleads the grant of an advowson in gross by tenant in tail, in such case the life of the tenant in tail ought to be averred, for by his death the grant ceaseth. But where a man pleads the lease of tenant in tail of a manor with an advowson appendant, in such case such averment is not necessary: so accordingly Smith & Stapletons case, 15 Eliz. 431. And here it was moved, if, in as much as by the first fine an estate for life was rendred to the wife, and by the second fine, in which she did not join, an estate tail was limited unto her, and now when the husband dieth if he shall be remitted to her estate for life; which Windham granted; for that was her lawful estate, and the second estate tortious. But by Rhodes, Periam, and Anderson the wife is at liberty to make her election which of the two estates she will have. And as to the writ to the bishop for the Queen, the Court was clear of opinion, that it ought not to be granted upon this matter: but all the question was, if Regina inconsulta, the Court would or ought to proceed: and it was holden clearly by the whole Court, that the tenure alledged modo & forma, could not be a tenure in chief, for it is said, that the land was holden of the King, as of the Castle of Dover, in capite.

Wast. No advantage of impunity for Wast shall be taken, where the same is not pleaded though found by verdict.

Wast was brought by F. and his wife against Pepy, and counted, that the said Pepy was seised, and enfeoffed certain persons to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of the wife of the plaintiff and her heirs. The defendant pleaded, that the said feoffment was unto the use of himself and his heirs in fee, &c. without that, that it was to the uses in the count; upon which they were at issue: and it was found by verdict, that the said feoffment was unto the uses contained in the count: but the jury further found, that the estate of the defendant by the limitation of the use was priviledged with the impunity for wast, that is to say, without impeachment of wast. And it was moved, if upon this verdict the plaintiff shall have judgment: and Anderson and Rhodes Justices, he shall, for the matter in issue is found for the plaintiff, and that is the feoffment to the uses contained in the count; and this impunity of wast is a foreign matter not within the charge of the jury, and therefore the traverse of it but matter of surplusage. As if I plead the feoffment of I. S. to which the other pleads, that he did not enfeoff, and the jury find a conditional feoffment, the Court shall not respect the finding of the condition, for it was not in issue, and no advantage shall ever be had of such a livery if it be not pleaded. 30 H. 8. Dyer 41. In dower the tenant pleaded, ne unques seisi que dower; the tenant pleaded, that before the coverture of the demandant, one A. was seised of the lands, of which dower is demanded in tail, who made a feoffment to a stranger, and took the demandant to wife, and took back an estate in fee, and died seised, having issue inheritable: now although upon the truth of the matter she is [67] not dowable de jure, yet when the parties are at issue upon a point certain, no foreign or strange matter not in question betwixt the parties shall be respected in the point of the judgment. But if the defendant had pleaded it in bar, he might have foreclosed the demandant of her dower: vide 38 H. 6. 27. 47 E. 3. 19. In a præcipe quod reddat in the default of the tenant one came and shewed how the tenant who made default was but tenant for life of the lands in demand, the reversion in fee to himself, and prayed to be received. The demandant did counter-plead the receit, saying, the defendant had fee, upon which issue was joyned. And it was found, that neither the tenant, nor he which prayed to be received, had any thing in the land; in that case the Court did not regard the matter which was superfluous in the verdict, for they were at issue upon a point certain, that is, whether the tenant was seised in fee, for it was confessed of both sides, that he had an estate for life; and with that matter the jury was not charged, and they are not to enquire of it, and so it was found against the demandant, for which cause the receit was granted. 7 H. 6. 20. The parties were at issue upon a dying seised, which is found by verdict, but the jury further find, that the other party made continual claim; this continual claim shall not be regarded in the point of judgment, because it was pleaded in avoidance of the descent. Windh. Justice contrary, forasmuch as it appeareth unto us upon the verdict, that the plaintiff hath not cause of action, and therefore he shall not have judgment; as in detinue, the plaintiff counteth of a bailment by his own hand; the defendant pleadeth, that he doth not detain, &c. the jury find the detinue, but upon a bailment by another hand: in this case, notwithstanding that the detinue be found, yet the plaintiff shall not have judgment: but Rhodes, Periam, and Anderson in the principal case were of opinion, judgment should be given for the plaintiff, for in no case the party shall have advantage of such a liberty of impunity of wast, if he do not plead it; and the jurors are not to meddle with any matter which is not in issue: and if it be but matter of surplusage it is to no purpose. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

LXXXVII. BRACEBRIDGE AND BASKERVILES CASE.

Debt against Executors. Scire facias, to have Execution of Assets come to Executors hands, after riens enter maynes pleaded.

An action of debt is brought against three executors, one of them pleads in bar a recovery against himself in the Kings Bench: the other two plead plene administr. Against the first plea the plaintiff did aver covin; and upon the second plea they are at issue: the first issue is found for the plaintiff, and as to the other plea, it was found, that the defendants have in their hands thirty pounds of the goods of their testator not administred. Note, the debt in demand was one hundred pounds, upon which the plaintiff had judgment to recover the goods of the testator, and thereupon had execution. Now the plaintiff brought a scire facias against the said executors, supposing that many other goods of the testator have come unto their hands after the judgment, and prayed execution thereof: upon which the defendant did demurr in law. Vide 21 H. 6. 40. 41. In debt against executors of forty marks, the defendant pleaded, that he had fully administred, and it was found, that the defendant, at the day of the writ brought, had of the goods of the dead twenty marks and no more, and gave damages five marks. There the plaintiff had judgment for the twenty marks of the goods of the dead, and the five marks of their own goods: and as to the other twenty marks, that the plaintiff should be amerced: 33 H. 6. 24. where executors plead that they have nothing in their hands, which is found accordingly: after-[68]-wards goods of the testator came to the hands of the executors: now the plaintiff upon a surmise shall have out of the same record a scire facias to have execution of the said goods: but see 4. H. 6. 4. contrary, for there it is said, that upon the matter the original is determined, and so no record, upon which a scire facias can be grounded: and see Fitzh. abridging the case scire facias, 25. by the verdict and the judgment the original is abated: vide 7 E. 4. 9. by Moile, according to 33 H. 6. and so 46 E. 3. 9. by Belknap. And the Lord Anderson demanded of the prothonotaries the manner of the entry of the judgments given in such cases, who said, that their entry is in this manner: (i.e.) quod querens recuperet, that which is expressly found by the verdict, but nothing of the residue, for of that no mention is made at all. And the Court seemed to be of opinion, that where, upon nothing remaining in their hands, pleaded, it is found that some part of the sum in demand is in the hands of the executors, there the plaintiff upon a surmise of goods come to the hands of the executors shall have a scire facias; contrary, where upon such issue, it is found fully for the defendants, that they have nothing in their hands.

LXXXIX. BARKER AND PIGOTS CASE.

Debt. Execution must follow the nature of the Action.

Edward Barker brought debt against Rich. Pigot executor of the will of E. executrix of the will of R. The defendant pleaded, that he had fully administred the goods of his testator E. upon which they were at issue, which was found for the plaintiff. And it was moved in arrest of judgment, that here is not any issue joyned, which answers to the action, for the action is brought against the defendant in the quality of the executor of an executor, and the verdict extends to the defendant, but is executor of the said E. for it is found by it, that the defendant hath fully administred the goods of his testatrix, without any enquiry of the administration of the goods of the first testator R. in which capacity the defendant is charged. So as here the writ charges the defendant in the quality of an executor of an executor and in respect of the first testator, and the issue and verdict doth concern the last testator: and the whole Court was clear of opinion, that although that now after verdict fee-tail be saved, and no judgment shall be given upon it, yet here the Court shall give judgment as upon a nihil dicit, in which case the execution of the judgment, shall not fall upon the goods of the last testator according to the verdict, but shall follow the nature of the action which was brought against the defendant as executor of an executor.

XCI. BLAUNCHFLOWER AND FRYES CASE.

Debt. Administration granted, pendant the Writ.

Blaunchflower brought debt upon a bond against Elinor Frye, as executrix of one Andrew Frye her late husband, who pleaded, that this writ was brought 9 July, 27 Eliz. whereof she had notice the first of October after, within which time one Lawrence had brought an original writ against the said Elinor as administratix of the said Andrew: and after the bringing of the writ, the Bishop of Bath and Wels committed administration of the goods of the said Andrew to the said Elinor, which Elinor confessed the action, upon which judgment was given for the said Lawrence, beyond which she had not goods, upon which the now plaintiff did demur in law. And by Anderson, the recovery pleaded in bar shall not bind the plaintiff, because it appeareth upon the plea of the defendant, that the administration was committed after the writ purchased, which matter if the defendant had pleaded, Lawrence could not have had judgment to recover. As where there are three executors, and debt is brought against two of them, if they do not plead that matter in abatment of the writ, but plead, &c. or confess the action, so that the plaintiff hath judgment to recover, that recovery shall not bind a stranger who hath cause of action against them, but that he may well falsify it; and yet it was said that in such case, the defendant by the obtaining of the letters of administration had made the writ good against her, vid. 13 H. 4. Fitz. Executors, 118. administration committed before the writ purchased shall abate the writ brought against the defendant as executor, but such administration obtained, depending the writ shall not abate it, vid. 21 H. 6. 8. 2 R. 3. 20. Another matter was moved by Anderson, because the defendant had pleaded a recovery by confession had against her without averment that it was a true debt, in which case covin is presumed. Windham and Periam were of opinion, that the matter of covin ought to come in on the part of the plaintiff, which Anderson denyed, vid. 9 E. 4. 13, 14. 33. the Cardinalls Case.

XCII. BASSET AND KERNS CASE.

Debt by Executors. Election.

Basset the executor of Moris Sheppheard brought debt upon a bond against Kerne, the case was; that Kerne was bound to Moris in a obligation [70] upon condition, that the said Kerne should pay to the said Morris his executors, &c. at the choice and election of the said Morris, within a month after the death of the Lady Kerne, thirty pounds, or twenty kine, to which the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff within the month after the death, &c. did not make any choice or election, upon which the plaintiff did demurr in law: and the Court was clear of opinion, that it was a good plea in bar, for the obligee is not bounden to make a tender of both, viz. of the mony and the kine, but the obligee himself is bounden at his peril to make election within the time limited; as if I be bounden to you, to make unto you such further assurance within such a time by fine or feoffment as you shall chuse, it behoveth you to make election of your assurance, fine, or feoffment, and in the principal case, the election of the plaintiff ought to precede the tender of the defendant: vid. the Lord Lisles Case, 18 E. 4. 15. 17. 20. 21. Where the defendant was bound to the said lord to shew his evidences touching such a house to the said lord or his council, the election was to the defendant to whom he would shew them; and there by Brian, if I be bound to you to marry your daughter, or to go to York on your businesses upon request, before you require me to marry your daughter I may do it, or go to York, which Coke granted, vid. 13 E. 4. 4. Where the condition is in the disjunctive, before the day of performance the election is to the defendant, but if at the day he make default, the election is to the obligee; vid. 9 E. 4. 36, 37. And by Windham, if I be bound unto you in an obligation of ten pounds, to pay to you such a day ten pounds in gold, or silver, if you do not make your election before the day, yet the duty remains payable, for the thing to be paid is parcel of the penalty, quod fuit concessum; and as to the principal case, the Court was clear of opinion, that upon this matter the plaintiff should be barred. XCIII. SEARCHES CASE.

Habeas Corpus.

A habeas corpus issued forth out of the Court of Common Pleas, to the steward and marshal of the house, &c. for one Wil. Search, which was returned in this manner, viz. quod domina regina per litteras suas patentes suscepit, in protectionem suam regiam, Johannem Mabbe, and his sureties, and of her further grace by the said letters, voluit, that if any person should arrest, or cause to be arrested the said John Mabbe or any of his sureties, that then the marshal of her house, or his lawful deputy might arrest every such person, and detain them in prison until such person should answer before the Privy Council for the contempt; and that the said William Search caused one John Preston one of the said sureties of the said John Mabbe to be arrested, &c. And upon that return, the said William Search was discharged; and also because that after the said discharge the parties caused the said William Search to be arrested again for the same cause, that is, by colour of the said protection; an attachment was granted against them.

Habeas Corpus.

Note, that the same term, Mich. 29 & 30 Eliz. another habeas corpus was directed to the steward and marshal of the Marshalsey, for one Howel, who made return, that the said Howel was committed to his custody, per mandatum Francisci Walsingham Militis Principalis Secretarij, & unius de privato concilio dominæ reginæ, and that return was by the Court holden insufficient, because the cause upon which he was committed, was not set down in the return; and therefore day was given to [71] amend the return, and now they returned the writ in this manner, ss. infra nominatus Johannes Howel commissus fuit, &c. ex sententia & mandato totisus concilii privati dominæ reginæ; ita quod corpus ejus habere non possumus, &c. And that return was also holden by the Court to be insufficient, for (by whatsoever person, or by what means soever he was committed) the conclusion of the return ought to be, corpus tamen ejus paratum habeo, and if it shall seem good to the Court, that the prisoner shall have his priviledge, and shall be dismis't, he shall be discharged, but if not, then he shall be remanded. And the Court took a difference, where one is committed by one of the Privy Council, for in such case the cause of the committing ought to be set down in the return; but contrary where the party is committed by the whole Council, there no cause need to be alleadged.

XCV. BRET AND AUDARS CASE.

Debt upon a Bond to perform Award. Tender. Non damnificatus, generally, where no Plea.

Bret brought debt upon an obligation against Audar, the condition of which obligation was, that the defendant should stand to the award, &c. And the arbitrator awarded, that the defendant should pay unto the plaintiff ten pounds, without naming day or place; and as to that the defendant pleaded, that he was always ready, and yet is, &c. without shewing any tender: and it was moved, that although that would have been a good plea in debt upon an arbitrament, as the case is, 7 H. 4. 97. see 21 E. 4. 40, 41, 42. yet now by the obligation and the condition of it, the sum is payable in another manner than it was before, see the pleading of the case, 21 E. 4. In debt upon an obligation to perform the award; that the award was made between the terms of Pasch. and Trinity, and he, the eighth of September after, tendred the twenty pounds, and the plaintiff refused it. And the Lord Anderson put a difference between the case, in 22 H. 6. 57. and the case at the Bar, for in our case the obligation doth precede the duty which accrueth by the award subsequent, but in the former case the duty did precede the obligation which was made for the further assurance of the duty: and here the defendant ought to have pleaded the tender, and see 14 E. 4. 4. A. is bound unto B. that, where he hath granted to the said B. a rent-charge out of such land, now if the said B. shall enjoy the said rent according to the form and effect of the said grant, that then, &c. there he needs not to plead any tender, for the rent is not payable in other manner than it was before; contrary if the condition had been for the payment of the annuity: and of that opinion was the whole Court, that he ought to have pleaded a tender. Another matter of the award was, that the said Audar should yield up, surrender and relinquish to the plaintiff all such houses and tenements which he had in his possession by reason of the custody of the said plaintiff: as to that the defendant pleaded, that he had yielded up, &c. all such houses, &c. generally without shewing which in certain; and for that cause the Court was clear of opinion, that the plea was not good; which see 9 E. 4. 16. If I be bounden upon condition to enfeoff the obligee of all lands, and tenements, which were to I. S. in pleading the performance of that condition, I ought to shew what lands and tenements in certain, for they pass out of me by the feoffment; see also 12 H. 8. 7. 13 H. 8. 19. Another point of the award was, that the said Audar should acquit and discharge, and save harmless the plaintiff of such an obligation, to which the defendant pleaded, that querens non suit damnificatus, and that plea was holden insufficient, for he ought to have shewed, how he had discharged him, and it is not sufficient to answer only to the damnification, as if I be bounden to convey unto you the manor [72] of B. in pleading the performance of the condition, it is not sufficient to shew, that I have conveyed the said manor, but to shew by what manner of conveyance, viz. by fine, or feoffment, &c. 22 E. 4. 43. If the condition be to discharge the plaintiff, &c. then the manner of the discharge ought to be shewed, but if it be to save harmless only, then non damnificatus generally is good enough, 40 E. 3. 20. 38 H. 6. 39. The condition of an obligation was, that the obligor should keep without damage the obligee, of such a sum of mony against B. to whom he was bounden for the payment of it, and the said obligor pleaded that at such a day, &c. the said B. at his request delivered the obligation to the plaintiff in liew of an acquittance, without that, that the plaintiff was damnified by the said obligation, before the delivery of it; and it was holden by the Court, that if the defendant had pleaded, that he had kept the plaintiff without damage, and had not shewed how, that the plea had not been good. See 22 E. 4. 40. The Lord Lisles Case. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Debt upon Arbitrament.

Smith brought debt upon an arbitrament against Kirfoot, and declared that the defendant and he, imposuerunt se in arbitrium, ordinationem, & judicium Johannis Popham ar. arbitratoris indifferenter electi, de jure, titulo, & interesse in equibusdam messuagijs, &c. Who taking upon him the burthen of the arbitration, ordinavit, that the said defendant should pay unto the plaintiff ten pounds, in plenam satisfactionem, &c. and thereupon he brought his action; it was moved by Walmesley Serjeant, that the declaration is not sufficient, for it appeareth that the arbitrament set forth in the declaration is utterly void; because whereas ten pounds is awarded to the plaintiff, nothing is awarded to the defendant, and so the award unequal, and so void. But the Court was clear of opinion, that notwithstanding that such an arbitrament be void in law, yet it may be for any thing that appeareth, that the award is good enough: for the plaintiff is not to shew in his declaration all the award, but such part only of it which doth entitle him to the [73] thing, &c. and if the defendant will impeach the award for any thing, that is to come on his part, vide. ac. And they were at issue, upon the voluntary escape, and it was found for the plaintiff. It was objected in arrest of judgment, that the writ of audita querela is not good, for the words are, that the plaintiff, captus fuit virtute brevis nostri judicialis, whereas this word (judicialis) is not in the register; but only brevis nostri de capiendo. But by the whole Court, the writ is good, for the word (judicialis) is but a word of surplusage, and shall not make void the writ: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

XCIX. BROOK AGAINST KING.

Debt. Conditions against Law.

In debt upon an obligation by Brook against King, the defendant pleaded that the bond was endorced, with such condition, viz. that if the said defendant King shall procure one I. S. to make reasonable recompence to the plaintiff for certain beasts which he wrongfully took from the plaintiff, that then, &c. And he said in facto, that the said I. S. had stolen the said beasts from the plaintiff, and thereof he was endicted, &c. and so the condition being against the law, the obligation was void, upon which the plaintiff did demurr in law. And it was argued by the whole Court: that where the condition of an obligation shall be said against the law, and therefore the obligation void, the same ought to be intended where the condition is expressly against the law in express words, and in terminis terminantibus, and not for matter out of the condition, as it is in this case; and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

C. HAWKS AGAINST MOLLINEUX.

Replevin. Prescription.

In a replevin by Hawks against Mollineux who avowed for damage-fesant; the plaintiff in bar of the avowry, pleaded that Sir Gervase Paston Knight, was seised of a messuage and twenty acres of land; and that always those whose estate, &c. have used to have common in the place where, &c. for all their cattel commonable in this manner, viz. if the said land be sowed by assent of the commoner, then no common, until the corn be mowed, and when the corn is mowed, then common until the land shall be sowed again by assent of the commoners: and this prescription was found by verdict, and exception was taken to this prescription because against common right, so as a man cannot sow his land without the leave of another. But the exception was disallowed by the Court; for the prescription was holden to be good by the whole Court, for by the law of the land, the owner of the land cannot plow the land where another hath common; but here is a benefit to each party, as well for the owner of the land against the commoner, as for the commoner against the tenant of the land, for each of them hath a qualified interest in the land.

CI. BALDWIN AND COCKS CASE.

Replevin.

Baldwin was plaintiff in a replevin against Cocks, and upon the pleading the case appeared to be this, that Sir Richard Wayneman was seised of the place where, &c. and leased the same to one Truepeny and one Eliz. Reade for term of 21 years, if the said Truepeny and Eliz. or any child or children betwixt them begotten should live so long; Eliz. within the term died without issue; if now the term for 21 years be determined was the question. And the Lord Anderson conceived, that the estate for years is not determined by the death of Elizabeth. And it was argued by Shuttleworth Serjeant, that upon the matter the term is determined: and he put the case of the Lord Bray, 3 Eliz. Dyer 190. where the Lord Bray sold unto four great lords the marriage of his son and heir, to the intent to be married at the appointment and nomination of the said lords, the Lord Bray died, one of the said lords before any marriage, or appointment, or nomination, died, the son is married by the appointment, &c. of the surviving lords; that marriage is not within the intent of the covenant, and adjudged that upon that marriage no use shall accrue. And also he cited this case adjudged in the Kings Bench. The administration is committed to one durante minore ætate of two infants, one of them becomes of full age, the power of the administration is determined, which Walmesley Serjeant granted, for it is but an authority; but here in the case at bar is a matter of interest. And by Anderson all the construction of this lease and grant rests upon this point, if this word (or) either shall be taken as disjunctive as it is in its nature, or as a conjunctive; and if it be taken as a disjunctive, if it make the whole sentence in the disjunctive as if the limitation had been, if the husband or wife or any child, &c. And Fenner, put this case out of 17 E. 3. as he cited it. Land is given to I. S. in fee so long as A. B. hath issue of his body. A. B. dieth without issue, his wife priviment ensient, now the estate is determined, and upon birth of the issue after shall not revive, which Rhodes and Anderson denied, for in many cases the law shall respect the existency of the child in the mothers belly: and see 7 Eliz. Plow. 289. where a copulative shall be taken in the disjunctive, as a covenant with B. to make a lease for years of such lands to the said B. and his assigns, the same shall be construed, or his assigns. And it was clearly agreed by the other parties, that if the words had been, if Truepeny, Elizabeth, or any child or children, &c. so long, &c. upon the death of any of them the interest is determined: and by Rhodes, Periam and Windham in the principal case, the lease shall endure as long as any of the persons named in the proviso shall live, and so seemed to be the meaning of the parties. And Anderson hæsitavit in the words of the limitation, i. the habendum to the said Truepeny and Eliz. for 21 years a festo sancti Johannis Baptist. post terminum annorum (the expiration of a former term) if the said Truepeny and Elizabeth, or any child, &c. And he conceived, that the limitation did go to the commencement of the lease only, and not to the expiration or determination, as if the lease should not begin if they all were not alive at the commencement of the lease: and all the other justices were clear of the contrary opinion, for by them this limitation shall go, and shall be referred to the determination of the lease, and not to the commencement of it.

Anderson, if any cause should be, for which the lease should endure until the years be encurred, notwithstanding the death of the husband or wife, it was because the lease was intended a common advancement to both, [75] for it should be in vain to name the wife in the lease, if the lease should cease by the death of the husband. And afterwards after many arguments on both sides, it was adjudged, that by the death of Elizabeth, the lease was not determined, for the disjunctive before (child) makes all the limitation in the disjunctive.

CII. Zouch and Bamfields Case.

The case between the Lord Zouch and Bamfield was now argued by the justices. And Rhodes the puisne Justice argued, that the Lord Zouch the demandant should be barred. Four exceptions have been taken to the bar: first, because it is not shewed in the bar that the moyety of those sixty messuages, &c. of which he pleads the fine, was parcel of the manor at the time of the fine levyed; for the pleading is, that the grandfather of the demandant was seised of the said manor, unde medietas prædictorum 60. messuagiorum, &c. a tempore cujus contrar. memoria, &c. was parcel, and so seised de manerio prædict. unde, &c. finis se levavit; and he conceived that the pleading, notwithstanding that was good enough; for he hath said as much in effect, contrar. cujus memoria hominum non existit, in the present tense, which amounts to this, that men cannot remember, &c. but that this moyety was parcel of the said manor: as 10 H. 7 12. In an assise of common, the plaintiff makes his title, that he was seised of a messuage and carve of land in D. to which the said common is appendant, and that he and all his ancestors, and all those whose estate he hath, &c. have used to have common, &c. Exception was taken to the title, because the plaintiff doth not shew in his title, that he is seised of a messuage, &c. for if he hath aliened the messuage the common passeth, so if he be disseised, &c. but the exception was not allowed, for it appeareth upon the words of the title, that the plaintiff is seised: i. all those whose estate he hath in the present tense, which words do shew and declare possession and seisin in the plaintiff, the time of the plea pleaded; so in this case, the substance of the words, in which the defect is assigned, is ut supra; that men cannot remember, but that this moyety was parcel of the manor, and then the words after, unde, &c. reddidit manerium prædict. unde, &c. shall have the same construction as before. Periam conceived, that the bar is nought for the cause aforesaid, for it is not so pleaded, that we can adjudge upon it, that the said moyety was parcel of the manor at the time of the fine levyed, and then the fine cannot extend unto it. And the reason alledged by my brother Rhodes shall not help that matter, for the said words cannot be construed otherwise, but that no man can remember but the said moyety was parcel, but not that it is parcel, or at the time of the fine levyed was parcel. Vide 32 H. 6. 24. In trespass the defendant pleaded, that A. was seised of the manor of D. whereof the place, &c. is parcel, he ought to say expresly, that the place where was parcel of the manor at the time of the trespass supposed. Windham conceived, that the plea was good, and that it appeareth well upon this plea, that the said moyety was parcel of the said manor at the time of the fine levyed, for he pleads, that the grandfather of the demandant was seised of the manor of N. Unde medietas prædictorum, &c. a tempore cujus contrar. memoria hominum non existit, & sic seisitus existens, finis se levavit; sic seisitus; i. e. seised of the manor in such sort, as the manor is set forth before, and that is good pleading, especially by way of bar, which if it be good to a common intent, is well enough; and the word (unde, &c.) so often repeated after shall be idle and to no purpose if the law shall not give such a construction. Anderson to the same purpose. And he much [76] relyed upon the reason of Windham, and so seised. Another exception was taken to the bar, because in pleading of the fine, it is not averred, that the conusor at the time of the fine levyed was of full age, out of prison, &c. And as to that Rhodes took the difference between the pleading upon the statute of 1 H. 3. where these disabilities are within the purview of the said statute, and upon the statute of 4 H. 7. where in the body of the statute no mention is made of them, but afterwards in an especial exception by it self; and he cited the opinion of the justices, especially of the Lord Dyer in the case reported by Plowd. 5 Eliz. 365. betwixt Stowel and the Lord Zouch. Periam to the same intent, and upon the same reason, and further he said that although the statute of 32 H. 8. contains in its purview the same disabilities; yet this fine is pleaded upon the statute of 4 H. 7. and therefore the pleading of the same shall not be directed nor waged by the statute of 32 H. 8. which doth not alter the pleading of a fine which was before, nor the reason of it; for it is not properly a statute, nor do fines receive any strength or virtue by it, but is but a construction of the said former statute. And he put the case betwixt Hide and Umpton; where Umpton mean betwixt the statutes of 32 and 34 H. 8. declared his will of all his lands, which devise if it be good for two parts of the land devised it was doubted, or that the devise should be void for the whole; afterwards came the stat. of 34 H. 8. and cleared the doubt, for to that intent it was made; and in the said statute there is a proviso, that the said statute shall not extend to the will or the devise of Tho. Umpton, or shall be prejudicial or hurtful to any person or persons for any lands &c. contained or specified in the said will or devise, but that the said will and devise shall stand, remain and be in the same case, in force and effect in the law, as the same was before the making of this act. Now, notwithstanding that proviso, the will of Umpton was holden good but for two parts, for so the statute of 34 H. 8. construed the statute of 32 H. 8. So in our case, the statute of 32 H. 8. of fines construes the statute of 4 H. 7. to extend to fines levyed by tenant in tail, therefore the estate tail shall be adjudged in law to be bound by the statute of 4 H. 7. and not by 32 H. 8. which is rather a judgment upon the said statute of 4 H. 7. than any new statute. Windham to the same intent, and he relyed upon the reason aforesaid. And further said, if one will plead a lease made by tenant in tail upon the statute of 32 H. 8. he need not to aver the full age of the lessor, and yet that quality of full age is within the purview of the said statute. First all leases to be made, &c. by any person being of full age, &c. and so is the common use of pleadings. And of the same opinion was the Lord Anderson for the said exception, for the reasons, and upon the difference aforesaid. Another exception was taken to the bar, because it is not alledged, that the said fine was engrossed in the same term in which it was levyed. And as to that, it was holden by Rhodes, that in pleading of a fine it needs not to shew any engrossing of it; and so are many presidents, vide Plowd. Com. Smith and Stapletons case, 15 Eliz. 428. Where a fine was pleaded, quædam finalis concordia facta fuit in octav. Sancti Hillarii 35 H. 8. & postea a die Pasch. in quindecem dies 36 H. 8. concessa & recordata, &c. super quem finem proclam. secundum formam statuti factæ fuer. viz. prima proclam. 7. Maii. term. Pasch. 36. H. 8. without any mention of the engrossing of it: and see the case betwixt Stowel and the Lord Zouch, where the fine is pleaded as it is pleaded in the case at bar, qui quidem finis in forma prædict. levatus (and that fine was levyed Pasch. 30 H. 8.) ingrossatus fuit, & postea in curia prædict. secundum formam statui, &c. lectus, & proclamatus fuit, viz. prim. proclam. term. Pasch. 30 H. 8. And so upon the matter it is sufficient to shew, that the fine was engrossed the same term in which it was levyed, for the fine is pleaded to be levyed term. Pasch. qui quidem finis ingrossatus fuit, & postea proclam. viz. prim. proclam. termino Pasch. which was the same term it was [77] levyed: and so, admit, that in pleading it ought to be shewed that the fine was ingrossed in the same term in which it was levyed, &c. Now it appears here to us by necessary consequence, that the fine was ingrossed accordingly. And also the ingrossment is pleaded as the statute is penned, for the words of the statute of 4 H. 7. are, after the engrossing of every fine, the same fine to be openly read and proclaimed in the same court, the same term, and so the words of our plea here pursue the words of the statute; for the said statute doth not require by express words, that the fine be engrossed the same term, but the same is to be conceived by matter of construction and implication, and according to such manner of speech this plea is pleaded. And of the same opinion was Windham, and upon the same reason Anderson conceived, that the tenant in pleading of the fine ought to shew in express words, that the fine was engrossed the same term in which it was levyed; for whosoever in pleading a plea will take the benefit of the statute ought precisely to follow the statute in all points; and it is clear, that if the fine be not engrossed, according to the statute, that then it is not any bar by the statute, and therefore it ought to be expressly alledged according to the statute, and not by implication only.

Another exception was taken to the bar (as was remembred by Windham) i. pro ut per finem hic in curia de recordo remanen. plenius apparet; without saying, & per proclamation. inde, &c. But that exception was disallowed by Periam and Windham, for the fine had been good and well pleaded, without any such conclusion, pro ut, &c. And also the proclamations are endorsed upon the fine, and then they appear upon the fine, according to the words of the said conclusion. And so by Windham are many presidents, and so in the said case between Stowel and the Lord Zouch cited before, pro ut per finem illum hic de record. remanen. plane liquet. And see 1 Eliz. Plowden 224. between Willion and Barkly, a fine pleaded without any pro ut. &c. Anderson took an exception to the bar at the beginning of it, i. quod medietas 60 messuagiorum, &c. parcel. medietatis 70 messuag. prædict. that that is no good pleading; for one moyety cannot be parcel of another moyety, for every moyety is entire.

Rhodes took exception to the replication, because the demandant in avoidance of the fine, that at the time of the fine levyed Bamfield was seised, & semper postea, & hucusque, &c. of the moyety in demesn, and doth not traverse the seisin of the conusor at the time of the fine levyed, for here two contrary pleas stand before us in equity of truth; æque vera, æque dubia, and a traverse would have made an end of all, and reduced the matter to certainty: and by Periam, the bar is not answered, for every bar ought to be traversed, confessed, or avoided, see 6 H. 7. 5, and 6. where it is said by Hussey and Fairfax, where matter in fact is alleged by way of bar it ought to be traversed, if it be not for the mischief of tryal, as in case of Basterdy, where a thing is alledged to be done beyond the sea; or to leave the matter in law to the Court, without putting the same to the judgment of the lay-people, &c. See also 5 H. 7. 12. where it is holden, that a thing material alledged in the Bar ought to be directly traversed, or confessed, or avoided in fact or in law, or conclude the other party by matter of estoppel: and that two affirmatives cannot make a good issue; but the matter alledged in the replication scil. that Bamfield was seised at the time of the fine levyed shall be holden for void, and the matter alledged in the bar, scil. that the conusor was seised, as not answered; for it shall be taken true, until it shall be avoided and destroyed by matter in law, traverse, &c. vide librum. So he in default of traverse, the bar is not answered but argumentative, scil. Bamfield was seised, ergo, the conusor was not seised: and it is a common learning that in every replication there ought to be certainty as to that: see the case betwixt Fulmerston and Steward 2 Ma. 103. that a bar ought not to be answered by [78] argument: and as to the certainty which is requisite in a replication. See the case betwixt Wimbish and Talboies, Plow. Com. 4 E. 6. 42. where the plaintiff shewed in his replication his title as heir, but because he did not shew, how heir, for want of such certainty in the replication, the plaintiff could never have judgment, although the justices for the matter in law then in question were clearly resolved for the plaintiff; and here in this replication the incertainty is such, that the Court doth not know to which to give credit, to the plaintiff, or to the def. and the bare matter of the replication is not sufficient; for in avoidance of a fine, to say, that a stranger to the fine, at the time of the fine levyed, was seised, was never received, but that, partes finis nihil habuerunt, that was the ordinary plea. Windham to the same intent; that which the demandant hath alledged in avoydance of the fine, is but matter of argument and implication. And we ought in this case first to be insured of the matter of fact; scil.

whether Zouch or Bamfield were seised, and the Court doth not know to which to give credit, 39 H. 6. 49. in debt by an executor, the defendant pleaded, that the testator made the plaintiff and one A. his executor, which A. is living, and the plaintiff pleaded, that the said A. died within such a ward before the writ brought, &c. and adjudged no plea, without traverse, without that, he was dead, for here are 2 affirmatives, whereon a good issue cannot rise, which see 32 H. 6. 23. The def. in a replevin avows for a rent service, the plaint. pleads, out of his fee, the avowant saith, within his fee, he ought to traverse, without that it is out of his fee, and for default of the traverse the pleading of both parties; as to the several allegations of the seisin in Bamfield and Zouch may be true, for they both might be joynt-tenants of the said moyety at the time of the fine levyed, in which case, as to the moyety of the moyety it is good enough. And yet when in pleading it is alledged, that A. was seised, &c. If the other party plead, that A. had nothing but joyntly with B. he ought to take a traverse, without that, that A. was sole seised, and yet sole seisin is not expresly alledged; but when the other party pleads, that A. was seised, it ought to be intended a sole seisin. Which see 1 E. 4. 9. 37 H. 6. 31. And it was never a plea admittable against a fine, to say, that the conusor had nothing at the time of the fine levyed, which see 41 E. 3. 14. and also 38 E. 3. 13. 8 H. 6. 27. In trespass the defendant pleaded the fine of the ancestor of the plaintiff, who said, at the time of the fine levyed he himself was seised, without that that partes ad finem aliquid habuerunt, which see 46 E. 3. 14. and a fine ought to be avoided by not seisin of the parties to the fine, and not by the seisin of a stranger to the fine; and there is not any book in the law that alloweth such an averment of seisin in a stranger to the fine, without answering to the seisin of the parties to the fine, but 13 H. 8. In assise, the tenant pleaded a fine upon render of the ancestor of the plaintiff, to which the plaintiff said, that before the fine, at the time of the fine, and afterwards continually, he himself was seised, and the same was held no plea against such a fine upon a render, notwithstanding the privity of blood; contrary, against a fine, which proves a gift precedent.

Anderson to the same intent. The replication for want of traverse is incurable, for we as judges do not know what to do, because that the truth of the matter in fact doth not appear unto us, and so neither the matter in law; for every plea ought to be traversed, or confessed, and avoided, otherwise nothing appears to us, and we cannot know whether the conusor or Bamfield were seised at the time of the fine levyed, for otherwise the matter in law cannot rise; and yet I well know, that although a traverse may be spared in respect of a matter in law which should be choaked and put out of the book by the traverse, or for the mischief of the tryal as aforesaid, where a thing is alledged to be done beyond sea. 19 E. 4. 6. In debt the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff was born at Denmark, under the obedience of the King of Denmark, [79] the plaintiff by replication said, that he himself was born at D. in England in the county of York, there he shall not take a traverse without that, that he was born at Denmark, for there such tryal cannot be, but in such case the defendant by way of rejoynder shall say, that the plaint. was born at Denmark, without that that he was born at D. in the county of York: and it is true, a supposal of a writ or count may be answered to an affirmative; but a matter alledged by express words cannot.

Rhodes, admitting now that the bar be naught, and the replication faulty, as it is, then I conceive, that if the point of the action be confessed by the bar, the Court shall give judgment upon the bar, and shall not meddle with the replication, but if it be not confessed by the bar, that then there shall be a repleader. And I do conceive, that a repleader may be awarded upon a demurrer in law: which see Plowd. 1. Ma. in the case betwixt Browning and Beston 138. In trespass the plaintiff doth suppose the trespass in two places, scil. in Bermestreet and in Southwark in the county of Surrey; as to the trespass in Southwark the defendant doth justifie by special matter of a lease, without answering any thing to the trespass in Bermestreet. The plaintiff doth reply, and makes his title by a lease more ancient than the lease to the defendant; upon which the defendant doth demurr in law. Now the defect in the bar appearing, the Court awarded a repleader. And 9 H. 6. 35. in a replevin the defendant avowed for damage fesant. The plaintiff made title by common. The defendant pleaded a release of the common by deed, which was not a perfect deed, upon which the plaintiff did demurr in law: and the replication, in which the imperfect release was, was holden naught, but because there was a defect in the bar to the avowry by the title of common, the Court awarded, that the parties should replead, not in respect of the vitious plea upon which it was demurred, but in respect of the defect in bar: and so in this case Periam said, that nothing should be awarded in this case but where an issue is joyned, for an issue is always joyned upon a point certain. But upon a demurrer all the parts of the pleading, the count, the bar, &c. are referred to the Court, as well for the form as for the matter. The book which hath been vouched to the contrary out of 9. H. 6. I have procured search to be made for the roll, but it cannot be found; and it is inconvenient, that after a demurrer a repleader should be granted, for then causes should never have an end: and as to the case betwixt Browning and Beston, the repleader there was permitted by the assent of the parties, rather then awarded by the rule of the Court. Windham to the same intent, that no repleader shall be in this case, and he said, that in the time of the Lord Dyer the opinion of the Court was so: and as this case is, the plea in bar being good, and the demurrer being upon the replication, no repleader should be, for a repleader shall never be granted, where the plea upon a demurrer is not good; but if the bar be not good, and the defendant doth demurr upon the replication, there a repleader may be. And as to Browning and Bestons case he conceived, that the parties did plead de novo, but not replead, for if it had been a repleader, then the parties should begin to plead where the first defect was, as if the defect be in the bar, there the repleader shall begin, but the declaration shall stand: but in the said case of Browning and Beston, the plaintiff pleaded all de novo, as a new count, &c. and yet the first defect was in the bar, and therefore he conceived, that there it was not a repleader, but that the parties by assent did plead de novo.

Anderson was of opinion, that as this case is, no repleader shall be, and yet he held the repleader might be upon a demurrer as well as upon an issue joyned; for a demurrer joyned is an issue to be tryed by the judges, &c. and such was the opinion of Manwood chief Baron. And the judgment in the case betwixt Browning and Beston is not that the parties [80] shall plead de novo, but that they shall replead. See there folio 138. a. and in that case there might well be a repleader, for there the truth of the matter in fact is confessed in the pleading, but in the case at bar it is otherwise, for the pleading is so obscure, that we do not know the truth of the matter, and the right of the matter doth not appear unto us.

And by Periam, as to that which hath been said, that upon the demurrer upon the replication, the seisin of Bamfield at the time of the fine is confessed. Sir, its not so, for no more shall be holden confessed by a demurrer, but that which is duly and sufficiently pleaded, and because the seisin of Bamfield is not sufficiently pleaded, therefore not confessed; and for proof of that learning, see the case betwixt Wimbish and Talboies; and the case betwixt Hill and Graunge: 1 Mar. Plowd. 171. and see the case betwixt Partridge and Croker; and so was opinion of the Lord Anderson, who relyed much upon the case, where it is said, that in pleading a plea, all matters in fact well and materially alledged by a general demurrer are confessed to be true.

Rhodes. Now we are to see, if by the statute of 27 Eliz. cap. 5. this defect in the replication may be salved, and I conceive, that this statute doth extend to all imperfections which happen by the act; misprision, or negligence of the clarks or counsel; for the clyent propounds his cause to the clark and his counsel to manage in the course of his suit, and if the clark or counsel err therein, or in that which to them belongeth, the clyent as to that shall be releived by the statute; but if there be any defect in the matter, so as the matter will not serve, it is otherwise. As 5 H. 7. 1. In the roll of a plea there were divers spaces (for the year and day) void and blank, in another term, the judges could not amend them, but now by the said statute they may. So colour in assise wanting is helped by this statute, so the usual averment, & hoc paratus est verificare, &c. left out, the Court hath power to amend it, and so by him the Court by this statute hath power to amend that defect in trespass.

Periam to the contrary. And that this default of traverse is not amendable by the said statute, for it is enacted by the said statute, that upon a demurrer the judges shall give judgment as the right of the cause and matter in law shall require; but in our case, as the pleading now is, no right of the cause or matter in law appeareth according to which we can judge, for we upon this pleading cannot tell whether the conusor or Bamfield was seised at the time of the fine levyed, for upon the demurrer upon the replication the seisin of Bamfield is not confessed, because it is not well alledged: and if it had been well alledged, yet it had not been confessed, because that the tenant who demurrs upon the replication, hath in his bar expresly alledged, that the conusor was seised: an original writ of debt against one as executor in the debet and detinet could not be amended by 8 H. 6. but now by the statute of 27 Eliz. it may. See 22 E. 4. 21, 22. So nominare for præsentare in a quare impedit shall be now amended by this statute; and in a writ of formedon, discendere for remanere shall be amended by the said statute of 8 H. 6. 44 E. 3. 13. vide. 11 H. 7. 1, 23. In assise, upon whom the plaintiff, where it should be upon whom the defendant entred; and if the averment usual as above was miss-set down, it was amendable, but if it were utterly left out, not, but now in both cases it is amendable, so, defendit vim & injuriam quando, &c. if it be left out, it is amendable, for all these matters lie in the conusance of the clark, but in our case, the right of the cause and matter doth not appear unto us, for if Bamfield was seised at the time of the fine levyed, then as the demandant and his counsel pretend, the law is with the demandant, and if the conusor and not the demandant, then the aw is with the tenant, as his counsel hath argued, so as the right of the cause consists and depends upon the truth of the seisin, which matter doth not appear unto us: and if we enter in course of amend-[81]-ment, we do not know if the demandant would have traversed, without that that the conusor was seised, which shall not be a good traverse, or absque hoc, quod partes ad finem aliquid habuerunt, &c. which although it be a good traverse in law, yet we do not know if the truth of the cause will serve to maintain such matter, and because without altering matter we cannot amend the plea. Windham to the same purpose; for by the statute of 27 Eliz. we ought to judge in this case, as the right of the cause and matter in law shall appear; but in this case neither the right of the cause nor the matter in law appeareth unto us, according to which we can judge, for we know not to which of the parties to give credit, touching the seisin of the conusor, or Bamfield at the time of the fine levyed, for as to our judicial knowledge, both pleas are to us equally dubious; and he agreed the cases put before touching amendment of matters upon default of the clark, scil. de hoc ponit se super patriam, left out, so colour in assize, and trespass wanting, so, & hoc paratus est verificare, all which matters are amendable by the statute of 27. Eliz. But he said, that if in trespass the defendant doth justify by a lease for years, without shewing the place where the lease is made, it is not amendable, for it is matter which lyeth in the notice of the party only, and not in our judicial knowledge: and as to the case of 5 H. 7. 1. of the places left, he conceived it is not amendable in another term by this statute, for that is material, and the filling of those spaces the parties themselves shall supply and not the Court, for the Court shall never amend, where their amendment makes alteration of the substance of the pleading, or of the verdict, as 20 H. 6. 15. In trespass, the plaintiff declared of a continuando usque diem impetrationis, brevis, viz. 18. die Martii, where the teste of the writ was, 2 die Januarij, the defendant pleaded to issue, which was found for the plaintiff, and that misprision of the teste or date of the writ could not be amended. And no amendment upon the stat. of 27 Eliz. two things are to be considered.

First, that the judges, in such amendment, medle not with matter, nor alter the substance.

Secondly, that they do not amend but according to their judicial knowledge.

Anderson, to the same intent, for as it hath been said before, the truth of the case doth not appear unto us according to which we can judge, and I conceive that upon any amendment upon this statute, we cannot take out one roll and put in another, and as our case is we cannot amend this defect without taking out the whole roll, and therefore in the case of Leonard, which was late custos brevium here, where in a replevin he avowed for a rent-service, and upon especial verdict the case was, that Sir Henry Isley held of the said Leonard by fealty, and the rent mentioned in the avowry, and was attainted of high treason, and the King seised and granted the land to the plaintiff, upon whom Leonard avowed for the rent-service, and I and my companions were agreed, that the rent, notwithstanding the seisure and grant of the King remained distrainable of common right, but Leonard could not have return of the cattel, because he had avowed for a rent-service, & now it appeareth to us upon the verdict, that he had right to so much rent, but not to such a rent, but a rent-seck distrainable of common right, so a rent in another degree; and we also agreed, that the avowry was not amendable, for then upon such amendment, we ought to take out a whole roll, which was not intended by this statute: and he conceived also, that in debt against executors in the debet & detinet, such a writ shall not be amended by this statute, and he conceived, that his exception to the bar, quod ad medietatem, 60. messuag. &c. parcel. medietatis, &c. is relieved by this statute, for the meaning appeareth: and also the exception, that it is not expressly shewed that the fine was engrossed in the same term in which it was levied. And Periam moved [82] another matter, if now the parties demurring in law as to part of the land in demand, and being at issue upon the residue, if the Court shall adjudge the matter in law, before the issue be tried, or not, 32 H. 6. 5. & 6. In trespass for taking of his cattel, the defendant as to parcel pleaded not guilty, and as to the remnant pleaded another plea, upon which the parties did demur, and there they proceeded to trial before the matter in law determined, and found for the plaintiff, and he had judgment thereupon for the damages, but the costs were suspended until, &c. And the defendant brought his writ of error. 48 E. 3. 15. In an action of wast, as to parcel the defendant pleads, no wast, and as to the rest pleaded matter in law, upon which there was a demurer joyned; it was holden, that the issue should not be tried until the matter in law be determined; but it was said by Fulthorpe in trespass, if the defendant to parcel plead the enquest, and to other parcel matter in law, in such case he should proceed to trial presently, and damages should be taxed of the whole, as well of that upon which there was a demurrer in law, as of that of which the issue was joyned, ad quod non fuit responsum. See also 11 H. 4. 228. In trespass, the defendant pleaded to issue for part, and for the residue did demur in law, process for the trial issued before the matter in law determined; and Periam conceived that the Court might proceed in such case, the one way or the other: as to the matter in law, whether the issue in tail upon this fine should have the averment, he conceived, that he should not have the said averment, for that it should be very perilous to the inheritances of the subjects. And he argued much upon the dignity of fines out of Bracton and Glanvil, whom he called actores, non authores legis; & that fines at the common law were of great authority until the statute of West. 2. And afterwards by the statute of 34 E. 3. of non-claim, from whence they became to be of so little value in law, that they were accounted no other than feoffments upon record, so as thereby no assurance was of inheritances but a general incertainty until the statute of 4 H. 7. by which statute they were restored to their ancient power and virtue: after which statute many shifts were devised, to creep out of it: so as the statute of 32 H. 8. was made to take away all questions and ambiguities which were conceived upon the said statute of 4 H. 7. And therefore we who are judges ought to frame our judgments for the maintaining of the authority of fines, for so the possessions and inheritances of the subjects shall be preserved; and that is the reason, that if a stranger levy a fine of my land in my name, that I have not any remedy but a writ of deceit against him who levyes the fine, so if a feme-covert levyeth a fine of her land as a feme-sole, the same shall bind her after the coverture, if the husband do not enter upon the conusee during the coverture and interrupt the possession gained by the fine: and 17 E. 3. and our books are very plentiful to this purpose that the law doth ærge admit of such allegations against such fines: a fine was pleaded in bar of land in A. B. and C. he against whom it was pleaded was not received to aver against the supposal of the fine, that there was no such town or hamlet as A. 46 E. 3. 5. A woman tenant in tail, had issue a daughter, who was inheritable to the tail, the daughter took a husband, & they both living the mother, and during her seisin, levied a fine of the land entailed to a stranger, sur conusans de droit, come ceo, &c. who rendred the land to the husband and wife in speci tail, the husband died having issue, the wife took another husband, had issue, and died, the husband to entitle himself to the land as tenant by the curtesy, would in pleading have averred the seisin of the mother at the time of the fine levyed, and he could not, and yet he was a stranger to the fine, but he was privy to the estate, and his claim was by her who levyed the fine, 6 E. 3. 46. Fitz. Averment 40. In a writ of entry, sur disseisin, the fine of the [83] ancestor of the demandant was pleaded in bar by the name of W. the demandant in avoidance of it would have said that the name of his father was R. to have avoided the fine, but to that he was not received. And 3 E. 3. 32. scil. Averment, 42. in a formedon, the tenant pleaded ne dona pas, the demandant by replication said, that a fine was levied of the same lands, between the father of the demandant, and one T. by which fine the father of the demandant did acknowledge to T. the lands come ceo, &c. and the said T. gave by the said fine to the father of the demandant the land in tail. Where it is said by Stone, that since the gift is proved by as high a record, a man shall not aver against such matter in avoidance of the said fine, &c. and yet the party against whom it was was a stranger to the fine: and see 38 E. 3. 7. The lord shall not be received against a fine levied by his tenant to aver the dying seised of his tenant in his homage. And as to the issue in tail, he conceived, that the averment doth not lie for him, for the issue in tail is as much privy, as the heir of a tenant in fee-simple. And see 33 E. 3. scil. Estoppel 280. In a formedon, the tenant voucheth, the demandant counter-pleaded, that the vouchee nor any of his ancestors had any thing in the land in demand after the seisin, &c. to which the tenant said, that to that the demandant should not be received, for the father of the demandant after the gift levied a fine to the ancestor of the vouchee of the said land in demand, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. and the same was holden a good bar to the counter-plea.

And it was said by the justices, that although the statute of West. 2. of donis conditionalibus, doth not avoid the fine as to the fore-closing of the issue in tail of his formedon, yet it remaineth in force as to the restraining of the heir in tail to aver a thing against the fine as well as against the heir in fee-simple; and in all cases, where he against whom a fine is pleaded claims by him who levieth the fine, he shall not have the same averment, but where he claims by a stranger to the fine, there he shall have it well enough; see 33 H. 6. 18. If my father tenant in tail, or in fee, grant the land by fine, and afterwards I make title to the same land by the same ancestor, and the fine is pleaded against me, I shall not be received to say that those who were parties to the fine had not any thing at the time of the fine levied, but such a one an estranger whose estate, &c. but it is a good plea for me to say, that after the fine such a one was seised in fee, and did enfeoff me, vid. 22 E. 3. 17. before 33 E. 3. Estoppel 280. And Dyer 16 Eliz. 334. The father is tenant for life, the remainder in fee to his son and heir, levieth a fine to a stranger, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. with warranty, and takes back an estate by the same fine, in that case it was holden that the heir should not be received to aver continuance of the possession and seisin, either ante finem, tempore finis, or post finem, in the tenant for life, for it is a feoffment upon record, and makes a discontinuance of the remainder and reversion. The only book in our law to maintain the averment is 12 E. 4. 15. by Brian, who although he was a reverend judge in his time, yet he erred in this, that if tenant in tail be disseised, and levieth a fine unto a stranger, sur conusans de droit, come ceo, &c. that the issue in tail may well say, that partes ad finem nihil habuerunt, but Coke and Lit. were clear of a contrary opinion; and see in the same year, fol. 12. by Fairfax and Littleton, that if tenant in tail, where the remainder is over to a stranger, levieth a fine sur conusans dodroit, come ceo, &c. he in the remainder may aver continuance of seisin against that fine, for he is not party, nor heir to the party, &c. And the stat. of 4 H. 7. goes strongly to extort such averment out of the mouth of the issue in tail, for the words concerning the same point are, saving to every person or persons, not party, nor privy to the said fine, their exception to avoid the said fine, by that, that those which were parties to the said fine nor any of them had ought in the land at the time of the [84] said fine levied: and it is clear, that the issue in tail is privy to his ancestor whose heir to the tail he is, which see agreed, 19 H. 8. 6. 7. And he vouched the case of one Stamford late adjudged, land was given to the eldest son in tail, the remainder to the father in tail, the eldest son levied a fine, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. and died without issue in the life of his father, and afterwards the father died; the second son shall inherit; but if the eldest son had survived the father, and afterwards died without issue, the second son should have been barred.

Periam to the same intent: It should be very dangerous to the inheritances of the subjects to admit of such averments, and by such means fines which should be of great force and effect should be much weakened, and he put many cases to the same purpose as were put before by Rhodes Justice, and he shewed how that fines, and the power of them were much weakened by the statute of non-claim, whereof followed (as the preface of the statute of 4 H. 7. observeth) the universal trouble of the Kings subjects and therefore by the said statute of 4 H. 7. Fines, for the good and safety of the subjects were restored to their former grandure and authority, which should be construed by us who are judges, strongly and liberally for the quiet and establishment of present possessions, and for the barring and extinguishing of former rights, and so did the judges our predecessors; which see in the argument of the said case between Stowel and the Lord Zouch: so see such liberal construction, 19 Eliz. Dyer. 351. Where if land be given to husband and wife in special tail, and the husband alone levieth a fine and dieth having issue, the issue is barred: and it hath lately been adjudged by the advice of all the judges of England, upon the statute of 1 Ma. viz. all fines levied, whereupon proclamations shall not be dayly made by reason of adjournment of any term, shall be of as good force and strength to all intents and purposes, as if such term had been holden and kept from the beginning to the end thereof, and not adjourned, and the proclamations shall be made in the following term, which reason in construction of the said statute, the judges in the case of the Cooks of London, 20. Eliz. have observed, which see Plowden 538. For although successors are not mentioned in the said statute of 4 H. 7. but only heirs, yet the judges did construe the said statute to extend to them that they should be bounden as well as the heirs; for it is in the like mischief, and the said statute was made for the publick good, and for the repose of the inheritances of the subjects of this realm, and therefore the same ought to be largely extended in the meaning and sense of it, and for the benefit of the possessors of the lands, and to the destroying of former rights which were not claimed. It hath been said, that this fine is but a fine by conclusion, and not in verity; and therefore not within the statute. But without question, fines by conclusion are within the statute. And that is clear by the saving, scil. to all persons other than parties to the said fines, &c. And Periam was against the opinion in Stowells case by Sanders 356. A disseisor maks a feoffment in fee upon condition, the feoffee levies a fine with proclamation, five years pass, the condition is broken, the disseisor re-entreth, and Periam conceived that in such case the disseisee is bounden, for by the fine, and five years non-claim, the right of every stranger is barred, and when the disseissor entreth for the condition broken, the fine is not annoyed, but rather confirmed, and former rights shall not be revived. Windham to the same intent, and vouched the books before remembred, and that the meaning of the statute of 32 H. 8. made upon the statute of 4 H. 7. was to bind the issue in tail as strongly as the heir of tenant in fee-simple was bound at the common law, and that fines by conclusion are as fully within the purview of that statute as fines in verity, for fines by conclusion are assurances; and as to the objection against our fine, that it [85] is not rite levatus because that partes ad finem nihil habuerunt, &c. the same is no reason, wherefore this fine should not be rite levatus, for these words rite levatus, to the external form of a fine are to be taken as to a fine levied, coram Edmundo Anderson & socijs suis, where all the Justices ought to be named, and so it seemed also to Periam and Anderson. Our case had little resemblance to the case where tenant in tail maks a lease according to the statute of 32 H. 8. if he be not seised at the time of the demise, it is void: for the stat. speaks seised in tail: but so are not penned the statutes of 4 H. 7. & 32 H. 8. as 4 H. 7. a fine levied shall bind privies, & strangers, &c. & 32 H. 8. fines levied of any lands entailed to the conusor or any of his ancestors, and it is not a fine in respect of the possession which passeth by the fine, but in respect of the concord and agreement.

And tenant in tail by these statutes hath as great power to bind the right of the entail, although he cannot meddle with the possession, as the tenant in fee-simple at the common law.

Anderson to the same intent, all the matter rests upon this point, if the issue in tail be privy or not, for if he be privy, then clearly he is bounden. And as to that, the issue in tail before the statute of 32 H. 8. hath been always accounted privy. See 29 H. 8. Dyer 32. Tenant in tail of the gift of the King levieth a fine, the same shall bind his issue, for they are privy. And he argued much upon the cases cited by the other justices before, and especially upon the said case of Stowel and the Lord Zouch; how that the issue in tail is there holden privy; and that the Statute of Fines ought to be taken and construed to enforce the operation of fines against former rights, and for the establishment of the present possessions and estates. And by him divers rights and persons are excepted by the said statute, but this right in gross of possession, nor the issue in tail, whose ancestor being out of possession levieth the fine is not excepted, therefore both of them comprehended in the statute. And in his argument he stood much upon it, how dangerous a matter it should be, to receive such averments and allegations which go meerly in avoidance of fines, for so every fine might fall in the mouth of the lay-gens, which would be very inconvenient. And he concluded his argument with this case. Tenant in tail doth discontinue, and disseiseth his discontinuee, and levieth a fine, the discontinuee before the proclamations reentreth, the proclamations are made, tenant in tail doth re-enter, and dieth seised; against this fine his issue shall not be remitted. See as to the averment 3 H. 627. 33 H. 6. 18. 42 E. 3. 20. 8 H. 4. 8. 12 E. 4. 19. by Fairfax and Needham, and fol 15. by Brian and Choke. And afterwards judgment was given, that the demandant should be barred.

CIII. GUNERSTON AND HATCHERS CASE.

Avowry.

Charles Duke of Suffolk was seised of three parts of the manor of D. and Poole was seised of the fourth part of the said manor, and afterwards the duke granted out of the said three parts a rent-charge of five marks to Gunerston; and afterwards the said duke of the said three parts did enfeoffe Hatcher in fee, after which Poole conveyed his said fourth part of the said manor to the said Hatcher in fee, and afterwards Hatcher being seised, ut supra, reciting the said several purchases, especially the said fourth part devised to Katherin Hatcher at will, and Gunerston distreined the cattel of Katherin Hatcher for the arrearages of the said rent, and in a replevin avowed the distress: and by the opinion of the whole Court the avowry was not maintainable, for the fourth part of the said manor, which was in the possession of [86] Poole, was not charged with the rent; and although all the manor be now in the possession of Hatcher, yet the mannor is not so consolidated nor united by this unity of possession, but that the owner might well enough single out eandem quartam partem, and grant it, and the grantee shall hold the same discharged, as the said Poole held it; and the beasts of the said Katherin shall not be distreined; and so judgment was given against the avowant.

CV. KEYS AND STEDS CASE.

Formedon. Falsifier of Recovery.

In a formedon by Keys against Sted, the case was, that Sted and his wife were tenants for life, the remainder over to a stranger in fee; and the writ of formedon brought against Sted only, who made default after default, whereupon came his wife and prayed to be received to defend her right; which was denied her by the Court, for this recovery doth not bind her, and it is to no purpose for her to defend her right in that action which cannot here be impeached; whereupon he in the remainder came and prayed to be received, and the Court at first doubted of the receit, forasmuch as if the demandant shall have judgment to recover, he in the remainder might falsify the recovery, because his estate, upon which he prayeth to be received, doth not depend upon the estate impleaded, scil. a sole estate, whereas his remainder doth depend upon a joynt estate in the husband and wife, not named in the writ; but at the last, notwithstanding the said exception, the receit was granted. And it was holden by the Court not to be a sufficient view, for the forrest it self ought to be put in view; scil. the whole forrest, and not duæ partes tantum, as where a rent or common is demanded, the land out of which the rent or common is going ought to be put in view; and there a writ of habere facias visum de novo issued forth.

Germy brought debt upon a bond against A. as executor, and the case was, that the testator of A. by his will did appoint certain lands, and named which, should be sold by his executors, and the moneys thereof arising distributed amongst his daughters when they have accomplished their ages of one and twenty years; the lands are sold, if the moneys thereof being in the hands of the executors until the full age of the daughters shall be assets to pay the debts of the testator? And by the clear opinion of the whole Court, the same shall not be assets, for that this money is limited to a special use.

CX. GLOSSE AND HAYMANS CASE.

Trespass, vi & armis, against a Servant for carrying away his Masters Goods.

Joan Glosse brought an action of trespass, vi & armis, against John Hayman, who pleaded the general issue, and the jury found this special matter, that the plaintiff was a grocer in Ipswich, and there held a shop of grocery, & quod illa reposuit fiduciam in the defendant, to sell the grocery wares of the plaintiff in the said shop: and further found, that the said defendant being in the said shop in form aforesaid, cepit & asportavit, the said wares, and did convert them, &c. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that this action, vi & armis, upon this matter doth not lie, but rather an action upon the case. But the Court was clear of opinion, that the action doth well lie, for when the defendant was in the shop aforesaid, the goods and wares did remain in the custody and possession of the plaintiff her self. And the defendant hath not any interest, possession or other thing in them, and therefore if he entermeddle with them in any other manner, than by uttering of [88] them by sale, according to the authority to him committed, he is a trespassor; for he hath not any authority to carry the wares out of the shop not sold, but all his authority is within the shop. And Rodes put the case of Littleton 25. If I deliver my sheep to another to manure his land, or my oxen to plow his land, and afterwards he kills them, I shall have an action of trespass against him: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXI. MARTIN AND STEDDS CASE.

Richard Martin, alderman of London, brought an action upon the case against Stedd, and declared, that whereas the Queen by her letters patents dated, the 27. of August, anno 24. of her reign, had granted to the plaintiff the office of Master of the Mint, through all England, to exercise the said office, secundum formam quarundam indent. betwixt the said Queen and the said plaintiff conficiendam, and that in January following the said indenture was made, by which it was agreed betwixt the said Queen and the plaintiff, that the money, in posterum, should be made in such manner, &c. according to the true standard; and declared, that he had duly and lawfully made all the money according to the said standard: yet the defendant, machinans, &c. had slanderously spoken and given out speeches in these words, Mr. Martin hath not made the money as good and fine as the standard, by an half penny in the ounce, and so he hath saved four thousand pounds. It was objected against this declaration by Walmesley Serjeant, that here the plaintiff hath declared upon the letters patents, and the office given by the letters patents ought to be exercised according to the indenture, &c. And here appears upon the declaration no indenture, for no enrolment of such indenture is shewed, and if it be not enrolled, then there cannot be any indenture betwixt the Queen, &c. and then the Queen cannot have an action upon it for want of enrolment. See 21 H. 7. 21. 1 H. 7. 28. and 31. 5 E. 4. 7. and also if there be not a sufficient indenture, then the plaintiff is not Master of the Mint, and then also there is not any new indenture: and then the plaintiff ought to make the money according to the old standard, and then might the defendant well justify the words.

Another exception was taken, because the plaintiff is not at any damage, for the Queen cannot have against him but an action of covenant upon the said indenture, because the defendant hath not made the money accordingly, which matter is not actionable, no more than if the farmer of the Queen had brought this action against one, for speaking that he had broken the condition or covenants of his lease. And as unto these words, so that the defendant hath saved four thousand pounds, those words are not actionable, for it may be he hath saved this four thousand pounds to the Queen; and such construction the Judges ought to make of such ambiguous words in such cases, scil. in optimam partem. It was adjorned.

CXII. MOUNSON AND WESTS CASE.

Challenge.

In an action of trespass between Mounson and West, the parties were at issue, and now at the return of the pannel the defendant challenged the array, because it was made by Bartholomew Armin, [89] who took to wife the cosin german of the plaintiff, & ex ea had issue living, the mother being dead; and upon this challenge the plaintiff did demur in law; and it seemed to the Lord Anderson, that it is not a principal challenge, but only to favour. For the matter of the challenge is not consanguinity, but only affinity: and so it seemed to Periam. And Rhodes cited a case adjudged in the Kings Bench. Markham brought an action upon the case against Lee, who at the Nisi Prius challenged the array, because the sheriffs wife was sister to the plaintiffs wife, and that was before the Lord Dyer at Nottingham, and that challenge was holden there, not to be a principal challenge, upon which error was brought in the Kings Bench: and error assigned in that, and for that cause the judgment was reversed: and by Windham the writ of venire facias is, quia nulla affinitate, &c. so as affinity is presumed in law not indifferent. And by Anderson that is to be intended of the jurors, and not of the sheriff, 22 E. 4. 2. The array was challenged, because that the sheriff, &c. had married A. daughter of Eliz. sister of the mother of the plaintiff, and that was holden a principal challenge 10 H. 7. 7. 26 E. 3. 21. And afterwards at another term the case being moved, Anderson, Rhodes and Windham were clear of opinion, that it is a principal challenge; but Periam hæsitavit, and put a difference betwixt consanguinity and affinity, for affinity is not a principal challenge, unless it be averred, that the issue, &c. is inheritable to the land. And Anderson put the case in 14 H. 7. 2. where one challenged, because one of the jurors had married the mother of the defendant, it was holden a principal challenge. And 15 H. 7. 9. where the challenge was for that the brother of the wife of the defendant had married the daughter of the sheriff.

Gresham being seised of the manors of Walsingham and Milcham in the county of Norfolk, 12 Eliz. enfeoffed B. and C. to certain uses, and that was with clause of revocation upon the tender of forty shillings, and that after such revocation he might limit new uses; and afterwards the year following, Sir Tho. Gresham made the like conveyance of his lands in the county of Suffolk to the said persons, to the like uses, upon like clause of revocation upon the tender of forty shillings, Sir Thomas tendered to the said feoffees one sum of forty shillings, to revoke the uses raised upon both the feoffments; & afterwards raised divers uses of divers of the said manors holden in capite, and afterwards Sir Thomas died: and afterwards it was resolved by the opinion of the justices, that by that tender the uses were not revoked, but that the revocation was utterly void, for two several sums of forty shillings ought to have been tendered, for they were several indentures and could not be satisfied by one sum. After which by a private Act of Parliament, 23 Eliz. the said revocation was enacted and adjudged to be good and sufficient in law. And now the Lady Gresham was called by process into the Exchequer for a fine due to the Queen for the said alienation, because that now the said uses newly raised were good, and the said manor possessed according to the limitation of them, for now the revocation is good, because done by the said statute which recited the whole special matter, and that for want of a sufficient tender, the revocation was void in law; and also reciting the new uses which were declared for the payment of his debts, and many honorable legacies, & also for the security of those who had purchased underneath the said new uses: for remedy whereof it was enacted, & quod prædict. revocationes bonæ & sufficientes in lege habeantur, reputentur, & recognoscantur. And [90] it was argued by Coke, that upon the matter, no fine is due, for all those new uses took their essence and effect by that Act of Parliament, to which the Queen herself is a party, and the principal agent, and therefore against her own act she shall not claim a fine, &c. And also the alienation without licence is a wrong and trespass; and an Act of Parliament cannot do wrong, and if partition be made betwixt parceners by Act of Parliament, no fine is due to the Queen, which was in ure 23 Eliz. for by Parliament then a partition was made betwixt the co-heirs of the Lord Latimer, and I do not know that any fine hath been demanded for it.

And after long sute betwixt both parties, they submitted themselves to the award of Gilbert Lord Talbot, and of Arthur Lord Gray of Wilton, and Windham and Periam Justices; and before them at Serjeants Inne, the matter was well debated by the council learned on both sides; and as unto Greistock lands, parcel of the lands in question, the case was. that tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee unto the use of himself for his life, the remainder in tail to his eldest son, with divers remainders over, with a proviso, that if any of the entailees do any act to interrupt the course of any entail limited by the said conveyance, that then the use limited to such person should cease, and go to him who is next inheritable; and afterwards tenant in tail dieth, his eldest son to whom the use in tail was first limited entreth, and doth an act against the said proviso, and yet held himself in and made leases, the lessees enter, the lessor dieth seised, his heir being within age, and in ward to the Queen; it was holden by Shutleworth Serjeant, Yelverton, Godfrey, Owen, and Coke, who were of council with the heirs general of the Lord Dacres, that here is a remitter, for by this act against the proviso, the use, and so the possession doth accrue to the enfant son of him, to whom the use in tail was limited by the tenant in tail: then when the tenant in tail after his said feoffment holds himself in, this is a disseisin; for a tenancy by sufferance cannot be after the cesser of an estate of inheritance; but admit that he be but a tenant at sufferance, yet when he makes leases for years, the same is clearly a disseisin, and then upon the whole matter a remitter, and although the enfant taketh by the statute, yet the right of the tail descending to him afterwards by the death of his father doth remit him, as if tenant in tail maketh a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, the remainder in tail to his eldest son inheritable to the first intail, notwithstanding that the eldest son takes his remainder by the statute, and so be in by force thereof, yet when by the death of his father, the right of the entail descends to him, he is remitted.

CXX. HAMINGTON AND RYDERS CASE.

Debt. Devises. Covenant.

Richard Haming. executor of Isabel Haming. brought debt upon an obligation against Ryder, the case was, that Kidwelly was seised, and leased for years to John Hamington husband of Isabel, and afterwards John Hamington being so possessed, by his will devised, that the said Isabel should have the use and occupation of the said land for all the years of the said term as she should live and remain sole, and if she died or married, [93] that then his son should have the residue of the said term not expired: John died, Isabel entred, to whom the said lawr. coveyed by feoffment the said land in fee, and in the indenture of the said conveyance lawr. covenanted that the said land from thence should be clearly exonerated, de omnibus prioribus barganijs, titulis, juribus & omnibus alijs oneribus quibuscunque, Isabel took to husband, the son entreth: if now the covenant be broken was the question. It seemed to Anderson at the first motion that this possibility which was in the son at the time of the feoffment, was not any of the things mentioned in the covenant, scil. former bargain, title, right, or charge; but yet it was conceived by him that the word bargain did extend to it, for every lease for years is a contract, and although that the land at the time of the feoffment was not charged, yet it was not discharged of the former contract: and by Windham, if I be bounden in a statute-staple, and afterwards I bargain and sell my lands, and covenant (ut supra) here the land is not charged, but if after the condition contained in the defeazance be broken, so as the conusee extends, now the covenant is broken; and by him, the word (charge) doth extend to a possibility, and this possibility might be extinct by livery as all agreed; but not translated by grant, or extinguished by release, as it was lately adjudged in the case of one Carter. At another day, it was argued by Walmesley, and he much relied upon the words (clearly exonerated) utterly discharged, or altogether exonerated, and without doubt it is a charge which may happen, and if it may happen, then the land is not clare exonerated: and also former bargains do extend to it, and the term is not extinct by the acceptance of the feoffment aforesaid of Kidwelly, and although, that at the time of the feoffment it was but a possibility, and no certain interest, yet now upon the marriage of Isabel, it is become an actual burthen and charge upon the land, and he cited a case adjudged, 8 Eliz. A man seised of lands grants a rent-charge to begin at a day to come before which day he bargains and sells the lands, and covenants that the said lands are discharged of all charges, in that case when the day when the rent ought to begin is incurred, the covenant is clearly broken, for the lands were not clearly exonerated, &c. At another day the case was moved at the bar. And Anderson openly in Court declared, that he and all his companions were agreed, that the land at the time of the feoffment was not discharged of all former rights, titles and charges; and therefore commanded, that judgment should be entred for the plaintiff.

CXXI. HOWEL AND TRIVANIANS CASE.

Assumpsit.

Howel brought an action upon the case against Trivanian in the Common Pleas, and declared, that he delivered certain goods to the brother of the defendant, who made the defendant his executor, and died, after which the plaintiff came to the defendant, and spake with him concerning the said goods, upon which communication and speech the defendant promised the plaintiff, that if the plaintiff could prove, that the said goods were delivered to the testator, that he would pay the value of them to the plaintiff: and the declaration was in consideration, that the said goods came to the hands of the testator, and also afterwards the goods came to the defendants hands, and upon non assumpsit pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff, and judgment given: and afterwards error was brought in the Kings Bench, and error assigned, because that the plaintiff had not averred in his declaration, that he had proved the delivery of the said goods to the said testator, for the words of the promise are, si probare potuisset: and also it was assign-[94]-ed for error, that here is not any consideration upon which this promise could receive any strength, for the defendant hath not any profit or advantage thereby, scil. by the bailment of the said goods to the brother of the defendant; and also it is a thing before executed, and not depending upon the promise, nor the promise upon it: as the case reported by the Lord Dyer 10 Eliz. 272. The servant is arrested in London, and two men to whom the master is well known, bail the said servant, and after the master promiseth to them for their friend-ship, to save them harmless from all costs and damages, and in an action upon the case brought upon that promise, the plaintiff was barred, for here is not any consideration, for they bailed the servant of their own head without the request of the master, and the matter which is alledged for consideration is executed before the assumpsit, and the promise was not before the enlargment, and the said bailment was not at the instance, or request of the master. And the case of one Hudson was cited, adjudged in the Kings Bench: the defendant in consideration that he was administrator, and natural son of the intestate, and that the goods of his father have come to his hands, promiseth to pay the debt to the plaintiff. And in an action upon the case upon that promise, the defendant pleaded he made no such promise, and it was found that no goods came to the hands of the defendant; And it was holden, that the consideration that he was administrator and son to the testator, was not of any force to maintain the action, and afterwards in the principal case the judgment was affirmed. And it was moved by Coke that judgment should not be given against the executor of his own goods if he had not goods of the testator, for the charge doth not extend beyond the consideration, i.e. that the goods of the testator came to the hands of the defendant. But Wray Justice was of opinion, that judgment shall be of his proper goods, as in case of confession. Kemp secondary, if the action be brought upon assumpsit of the testator, judgment shall be of the goods of the testator; but of the promise of the executor, of his own goods; but the original judgment which is now affirmed was general.

CXXII. SAVEL AND WOODS CASE.

The case was; that a parson did libel in the Spiritual Court against a parishoner for tythes of such lands within his parish, the defendant came into the King's Bench and surmised, and that he and all those whose estate he hath in the lands out of which the tythes are demanded, have used to pay every year five shillings to the parish clark of the same parish for all the tythes out of the same place; and it was argued by Coke, that that could not be, for a parish clark is not a person corporate, nor hath succession: but if he had prescribed, that they had used to pay it to the parish clark to the use of the parson, it had been good; also he ought to shew, that the parson ought of right to find the parish clark, &c. And he cited the case of Bushie the parson of Pancras, who libelled in the Spiritual Court for tithes, the defendant to have a prohibition did prescribe, that he, and all those, &c. had time out of mind, &c. used to pay to the vicar, &c. and at last a consultation was awarded because it was triable in the Ecclesiastical Court, for both parties as well vicar as parson are spiritual persons, and the modus decimandi is not in question, but cui solvend. And at another day, it was agreed by the justices, that of common right, the parson is not tied to find the parish clark, for then he should be said the parsons clark and not the parish clark: but if the parson be tied to find such a clark, and such a sum hath been used to be paid to the parish clark in discharge of the parson, the same had been a good prescription, and so by way of composition; and by Clench [95] tythes are to be paid to spiritual persons, but a parish-clark is a lay-person: and afterwards the Court granted a consultation.

CXXIII. HIGHAM AND REYNOLDS CASE.

In an action of trespass the plaintiff declared, that the defendant 1 Maii 28 Eliz. cut down six posts of the house of the plaintiff at D. The defendant doth justifie, because that the free-hold of the house, 10 Aprilis 27 Eliz. was to I. S. and that he by his commandment the same day and year did the trespass, &c. upon which the plaintiff did demur in law, because the defendant did not traverse, without that that he was guilty before or after. And the opinion of Wray was, that the traverse taken was well enough, because the free-hold shall be intended to continue, &c. Vide 7 H. 7. 3. But all the other three justices were of a contrary opinion to Wray: but they all agreed, that where the defendant doth justifie, by reason of his free-hold at the day supposed in the declaration, there the traverse (before) is good enough; and afterwards judgment was given against the defendant.

CXXIV. KNIGHT AND FOOTMANS CASE.

Surrender of Copy-hold Land.

In trespass by Knight against Footman, the case upon the pleading was, that one Margaret had issue two sons, Richard and Thomas, and surrendred to the use of Richard for life, and afterwards to the use of Thomas in fee; they both, Thomas being within age, surrender to the use of one Robert ap John in fee, who is admitted; Richard dieth; Thomas dieth, having issue A. who is also admitted, and enters into the land, and if his entry be lawful, or that he be put to his plaint in the nature of a dum fuit infra ætatem was the question. And Wray was clear of opinion that it was: and if a man seised of copy-hold land in the right of his wife, or tenant in tail of a copy-hold doth surrender to the use of another in fee, the same doth not make any discontinuance, but that the issue in tail and the wife may respectively enter; and so was it holden in the sergeants case, when Audley, who afterwards was made Chancellor of England, was made sergeant; and afterwards it was adjudged, that the entry of the enfant was lawful.

CXXV. SIR WOLLASTON DIXIES CASE.

Information upon the Statute of 13. Eliz. of Usury.

An information was in the Exchequer against Sir Wollaston Dixie, upon the Statute of Usury, & upon not guilty pleaded, the informer gave in evidence an usurious contract upon a bargain of wares: the opinion of the Court was, that the information being exhibited for the loan of money, that the evidence was not pursuing nor leading to the issue. And yet the jury against the opinion of the Court upon that evidence found the defendant guilty. And it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the evidence did not maintain the information, nor prove the issue, ex parte querentis, and it was said, there are three things within the statute, i. three words, i. bargain, loan, and cheivizance, and these three are several things, [96] and therefore, if the information be conceived upon loan, and the informer giveth in evidence a corrupt bargain for cloth, as it is in this case, the same doth not maintain the information; so if the information be granted upon usurious contract by way of mortgage, and giveth in evidence an usurious loan, ut supra. But if the information had been conceived generally, upon an usurious agreement, and giveth in evidence a loan, the same is good enough, for every loan is an agreement.

Manwood, there cannot be any loan without bargain, nor any forbearing without bargain, for he contracts or bargains to do it, viz. to lend, or forbear: bargain of forbearing is where the first day of payment is not kept and the parties have agreed for a further day for payment, &c. And it appeareth in this case, that it was a bargain to forbear a sum of money which should have been paid before; and the information here is upon a bargain by way of loan, where was a bargain for forbearing. Fuller, this word (bargain) in the statute cannot be intended a bargain for wares or such things, and so distinct from the other two things, &c. If in information upon loan, an usurious contract had been given in evidence, that would not maintain the information: and it was moved in this case, if the time of the loan or forbearance of the money shall be accounted according to eight & twenty days to every month, or by the months in the kalender, viz. January, February, &c. And it seemed to some according to the days, as in case of the statute of 23 Eliz. of recusants; and others conceived contrary in both cases. And Fuller said, that in the case of policy of assurance made to warrant a ship, one was bound to warrant a ship for twelve months; & the truth was, she did not perish within the time of the twelve months, being accounted according to eight and twenty days, but being accounted by the kalender, as January, Feb. &c. it perisheth, &c. and it was said and holden, that he had not forfeited his bond. Gent Baron. If I lend one a hundred pounds without any contract for interest, and afterwards at the end of year he gives me twenty pounds for the loan thereof, the same is within the statute, for my acceptance makes the offence without any bargain or contract. And by Clarke Baron, the place where the defendant accepted excessive interest ought to be shewed in the information, but not the place where the contract for the loan or forbearance was made, for the same is not needful. See the case betwixt Stradling and Morgan, Plowd. 200. for the setting down of the place in the declaration, where the extortion was committed: the information here is by way of corrupt bargain and loan. The defendant took at Dertford such a sum, where the taking is layed, apud Dertford, but no place of the corrupt bargain or of the loan. And by Gent. If I lend to Beesie for a year, and afterwards he takes further forbearance of another year beyond the rate, the same is within the statute: but in all cases, the place where the corrupt bargain was made ought to be certainly alledged: Manwood Baron, the information is not good for the incertainty of the place, where the corrupt bargain was made; and although there are many presidents on the informes part, it is not to purpose, for they were admitted without exception, and then they passed sub silentio, and so of no force. There are three things, or rather degrees of offences within the statute. In usury, within the statute, there ought to be corrupt loan, cheivisance, or shift,

1. corruption, 2. he ought to take more than eight pounds for one hundred pounds, 3. it ought to be for lending or forbearing. There was a case in this Court in the time of this Queen, that the defendant had taken more than ten pounds in the hundred pounds, but in the information no corruption in the bargain was alledged; and therefore judgment was given against the informer: but in the case at bar corruption is set forth in facto, and therefore as to that the information is good enough: as unto the forbearing & giving of days of payment the same is alledged in the infor-[97]-mation, but not according to the statute, for the statute is in the disjunctive, but the information is in the copulative; here in our case the issue is not guilty, under which general issue all the points of the statute are included and ought to be tried, as unto the corruption the same is not sufficiently laid, for no place is assigned where the corrupt bargain was made, ergo no visne for it to be tried, ergo, no trial can be, ergo, no issue for it, ergo, this point of the statute doth not come in issue, nor can it be tried upon the general issue, not guilty. Also he held, that all the offence ought to be within the year, for if one make a corrupt bargain for this year, and ten years after he takes excessive usury, the same is not within the statute to inform upon it. And in truth there is no such offence without corrupt bargain, so as he conceived, that the word (lending) is a strange word, but where the statute is forbearing or giving day of payment, & in the information it is giving and forbearing in the copulative, that is good enough, for the one word enforceth the other, and is not double. Also the information hath not shewed whose money it is, and therefore it is not good: and afterwards judgment was given against the informer; and a writ of error thereupon brought in the Exchequer Chamber. And it was argued by Popham Attorney-General, that judgment ought to have been given for the Queen and the informer, for the shewing of the place where the corrupt bargain was made needs not to be alledged in the information, for the offence punishable by the statute is the receipt of excessive usury, and not the contract: and it was the case of one Bird, 20 Eliz. where the plaintiff shewed the place of the receipt, and not of the contract, and yet had judgment for the Queen, without any exception to it before judgment, or error after, for the contract is but inducement to the receipt, and it shall be tried where the taking was; therefore it is not necessary to shew the place of the bargain; and it was adjorned.

CXXVI. SALIARD AND EVERATS CASE.

Thomas Saliard and Hen. Everat being recusants convicted, and not having paid twenty pounds for every month, a commission issued forth to enquire of their goods and lands in the county of Suffolk, to levy thereon the debt and penalty due to the Queen. And now the commission being returned, the parties appeared, and by their council shewed, that some of their lands returned in the commission are copy-hold, and prayed as to those, manus Dominæ Reginæ amoveantur, and that upon the statute of 29 Eliz. cap. 5. concerning recusants: viz. that upon default of payment of penalties, &c. which process issued out of the Exchequer to take and seize all the goods, and two parts as well of all the lands, tenements and hereditaments, leases and farms of such offender, as of all other the lands, tenements, and hereditaments, liable to such seisure, or to the penalties aforesaid, by the true meaning of this Act, leaving the third part, &c. And Popham Attorney General moved, if a recusant hath more than a third part of his lands in copyhold land, if this copy-hold as to the surplusage shall be liable to the penalty. Manwood Chief Baron conceived, that the copy-hold is liable in this case by the statute, although not directly by express words, yet within the intent of it, and that by reason of these words all other the lands, &c. liable to such seisure, &c. Walmes. Serjeant, copy-hold is not liable to a statute merchant or staple; also if the Queen hath the copy-hold, how shall the lord have the services which the Queen cannot do? Also a copy-hold is not an hereditament within this statute, which extends only to hereditaments at the common law, and not by custom: also in Acts of Parliaments which are enacted [98] for forfeiture of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, by those words they shall not forfeit copy-holds. Clark Baron, this statute was made to restrain recusants from taking the benefit of their livings, and copy-holds are their livings as well as free-holds, and by this statute, the Queen shall not have every estate in the copy-hold land, but only the taking of the profits; but the scope of the statute was to impair the livings of recusants, and that by driving of them for want of maintenance to repair to the church.

Walmesley, If the statute had given to the Queen to seise two parts of their livings, then the statute had extended to copy-holds. Manwood, when a statute is made to transfer an estate by name of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, the copy-hold is not within such statute; but if the lords signiory, his customs and services, are not to be impeached, or taken away by such statute, then it is otherwise; for such statute doth not make another tenant to the lord; and by him copy-holder shall pay subsidies, and he shall be assessed according to the value of his copy-hold as well as of his freehold, and in this case, the Queen is to have the profits of the lands only, but no estate. At another day, the case was argued for the recusants by Snag Serjeant, and he said, that these words lands, tenements, and hereditaments are to be construed, which are such at the common law, not by custom: if I give to one all my lands, tenements, and hereditaments in D. my copy-holds do not pass, and statutes which are made to take away possessions and hereditaments out of persons ought to be strictly taken, and not by equity: the statute of 13 Eliz. of bankrupts enacts, that the commissioners may sell the lands and tenements of the bankrupts; if the statute had not made a further provision, the commissioners could not sell copy-hold lands, but there are express words in the statute for that purpose, i.e. as well copy as fee: also the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 4. of auditors and receivers of the Queen doth not extend to copy-holds: and it should be a great prejudice to the lords of such copy-holds, that the Queen should have the land. Popham, the intention of the law sometimes causes a liberal construction of a statute in the letter of it, somtimes a strict and precise exposition, and here it appeareth, that the intention of the statute was, that the Queen should have all the goods of the offender, and two parts of the lands, &c. leases and farms, and the recusant but the third part of all his lands only; and therefore the recusant is not to have any other thing but only that which is allotted to him by the statute, and that is the third part, which is all the maintenance which the law allows him; and then if copy-holds be not within this statute, a recusant who hath great possessions in copy-holds, and hath no free-hold should be dispunishable, and hath his full maintenance, against the meaning of the statute: and he said that many things are within the meaning of a statute, which are not within the words, as bonds, obligations and specialties made to recusants, shall pass to the Queen by this statute by force of the word, goods, according to the meaning of the statute, and all personal things are within the statute, &c. profits of the lands, advowsons, and the like; and the very scope of the statute was to take away from recusants all personal things whatsoever, and two parts of real things, as leases, farms, lands, tenements, &c. with the intent that with the superfluity of their goods and possessions, she should not maintain Jesuits, and seminary priests, people more dangerous than the recusants: and by him, lands in ancient demesne are liable to the penalties by the statute; although not by express words; so if a recusant hath lands extended by him upon a statute acknowledged unto him, that interest is not properly a lease, or farm, yet it is land within this statute liable, &c. And if I be tenant by elegit, or sta-[99]-tute, &c. of lands in D. not having other lands in the said town, and I grant all my lands in D. my interest ut supra, shall pass; contrary, if I have other lands there: and I grant, that if I have copy-hold lands in D. and none other; and I grant all my lands in D. copy-hold land shall not pass by such assurance; because that copy-hold cannot pass but by surrender; if I put out a copy-holder out of his lands, the same is a disseisin to the lord of whom the copy-hold is holden: and if I levy a fine of such lands and five years pass, not only the lord is bounden as to his free-hold and inheritance, but also the copy-holder for his possession, for the intent of the statute of 4 H. 7. was to take away controversies, & litibus finem imponere, and contention may be as well for copy-hold as for land at the common law. One hath a lease for years to begin at a day to come, he who hath the free-hold thereof is disseised, the disseisor levieth a fine, five years pass, he who hath the free-hold is bound by it, but not he who hath the interest for years in futuro, as it hath been lately adjudged; but he said, that if that point were to be handled again, the law would be taken to the contrary; but it is clear that a lease in possession shall be bound by such fine: and as unto any prejudice to the lord it is clear, that notwithstanding that the Queen hath the copy-hold land, yet the lord shall have the rent during the possession of the Queen, which is the most valuable part of the services of the copy-holder. The statute of 1 E. 6. of chantries, doth extend to copy-hold, by the general words, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, for otherwise the proviso which excepts copy-holds were not necessary: and in our statute, the words are lands, tenements, and hereditaments, which are forceable words, which proves that our exposition to extend it to copy-holds is proper and agreeable to the statute, and this in the first branch of it; for copy-hold is some land, tenement, or hereditament; the clause in this branch of the statute is, and also all other the lands, tenements, and hereditaments liable to such seisure, &c. the same is to be meant of such lands which are bound with clause of revocation, of which is spoken in the former part of this statute. He who departs out of the realm against the statute of 5 R. 2. shall forfeit his goods, and thereby his debts also: the King grants omnia bona & catalla felonum, debts of felons shall pass; ergo copy-holds also, by the name of lands, tenements, &c. as well as debts by the name of goods. In our case, the meaning of the statute was, that the Queen should have two parts of the whole estate of the recusant, be it copy-hold, ancient demesne, &c. If upon the statute of bankrupts, a copy-hold estate be sold to the King, the King shall pay the rent, but shall not do any of the services, and in so much the lord shall be prejudiced; patiatur etiam & hic, rather than recusants should not be punished; and it is not a strange thing in law, that the lord of a copy-holder should be prejudiced for the offence of his tenant; as where a copyholder is outlawed, the King shall have the profits of his copy-hold lands, and the lord hath not any remedy for his rent.

The parson shewed that the defendant, by fraud and covin sowed every tenth land which belonged to the parson, ut supra, very ill and with small quantity of corn, and did not dunge or manure it as he did the other nine parts, by means where-[100]-of, whereas the other nine every of them yielded eight cocks, the tenth yielded but three cocks, and for this matter the parson libelled in the Spiritual Court and confessed the custome, but for abusing of the custom prayed to have his tythes in kind; the defendant prayed a prohibition, and the parson afterwards a consultation: and the opinion of Wray Justice was that the custom was against common reason, and so void, but if it be a good custom, then the parson shall have the action upon the case.

For which the defendant shewed, that there were thirty years incurred betwixt the death of the father, and the making of the lease, so that here is supina negligentia, which shall disable his person to make any demise, quod fuit concessum. In answer of which it was said, that the lessor at the time of the death of his ancestor was but of the age of two years, and that after his full age no court had been holden for a long time, and that at the first court that was holden, which was of late, he prayed to be admitted, but the steward refused to admit him; and the same was holden a good excuse of his negligence: and it was holden, that the plaintiff ought not to shew that the lease is warranted by the custom, but that shall come of the other side; and so it had been lately adjudged, which Wray granted: and by him, if a copy-holder surrender in extremis to the use of himself for life, &c. If he shall be well again, the surrender shall stand, for he hath reserved an estate to himself. It was further holden in this case, that if a copy-holder dieth, his heir within age, he is not bound to come at any court during his non-age to pray admittance, or to tender his fine: also if the death of the ancestor be not presented, nor proclamations made, he is not at any mischief, although he be of full age.

CXXXIII. ALLEN AND PALMERS CASE.

The case was, a copy-holder did surrender his lands to the use of a stranger for life, and afterwards to the use of the right heirs of the copy-holder, who afterwards surrendred his reversion to the use of a stranger in fee, & died, and the tenant for life died, and the right heir of Palmer the copy-holder entred; and by Cook nothing remained in the copy-holder upon the said surrender, but the fee is reserved to his right heirs, for if he had not made any such second surrender, his heir should be in, not by descent but by purchase. And the common difference is, where a surrender is to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to another in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of him who surrendreth, there his heirs shall have it by descent; contrary where the surrender hath not an estate for life or in tail limited to him, for [102] there his heir shall enter as a purchasor, as if such use had been limited to the right heirs of a stranger And by him, if a copy-holder surrenders to the use of his right heirs, the land shall remain in the lord until the death of the copy-holder, for then his heir is known &c. Assumpsit. Consideration.

The case was, that the defendant had leased lands to the plaintiff rendring rent for certain years, and after some years of the term expired, the lessor in consideration that the lessee had occupied the land, and had paid his rent, promised the plaintiff to save him harmless against all persons, for the occupation of the land past, and also to come: and afterwards H. distrained the cattle of the plaintiff being upon the lands, upon which he brought his action. Golding, Here is not a sufficient consideration, for the payment of the rent is not any consideration, for the lessee hath the ocupation of the land for it, and hath the profits thereof; and also the consideration is past. Cook, The occupation, which is the consideration, continues, therefore it is a good assumpsit, as 4 E. 3. A gift in frank-marriage after the espousals, and yet the marriage is past, but the blood continues, so here; and here the payment of the rent is executory every year; and if the lessee be saved for his occupation, he will pay his rent the better. Godfrey, If a man marrieth my daughter against my will, and afterwards in consideration of that marriage I promise him one hundred pounds, the same is no good consideration, which Clench Justice denied. And afterwards the plaintiff had judgment to recover his damages.

Extinguishment of Copy-hold by Release.

The Earl of Bedford lord of the manor of B. sold the free-hold interest of a copy-holder of inheritance unto another, so as it is now no part, but divided from the manor, and afterwards the copy-holder doth release to the purchasor. It was holden by the Court, that by this release the copy-hold interest is extinguished, and utterly gone; but it was holden, that if a copy-holder be ousted, so as the lord of the manor is disseised, and the copy-holder releaseth to the disseisor nihil operatur.

CXXXVI. DOCTON AND PRIESTS CASE.

In trespass for breaking of his close, it was found by special verdict, that two were tenants in common of a house, and of a close adjoyning to the house, and they being in the house make partition without deed of the house and the close, see 3 E. 4. 9. 10. Partition without deed upon the land is good enough: vide 3 H. 4. 1. And it seems by 3 E. 4. partition made upon the land amounts to a livery: vide 2 Eliz. Dyer 179. Partition by word out of the county void, 19 H. 6. 25. Betwixt tenants in common not good without deed; 47 E. 3. 22. being upon the land it is good without deed: two joynt-tenants make partition by word, & make partition in another county, the same is no partition, for as to that matter the common law is not altered by the statute, but as to compel such persons to make partition. Wray Justice conceived, that the partition here being without deed was not good, although made upon the lands: vide 18 Eliz. Dyer 35. And at another day Wray said, that partition by tenants in common without deed wheresoever it is made is good; but in this case it appears, that the parties who made the partition were in the house (for they were tenants in common of the messuage and a close adjoyning to it) and made partition, that one should have the house, and the other the close, so as they were not upon the close when they made the partition, and then it was void for the close, and if for the close then also for the house. And judgment was given accordingly.

CXXXVII. COOK AND SONGATS CASE.

In an action upon the case by Cook against Songat, the plaintiff declared, quod cum quædam lis and controversie had been moved betwixt the plaintiff lord of the manor, &c. and the defendant claiming certain lands parcel of the said manor, to hold it by copy; and whereas both parties submitted themselves to the judgment and arbitrament of I. S. counsellor at law, concerning the said land, and the title of the defendant to it: the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff promised to the defendant, that if the said I. S. should adjudge the said copy to be good and sufficient for the title of the defendant, that then he would suffer the defendant to enjoy the said land accordingly without molestation: the defendant reciprocally promised the plaintiff, that if the said I. S. should adjudge the said copy not sufficient to maintain the title of the defendant, that then he would deliver and surrender the possession of the said land to the plaintiff without any sute: and shewed further, that I. S. had awarded the said copy utterly insufficient, &c. yet the defendant did continue the possession of the land, &c. And by Godfrey, here is not any consideration: but by Gawdy, the same is a good and sufficient consideration, because it is to avoid variances and sutes: and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXXXVIII. PAWLET AND LAWRENCES CASE.

George Pawlet brought an action of trespass against one Lawrence, parson of the church of D. for the taking of certain carts loaded with corn, which he claimed as a portion of tythes in the right of his wife; and supposed the trespass to be done the seven and twentieth of August, 29 Eliz. & upon not guilty it was given in evidence on the defendants part, that the plaintiff delivered to him a licence to be married, bearing date the eight and twentieth of August, 29 Eliz. and that he married the plaintiff and his said wife the same day, so as the trespass was before his title to the tythes: and it was holden by the whole Court, that that matter did abate his bill: but it was holden, that if the trespass had been assigned to be committed one day after that, it had been good; but now it is apparent to the Court, that at the time of the trespass assigned by himself, the plaintiff had not title, and therefore the action cannot be maintained upon that evidence, for which cause the plaintiff was non-suit.

CXXXIX. SIR JOHN BRAUNCHES CASE.

Forfeiture. Copy-holder.

In the case of Sir John Braunch, it was said by Cook, that if a copyholder be dwelling in a town long distant from the manor, a general warning within the manor is not sufficient, but there ought to be to the person notice of the day when the Court shall be holden, &c. For his not coming in such case cannot be called a wilful refusal: so if a man be so weak and feeble that he cannot travel without danger, so if he hath a great office, &c. these are good causes of excuse: it was also holden, that if a copy-holder makes default at the Court, and be there amerced, although that the amercement be not estreated, or levyed, yet it is a dispensation of the forfeiture. Gawdy, Justice, if the copyholder be impotent, the lord may set a fine upon him, and if he will not pay the fine, then it is reason that he shall forfeit his land. Egerton sollicitor, warning to the person of the copy-holder is not necessary, for then, if the lord of a manor hath one copy-holder of it dwelling in Cornwal, and another in York, &c. the lord ought to send his bayliff to give notice of the Court to them, which should be very inconvenient, and by him continual default at the Court doth amount to a wilful refusal. And by the whole Court, general warning within the parish is sufficient, for if the tenant himself be not resient upon his copy-hold, but elsewhere, his farmer may send to him notice of the Court: and it was further given in evidence, that Sir John Braunch had by his letter of attorney appointed the son of his farmer his attorney to do the services for him due for his said copy-hold: and it was holden that such a person so appointed, might essoin Sir John, but not do the services for him, for none can do the same but the tenant himself.

CXLI. ATKINSON AND ROLFES CASE.

In an action upon the case by Atkinson against Rolfe, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant in consideration of the love which he bore unto A. his father, did promise that if the plaintiff would procure a discharge of a debt of I. S. which his said father owed to the said I. S. that he would save the plaintiff harmless against the said I. S. And declared further, that he had discharged the father of the defendant from the said debt, and is become bounden to the said I. S. in an obligation for the payment of the said debt, upon which obligation the said I. S. hath sued the plaintiff, and hath recovered, and had execution accordingly, and so hath not been saved harmless, &c. It was objected, that the declaration was not good, because the plaintiff hath not shewed in his declaration, that he had given notice to the defendant of the said obligation, or of the suit brought against him; but that was not allowed, but the declaration was holden to be good, notwithstanding the exception. Shuttleworth, if I be bound to make to you such an assurance as I. It was also holden, that where an original is discontinued, the defendant shall not have costs; but if the plaintiff be non-suit the defendant shall have costs, by 32 H. 8. 15. But after a discontinuance in a latitat, the defendant shall have costs by the statute of 8 Eliz. cap. 2. CXLIII. JEROM AGAINST NEAL AND CLAVE.

Assault and Battery. Imprisonment not Good.

George Jerom, and Avice his wife brought an action of trespass of assault and wounding of the wife, and the action was laid in Midd. and brought against Neal and Cleave, who pleaded that Salisb. is an antient city, and that within the same, there is this custom, that if any make an [106] affray and assault any officer of the said city, or any other person, if he upon whom such assault is made, complain unto the mayor of the said city, that the mayor for the time being may send for him who made the affray as a justice of peace, to make him to answer to it, and shewed further, that the said Jerom made an affray within the said city; of which complaint being made to the mayor, the said mayor sent the defendants being constables to bring the said Jerom to him, by virtue whereof, they went to the house of the plaintiff, and signified to him the commandment of the said mayor, and would have brought the plaintiff to him, and the wife of the plaintiff did assault them, and they moliter put their hands upon the said wife, which is the same assault, battery, and wounding, &c. upon which it was demurred in law. Coke for the plaintiff; this custom is not good or reasonable: see Magna Charta 29. Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur, &c. nisi per legale judicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ, therefore shall not be taken or imprisoned upon a bare suggestion, and see 24 E. 3. Br. Com. 3. where a commission issued to take all which were suspected notoriously for felonies and trespasses, although they are not endicted, and the same was holden against the law, and therefore it was revoked, and see the statute of 5 E. 4. 9. 25 E. 4. 13. 28 E. 4. 13. 28 E. 3. 3. 37 E. 3. 18 & 42 E. 3. 3. 2. Admit, that the mayor was justice of peace, yet he cannot determin any thing out of the sessions. 4. It is not shewed that they of Salisbury have a corporation, so as they might be enabled to prescribe. 6. The wounding is not answered, for moliter injicere manus cannot be taken for a wounding; it may well answer the battery, &c. Fleetwood Recorder of London, if the statute of Magna Charta should be observed, no felon is duly handled at Newgate, and here we have not pleaded by way of prescription, but of usage; consuetudo and usage are all one. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiffs, for the plea in bar was holden to be naught, because the wounding is not answered; and the custom is too general, and also for the 4th exception.

And it was said, that this measuring whereof, &c. was in the body of the county; and note, that the said Julius Cæsar being Judge of the Admiralty had put in this bill, ex officio judicis, upon which it was said by Wray Justice, that it was hard that he should be both plaint. and judge, and that his jurisdiction should be tryed before himself, and afterwards, it was moved by Egerton solicitor, who said he had spoken with the Lord Admiral, who told him that the Mayor of Lond. used to take a fine for measurage, and had made an office of it, and that he conceived, the same is extortion, and being made upon the water, he conceived he is punishable in this court, for by the same reason the mayor might take a fine for the measuring of corn, clothes, &c. The town of Green in Sussex was amerced for the escape of a felon, and the said amercement was grounded upon an inquisition taken before the coroner, by whom the escape was found; and it was moved for the town, that here is not any such escape found, for which the town ought to be amerced, for it is found, that he who escaped, 10 die Januarij, 30 Eliz. circa horam quartam post meridiem, with a pitchfork mortally struck one A. which A. of the said stroak died at eight in the evening of the same day, and that then the other escaped, for which escape being made in the night, the town by the law ought to be amerced, for it is not felony, until the party dieth, which see 11 H. 4. and Coles case, Pasch. 23 Eliz. 401. And therefore the town nor any other was chargeable with the offendor before that the party was dead. CXLVI. JEROM AND KNIGHTS CASE.

Conspiracy. Upon an Acquital of Grace, no Conspiracy lieth.

Joan Jerom brought an action upon the case in the nature of conspiracy against one Knight, and declared that the said Knight had maliciously caused the plaintiff to be endicted of felony, and to be arrained upon it, and that she was legitimo modo acquietat. &c. And the case was, that the defendant came into the Court where the sessions was holden, and complained of the plaintiff for the said felony, for which the justices there comanded her to cause an indictment to be drawn, &c. Coke upon the books of 27 H. 6. 12. 35 H. 6. 14. 27. H. 8. 2. Fitz. 115. it appeareth, that if one come voluntarily into the Court and discover felonies, and if it be true which he saith, or if he come in Court and draw an indictment by the command of the justices, or if he be bound by order of law, to cause the party to be indicted, or to give in evidence, although he do it falsely, yet he shall not be punished for the same in conspiracy, or in an action upon the case; but if he come gratis with malice in him before, and maliciously and falsely cause the party to be indicted, so as falsity and malice are the ground of it, &c. it is otherwise. Gawdy Justice; how shall it be tried, if he doth it with malice or not? Coke, it may be enquired of, for malice makes the difference betwixt murder and manslaughter; and in such case it is to be enquired; and here he came to do the same without process or cohersion in law. But if he will safely do such office, his direct course is to come to a justice of peace, and to shew to him, that his goods are stolen, and that he doth suspect such a one, and then upon examination he shall be bound to come and give in evidence against the party, &c. and in such case although that his evidence be false, yet he is not punishable: at another day, it was said by Coke in the same case, ut supra, if a man be bound to give evidence against any person, although he give false evidence, no action lieth: also if one come into Court gratis, and discloseth a felony, and gives evidence, if no malice proceed against the party, it is not punishable; and here fore-thought malice is alledged, and put in the declaration, to which the defendant hath pleaded not guilty; and now he is found guilty. See the statute of Westminster, [108] 2. cap. 12. Si inveniatur per inquisitionem quod aliquis sit abettator per malitiam, &c. Wray Justice; it should be hard to charge one with this action, where he hath his goods stolen from him, and therefore causeth an indictment to be drawn against one who he suspects of it, who shall be found guilty, who should be punished for it; for many malefactors notwithstanding that the evidence against them be full and pregnant, in favour of life are acquitted, whereas by law they ought to be hanged; and it is not reason, that upon such an acquital of grace and mercy, he should have this action; if such person had used any words of malice before the sessions, an action upon the case would have lain: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff, Trin. 27 Eliz. 750. Ratford, and afterwards a writ of error was brought, Trin. 29 Eliz. Rot. 669. In the original action the writ and declaration were that the defendant, malitiose intendens querentem in nomine, vita, fama, & bonis defraudare quandam billam indictamenti scribi fecit, & eam exhibuit to the grand enquest, & ibidem false deposuit omnia in ea contenta esse vera, which by Coke is full matter of conspiracy; for the drawing of an indictment is not the office of a witness, but if it were by the commandment of the Court, or of one justice of peace, it should be otherwise, for there he goes by course of justice, 21 E. 3. 17. If one conspire with another, and afterwards he procures himself to be one of the indictors, his oath shall not excuse his malice before. Gawdy, if the party had taken upon him to proceed against the party upon any good presumtions, he might have pleaded it, as to say, he found the party in the house suspiciously, &c. but because he doth not plead any such matter, but generally not guilty, and the writ and declaration stand not answered specially, nor controlled with the verdict, there is no reason but that the judgment should be affirmed; and afterwards, the judgment was affirmed, and it was said by Wray, that here the words in the writ and declaration are all one as the words in a writ of conspiracy, and the defendant hath not shewed any special matter to enduce him to the proceedings.

CXLVII. Ferrers Case.

Prescription.

Humphry Ferrers brought an action upon the case, and declared, that he is seised of an ancient messuage in the town of Tamworth, and that he and all his ancestors, whose heir he is, owners of the messuage, &c. have used time out of mind, &c. to erect herdells, in aperta platea of Tamworth juxta messuagium prædict. every market day, to make penns there for sheep, and that he, &c. have used for such penning of sheep, there to take divers sums of mony of such persons who would penn their sheep there; and further declared, that the defendant had broken and pulled down his herdels, per quod proficuum suum inde amisit; and upon this declaration, Godfrey did demur in law, 1. The plaintiff hath not shewed in his declaration, specially where he hath used to erect his herdels, but generally in aperta platea, without shewing in his own land, or in the land of another; if in the land of another, it is no good title, for although that those who fish in the sea may prescribe to set stakes on the land adjoyning to the sea, to hang their nets to dry after they have done fishing, and that is through the whole county of Kent 8 E. 4. for their prescription is for the common wealth, but the same is not so here, but only for a private gain; also no prescription is good, but where some profit comes to him who prescribes for it, which see in the case of the Abbot of Buckfast, 21 E. 4. 4. 21 H. 7. 20. Also the declaration is, that the plaintiff hath taken diversas denariorum summas, and see the Prior of Dunstables case, [109] 11 H. 6. 19. 19. R. 2. Action sur le case 51. But the certainty of the sums do not appear in this declaration, so as the reasonableness of the custom might be known: also it appeareth here upon the declaration, that trespass, vi & armis, should lye and be brought, for the declaration is, that the defendant did break and pull down the herdels which cannot be without express force, as 42 E. 3. 24. Trespass upon the case against a miller, and declared that the plaintiff used to grind at the said mill without toll, and that he sent his corn to the said mill to be ground, and there the defendant came and took two bushels of his said corn; and the writ was upon the prescription to grind sine multura, and that the defendant, prædict. querent. sine multura molire impedivit, and by award of the Court the plaintiff took nothing by his writ, for he hath declared that the defendant hath taken toll, and therefore he ought to have a general writ of trespass. Beaumont, to the contrary; a market is as well for the common wealth as a fishing: also he is at the costs for providing of herdels, and the erecting of them, so (as he hath declared) he hath taken divers sums of mony for it; and as to any sum not certain, it is well enough, for peradventure sometimes he hath taken a penny, sometimes two pence, as the parties could agree: and as to the exception of vi & armis, the same is not material, for the plaintiff doth not rely upon the pulling down of the herdels only, but upon the loss of the money also, which he should have had if the defendant had not broken his herdels: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXLVIII. Beverly and Bawdes Case.

Error. Tryal by Inquest of what County or Place.

Beverly brought a writ of error to reverse an out-lawry pronounced against him at the suit of one Bawdes, and shewed, that he was out-lawed by the name John Beverly of Humby in the county of Lincoln gent. And that within the said county there are two Humbyes, scil. Magna Humby, & Parva Humby, and none without addition; to which it was said, of the other side, that the truth is that there are two such towns, and that Humby Magna is known as well by the name of Humby only, as taken for the name of Humby Magna: and upon that they are at issue: and it was moved, if the inquest to try this issue shall come de corpore comitatus, or from Humby Magna. And by Cooke, it shall be tryed by an inquest of Humby Magna; and he confessed, that if the issue had been, no such town; then the inquest ought to be of the body of the county, but here is another issue to be tryed, 22 E. 4. 4. In trespass done in Fulborn and Hinton in the County of C. the defendant said, that there is no such town nor hamlet of Hinton within the same county. Judgment of the writ. See there by Briggs the tryal shall be, de corpore comitatus. See 14 H. 6. 8. Over-dale and Nether-dale, and none without addition, and so at issue tryed by them of the body of the county, 35 H. 6. 12. And by him, wheresoever an issue may be tryed by an inquest out of a special visne, there it shall never be tryed by the body of the county. As the case before, 22 E. 4. Trespass in two towns

A. and B. the def. as to A. pleads, there was no such town, and as to B. pleaded another plea. Now the whole inquest shall come out of B. for the inquest in one town may try any thing within the same county, which see Fitz. Visne, 27. 22 E. 4. 4. And here in our case the issue is, if Humby Magna be as well known by the name of Humby only, as by the name of Humby Magna. And therefore the same may well be tryed by inquest out of the town of Humby Magna. But by Wray Justice, this issue doth amount to no such town, for the perclose of the plea is, and no Humby without addition; and the book cited out of 22 E. 4. is not ruled, but [110] is only the opinion of Brian. And afterwards it was awarded, that the tryal was well. Another matter was objected, because it is not shewed in the writ of error betwixt what parties the first writ did depend, for otherwise how can the plaintiff in the writ of error have a scire facias ad audiendum errores, if none be named in the writ of error against whom it shall issue. And Godfrey affirmed, that upon search of presidents it was both ways, so as it is at the pleasure of the plaintiff to do it or not. And Kemp secondary shewed divers presidents to that purpose: and afterwards the out-lawry was reversed.

CXLIX. Cibel and Hills Case.

Debt for a Nomine Penæ. Roll. Tit. Extinguishment. Suspension of Rent by entry upon part of the Land.

A lease was made of a certain house and land rendring rent, and another sum, nomine pœnæ; and for the nominæ pœnæ the lessor brought an action of debt: the lessee pleaded, that the lessor had entred into parcel of the land demised, upon which they were at issue, and found for the plaintiff: and now the lessor brought debt for the rent reserved upon the same lease: to which the defendant pleaded, ut supra, scil. an entry into parcel of the land demised: and issue was joyned upon it; and one of the jury was challenged, and withdrawn, because he was one of the former jury: and the issue now was, whether the said Cibel the lessor, expulit & amovit & adhuc extra tenet, the said Hills. And to prove the same, it was given in evidence on the defendants part, that upon the land demised there was a brick-kill, and thereupon a little small cottage, and that the lessor entred, and went to the said cottage and took some of the bricks and untiled the said cottage: but of the other side it was said, that the lessor had reserved to himself the bricks and tiles aforesaid, which in truth were there ready made at the time of the lease made, and that he did not untile the brick-kill house, but that it fell by tempest, and so the plaintiff did nothing but came upon the land to carry away his own goods: and also he had used the said bricks and tiles upon the reparation of the house. And as to the extra tenet, which is parcel of the issue, the lessor did not continue upon the land, but went off it, and relinquished the possession: but as to this last point, it seemed to the court, that it is not material if the plaintiff continued his possession there or not, for if he once doth anything which amounts to an entry, although that he depart presently, yet the possession is in him sufficient to suspend the rent, and he shall be said, extra tanere the defendant the lessee, until he hath done an act which doth amount to a re-entry. And afterwards to prove a re-entry, it was given in evidence on the plaintiffs part, that the defendant put in his cattel in the field where the brick-kill was, and that the cattel did estray into the place where the defendant had supposed that the plaintiff had entred. And by Anderson Justice, the same is not any re-entry to revive the rent, because they were not put into the same place by the lessee himself, but went there of their own accord. And such also was the opinion of Justice Periam.

And afterwards the same parson libelled again for the same tithes against the same parishioner; and in both libels there was no difference, but that in the later libel it was for a less number of kine, and now the parishioner upon this matter prayed an attachment upon the prohibition, which was granted unto him by the Court, for otherwise a prohibition should be granted to no purpose.

CLII. SAMFORD AND WARDS CASE.

Ravishment of Ward.

Samford brought a ravishment of ward against Ward, and counted that one A. ancestor of the infant, whose heir he is, was seised of certain lands in fee, and held the same of the Bishop of Winchester in socage, and died, his heir within the age of 14 years; and that the custody of the infant did belong unto him as his prochein amy; by force of which he seised him and was possessed, &c. The defendant saith, that the land was holden of him by knights service, absque hoc, that it is holden of the Bishop of Winchester as the plaintiff hath counted. And upon that issue was joyned. And it was moved by Serjant Puckering on the plaintiffs part, that the truth of the case was, that all the land descended is holden in socage, and no part in knights service, but that part of it is holden of another in socage: and prayed the opinion of the Court, if that matter shall trench to the issue as the same is joyned: and the Court was of opinion, that it did not: for if all be holden in socage, it is not material if part of it be holden of another, so as it be holden in socage.

CLIII. STAMP AND HUTCHINS CASE.

Administration. Assets. Retainer by Administrations.

The case was, the obligor makes his executors and dieth; the executors become bounden to the obligee for the payment of the said debt, and the obligee doth deliver back the obligation of the testator to them; and afterwards another creditor of the testator sues the executors, who pleaded, that they have fully administred, upon which they are at issue, and the said especial [112] matter was found by verdict. And by Shuttleworth and Walmesley, the jury have found for the plaintiff, and that the defendants have not fully administred: and yet they agreed the case of 20 H. 7. 2. The executors paying to the creditors of the testator a debt with their own goods, they may retain so much of the goods of the testator; but that case is not like to this, for here the executors have not made any payment or satisfaction of the debt, nor disbursed any mony, &c. nor other things, but only have made an obligation, to pay a sum of mony at a day to come, before which day it may happen that the obligation be cancelled or released; but it may more fitly be compared to the case of 27 H. 8. 6. where an executor had compounded with a creditor of the testator for the payment of 20l. for a debt of 40l. and had an acquittance testifying the payment of the 40l. where it was holden, that the other 20l. is assets. And by Rhodes, this making of an obligation by executors, (although the obligation, in which the testator was bounden, be delivered to the executors and cancelled) is not any administration nor payment of the said debt due: so if the executors pledge the goods for the payment of such a debt, yet they shall be accounted assets until payment be made, which Periam denied. And Periam and all the other justices held clearly, that if in such case the executors make a sufficient obligation to the creditor of the testator, and sufficiently discharge the testator without fraud or covin, that they may retain the goods of the testator for so much: and the goods retained shall not be said assets: and this case is all one with the case of 20 H. 7. for here they have discharged the testator, and the executors do remain charged with the same to the creditor, and it is so fully administred, as if the executors had expresly paid the debt. And it is not like to the case of 27 H. 8. cited before, for there, although they have discharged the testator, yet they have not charged themselves, otherwise it is in the principal case; and although they have appointed ulteriorem diem, for the payment of the said debt, yet the same is not material: but the Lord Anderson conceived, that if the creditor doth deliver unto the executors the obligation as an accquittance or discharge, and in consideration thereof they promise to pay the debt, the same is not any administration as to the said debt. And by some of the serjants, if the plea stand good to prove fully administred, then executors in such case may make an obligation to pay the debt 40 years after, and so defraud the other creditors, which is not reasonable: if a feoffment in fee made upon condition to pay certain mony at such a day, and at the day the feoffees make an obligation to the feoffor for the payment of it, the same is no performance of the condition. And by Periam, if the executor be taken in execution for the debt of the testator, he may retain so much of the goods of the testator amounting to the sum for which he is in execution, and it shall be accounted assets in his hands. Anderson, if he to whom the testator was endebted in 20l. be endebted to the executors in so much, and the executor in satisfaction of the debt of the testator releaseth his debt, the property shall be altered presently of the whole goods in the hands of the executors; so where the debtor makes the creditor his executor. And judgment was given for the executors.

CLIV. BEARS CASE.

Formedon. Devise of Lands in Gavel-kind.

A formedon in the discender was brought by Samuel Bear, James Bear, and John Bear of lands in gavel-kind; and the warranty of their ancestor was pleaded against them in bar, upon which they were at issue: [113] if assets by discent. And it was found by special verdict, that Thomas, father of the demandants, was seised in fee of the lands supposed to be descended to the demandants, being of the nature of gavel-kind, and devised the same to the demandants, being his heirs, by the custom, and to their heirs equally to be divided amongst them: and if the demandants shall be accounted to be in of the lands by descent, or devise, was the question; for if by devise, then they shall not be assets. Anderson, let us consider the devise by it self without the words (equally to be divided amongst them). And I conceive, that they shall be in by the devise, for they are now joynt-tenants, and the survivor shall have the whole, whereas if the lands shall be holden in law to have descended, they should be parceners, and so as it were tenants in common. And although the words subsequent, equally amongst them to be divided, makes them tenants in common, yet that doth not amend the matter; and so also was the opinion of Windham and Rhodes Justices.

CLV. NASH AND EDWARDS CASE.

Devises.

In an ejectione firmæ by Nash against Edwards, it was found by special verdict, that one Dover ancestor of the plaintiff, whose heir he is, being seised of certain lands holden in socage, devised the same by word to his three sisters; And a stranger being present recited to the devisor the said words of his will, and he did affirm them: and afterwards the said stranger put the said words in writing for his own remembrance, but did not read them to the devisor, who afterwards died. And it was moved, if this devise being reduced in writing, modo & forma, be good or not. Spurling conceived that not, for the statute intends a will in writing, but not such writing as is here without privity or direction of the devisor, and it is not like to the case of Brown and Sackvil, 6 E. 6. Dyer 72. For the notes were written by the commandment of the devisor, but here it doth not appear that the meaning of the devisor was, that the devise should be put in writing: and devises in law are favoured, as the case in the Chancery was, that Sir Richard Pexhal devised certain lands to his wife, and the scrivener inserted of his own head a condition, scil. (that she should be chast) which was disallowed by the devisor himself, for which after his death, the condition, although it was put in writing, was void. And by the whole Court the devise is void. And by Wray, if he appoint A. to write his will, and it is written by B. it is void; but if after he had written the will if he had read it to the devisor, and he had confirmed it, it had been a good will, which Gawdy granted: and afterwards judgment was given, that the plaintiff should recover.

CLVI. STONE AND WITHYPOLLS CASE.

Stone brought an action upon the case against Dorothy Withypol the executrix of W. Withypol her husband, & declared that where her said husband for certain yards of velvet of the value of fourteen pounds, & pro diversis alijs mercimonijs, was endebted to the plaintiff in the sum of ninety two pounds, and made the defendant his executrix & died, that after his death he came to the defendant, and demanded of her the said debt, who gave to him such answer, forbear me until Michaelmas, and then I will pay it you, or put you in sufficient security for the [114] true payment thereof: and declared further, that at Michaelmas aforesaid, the defendant did not pay, nor hath found any security, and shewed a request, to which the defendant said that the said testator at the time of the said contracts for the velvets and other wares, was within age: and upon that bar the plaintiff did demur in law. Egerton solicitor, for the plaintiff. As I conceive these contracts made by the plaintiff are not meerly void, so that if an action of debt, or upon the case, had been brought against the testator himself, he could not have pleaded upon the matter nihil debet, or non assumpsit, or non est factum, but he ought to avoid the matter by special pleading, and therefore here it is a good consideration; and I conceive that if the testator at his full age had assumed to pay the debt, that that promise would have bound him, 9 Eliz. it was the case of the Lord Grey, his father was endebted to diverse merchants upon simple contracts, and died seised of diverse lands which descended to his son and heir in fee, the creditors demanded their debts of the heir, who answered unto them, if my father were endebted unto you, I will pay it, and upon that promise an action was adjudged maintainable, although the heir by the law was not chargeable; and also here the defendant is to have ease, and shall avoid trouble of suits, for perhaps if she had not made such promise, the plaintiff would have sued her presently, which should be a great trouble unto her, and therefore it is a good consideration. Cooke contrary, no consideration can be good, if not, that it touch either the charge of the plaintiff, or the benefit of the defendant, and none of them is in our case, for the plaintiff is not at any charge, for which the defendant can have any benefit, for it is but the forbearance of the payment of the debt, which she was not compellable to pay, and as to the suit of the Chancery, the same cannot make any good consideration, for there is not any matter in the case which gives cause of suit in Chancery, for they will not order a matter there which is directly against a rule and maxim of the common law. As if a feme covert be bound, &c. and the obligee bring her into the Chancery, and if a man threaten me, that if I will not pay to him ten pounds, he will sue me in Chancery, upon which I promise to pay it him, no action will lye: and an infant is not chargeable upon any contract, but for his meat, drink, and necessary apparel, 19 Z. 4. 2. And in debt upon such necessary contract, the plaintiff ought to declare specially, so as the whole certainty may appear upon which the Court may judge, if the expense were necessary and convenient or not, and upon the reasonableness of the price, for otherwise, if the necessity of the thing, and reasonableness of the price doth not appear, the Chancellor himself would not give any remedy, or recompence to the party. Wray Justice conceived that the action would not lye, for the contract was void, and the infant in an action against him upon it may plead nihil debet: and if an infant sell goods for money and doth not deliver them, but the vendee takes them, he is a trespassor; but if the infant had been bounden in an obligation with a surety, and afterwards at his full age he in consideration thereof promiseth to keep his surety harmless, upon that promise an action lyeth, for the infant cannot plead non est factum, which see Mich. 28, & 29 Eliz. in the case of one Edmunds: and afterwards it was adjudged against the plaintiff.

CLVII. CHARNOCK AND WORSLEYS CASE.

Fine reversed as to one, to stand good against another.

Charnock and his wife brought a writ of error against Worsley, the case was that the husband and wife, the wife being within age levyed a fine, and the wife upon inspection was adjudged within [115] age, & it was moved, if the fine should be utterly reversed, or as to the wife only, & should stand against the husband; & by Godfrey the book of 50 E. 3. 6. was vouched where it is said by Candish, that where such a fine is reversed, the plaintiff shall not have execution till after the death of the husband; and by Coke and Atkinson, a fine acknowledged by the husband and wife, is not like to a feoffment made by them, for in case of feoffment something passeth from the husband, but in case of a fine all passeth out of the wife, and the conusee is in by her only: and Atkinson shewed a precedent in 2 H. 4. where the fine was reversed for the whole, and also another precedent, P. b. H. 8. Rot. 26. A fine levyed betwixt Richard Elie plaintiff, and N. Ford. and Jane his wife deforceants, the wife being within age, and judgment was given quod finis prædict. adnulletur, & pro nullo penitus habeatur, and that the husband and wife should be restored, and thereupon a writ issued to the custos brevium, to bring into Court, the foot of the fine, and it was presently cancelled in Court. Wray, this is a strong precedent, and we will not varse from it, if other precedents are not contrary. Gawdy (who was the same day made justice) the fine cannot be reversed as to one, and stand as to the other, and resembled it to the case of Littleton 150. where land is given to husband and wife in tail before coverture, and the husband aliens, and takes back an estate to him and his wife for their lives, they both are remitted, for the wife cannot be remitted if the husband be not remitted: and a precedent was cited to the contrary, 7 Eliz. where the case was that the husband and wife levyed a fine, the husband died, the wife being within age the wife took another husband, and they brought a writ of error, and the wife by inspection adjudged within age, and the fine was reversed as to the wife and her heirs. And it was argued by Golding, that here the writ of error ought to abate, for the writ is too general, whereas it ought to be special, ex querela A. B. nobis humillime supplicantis accepimus, &c. See the Book of Entries 278. Also the purclose of the writ is, ad damnum ipsorum, the husband and the wife, whereas the wife only hath loss by it; and as to the fine it self, he conceived that it should be reversed but as to the wife; as if a man of full age, and a man within age, levy a fine, in a writ of error brought, the fine shall be reversed, as to the infant only, and shall stand against the other; and he cited the case of the Lord Mountjoy, 14. Eliz. where a man seised in the right of his wife acknowledged a statute, and afterwards he and his wife levyed a fine, and he said that during the life of the husband, the conusee of the fine should hold the land charged with the statute: Also in the precedent of 2 H. 4. the judgment is, that propter hunc & alios errores, the fine should be reversed, and I conceive that another error was in the said writ, for which the fine might be reversed in all, viz. the fine was levyed of two parts of the manor of D. without saying in tres partes dividend. And see that where two parts are demanded in a writ, the writ shall say so, Brief 244. Coke contrary, and as to the last matter I confess the law is so in a writ, but not in a fine, for the same is but a conveyance, for if I be seised of a manor, and I grant to you two parts of the said manor, it is clear, it shall be intended in three parts to be divided. And as to the principal matter, I conceive, when the fine is levyed by the husband and wife, it shall be intended that the land whereof, &c. is the inheritance of the wife, if the contrary be not shewed, and therefore if the party will have an especial reversal, he ought to shew the special matter, as in Englishes case: a fine was levyed by tenant for life, and he in the reversion being within age, bringeth a writ of error, now the fine shall be reversed as to him in the reversion, but not as to the tenant for life, but here it shall be intended the inheritance of the wife, and that the husband hath nothing but in the right of his wife, and therefore she shall be resto-[116]-red to the whole, for nothing passeth from the husband, but he is named with his wife, only for conformity, 11 H. 7. 19. A. takes to wife an inheretrix, who is attainted of felony, the King shall not have the land presently, by which it appeareth that all is in the wife, and she shall be restored to the whole, and the judgment shall be according to the presidents cited before: and as to the president cited 7 Eliz. the same is not to the purpose, for the second husband was a stranger to the fine, for it would be absurd to reverse the fine as against him. Egerton Solicitor General; presidents are not so holy, quod violari non debeant, as to be rules to other judges, in perpetuum; and I conceive that the fine shall be reversed as to the wife only, for the fine is but a conveyance, and the husband may lawfully convey the land of his wife for his life; and if the husband alone had levyed the fine, the same had bounden the wife during his life: if a woman lessee for life taketh to husband him in the reversion, and they joyn in a fine, the fine shall stand as to the inheritance of the husband, but shall be reversed as to the interest of the wife. Coke, it shall be intended here, all the interest and estate in the land to be in the wife, as 20 H. 7. 1. Where the husband and wife are vouched, it shall be intended by reason of the warranty of the wife only, and so the counter-plea shall be of the seisin of the wife and her ancestors. Wray, when the husband and wife joyn in the fine, it shall be presumed the inheritance of the wife, and if it be otherwise, it ought to be specially shewed; and as to that which hath been said, that if the husband alone had levyed a fine, it should have bounden the wife during the life of the husband, the same is true, but such fine is but a discontinuance, but the right continueth in the wife; but when the husband and wife joyn in the fine, all passeth out of her, and if the fine in such case for the inheritance shall be reversed in all, to whom belongs the free-hold, & to whom shall he be attendant? Gawdy, 12 H. 7. 1. In a præcipe quod reddat against three, they vouch severally, the voucher was not received, and yet they might have several causes of voucher, but the law presumes they are joynt-tenants, and have a joynt cause of voucher, if the contrary be not shewed: and afterwards judgment was given, quod finis predict. reversetur; and Wray said he had conferred with many of the other justices, who were of the same opinion. Gawdy, the fine shall be reversed in all, for this is an error in law of the Court, F. B. 21. D. For by this fine the husband giveth nothing divided from the estate of the wife, but all passeth from the wife, and therefore all shall be reversed, and if the fine should be reversed as to the wife only, then the fine levyed now by the husband alone is a discontinuance, by which the wife by the common law shall be put to her cui in vita, and that is not reason. Also we cannot by this reversal, make the conusee to have a particular estate during the life of the wife: and therefore the fine is to be reversed for the whole, and as void for the whole to the conusee.

CLVIII. Cage and Paxlins Case.

Daniel Cage brought an action of trespass against Thomas Paxlin for trespass done in a close of wood, called the Frith-Close, and in the park, and for taking of certain loads of wood: the defendant pleaded, that the Earl of Oxford was seised of the mannor of W. of which the place where, &c. is parcel, and leased the same to J. S. for years, excepting all woods, great trees, timber-trees, and under-[117]-woods, &c. And covenanted with the lessee and his assigns, that he might take hedg-boot, and fire-boot super dicta premissa, and shewed further, that the said I. S. assigned his interest unto the defendant, and that he came to the said close called the Frith-Close, and cut the wood there for fire-boot, as it was lawful for him to do, &c. And note, that after the lease aforesaid, the said earl had assured the inheritance thereof to Cage the plaintiff. And it was argued by Godfrey, that the lessee cannot take fire-boot in the said close, for the wood, &c. is excepted, and was never demised, and by the exception of the wood, the soil thereof is excepted: see 46 E. 3. 22. A.

leased for life certain lands reserving the great wood, by that the soil also is reserved, vi. 33 H. 8. Br. Reservation, 39, 28 H. 8. 13. And by the words of the covenant, the intent of the lessor appeareth, that the lessee shall have his fire-boot out of the residue of the lands demised, for præmissa here is equivalent with prædimissa: and he cited the case moved by Mountaine Cheif Justice, 4. E. 6. in Plowden, in the case betwixt Dive and Manningham, 66. A. leaseth unto B. a manor for years, excepting a close, parcel of it, rendring a rent, and the lessee is bounden to perform all grants, covenants, and agreements, contenta & expressa aut recitata in the indenture; if the lessee disturb the lessor, upon his occupation of close excepted, he hath forfeited his obligation, &c. But our case is not like to that: and if I let the manor of D. for years, except green-meadow, and afterwards I covenant that the lessee shall enjoy the premisses, the same doth not extend to green-meadow. Snagg Serjeant to the contrary, and by him præmissa, are not restrained to prædimissa, but to all the premisses put in the former part of the indenture of demise, therefore the lesse shall have fire-boot in the one, and the other; and he put a difference betwixt all woods excepted, and all woods growing excepted, for in the one case the soil passeth, in the other not; and as to the case cited before in Plowden. 66. that is true, for exception is an agreement: and he said that by that exception the soil it self is excepted, and these woods which are named by name of woods: contrary where a close containeth part in woods, and part in pasture; and by the exception of timber-trees, and under woods, all the other woods are excepted but not the soil: as if a man grant all his lands in D. land, meadow, pasture, and woods thereby passeth; by exception of this close of wood, the soil also is excepted, and he conceived, that although all the woods be excepted, yet by the covenant an interest passeth to the lessee, so as he may take fire-boot without being put to his action of covenant: as 21 H. 7. 30. A. leaseth unto B. for life, and covenants in the indenture of lease, that he shall be dispunished of wast, although the same be penned by way of covenant, yet it is a good matter of bar, being all by one deed: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff, as to that close of wood called Frith-close; but as to the park, for the defendant, for that Frith-close was all excepted, scil. the wood and the soil: and these words, supra præmissa, shall be intended such things which were demised, and no other, and by this covenant, the lessee hath power to take the wood upon the other lands, although that the wood be excepted, for the soile was demised, and he shall not be punished in trespass, and put to his remedy, by action of covenant against the lessor: and by Wray, there is not any colour against the plaintiff for the Frith-close, if not that the defendant had averred, that there is not any wood upon the other lands not excepted but demised; and this word, præmissa, doth not extend by construction to this mentioned before, being excepted, but only to the things demised.

CLIX. RIVETT AND RIVETTS CASE.

Assumpsit. Request.

Edmund Rivett brought an action upon the case against Geoge Rivett, and declared, that where it was pretended by the defendant, that one R. made his will, and by the same devised certain legacies to the defendant, and the plaintiff upon that had sued in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury for to disprove the said will; and if he prosecutus fuisser, he might have disproved the said will, and so defeated the defendant of his pretended legacies: the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff, ultra non procederet, did promise to give to the plaintiff one hundred pounds; and averred, that he had surceased his said suit; and further declared, that licet the defendant, ad hoc requisitus suerit tali die & anno, &c. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that here is not any consideration, for the defendant hath not any means to compel the plaintiff for to surcease his suit, for there is not any cross promise set forth in the declaration; and although that he doth surcease his suit, yet he may begin the same again, and therefore the plaintiff ought to have shewed in his declaration a release or other discharge of it, as the case was 3 Eliz. reported by Bendloe. A. was bound unto B. in twenty pounds, and afterwards A. promised B. that in consideration the said A. should not be damnified by reason of the said bond, to give the said B. ten pounds, and upon that promise B. brought an action upon the case, and shewed, that the defendant was not damnified by reason of the said bond. But it was adjudged, that the action was not maintainable upon that matter, because that the plaintiff did not shew in his declaration, that he had released or otherwise discharged the defendant of the said bond, and so no consideration in the case.

Another exception was, because the request is not layed certainly, but generally, licet requisitus, and doth not say by whom he was required, or what thing to do: and afterwards a precedent was shewed, Trinit. 28 Eliz. rot. 523. betwixt Smith and Smith. An assumpsit, in consideration that the plaintiff should not implead the defendant upon bond; and the plaintiff had judgment to recover. And as to the request it was said by Kempe, that there are many precedents, that a request generally layed is sufficient: and afterwards in the principal case judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXL. Wheeler and Twogoods Case.

Covenant amounts to a grant.

Wheeler brought an ejectione firmæ against Twogood, and it was found by special verdict, that the Earl of Oxford was seised of the manor of Hornely, in which were divers copy-holds: and that the said earl leased the said manor to one Heywood for one and twenty years, to begin two years after. Except all casualties and profits of courts, which severally did not pass the value of six shillings eight pence. And afterwards the earl bargained and sold the reversion to Anthony Cage: and afterwards a composition was made betwixt Anthony Cage and the lessee, by which the lessee did grant and covenant to and with the said A. Cage, that he would permit the said Anthony Cage peaceably to hold the courts and to take the profits to his own use, proviso, that the said lessee should have the rents of the copy-holders & freeholders: and afterwards the lessee granted over his interest in the [119] said term. It was moved by Towse, that by this exception the court baron is not excepted nor severed from the manor, nor destroyed, for it is incident to the manor, and this covenant betwixt the lessee and Anthony Cage amounts to a grant of the court to Anthony Cage. See 44 E. 3. Fitz. Mannors de faits 144 & 29 E. 3. Burr. 280. and see 37. H. 8. & 1 E. 6. Br. Leases 60. That where I. S. covenants, & concessit to I. N. that he shall have twenty acres of land in B. for one and twenty years, it is a good lease, for this word concessit is as strong as dimisit. And it was moved, that here the earl leased for years to begin two years after, and the lessee being in possession, doth continue it after the two years, and afterwards before any entry the lessee assignes over his interest, that the same is not a good grant, but only a right: but by the whole Court the grant was holden good, notwithstanding the said exception: and it was holden also, that the covenant (ut supra) was void; for although that Anthony Cage hath authority to hold the courts, yet it ought to be in the name of the lessee.

But Popham the Attorney General said, that by the favour of the Court he would maintain the authority of his place, which his predecessors had enjoyed, for he said, it cannot be found by any record in this Court, Common Pleas, or the Exchequer, that the informer had proceeded where the Attorney General had made such an entry, for we have not used to do it without great consideration; for if the informer hath ceased to prosecute the suit two or three terms, then we used to enter a non vult prosequi. For it is not reason that the subject should be molested or attendant so long without just cause, and it is not against law, that in personal suits the act of one should prejudice the other; and the Queen is the principal party in this suit, for the replication shall be made in the name of the Queen only, and not of the informer. And afterwards by award of the Court it was ruled, that that entry by the attorney is not any barr, quoad the informer, so if the Queen be nonsuit, so the nonsuit of the informer is no barr against the Queen: and Wray said, that such was the opinions of Anderson and Gawdy Justices, &c.

CLXII. THE QUEEN AGAINST LEWIS, GREEN, AND OTHERS.

An information for the Queen against Lewis, Green, and others: the case was, King E. 6. was seised of the manor of Stepneth, and twenty acres of lands in Stepneth, called Stepneth Marsh, and of another Marsh also called Stepneth Marsh, and granted unto the Lord Wentworth and his heirs the manor of Stepneth, in the county of Midd. Nec non mariscam in Stepneth, appel. Stepneth Marsh in com. prædict. nec non omnia terr. & ten. eidem manerio sive premissis pertinent. And if twenty acres, called Stepneth Marsh, not parcel of the said manor pass, or not, was the question: Cook, [120] that they shall pass: here this grant doth consist of three parts; 1. The grant of the manor; 2. Nec non mariscum in Stepneth; 3. Nec non omnia terras & tenementa dicto manerio sive præmissis pertinen. And by the second clause these twenty acres shall pass, be the same parcel or not; and the latter words cannot refer to that, for it is certainly expressed before. And the case lately agreed in the Court of Wards betwixt Bronker and Robotham was cited, which was, that the King being seised of the manor of Sandridge and Newnam, parcel of the possessions of the Monastery of Saint Albans, and part of the manor of Newnam extended into the parish of Sandridge, and the King granted the manor of Sandridge, nec non omnia terras & tenementa sua in Sandridge, dicto nuper monasterio pertinen. nec non omnia terras & tenementa sua dicta manerio de Sandridge pertinen. By which grant, although that the latter clause doth restrain it to the manor of Sandridge, yet the general words of the second clause shall extend to make pass all the whole manor of Newnam, which extended into the parish of Sandridge, & a decree was in the said Court accordingly.

At another day the case was argued, and the case put to be thus. King E. 6. was seised of the manor of Hackney and Stepneth in the county of Midd. within which was a great marsh, called Stepneth Marsh, parcel of the manor of Stepneth, which the King had by exchange of the Bishop of London, and there were also twenty acres of lands which were lying in Stepneth Marsh, and were known by the name of Stepney Marsh, late parcel of the possessions of the Priory of Grace, and granted unto the Lord Wentworth and his heirs, Dominia sive maneria sua de Hackney & Stepney, nec non mariscos suos de Stepney in Stepney prædict. nec non omnia maneria terras & tenem. & mariscos dictis maneriis aut cæteris præmissis pertinen. If these twenty acres pass in the general words in the first nec non, or if the words in the second nec non (dictis maneriis pertinen.) doth restrain the generality of the first words, was the question; and by Phillips the twenty acres do not pass, for the grant of the King shall be always taken to a common intent: and because here the King hath these marshes by several titles, that marsh only shall pass, which by general entendment shall be intended to pass, scil. the great marsh, which was in truth parcel of the manor of Stepney, and not the twenty acres which the King hath by a special title, although, that ex vi termini, the grant may extend unto it: also the grant of the King shall be taken, secundum intentionem regis, and not in deceptionem; and here it appeareth, that the intent of the King was not, that these twenty acres should pass, i. the King grants maneria sua & terras, and all lands, &c. iisdem pertinen. but it is not part of any thing pertinen. to those twenty acres, therefore his intent was not to pass them. Secondly, the grant is to have them as fully as the Bishop of London had them, without mentioning of the prior. Thirdly, as fully as the bishop had granted them to us, but the bishop had not granted these twenty acres to the King. Fourthly, in the letters patents the King recites the value of the manor of Hackney and Stepney, but no value of the twenty acres, (quære, what difference there is betwixt Stepney Marsh and the Marsh of Stepny.) As to the first, the grant is iisdem & ita præmissis pertinen. which word præmissis includes the premisses or otherwise should be void: secondly, the words, as the bishop had, and as amply as we have from the bishop, are suplusage, & nihil operatur by them. And if the King had not the same of the bishop it is not material, but they shall pass notwithstanding, because by a special name: as if the King grants to me manerium de dale, quod à nobis nuper concelat. fuit, and in truth it was not concealed, yet it shall pass by his special name: but if the grant had been, proviso, that if the said manor were concealed, &c. the same had been good, for it is good by way of proviso, but not by reference. As to the valuation the same is not material, for who can restrain the bounty of the King. 29 E. 3. 7. and 8. The King granted omnes advocationes [121] pertinend. to such a priory, quas nuper concessimus patri of the patentee, although the King had not ever made such a grant, yet it is a good grant to the sons, causa qua supra. Gawdy Justice conceived, that the twenty acres did pass, and he confessed the case betwixt Bronkor and Robotham to be good law, for there the intention is fully, that all appertaining to the monastery, whether it were parcel of the mannor of Newnam or of Sandridge, passeth, 6 E. 6. 8. Dyer. A man leaseth all his meadows in A. containing ten acres, whereas in truth they are twenty acres, all passeth, &c. And if the King grant the manor of D. to A; and further saith, damus & concedimus, so freely as I. S. had it, and I. S. never had it, yet the grant is good: and as to the misrecital of the value, the same is helped by the statute. Clench Justice to the same intent; and the jury hath found, that the twenty acres are parcel of Stepney Marsh. Wray to the same intent, against express words no favour shall be given to the King. And note, that the marshes pertaining to the manor are in the third clause, ergo, the marsh in the second clause shall be intended a marsh in gross, or otherwise it should be idle. And afterwards judgment was given against the Queen.

CLXIII. Piers and Leversuchs Case in Ejectione firmæ.

It was found by special verdict, that one Robert Leversuch grand-father of the defendant, was tenant in tail of certain lands, whereof, &c. and made a lease for years to one Pur. who assigned it over to P. father of the plaintiff. Robert Leversuch died: W. his son and heir entred upon P. who re-entred. W. demised without other words the land to the said P. for life, the remainder to Joan his wife for life, the remainder to the son of P. for life with warranty, and made a letter of attorney therein to enter and deliver seisin accordingly. P. died before that the livery was executed, and afterwards the attorney made livery to Joan. W. died; Ed. his son and heir entred upon the wife, she re-entred, and leased to the plaintiff, who upon an ouster brought the action. Heale. When P. entred upon W. Leversuch the issue in tail, he was a disseisor, and by his death the land descending to his heir, the entry of W. Leversuch, the issue in tail, was taken away. Cook contrary. P. by his entry was not a disseisor, but at the election of W. for when P. accepted such a deed from W. it appeareth that his intent was not to enter as a disseisor; and it is not found that the said P. had any son and heir at the time of his death, and if not, then no descent; and there is not any disseisin found that P. expulit Leversuch out of the land. And judgment was given against the plaintiff. And Cook cited a case which was adjudged in the Common Pleas, and it was the case of Shipwith; grand-father, tenant in tail, father and son; the grand-father died, the father entred and paid the rent to the lessor, and died in possession, and adjudged, that it was not any descent, for the paying of the rent doth explain by what title he entred, and so he shall not be a disseisor but at the election of another.

CLXIV. SEVERN AND CLERKS CASE.

Agreements. Recital.

The case was, that A. by his deed poll recited, that (whereas he was) possessed of certain lands for years of a certain term; by good and lawful conveyance he assigned the same to I. S. with divers covenants, articles and agreements in the said deed contained, which are or ought to be performed on his part. It was moved, if this recital (whereas he was) be an article or agreement within the meaning of the condition of the said obligation, which was given to perform, &c. Gawdy conceived, that it is an agreement: for in such case I agree, that I am possessed of it, for every thing contained in the deed is an agreement, and not only that which I am bound to perform: as if I recite by my deed, that I am possessed of such an interest in certain land, and assign it over by the same deed, and thereby covenant to perform all agreements in the deed, if I be not possessed of such interest, the covenant is broken. And it was moved, if that recital be within these words of the condition (which are or ought to be performed on my part.) And some were of opinion, that it is not within those words; for that extends only in futurum, but this recital is of a thing past, or at the least present.

Clench. recital of it self is nothing, but being joyned and considered with the rest of the deed it is material, as here, for against this recital he cannot say that he hath not any thing in the term. And at the length, it was clearly resolved, that if the party had not that interest by a good and lawful conveyance the obligation was forfeited.

CLXV. PAGE AND JOURDENS CASE.

A general entry amounts to a disseisin.

In trespass betwixt Page and Jourden the case was: a woman tenant in tail took a husband, who made a feoffment in fee and died. The wife without any entry made a lease for years: it was moved, that the making of this lease is an entry in law. As if A. make a lease for years of the land of B. who enters by force of that lease, now the lessor without any entry is a disseisor. And it was resolved, that by that lease, the free-hold is not reduced without an entry.

CLXVI. HAVITHLOME AND HARVIES CASE.

Action upon the Statute of 5 Eliz. cap. 9.

Havithlome brought an action upon the statute of 5 Eliz. cap. 9. against Harvy and his wife for the penalty of ten pounds given by the said statute against him who was served with process, ad testificandum, &c. and doth not appear, not having any impediment, &c. and shewed that process was served upon the defendants wife, and sufficient charges, having regard to her degree and the distance of the place, &c. tendred to her, and yet she did not appear. And it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that the declaration is not good, because the plaintiff in setting forth that he was damaged for the not appearance of the wife according to the process, hath not shewed how damnified: also it was moved, that a feme [123] covert is not within the said statute, for no mention is made of a feme covert, and therefore upon the Statute of West. 2. cap. 25. if a feme covert fail of her record, she shall not be holden disseisseress, nor imprisoned. Also here the declaration is, that the plaintiff tendered the charges to the wife where he ought to have tendered the same to the husband.

To these three exceptions it was answered. 1. That although the party be not at all damnified, yet the penalty is forfeited. 2. Feme coverts are within the said statute, otherwise it should be a great mischief, for it might be that she might be the only witness: and feme coverts, if they had not been expressly excepted, had been within the statute of 4 H. 7. of fines. 3. The wife ought to appear, therefore the tender ought to be to her: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CLXVII. DELLABY AND HASSELS CASE.

Assumpsit.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared that the defendant in consideration that he had retained the plaintiff to go from London to Paris to merchandize diverse goods to the profit of the defendant, promised to give to him so much as should content him, and also to give him all and every sum of money which he should expend there in his affairs; and further declared, that he was contented to have twenty pounds for his labour, which the defendant refused to pay: and exception was taken to the declaration, because there is not set down any place or time of the notification of his contentment, for the same is traversable. Gawdy, the issue here is, non assumpsit; and therefore that matter is out of the book. Cook, if one assume to pay twenty pounds to another upon request, although the defendant plead, non assumpsit, yet if the place and time of request be not shewed, judgment many times hath been stayed, for no action without a request; so here without notification of his contentment, no action, therefore he ought to shew it. Gawdy, the ground of this action is the assumpsit, but that cannot be certain without declaration, and thereof notice ought to be given to make certainty of the duty, but not to enforce the promise; but in our case, without a request assumpsit will not lye; but here it being but conveyance, the certainty of the time and place is not necessary to be shewed, but the general form shall serve, for it is but inducement: as if a man will plead a devise of goods to him, and assent of the executors to take them, he need not to shew the time and place of the assent. Gawdy, at another day, said that judgment ought to be given for the plaintiff; the assumpsit is the ground and cause of the action, and the shewing of the contentment is only to reduce the action to certainty: and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CLXVIII. MUSKET AND COLES CASE.

William Musket brought an action upon the case against Cole, and declared that in consideration, that the plaintiff had payed unto the defendant forty shillings, for the debt of Symon his son, the defendant promised to deliver to him, omnes tales billas & obligationes, in which his son was bounden to him; which thing he would not do, and it was found by verdict for the plaintiff: and it was moved for stay of judgment, because the plaintiff had not averred in his decla-[124]-ration, that the said defendant had bills or obligations, in which Simon his son was bounden to the defendant, for if there were none, then no damage. And see Onlies case, 19 Eliz. Dyer. 356. D. in consideration that the plaintiff had expended divers sums of money circa the businesses of the defendant, promised, &c. Exception was taken to that declaration by Manwood and Mounson Justices, because it was not shewed, in what businesses certain, and betwixt what persons. Gawdy, the plaintiff here is not to recover the bills or obligations, but damages only, and therefore needeth not to alledge any bills in certain. And 47 E. 3. 3. A. covenants with B. to assure unto B. and his heirs, omnia terras & tenementa quas habet in such counties, and for not assurance, an action of covenant was brought, and the plaintiff declared, that the defendant had broken the said covenant, and that he had required the defendant to make a feoffment unto him of all his lands and tenements in the said counties; and the plea was not allowed, for the land is not in demand, but only damages to be recovered. See also 46 E. 3. 4. and 20 E. 3. And in the principal case, the plaintiff had time enough for the shewing to the jury what bills or obligations for the instructing of the jury of the damages.

CLXIX. ENGLISH, AND PELLITARY AND SMITHS CASE.

Assault and Battery.

In an action of trespass of assault and battery and wounding: the defendants say, that they were lessees of certain lands, and the plaintiff came to the said lands, and took certain posts which were upon the lands, and they gently took them from him. S. pleaded, that he found the plaintiff and P. contending for the said posts, and he to part them mollite, put his hands upon the plaintiff; which is the same, &c. The plaintiff replyed, De injuriis suis propriis absque tali causa per ipsos P. & S. allegat. upon which issue was joyned, which was found for the plaintiff. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that here was not any issue, for the plaintiff ought severally to reply to both pleas aforesaid, for here are several causes of justification, and his replication, absque tali causa, doth not answer to both. Cook, this word (causa) is, nomen collectivum, which may be referred to every cause by the defendants alledged, reddendo singula singulis, and their justifications are but one matter, and the defendants might have all joyned in one plea. Wray, both pleas depend upon one matter, but are several causes; for two justifie by reason of their interest, and the third for the preservation of the peace. And by him and the whole Court, although it be not a good form of pleading, yet by reasonable construction this word (cause) shall be referred to every cause, and so the pleading shall be maintained: and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

Covenant. Request.

If a writ of covenant the plaintiff declared, that the defendant by his deed, hearing date the first of October, 28 Eliz. did covenant, that he would do every act and acts at his best endeavour to prove the will of I. S. or otherwise, that he would procure letters of administration, by which he might convey such a term lawfully to the plaintiff, which he had not done, licet sæpius requisitus, &c. The defendant pleaded that he came to Doctor Drury into the Court of the Arches, and there [125] offered to prove the will of the said I. S. but because the wife of the said I. S. would not swear, that it was the will of her husband, they could not be received to prove it; upon which it was demurred in law. It was moved by Williams, that the action doth not lie, for there is no time limited by the covenant when the thing should be done by the defendant, for which he hath time during his life, for as much as it is a collateral thing. See 15 E. 4. 31. if there be not a request before; but admit that the covenant had been to perform upon request, then the plaintiff in his declaration ought to have shewed an express request with the place and time of it, for that is traversable. See 33 H. 6. 47, 48. 9 E. 4. 22. Gawdy, if the covenant had been expresly to do it upon request, there the request ought to be shewed specially: but when a thing upon the exposition of the law only is to be done upon request, such request alledged generally is good enough. And by Wray, the covenantor hath not time during his life to perform this covenant, but he ought to do it upon request within convenient time; but in some case a man shall have time during his life, as where no benefit shall be to any of the parties, as if the condition were to go to Rome: and as to the request, he conceived, that it ought to be shewed specially and certainly; for it is for the benefit of the covenantee for without request, the action doth not lie, which Clench granted. And it was holden by the whole Court, that the bar shall not help the insufficient declaration: no more, if the Defendant plead, non assumpsit, yet the defect in the declaration of a request not duly shewed, remaineth. Gawdy, the bringing of the action is a request. Clench, a writ of debt is a præcipe, for which there, licet sæpius requisitus, is sufficient; but a writ of covenant is not so.

TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CLXXI. PIERS AND HOES CASE.

Trespass. Forfeiture. Construction of Deeds.

In an action of trespass, it was found by special verdict, that A. seised of land in the right of his wife, being her joynture by a former husband, he and his wife made a feoffment to a stranger and his heirs, habend. to the use of the stranger and his heirs during the life of the wife only. Shutleworth, the same is a forfeiture, for if the same feoffment had been without any use expressed, then it should be to the use of the feoffor and his heirs, and by consequence a forfeiture; and as the case is here, it is also a forfeiture, for during the life of the wife the use is expresly to the use of the feoffee and his heirs, and the remainder of the fee-simple is to the use of the feoffor, scil. the husband and his heirs. Popham, I conceive that here is a forfeiture, for here are several limitations, limitation of the estate unto one, and of the use unto another: and the words (for the life of the wife) do not refer to the estate, but to the use, with proximum antecedens; and he resembled the same to the case of Leonard Sturton, in which he was of councel. A man granted lands, habend. unto the grantee, to the use of the grantee, and the heirs of his body; the same is no estate tail in the grantee, but only an estate for life, for the limitation of the use cannot extend the estate. Cook contrary. The case is, that A. wife of one Piers, being tenant for life of the joynture of the said Piers, took to husband Hoe, they both by deed grant totum suum messuagium to one Clarke, habendum to him and his heirs for the life of the wife only, I conceive, that here is not any forfeiture, for it is but one intire sentence: and if there be a double construction of a deed, that which is most reasonable shall be taken, so as wrong be not done, and therefore these words (for the life of the wife) shall refer unto both, scil. the estate and the use, and their intent was not to commit a forfeiture, as appeareth by the words of the deed, [126] for they grant solum messuagium, and that was not but for the life of the wife ad solum usum of the feoffee and his heirs, during the life of the wife, and violence should be offered to this word (solum) if the feoffee or his heirs, should have ultra the life of the wife; and the word (tantum) cannot otherwise be expounded, but that the estate for life only shall pass from them: and he cited the case of 34 E. 3. Avowry 258. A. gives lands unto B. in tail, and for default of such issue, to the use of C. in tail, rendring rent, the same render shall go to both the estates: so a lease for life to A. the remainder to B. to the use of C. the same use goeth out of both the estates, and not only out of the remainder; so here upon the same reason, these words, for the life of the wife, shall refer to the first estate, as well as to the use; and in such cases the rule of Bracton ought to be observed, viz. Benignæ faciendæ sunt interpretationes verborum, ut res magis valeat, quam pereat. As the case in 6 H. 7. 7. in a cessavit, the plaintiff counted, that the tenant held by homage, fealty, sute at Court, and certain rent, and in the doing of the services aforesaid, the defendant had cessed, and in not doing of homage and fealty, a man cannot cesse by two years; but it was holden that the said cessavit should be referred to such services only, in which one might cease, and that is sute of Court, and rent; and if pleadings shall have such favourable construction, a multo fortiori, shall a deed, 4 E. 3. Wast. 11. A man leased for life, and by the same deed granted power unto the lessee, to take and make his profit of the said lands, in the best manner should seem good to him without contradiction of the lessor or his heirs; yet by those words it is not lawful for him to do wast, for there it is said, that in construction of deeds, we ought to judge according to that intent, which is according to law and reason, and not to that which is against reason: see 17 E. 3. 7. accordingly, so in the principal case, the words in the deed of feoffment shall be so expounded, that the estate be saved and not destroyed.

Popham contrary, the cases put by Coke are not like to the case in question; for where the rent is out of both estates the same is but reason, for the rent is in respect of the land, and because he departs with both estates, it is reason the rent issue out of both; and the like reason is of the case of an use, for if a man makes a lease for life to A. the remainder over to B. the same shall be to their use respectively, and if he do express the use, the same shall be accordingly, and shall bind both estates, but there Clark hath two estates, one by the common law, and the other by the statute; but the words subsequent (for the life of the wife only) cannot refer to both estates: A. gives lands to one & his heirs for forty years, the same is but a plain term for years: but if a feoffment in fee be made to one & his heirs to the use of another for forty years, there the fee passeth to the feoffee, and the term to cestuy que use. Gawdy conceived, that it is not any forfeiture, for these words (during the life of the wife only) were put in the deed to express the intent of the parties, and therefore the same shall not be void, and he conceived that they were put in, to exclude the forfeiture, and therefore they shall serve for that purpose. And afterwards it was resolved by all the justices except Gawdy, that it was a forfeiture, for by the feoffment the fee-simple passeth, and that to the use of the feoffor; & the estate, and the use are several things, and the limitation for the life of the wife cannot extend to both: and as to the book of 24. H. 8. Br. Forfeiture 87. Tenant for life aliens in fee to B. habendum sibi & hæredibus suis, for term of the life of the tenant for life, the same is not a forfeiture, for the whole is but the limitation of the estate: and afterwards it was adjudged that it was a forfeiture, Gawdy continuing in his former opinion: and Wray said that he had conferred with the other Judges of their house, and they all held clearly, that it is a forfeiture.

Discontinuance.

Upon a special verdict the case was, that the grand-father, tenant for life, the remainder to the father in tail, that the grand-father made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the father in fee; and afterwards they both came upon the land, and made a feoffment to Tompkins the defendant. Coke, there is not any discontinuance upon this matter, for the father might well have the advantage of the forfeiture committed by the grand-father; then when the father joyns with the grand-father in a feoffment, the same declares that he came upon the land, without intent to enter for a forfeiture: it was one Waynmans case, adjudged in the Common Pleas, where the disseissee cometh upon the land to deliver a release to the disseissor, that the same is no entry to revest the land in the disseissee: then here it is the livery of the tenant for life, and the grant of him in the remainder, and he in the remainder here was never seised by force of the tail, and so no discontinuance. Godfrey, here is a remitter by the entry, and afterwards a discontinuance, for by the entry of both, the law shall adjudge the possession in him who hath right, &c. Gawdy, this is a discontinuance, for when the father entreth, ut supra, he shall be adjudged in by the forfeiture, and then he hath gained a possession, and so a discontinuance, for both cannot have the possession. Clench, the intent of him in the remainder when he entred was to joyn with the grand-father, and when his intent appeareth, that the estate of the grand-father, and his own also shall passe, that doth declare that he would not enter for the forfeiture: Shute agreed with Gawdy.

Action upon the Case for words.

An action upon the case for words, viz. thou wast forsworn in the Court of Requests, and I will make thee stand upon a stage for it: it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that the action will not lye for these words, for he doth not say, that he was there forsworn as defendant, or witness: and Trin. 28 Eliz. betwixt Hern and Hex, thou wast forsworn in the Court of Whit-church; and judgment given against the plaintiff, for the words are not actionable, and as to the residue of the words, I will make thee stand upon the stage for it, they are not actionable, as it was adjudged between Rylie and Trowgood, if thou hadst justice thou hadst stood on the pillory; and judgment was given against the plaintiff. Daniel contrary, thou wast forsworn before my Lord Chief Justice in an evidence, these words are actionable, for that is perjury upon the matter, and between Foster and Thorne, T. 23 Eliz. Rot. 882. Thou wast falsly forsworn in the Star-Chamber, the plaintiff had judgment, for it shall be intended that the plaintiff was defendant or a deponent there: and yet the words in the declaration are not in the Court of Star-Chamber. Wray, thou art worthy to stand upon the pillory, are not actionable, for it is but an implication; but in the words in the case at the bar there is a vehement intendment, that his oath was in the quality of a defendant, or deponent; which Gawdy granted. In the case 28 Eliz. thou wast forsworn in Whit-[128]-Church

Court, there the words are not actionable; for that Court is not known to you as Judges, and it may be it is but a great house or mansion house called Whit-church Court: but here in the principal case it cannot be meant but a Court of Justice, and before the Judges there juridice, and the subsequent words found so much, I will make thee stand upon a stage for it. CLXXIV. GATEFOULD AND PENNS CASE.

Gatefould parson of North-linne libelled against Penne in the Spiritual Court for tythes in kind of certain pastures: the defendant to have prohibition doth surmise, that he is inhabitant of South-linne, and that time out of mind, &c. every inhabitant of South-linne, having pastures in North-linne hath paid tythes in kind for them unto the vicars of South-linne, where he is not resident, and the vicar hath also time out of mind payed to the parson of North-linne for the time being two pence for every acre. Lewis, this surmise is not sufficient to have a prohibition, for upon that matter modus decimandi shall never come in question, but only the right of tythes, if they belong to the parson of North-linne, or to the vicar of South-linne, and he might have pleaded this matter in the Spiritual Court, because it toucheth the right of tythes, as it was certified in the case of Bashly by the doctors of the civil law. Gawdy, this prescription doth stand with reason, for such benefit hath the parson of North-linne, if any inhabitant there hath any pastures in South-linne. And afterwards the whole Court was against the prohibition, for modus decimandi shall never come in debate upon this matter, but who shall have the tythes, the vicar of South-linne, or the parson of North-linne? and also the prescription is not reasonable.

Bishop libelled in the Spiritual Court for tythe pay, the plaintiff Gomersal made a surmise, that there was an agreement betwixt the said parties, and for the yearly sum of seven shillings to be paid by Gomersal unto Bishop, Bishop faithfully promised to Gomersal, that Gomersal should have the tythes of the said land during his life. And upon an attachment upon a prohibition Gomersal declared, that for the said annual sum Bishop leased to the plaintiff the said tythes for his life: and upon the declaration Bishop did demur in law for the variance between the surmise and the declaration; for in the surmise a promise is supposed, for which Gomersal might have an action upon the case, and in the declaration a lease. But note, that the surmise was not entred in the roll, but was recorded by it self, and the declaration only enrolled. Godfrey, it was resolved in the case betwixt Pendleton and Hunt, that an agreement betwixt the parson and any of his parishioners is a good cause to grant a prohibition, if he libel in the Spiritual Court against such agreement, because the Spiritual Court cannot try it, and they will not allow such plea. Curia, the surmise is as a writ, for which if variance be betwixt the same and the declaration all his naught.

CLXXVI. COLEBOURN AND MIXSTONES CASE. INTRAT. HILL. 31 ELIZ. ROT. 146.

Devises. Extinguishment. Estate executed. Assent not to be apportioned.

Colebourn was sued in the Spiritual Court, for that being executor to one Alice Leigh, he had not brought in a true inventory of all the goods of the said Alice, but had omitted and left out a lease of two houses, and this suit was at the pursuit of two daughters of the testator. Colebourn sueth for a prohibition; and surmises and declares, how this lease is extinct, and the matter was this, H. Leigh was seised of a house called the Marigold, and two other houses in London, and leased the said two houses to one Alice Cheap for 21 years, if she should live so long, and afterwards made a lease in reversion of the said two houses to the said Alice Leigh for 21 years, and afterwards he devised these two houses, and also the house called the Marigold to the said Alice Leigh for her life for to bring up his children, and died, after whose death the said Alice Leigh entred into the said house called the Marigold, and took the rents and profits of the said two houses for the space of 7 years, virtute testament. prædict. upon which declaration the defendants do demurr in law. Coke, the declaration is not good, and for the matter of it, it is clear, that by this devise unto Alice, her term in futuro is not extinct without her agreement to it: and also in this case the devise is not for the benefit of the said Alice Leigh, but of her children, and she hath liberty to accept or refuse the said estate by devise, and to make her election: and the plaintiff hath declared, that she hath accepted the rent reserved upon the lease of the said two houses for 7 years: and therein the declaration naught in divers respects. 1. He hath declared, that the said Alice Leigh hath accepted the rents of the said two houses, by reason of the reversion, & virtue testament. prædict. by 7 years, which is double and treble; for acceptance of a rent at one day, scil. one rent day is a sufficient election: as if the issue in tail, after the death of his ancestor, who hath made a lease not warranted by the statute, once accepts the rent, the lease is affirmed; but if in plea pleading, the acceptance of the said rent for 3 years be pleaded, the same clearly is not good; for no good issue can be taken thereupon. 2. This acceptance is not pleaded (as the law wills) and in the phrase of the law, viz. to which devise she agreed, but pleads the acceptance of the rent, which is matter of evidence, the which is not good pleading. As 5 H. 7. 1. One sweareth another to enter into his land, and the same to occupy for a certain time, the same is a lease in law; and if in pleading the party is to make his title to the same land, he ought to plead it as an expres lease, and not as a licence; and if the lease be traversed, he may give the licence in evidence. Tanfield, presently by the devise, the estate for life is in the devisee and the term extinct by it, and that is sufficient for the plaintiff: and if there was any disagreement the same is to be shewed on the other side. But if Alice had not notice of the devise, but dieth before notice, the same amounteth unto a disagreement. And as to the pleading of the agreement, I conceive its well enough pleaded, for if the lease had not been she might have entred, and then if such entry had been pleaded it had been good enough; and then because she could not enter by reason of the said lease, she hath taken the rents and profits which is an actual agreement, and as strong as an entry. Also we have shewed that she had entred into the house called the Marigold, of which the devisor died seised in possession, and that is a sufficient agreement for the whole, for it is an entire legacy. As 18 E. 3. Variance 63. If the reversion of three acres be granted, and the tenant for life attorneth for one [130] acre, it is a good attornment for the whole, for he cannot apportion his assent: and 2 E. 4. 13. If the executor deliver unto the devisee goods to him devised to redeliver them to him again at such a day, the same is a good assent, and execution of the devise, and the words of the re-delivery are void. Gawdy, the devise doth not vest the estate in the wife until agreement, where a man takes in a second degree, as in a remainder the same vests presently before agreement, but where he taketh immediately it is otherwise, and he held the agreement was well enough pleaded. Wray, presently upon the death of the testator, the free-hold rested in the devisee, and it was not an agreement, ut supra, by taking of the rents, yet the entry into the Marigold was a consent, and an execution of the whole legacy; and as to the rest he agreed with Gawdy. Clench, The free-hold rested presently in Alice Leigh before agreement, also the entry into the Marigold is an execution of the whole legacy to the devisee, for her entry shall be adjudged most beneficial for her; and that is, for all the three houses.

CLXXVII. STRANSHAM AND MEDCALFES CASE.

No Prohibition for Costs in the Spiritual Court.

Stransham libelled in the Court of the Bishop of Norwich against Medcalfe, for a portion of tithes, as farmor of the rectory of Dunham; the parson of Stonham came in and said, that the land, whereof the tithes are demanded, is in his parish of Stonham, and not in the parish of Dunham; and afterwards sentence passed against Stransham; who brought an appeal, and notwithstanding that, by the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 7. the Spiritual Judges may proceed to make process against the appellant for costs, for the principal matter, scil. parcel, or within such a parish or not, is tryable at the common law. Cook now prayed a consultation; and he confessed (ut supra) that the matter was tryable at the common law; but yet the costs were not given for the matter, but for the unjust vexation, and it was his suit and own act to prosecute the same in the Spiritual Court. Note, that Stransham had a prohibition to stay the proceedings for the costs, for in some cases the plaintiff himself, who libelleth, may have a prohibition, and that was the case betwixt Wignal and Brook. And afterwards a consultation was granted by the Court; for Stransham had begun the suit in the Spiritual Court in the principal matter, and therefore he cannot have a prohibition for the costs. But afterwards judgment was stayed, for the said statute speaks specially in case of tithes, where the Court hath jurisdiction, and here it hath not of the matter: but it was said, that if a consultation be once granted, the party shall never have another prohibition in the same cause, as it was holden in the case betwixt Hoskins and Jones.

CLXXVIII. CHAMBERLAIN AND THORPS CASE.

Recognizances in London, by Custom.

In debt upon a recognizance acknowledged in London, the plaintiff declared, that London is antiqua civitas, and that they have used time out of mind, &c. That the mayor take recognizances of any person being of full age, and not a feme covert, every day in the year, except Sundays, holy-days, counsel days, and days of quarter sessions and gaol-delivery; and declared further, how that the defendant such a day did acknowledge a recognizance to him, &c. Tanfield, The declaration is not good, but the custom, as it is laid is unreason-[131]-able, for thereby the mayor may take recognizances of idiots, men of non sanæ memoriæ, &c. nor is it restrained to any persons, or to any matters, but is too general, and therefore cannot be a good custom. Gawdy, The declaration is good notwithstanding the exception for want of averment, for that ought to come in on the other side. And as to the custom I conceive it is not good, for it is hard, that they should take recognizances of all persons, and for all causes which rise out of the city, and through the whole realm, as well as within the city: also none shall take a recognizance, but a Judge of record, and a recognizance cannot be taken by prescription. As to the first exception, Wray agreed with Gawdy; and as to the custom, he held the same to be good. For it hath been always allowed, and their customs are confirmed by Act of Parliament which makes them good. But if the custom be not confirmed by Parliament it is not good; also it is not an unreasonable custom, for it is for the benefit of the subjects to have security for their debts. Coke, The recognizance makes the debt local, and therefore 13 Rich. 2. bar. 649. Debt was brought in London upon a recognizance acknowledged in the Chancery at Westminster, and the writ was abated; for the recognizance makes it local there; and by him the custom stands with reason: the mayor is such a person who may take a recognizance, for he is a Judge of record. See 1 H. 7. 20. and Br. Recognizance 8. and the recognisee cannot have an action of debt upon this recognizance elsewhere than in London. For it is not a debt out of the jurisdiction of the Court, for the recognizance hath made it local. Wray, If the recognisor be within age, the same shall come in of the other side, and the plaintiff needs not shew the same in his declaration. Cooke, It was agreed betwixt Mabbe and Frend, that such a recognizance was good. Tanfield, The said recognizance was taken for orphans goods which is a thing within their jurisdiction. Clench, They of London cannot take recognizance of more than they can hold plea of it. Wray, They have used of long time to take recognizances, and their customs are confirmed by Parliament, and a more strange custom than this hath been allowed of here before, scil. that a feme covert shall sue an action alone without her husband, for she is a sole merchant; also they do certifie recognizances ore tenus. Gawdy, A feme covert may have an action within the city, but not here.

CLXXIX. PIERCE AGAINST HOWE.

Action upon the Case for Words.

An action upon the case for these words, Pierce hath taken a false oath in the Consistory Court of the Bishop of Exeter, and upon the declaration, the defendant did demur in law. And by Prideaux these words are actionable, although the perjury be supposed to be committed in the Spiritual Court; for he shall be excommunicated if he will not appear, and he shall do pennance in a white sheet, which is as great a disgrace as to be set upon the pillory. And it was ruled in an action upon the case betwixt Dorrington and Dorrington, upon these words, thou art a bastard, that an action lyeth, and yet bastardy is a spiritual matter, and there determinable; so for these words, thou art a pirate, an action lyeth, and yet piracy is not punishable by the common law, but in the Court of Admiralty. And these words, he hath taken a false oath, do amount to these words, he is forsworn. Wray conceived, that the words are not actionable, for there is a proviso in the statute of Eliz. cap. 9. that the said Act shall not extend to any Ecclesiastical Court, but that every such offendor shall be and may be punished by such usual and ordinary laws as heretofore have been, and is yet used, and [132] frequent in the said Ecclesiastical Court. Gawdy upon these words, an action doth not lye, for they are not pregnant of any perjury in the pl. for he may be meer passive in it: for if one of the Masters of the Chancery minister an oath unto any person, or any commissioners, &c. and the plaintiff sweareth falsly, a man may say, that the Master of the Chancery, or the commissioner hath taken a false oath, and yet he is not guilty of falsity. And afterwards Wray, mutata opinione, that the proviso in the said statute, is to this intent, that notwithstanding the said statute, such an offence may be enquirable and examined in the Ecclesiastical Court in such manner as it was before, but the same doth not take away or restrain the authority of the common law, but that such an offence may be here examined. And it hath been lately adjudged in the Star-Chamber, that such perjury was examinable there, for it is not restrained: and as to the latter exception, upon these words (he hath taken a false oath) it shall be intended actively, and not passively, and if so, the defendant ought to have so pleaded it, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CLXXX. PALMER and SMALBROOKS CASE.

In an action upon the case by Palmer against Smalbrook, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant had recovered a certain debt against A. and thereupon purchased a writ of capias against A. to take his body, and delivered the said capias to the plaintiff being then sheriff, and prayed a warrant for the serving of the said capias; and that he would name in it, one B. for special bailiff, and promised the plaintiff that if B. arrested A. by force of the said capias, and suffered him to escape, that he would not sue the plaintiff for the escape: and shewed further, that he made a warrant according to the said capias, and therein named and appointed the said B. his special bailiff, who arrested A. accordingly and afterwards suffered him to escape, and the defendant notwithstanding his promise aforesaid, sued the plaintiff, for the said escape. And it was found for the plaintiff; it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the promise is against the law, to prevent the punishment inflicted by the statute of 23 H. 6. upon the sheriff, and it is meerly within the statute, and so the promise void. Cooke, the same is not any bond or promise taken of the prisoner, nor of any for him, and therefore it is not within the statute, as it was in Danvers case. Wray, A promise is within the statute as well as a bond; but the statute doth not extend but where the bond or promise is made by the prisoner, or by any for him; and after judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CLXXXI. MOUNSON AND WESTS CASE.

Where Jurors shall be fined for Eating before Verdict; but it shall not make void the Verdict.

In trespass by Mounson against West, the jury was charged and evidence given, and the jurours being retired into a house for to consider of their evidence, they remained there a long time without concluding any thing; and the officers of the Court who attended them seeing their delay, searched the jurours if they had any thing about them to eat; upon which search it was found, that some of them had figs, and others pippins; for which the next day the matter was moved to the Court, and the jurours were examined upon it upon oath. And two of them did confess that they had eaten figs before [133] they had agreed of their verdict: and three other of them confessed, that they had pippins, but did not eat of them, and that they did it without the knowledge or will of any of the parties. And afterwards the Court set a fine of five pound upon each of them which had eaten, and upon the others who had not eaten forty shillings. And they would advise, if the verdict was good or not, for the jury found for the plaintiff. And afterwards at another day, the matter was moved, and Anderson was of opinion, that notwithstanding the said misdemeanor of the jury, the verdict was good enough, for these victuals were not given to them by any of the parties to the action, nor by their means, or procurement. Rhodes thought the contrary, because some of the jurors had eaten, and some not, contrary if all of them had eaten. See 14 H. 7. 1. A jury was charged and before their verdict, they did eat and drink, and it was holden that upon that misdemeanor, their verdict was void, for which cause a venire facias de novo was awarded. And it was prayed by the counsel of the defendant West, that the said misdemeanor so found by examination might be entred of record, which the Court granted. And afterwards at another day, the matter was moved again. And upon great advice and deliberation, and conference with the other Judges, the verdict was holden to be good notwithstanding the misdemeanor aforesaid. See 24 E. 3. 24. 15 H. 7. 1. 2 H. 7. 3. 29 H. 8. 37. and 35 H. 8. 55. where it was holden, where the eating and drinking of the jury at their own costs is but fineable, but if it be at the costs of the parties, the verdict is void. And see Book of Entries 251. The jurors after they went from the Bar ad seipsos of their verdict to be advised, comederunt quasdam species, sci. raisins, dates, &c. at their own costs, as well before, as after they agreed of their verdict; and the jurors were committed to prison; but their verdict was good, although the verdict was given against the King.

In dower brought by Hunt and his wife against Gilborn, the defendant pleaded, that the land of which dower is demanded, is of the nature of gavelkind, and that the custom is, that in dower of land of such nature the wife ought to be endowed of the moity of such land, tenendum quam diu non maritata remanserit, & non aliter; upon which plea in bar, the demandants did demur in law; and the Lord Anderson was of opinion, that the custom is strongly pleaded against the dower in the affirmative with a negative & non aliter, and that is confessed by the demurrer, that dower out of such land ought to be so allowed, and so demanded, and in no other manner. And by Periam, if those words (& non aliter) had not been in the plea, yet the demandants should not have judgment: for dower by moiety, & non maritatis, is as proper in case of gavelkind, as dower of the third part of land at the common law, and as the descent in such case of lands to all the sons. And in an ejectione firmæ upon that lease it was found for the plaintiffs; and it was objected in arrest of judgment, that the word gardianus, ought to be gardiani, for the colledge doth consist of many persons, and every person is capable, and it is not like unto abbot and covent: but the whole Court was of opinion, that the exception was not good, but that as well the lease as also the declaration was good, for the colledge is one body, and as one person: and so it is good enough gardianus.

CLXXXIV. WOODEN AND HAZELS CASE.

Nisi Prius. Essoin. Amendment.

In an ejectione betwixt Wooden and Hazel they were at issue upon, not guilty: and a venire facias awarded returnable, tres trinit. And the essoin adjudged and adjorned by the plaintiff until Michaelmas term; and at next Assises, the plaintiff not withstanding that essoin, and the adjorning of it procured a nisi prius, by which it was found for the plaintiff: and now it was moved in Court for the stay of judgment, because no nisi prius ought to issue in the case. For the essoin was adjudged and adjorned until Michaelmas Term by the plaintiff himself. And Leonard custos brevium said, that the words of the statute of Westminster 2 cap. 27. Postquam aliquis posuerit se in aliquem inquisitionem ad proximum diem allocet. ei esson. imports, that the essoin shall not be taken at the return of the process against the jury, although the jury be ready at the bar. Anderson was of opinion, that the awarding of the nisi prius ut supra, is but a misawarding of the process, and then relieved by the statute. And afterwards the case being moved at another day, the Court was clear of opinion, that no nisi prius ought to issue forth in this case, because that the plaintiff himself, by the adjorning of the essoin, cast by the defendant until Michaelmas Term, had barred himself of all proceedings in the meantime: but afterwards it was surmised to the Court on the plaintiffs part, that he the defendant was not essoined, for the name of the defendant is Edward Hazel, and it appeared upon the tryal that Edward Russel was essoined, but no Edward Hazel, and then if no essoin, no adjornment, and then the plaintiff is at large, &c. and may proceed, &c. But the remembrance of the clark was Edward Hazel, as it ought to be, and yet it was holden of no effect, being in another term: and afterwards the counsel of the defendant prayed, that the roll in hac parte, be amended according to the remembrance of the clark: but the Court utterly denied that, for no statute gives amendment, but in the affirmance of judgments, and verdicts, and not in defeazance of judgments or verdicts: and afterwards it was resolved by the whole Court, that judgment be entred for the plaintiff.

CLXXXV. SIR HENRY GOODIERS CASE.

Renouncing of an Executorship.

In an ejectione firmæ the case was, Sir Ralph Rowlet possessed of certain lands for years made his will, and ordained Sir Nicholas Bacon, Keeper of the great Seal of England, Sir Robert Catline, Lord Chief Justice of England, Justice Southcote, and Gerrard Attorney General his executors, and died. And afterwards the said persons named executors sent their letters to the chief officer of the Prerogative Court as followeth. Whereas our loving friend Sir Ralph Rowlet knight, lately deceased, made and ordained us executors of his last will, and whereas our business is so great, that we cannot attend the execution of the said will, therefore we have thought good to move the bearer hereof Mr. Henry Goodier one of the co-heirs of the said Sir Ralph to take upon him the execution of the said will. And therefore we pray you to grant letters of administration in as ample manner as the justice of the cause doth require; and afterwards an entry was made in this manner in the same Court, Executores testamenti prædict. executionem inde super se assumere distulerant & adhuc distarent: and upon that the said Goodier obtained letters of administration, and granted a lease to A. for years, of which the said Sir Ralph Rowlet died possessed. And afterwards Sir Robert Catline claiming as executor, granted the same term to another, &c. and all the matter of difficulty was, if this letter written by the executors be a sufficient renunciation of the executorship in law, so as the executors cannot afterwards claim or use the said authority, &c. 2. If the entry of the said renuntiation be sufficient and effectual. And it was argued by Ford, one of the doctors of the civil law, that as well the renunciation as the entry of it is good and sufficient in law, so that none of the executors could not after enter-meddle. And he said, that in their law, there is not any certain form of renuntiation, but if the meaning and intention of the renouncer appeareth, it is sufficient without any formal terms of renunciation: and he put many rules and maximes in their law to the same purpose, ego dico ne nollo esse hæredem, are sufficient words to such intent. Non vult hæres esse quin ad aliam transferre debet hæreditatem. Qui semel repudiavit hæreditatem non potest eam repetere. Quod semel placuit, post displicere non potest. Variatio non permittitur in contractibus. So that after the executors have signified to the officer of their Court their pleasure to renounce the execution of the will, they cannot afterwards entermeddle, nam interest reipublicæ ut dominia rerum sint in certo. And as to the entry of the said renunciation inter acta curiæ, distulerint et adhuc distarent, that was the error of the clark. And it is rule in our law, veritas rerum gestarum non vitiatur errore factorum. And the Lord Anderson demanded of the said doctor, how far those words hæres, et hæreditas did extend in their law, who answered, that hæreditas comprehends all chattels, as well real as personal, inheritance as well as chattels, for by their law, hæreditas nihilaliud est quam successio in universum jus quod defunctus habuit tempore mortis suæ. And afterwards the Court gave day to the other party to hear an argument of their side, but the case was so clear, that no professor of the civil law would be retained to argue to the contrary. And afterwards judgment was given, that the said renunciation, and the entry of it was sufficient.

CLXXXVI. LITTLETON AND PERNES CASE.

Debt.

Littleton brought debt upon an obligation against Humphry Pernes, who pleaded, that the said obligation was endorsed with this condition, for the performance of certain articles and covenants contained in certain indentures, by which indentures the plaintiff first covenanted, that Edward brother of Humphry should enjoy such land until the Feast of Michaelmas next following, rendring such rent at the end of the said term: and the said Humphry covenanted, that the said Edward at the feast aforesaid should surrender quietly and peaceably the said lands to the plaintiff, and that the said plaintiff to such of the said lands as by the custom of the country, tunc jacebant frisca, should have in the mean time free ingress, egress, &c. at his will and pleasure, with his servants, ploughs, &c. And as to that covenant, the defendant pleaded, quod permisit querentem habere intrationem & exitum, &c. in tales terras, quales tunc jacebant secundum consuetudinem patriæ, &c. And exception was taken to this plea, because he hath not shewed in certain, which lands they were which then did lie frecy, according to the custom of the country; which Anderson allowed of, but Walmsly strongly insisted to the contrary: and he confessed, that where an act is to be done, according to a covenant, he who pleads the performance of it ought to plead it specially; but as our case is, here is no act to be done, but a permittance as abovesaid, and it is in the negative, not a disturbance, in which case permisit is a good plea; and then it shall come on the other side on the plaintiffs part, to shew in what lands the defendant non permisit: which difference see agreed, 17 E. 4. 26. by the whole Court. And such was the opinion of the whole Court in the principal case.

Another exception was taken to it, that the defendant had covenanted, that his brother Edward should pay to the plaintiff the said rent; to which the defendant pleaded, that his said brother had payed to the plaintiff before the said Feast of Michaelmas, in full satisfaction of the said rent, three shillings, and that was holden a good plea; and upon the matter the covenant well performed, for there is not any rent in this case, for here is not any lease, and therefore not any rent. For if A. covenant with B. that C. shall have his land for so many years rendring such a rent, here is not any lease, and therefore neither rent. But if A. had covenanted with C. himself, it had been otherwise, because it is betwixt the same parties. And if the lessee covenant to pay his rent to the lessor, and he payeth it before the day, the same is not any performance of the covenant, causa patet, contrary of a sum in gross: another covenant was, that the said Humphry solveret ex parte dicti Edwardi 20l. to which the defendant pleaded, that he had paid ex parte dicti Humfridi 20l. and that defect was holden incureable, and therefore the plaintiff had judgment to recover.

CLXXXVII. GESLIN AND WARBURTONS CASE.

Devises. Error. Dower.

In an ejectione firmæ by Joan Geslin against Hen. Warburton and Sebastian Crispe of lands in Dickilborough in the county of Norf. Mich. 30. & 31 Eliz. rot. 333. upon the general issue, the jury found a special verdict, that before the trespass supposed one Martin Frenze was seised of the [137] lands, of which the action was brought in tail to him and his heirs males of his body, so seised suffered a common recovery to his own use, and afterwards devised the same in this manner: I give my said land to Margaret my wife, until such time as Prudence my daughter shall accomplish the age of nineteen years, the reversion to the said Prudence my daughter, and to the heirs of her body lawfully begotten, upon condition that she the said Prudence shall pay unto my said wife yearly during her life, in recompence of her dower of and in all my lands 12 pounds, and if default of payment be made, then I will that my said wife shall enter and have all my lands during her life, &c. the remainder ut supra, the remainder to John Frenze in tail, &c. Martin Frenze died, Margaret entred, the said Prudence being within the age of fourteen years; Margaret took to husband one of the defendants, John Frenze being heir male to the former tail brought a writ of error upon the said recovery and assigned error, because the writ of entry upon which the recovery was had, was præcipe quod reddat unum messuag. and twenty acras prati in Dickelborough, Linford Hamblets, without naming any town: and thereupon the judgment was reversed. And it was further found, that in the said writ of error, and the process upon it, no writ of scire facias issued to warn dictam Prudentiam ten. existentem liberi ten. præmissorum, ad ostendendam quid haberet, vel dicere sciret quare judicium prædict. non reversaretur: the jury further found, that the said Margaret, depending the said writ of error was possessed virtute testamenti & ultimæ voluntatis dict. Martini, reversione inde expectant. dictæ Prudentiæ pro ut lex postulat: and they further found, that six pound of the said twelve pounds were unpaid to the said Margaret at the feast, &c. and they found, that the said John Frenze, prætextu judicii sic reversat. entred into the premisses as heir male, ut supra. And so seised, a fine was levied betwixt John Frenze plaintiff, and one Edward Tindal, and the said Prudence his wife deforceants, and that was to the use of the said John Frenze: and that afterwards Humphry Warburton and the said Margaret his wife, brought a writ of dower against the said John Frenze, Edw. Tindal, and Prudence his wife, of the said lands: the said Edward and Prudence made default, and the demandants counted against the said Frenze, and demanded against him the moity of the third part of the said lands: to which the said Frenze pleaded, that the default of the said Edward and Prudence idem John Frenze nomine non debet, quia he said, that he the said John was sole seised of the lands aforesaid at the time of the writ brought, &c. and pleaded in bar, and it was found against the said John, and judgment given for the demandants of the third part of the whole land, and seisin accordingly: and that afterwards, 17 Eliz. the said Frenze levyed the fine to the said Tindal, to the use of the said Tindal and his heirs: and they found, that after the said feast the said Henry Warburton and Margaret his wife came to the messuage aforesaid half an hour before sun-set of the said day, and there did demand the debt of the said twelve pounds, to the said Margaret, by the said Martin Frenze devised to be paid unto them, and there remained till after sun-set of the said day, demanding the rent aforesaid, and that neither the said Tindal nor any other was there ready to pay the same.

And first it was moved, if the said yearly sum of twelve pounds appointed to be paid to the said Margaret were a rent, or but a sum in gross: and the opinion of the Court was, that it was a rent, and so it might be fitly collected out of the whole will, where it is said, that Prudence his daughter should have the land, and that she should pay yearly to Margaret twelve pounds in recompence of her dower, &c. But if it be not a rent, but a sum in gross, it is not much material to the end of the case:

for put case it be a rent, the same not being pleaded in bar, the dower is well recovered, and then when de-[138]-fault of payment is made, if the wife of the devisor shall have the whole, was the question: and the Court was clear of opinion, that by the suit and judgment in the writ of dower, the wife of the devisor had lost all the benefit which was to come to her by the devise: for the said rent was devised to her in recompence of her dower, so as it was not the meaning of the devisor that his wife should have both; and therefore by the recovery in dower she had dismissed her self of the rent, and by consequence of the benefit of the penalty for not payment of it.

CLXXXVIII. STEPHENS CASE.

Fines levyed to raise an Use.

In an ejectione firmæ the case was, that the father covenanted with one A. that in consideration of a marriage to be had betwixt the son of the covenantor and the daughter of A. that he before such a day would levy a fine, which fine should be to the uses of the son and daughter in tail for the joynture of the daughter. The fine is levyed accordingly to the uses aforesaid: the father dieth, but in the fine no mention is made of any marriage had: and upon that matter the Court was clear of opinion, that notwithstanding that the marriage was not accomplished, yet the estate tail was well enough executed in the son and daughter, for the fine without any consideration doth carry the uses, but without a fine such a consideration would not raise such an use without accomplishment of the marriage, for the consideration executed ought to produce the use. But in this case the uses are perfected by the fine, and A. upon the matter might have had covenant against the father to have the fine before the marriage.

CLXXXIX. BILLFORD AND FOXES CASE.

Billford brought an action of debt against Fox and his wife, executrix of one A. her former husband, process continued against them till the exigent, upon which the husband appeared, and put in a supersedeas for himself only, without making mention of his wife, and the case being moved to the justices, they demanded of the prothonotaries what was to be done, for the same is practise and a dangerous case for example. And it was answered by the prothonotaries, that the Court cannot remedy it, for now by the supersedeas the husband is sine die, for he shall not be driven to answer without his wife, as this case is, and he is impleaded, as in the right of his wife, and therefore the wife shall be waived, and the husband discharged. See the Book of Entries 187. Debt against the husband and wife, and process continued until the exigent, the husband rendred himself, and the wife was waive, and judgment given, quia videbatur justiciariis hic that the husband absque præfata uxore sua respondere non potuit, & ratoni dissonum sit, ipsum in curia hic, cum in eadem loquela respondere non potuit, ulterius detineri, ideo eat inde sine die. And so see 43 E. 3. 18. Detinue against the husband and wife, the wife is waive, and the husband rendred himself at the exigent. And the point of the action was upon a bailment to the wife, dum sola suit, and the husband was sine die, for he could not answer in such case without the wife. But at the last the justices advised thereof, and gave order that the supersedeas should by stayed without recording the appearance of the husband. And by Anthrobus one of the attorneys of the Court, that was the case of the Lady Malory and her husband, who [139] were sued in an action of debt, and process continued against them till the exigent, upon which the husband appeared and put in a supersedeas for himself, without speaking of his wife, and his supersedeas was not allowed, but process continued until out-lawry.

CXC. THE QUEEN AGAINST THE BISHOP OF CANTERBURY AND OTHERS.

Quare Impedit.

The Queen brought a quare impedit against the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Chichester, and the incumbent: and counted, that Ashburnham was seised of the advowson, and that he was out-lawed in an action personal at the suit of such a one, and shewed the whole out-lawry certain. And exception was taken to the count, because in the setting down of the out-lawry, the process is alledged to be returned by the sheriff, but the name of the sheriff is not there expressed. As to that, it was agreed by the Court that the truth is, that it is provided by the statute of 12 E. 2. cap. 5. that the sheriffs in their returns put their names to the said returns; but it is not requisite so to plead it, for the omitting thereof doth not make the return void, but the sheriff shall be amerced.

Another matter was objected, for that whereas the patron had pleaded one plea, and the incumbent the same plea by himself in bar. The Queen demurred in law in this manner, quoad seperalia placita per dictos, &c. seperaliter placitat &c. dicta Domina Regina necesse non habet, nec per legem terræ tenetur respondere: and the Court was clear of opinion, that the demurrer ought to have been several, upon the plea of the patron by it self, and upon the plea of the incumbent by it self.

The defendant pleaded, not guilty. And it was given in evidence on the plaintiff's part, a lease supposed to be made and forged; containing that the said abbot leased the said [140] site and all the demesne lands of the said manor, exceptis duobus seperalibus clausuris inde, &c. vocat. &c. And it was moved, if this evidence doth not maintain the issue. And it was holden by the whole Court, that the evidence was good enough, for it is not necessary to construe terras dominicales, omnes terras dominicales, for the lands not excepted are terræ dominicales, and so the count is satisfied by that evidence, &c.

And the Court was clear of opinion, that upon that matter the jury had found against the plaintiff, and it is not like the case which was here lately adjudged, that the obligor subscribed and sealed the obligation, and cast it upon a table, saying these words, this will serve, the same was held to be a good delivery, for here is a circumstance, the speaking of these words, by which the will of the obligor appeareth, that it shall be his deed.

The plaintiff by replication saith, that the defendant hath not paid unto him the said one hundred pounds, and so in that assigned the breach of the award, and upon the replication the defendant doth demur in law, because by the pretence of the award, the defendant had election either to pay the one hundred pounds at the day, or to find two sureties for the payment of it by twenty pounds per annum, &c. for so is the award in the disjunctive. But the Court was clear of opinion, that the replication was good, for although that the award be set down and conceived in words disjunctive, yet in law and in substance it is single, for as to the finding of suretis the award is void, and so nothing is awarded but the payment of the one hundred pounds at the day, to which the plaintiff in his replication hath fully answered: and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

See 15 E. 4. 5. by Cooke, scire facias and venire facias are all one in effect: another matter was moved on the part of Lacy; that this audita querela ought to be sued in the Chancery and not in the Common Pleas. H. 6. 1. was vouched, and there the case was, that in trespass against many, one of them made default after a plea pleaded; now a writ of enquiry of damages shall be awarded, but shall not issue forth until the plea of the others be tryed; and if the issue be tryed for the plaintiff, then the enquest who tryed the issue shall assess damages for the whole, and if for the defendant against the plaintiff, then the writ which was awarded to issue forth. See 44. E. 3. 7. Cook, It is in the discretion of the Court, to award such writ or not, which Wray granted, but it is usual here to grant the writ presently. CXCVIII. SMITH AND BUSTARDS CASE.

Conditions Expounded liberally for the Party who is to Perform it.

In an ejectione firmæ it was found by special verdict, that one S. was seised of lands, and leased the same to F. for 31 years, yielding and [142] paying twenty pounds per annum at the Font-stone in the Temple Church (the land it self lying in Essex) upon the Feasts of the Annunciation of our Lady and St. Michael, or within twelve days after either of the said feasts, by even portions, upon condition, that if the said rent or any part thereof be unpaid by the said space of twelve days, proxime post aliquod festorum vel dierum solutionis inde, that then it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter. T. assigned his interest to Bustard the defendant, at Michaelmas the rent is behind, and the twelfth day after the lessor demanded the rent at the Temple Church, and for not payment thereof re-entered. Towse, The re-entry of the lessor was not lawful, for by the said reservation the rent was not due until the twelfth day after Michaelmas, for before that he cannot have an action of debt, or distrein for it; and these words (dierum solutionis) are greatly material, for conditions are odious in law, and if the words thereof be doubtful, they shall be construed for the avail of him who is bound by it. As in the case of 28 H. 8. 17. If I be bound to you upon condition, to pay to you before the Feast of St. Thomas twenty pounds, if there be in one year two Feasts of St. Thomas, the latter feast shall be my day of payment. Wray, This rent is not due until the last day of the twelve days, for neither debt or distress lieth for it, then the day of payment mentioned in the condition ought to be the last day of the last twelve days, and dict. spatium shall be construed the same number of days, and not the same days. And at last it was resolved and adjudged, that the entry of the lessor was not congeable, but he ought to expect the latter day of the twelve days.

CXCIX. Sir George Farmer and Brooks Case.

Prescription. Grant of the King void.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff declared, that time out of mind, &c. there had been a manor called Tocester, and also there had been there a town called Tocester, and that all the messuages, lands and tenements within the said town had been holden of the said manor, and that he is lord of the said manor, and that he, and all those whose estate he hath in the said manor, have used to have a bake-house, and a baker, to bake white bread and house bread for all the inhabitants and passengers there, which bread hath been of a reasonable assize and price, and sufficient for all the inhabitants and passengers there (but doth not say wholsom.) and that time out of mind, &c. no person had or used any bake-house there, but by the appointment of the said lord of the manor for the time being: but that now the defendant had erected a bake-house unto the nusance of the plaintiff: the defendant shewed, that at the time he had set up his bake-house, there were three bakers there; and shewed, how that he was apprentice to the trade, and that at the time, he set up the said bake-house for the benefit of all persons, as it was lawful for him to do. Morgan, The matter only is, if this prescription made by the plaintiff be good or not: it is to be considered, if all prescriptions at the common law are one, and if all prescriptions be guided by one rule and line: and I conceive, that prescription at the common law is but one: and there are two points in prescriptions, usage and reasonableness, but they are not guided by one line, for some prescriptions are against strangers, and then there ought to be consideration and recompence; some prescriptions against privies, as between lord and tenant, for there the tenure is sufficient, & volenti non fit injuria. For the first, see 5 H. 7. 9. where in trespass the defendant doth justifie, that the place where, is his free-hold, and that he had a foldage, and that he, and all those whose estate he hath, &c. have used, that if any man depasture [143] his sheep with the sheep of the defendant for the day time, that it was lawful at night to take all the sheep and put them in his fold all the night, and in the morning to put them out, and the same was holden a good prescription, for which the plaintiff traversed the prescription: and for the other see 11 H 7. 13, 14. 21 H. 7. 40. betwixt lord and tenant, that every tenant for every pound-breach should forfeit three pounds; and see the Prior of Dunstables case, 11 H. 6. 19. Br. prescription 98. The prior declared that he and his predecessors time out of mind, &c. had had a market in D. every week one day, and that butchers and others, who sold victuals, should sell the same in the high street upon stalls of the prior to them assigned, and that the prior should have one penny for every stall every day; and shewed, that the defendant had sold in his house, whereby the prior had lost the advantage and profit of his stalls there. And the same was holden a good prescription. And on the other side, the defendant did prescribe, that he and all house-holders of D. had used to sell in their houses: the same was holden a naughty prescription. See 43 E. 3. 5. and see also suit ad moliendum, upon prescription without tenure, for peradventure he had not any will there before, and now it is an ease to the neighbours: vide Register 105. where the writ is, Cum querens habeat ratione dominii sui apud R. talem libertatem quod nullus in eadem villa uti debeat seu consuever. officio, sine mysterio tinctoris sine licentia ipsius querentis, the same is good by way of prescription, but is void by way of grant: and there the defendant is forbid to use the trade of his dye-house within his manor without his licence, which appeareth upon the writ which is in the register (which register was made by the judgment and advise of the grave Judges of the law) and there is remedy given for the like case, as in the case at the bar. And see F. B. 122. b. sectam ad furnam, and although such a manner of prescription should bind a stranger, yet here our case is stronger, for the defendant is our tenant. And Hill. 15 Eliz. Rot. 166. an express judgment was given in such case for the plaintiff. Buckley contrary, although here be a loss to the plaintiff, yet there is not a wrong, as the case in 12 H. 8. 3. If I have an acre of land adjoyning to your acre, and my acre is drowned, I may make a sluce to carry away the water, and although that by so doing your acre is drowned, yet I shall not be punished for it, because it is lawful for me to make a trench in my own land, and then if it be any nusance to you, you may make a trench in your ground, and so carry away the water until it come to a river or ditch. See the case 11 H. 4. of School-masters 200. for it is damnum absque injuria. And it is against the liberty of the common-wealth, that liberty of contracts be not free but restrained with priviledges to one only: vide 22 H. 6. 14. If one erect a mill neer to my mill, no action lieth against him, for it is for the use of the Kings subjects, and God forbid, that bread and the baking of it should be restrained to any special person, especially in a market town. And as to the case of the Prior of Dunstable, that is not to the purpose, for there he prescribed to have a market and the correction of it; and the fault there is not in the usurping of a market in nusance of the plaintiff, but because the defendant sold meat there secretly, so as the plaintiff could not have the correction of it. See 22 H. 6. 14. And it is not reasonable, that such profits be restrained and drawn from the publick good to the private commodity of any person. And he cited a case which was ruled in the Exchequer 9 Eliz. upon an information exhibited there by the burgesses of Southampton, that the King had granted to the burgesses of Southam. that all the sweet wines brought within the realm should be unladen at Southam. only: and it was agreed by Wray, that such a grant was not good to deprive the common-wealth of such a benefit, and to appropriate it to one, which might be profitable to many: and it was further said by the Lord Wray, [144] that if the King will grant by his letters patents, that A. B. shall be of counsel only with the defendant in the Chancery, and C. B. with the plaintiffs in the Exchequer Chamber, the same is no good grant, &c.

CC. PARK AGAINST MOSS AND HOW.

Trover and Conversion. Execution against an Administrator, after the Death of the Intestate of the Intestates Goods; good. Execution shall relate to the Date of the Writ.

In an action upon the case upon trover and conversion, the defendant pleaded that one A. recovered in debt against I. P. executor of E. P. one hundred pounds and twenty pounds in damages: the debt of the goods of the testator, and the damages of the goods of the testator, si quæ fuerint, and if not, of the goods of the executor. Upon which A. procured a fieri facias directed to the Sheriff of N. who made his warrant to the defendants to execute the said writ. And before execution I. P. died intestate, and administration was committed to the plaintiff, and the defendants afterwards did execution of the proper goods of I. P. and sold them, and deliver'd the money to the sheriff, which is the same trover and conversion, and averred that E. P. had no other goods. The plaintiff by replication said, that the sheriff upon return of the said writ of execution, returned as to the principal debt, that the goods of the testator were wasted, and as to the damages that he could not execute the writ, quia tarde.

Tanfield, I conceive that the false return of the sheriff shall not make the defendant punishable, for they did execution secundum exigentiam brevis, and delivered the monies coming thereby to the sheriff; and if they should not be excused it should be a great inconvenience, for it is necessary that the sheriff have inferior officers under him. As 37 H. 6. an executor named in the will, named one to take the goods of the testator in such a place, who did accordingly, and afterwards the executor doth refuse; yet the servant shall not be punished for that medling, 13 H. 7. 2. 21 H. 7. 23. Where it is said by Read chief Justice, that if the Baily delivereth the body of one who he hath taken in execution to the sheriff, he shall be excused, although that the sheriff doth not return the capias; and we have pleaded in this case, that we have delivered the mony to the sheriff, and that is confessed by the demurrer. Altham, I conceive that this execution after the death of the party is not good. For an administrator is another person, wherefore new process shall issue against him, as in all cases where the person is changed: 18 E. 3. If one sueth a certificate out of a statute, and before execution had he dieth, his executors shall not have execution upon that certificate, but first they ought to have a scire facias: and 28 H. 8. Dyer 29. Transcript of a fine is removed by the ancestor out of the Treasury into the Chancery, and comes in by mittimus to have execution, and the ancestor dieth before execution; now the heir cannot proceed without a new mittimus, for he is another person. See 36 H. 8. Br. Statute Merchant 43. and in our case here, at the time of the execution these are not the goods of the executor, for he is not in esse, and it ought to appear whose goods they are which are taken in execution: if lands be recovered against the father who dieth, and the heir be ousted by execution, without a scire facias against the heir, he shall have an assize. And 6 E. 6. Dyer 76. is our case. A. is condemned in debt, and a fieri facias is awarded, and before execution A. dieth intestate: the sheriff levyed the debt upon the goods of the intestate in the hands of the administrators; upon which the administrators brought error and reversed the execution. Tanfield, The execution is erroneous, but is not void, but shall stand until it be reversed by error. And it was holden by the whole Court, that the false return of the sheriff should not prejudice the defendants: at another day it was moved again, and it was holden, that the averment, that the goods put in [145] execution were the goods of the testator the day of the writ of execution sued, was a good averment without saying, the day of execution done, for the award of the writ of execution shall bind all his goods against whom the judgment was given which he had at the day of the writ of execution awarded. And it was also holden, that notwithstanding the death of the party against whom, &c. The sheriff might do execution of the goods of the dead in the hands of his executors, according to the opinion of Bryan. 16 H. 7. 6. and afterwards in the principal case judgment was given against the plaintiff.

Retorn of the Sheriff.

The case was; upon a latitat, the sheriff returned, that by vertue of the said process he had arrested the body of the defendant, and that such a day after, and before the return of the latitat, a habeas corpus came to him to bring the body immediately into the Chancery, which was done accordingly, and there the prisoner was discharged by the order of the said Court: and the same was holden a good return, for the sheriff is bound to obey the Kings writs, and to execute them, and he cannot compel the party to put in sureties to appear here: and the truth was, that the party was brought before the Master of the Rolls, and he did discharge him. And per Curiam, the same is no offence in the Court; but it was an ill act of the Master of the Rolls: for we oftentimes have persons here upon habeas corpus who are also arrested by process out of the Exchequer, or of the Common Pleas, but we will not discharge them before they have found sureties for their appearance, &c. and so the said Courts use to do reciprocally: and we cannot punish the sheriff, for the hebas corpus was first returnable before the latitat, but the party may have an action against the sheriff, but we will speak with the Master of the Rolls, &c. and afterwards baill was put in. But afterwards another exception was taken to the return: scil. a custodia nostra exoneratus fuit, which might be intended as to the cause in the Chancery only, and not for the cause here, for he hath not alledged, that he hath not alledged, that he was committed to any other in custody, and for that cause day was given to the sheriff to amend his return.

Astrey pleaded not guilty; and it was tryed in London, where the action was brought for the plaintiff; and it was moved by Cook in arrest of judgment, that here is a mis-trial, for this issue ought to be tryed in the county where the land is, because that the cause is local; but the exception was not allowed, for the action is well layed in London, and so the trial there also is good. Another exception was moved because the action ought to be against the sheriff himself, and not against the under-sheriff, for the sheriff is the officer to the Court, and all returns are in his name; and I grant that an action for any falsity or deceit lyeth against the under-sheriff, as for embesseling, rasing of writs, &c. but upon non feasans, as the case is here, the not retorn of the summons, it ought to be brought against the sheriff himself. See 41 E. 3. 12. And if the under-sheriff take one in execution, and suffereth him to escape, death lyeth against the sheriff himself. Another exception was taken because the declaration is that the said Astrey intendens & machinans ipsum querent. in actione sua prædict. prosequend. impedire, &c. did not retorn the said summons, but doth not say, tunc exist. under-sheriff. Snag, contrary, If a baily errant of the sheriff, take one in execution, and he suffer him to escape, an action lieth against the baily himself. And that was agreed in the case of a baily of Middlesex, and Sir Richard Dyer Sheriff of Huntington, and his under sheriff, who suffered a prisoner to escape, and the action was brought against the under-sheriff; for it may be the sheriff himself had not notice of the matter, because the writ was delivered to the under-sheriff, and he took a fee for it, and therefore it is reason that he shall be punished. As if a clerk in an office mis-enter any thing, he himself shall be punished, and not the master of the office, because he takes a fee for it. But if the retorn made by the baily be insufficient, then the sheriff himself shall be amerced; but in the principal case it is clear, that the action lieth against the under-sheriff if the party will, and such was the opinion of Gawdy and Clench: as to the other matter, because it is not alledged in the declaration, that the defendant was under-sheriff at the time, the declaration is good enough notwithstanding that, for so are all the presidents, and if the defendant were not under-sheriff the same shall come in of the other side. See 21 E. 4. 23. And afterwards in the principal case, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCIV. HEDD AND CHALONERS CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ by Hedd against Chaloner upon a demise for years of Jane Berd, it was found by especial verdict, that William Berd was seised in fee, and made a feoffment to the use of himself for life, and afterward to the use of his two daughters Joan and Alice in fee, and died, and Joan en-[147]-tred into the land, and by indenture by the name of Jane Berd, leased the same to the plaintiff for three years. And it was further found; that Joan intended in the feoffment, and Jane who leased, are one and the same person. Wray, It hath been agreed here upon good advice and conference with grammarians, that Joan and Jane are but one name. And women because (Joan) seems to them a homely name, would not be called Joan but Jane; but admit that they were several names, then he and Gawdy were of opinion, it should not be good: but afterwards, it was said by Gawdy, that this action is not grounded meerly upon the indenture, but upon the demise, and that is the substance, and the indenture is but to enforce it, sci. the lease, 44 E. 3. 42. Another matter was moved here, the remainder was limited to Joan and Alice in fee, by which they are joint tenants, and then when one of them enters, the same vests the possession in them both; then by the demise of Joan a moyety passeth only to the plaintiff. Wray, Here the term is incurred, and the plaintiff is to recover damages only, and no title at all is found for the defendant, and so there is no cause but that judgment should be given for the plaintiff: and thereupon judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCV. READ AND NASHES CASE.

Use cannot rise out of a Power.

In an action of trespass by Read and his wife against Nash, for entring into a house called the Dayry-house, upon not guilty pleaded, the jury found this special matter, Sir Richard Gresham Knight, was seised in fee of the mannours of I. and S. and of diverse other lands mentioned in his will, and 3 Edw. 6. devised the same to

Sir Thomas Gresham his son for life, the remainder to the first son of the said Sir Thomas Gresham in tail, the remainder to the second son, &c. the remainder to the third son, &c. The remainder to Sir John Gresham his brother; proviso, that if his son go about or made any alienations or discontinuance, &c. whereby the premisses cannot remain, descend and come, in the form as was appointed by the said will, otherwise than for joyntures for any of their wives for her life only or leases for 21. years, whereupon the old and accustomed rent shall be reserved, that then such person shall forfeit his estate. Sir John Gresham dyed; Sir Thomas Gresham his son built a new house upon the land, and, 4 Mariæ, leased to Bellingford for one and twenty years, rendring the antient rent. And afterwards 2 Eliz. he levyed a fine of the said mannours and of all his lands: and 5 Eliz. he made a jointure to his wife in this manner, sci. he covenanted with certain persons to stand seised to the use of himself, and his wife for their lives, and afterwards to the use of his right heirs, and afterwards, 18 Eliz. he leased unto Read and his wife for one and twenty years to begin presently (which was a year before the expiration of the said lease made unto Bellingford;) which lease being expired, Read entred. It was argued by Cook, that here, upon the words contained in the proviso, Sir Thomas had power and authority, not being but tenant for life, to make a lease for years, or jointure, and that upon implication of the will, which ought to be taken & construed according to the intent of the parties; for his meaning was to give a power, as well as an estate, otherwise the word (otherwise) should be void; and it is to be observed, that the parties interessed in the said conveyance were knights, and it is not very likely, that the said Sir Richard Gresham did intend, that they should keep the lands in their own manurance as husbandmen, but set the same to farm for rent. And it is great reason, although he willed [148] that the order of his inheritance should be preserved, yet to make a provision for jointure; and it is great reason and cause to his family to enable and make them capable of great matches, which should be a strengthning to his posterity, which could not be without great jointures, wherefore I conceive it reasonable to construe it so, that here they have power to make jointures for their wives. It hath been said, that no grant can be taken by implication, as 12 E. 3. Tit. Avow. 77. land was given to I. and A. his wife, and to the heirs of the body of I. begotten: and if I. & A. dy without heir of their bodies, betwixt them begotten, that then it remain to the right heirs of I. and it was holden that the second clause did not give an estate tail to the wife, by implication being in a grant, but otherwise it is in case of a devise, as 13 H. 7. 17. (and there is no difference) as some conceive (when the devise is to the heir, and when to a stranger) but these cases concern matter of interest, but our case concerns an authority: and admit that Sir Thomas hath power and authority to make this lease, then we are to consider if the jointure be good, for if it be, then being made before the lease, it shall take effect before, and the woman jointress is found to be alive. But I conceive, that this jointure is void, and then the lease shall stand, for an use cannot rise out of a power, but may rise out of an estate of the testator, and out of his will, 19 H. 6. A man deviseth, that his executors shall sell his reversion, and they sell by word, it is a good sale, for now the reversion passeth by the will. But an use cannot be raised out of an use, and a man cannot bargain, and sell land to another use than of the bargainee. And it is like unto the case of 10 E. 4, 5. The disseisee doth release unto the disseisor rendring rent, the render is void, for a rent cannot issue out of a right, so an use cannot be out of a release by the disseisee, for such release to such purpose shall not enure as an entry and feoffment: also here after that conveyance Sir Thomas hath built and erected a new house, and no new rent is reserved upon it, and therefore here it is not the ancient rent, for part of the sum is going out of the new house. But as to that, it was said by the justices, do not speak to that, for it appears that the rent is well enough reserved. Another matter was moved for that, that a year before the expiration of the lease made to Billington, this lease was made to Read for 21 years to begin presently from the date of it; although by the same authority he cannot make leases in reversion, for then he might charge the inheritance in infinitum. But yet such a lease as here is he might make well enough, for this lease is to begin presently, and so no charge to him in the reversion, as in the case betwixt Fox and Colliers, upon the statute of 1 Eliz. A bishop makes a lease for three years before the expiration of a former lease, to begin presently, it was holden a good lease to bind the successor, for the inheritance of the bishop is not charged above one and twenty years in toto. But if a bishop make a lease for years, and afterwards makes a lease for three lives, the same is not good, 8 Eliz. Dy. 246. Tenant in tail leaseth to begin at Michaelmas next ensuing, for twenty years, it is a good lease by the statute of 32 H. 8. so is a lease for 10 years, and after for eleven years, and yet the statutes are in the negative, but this power in our case is in the affirmative; and the inheritance is not charged in the whole with more than one and twenty years.

CCVI. KINNERSLY AND SMARTS CASE.

Debt upon a usurious Contract.

In debt upon a bond, the plaintiff declared, that the bond was made in London; the defendant pleaded, that an usurious con-[149]-tract was made betwixt the parties at D. in Stafford-shire, & that the obligation was made for the same contract. The plaintiff by replication saith, that the bond was made bona fide, & non pro usura, and that issue was tryed in the county of Stafford, and was found for the plaintiff: and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that that issue ought to be tryed in London, where the contract was made. Gawdy conceived, that the tryal is well, as 8 E. 3. 8. In debt upon an obligation in London, the defendant pleaded, that the obligation was made by duresse at York, the same issue shall be tryed at York. At another day the case was put more certain, scil. that the contract was made at W. in Stafford-shire, by which it was agreed, that for a horse and two tun of iron, the plaintiff should have for them and the forbearing of the mony for such a small time fifty pounds; whereas in truth they were but of the value of forty pounds, and that the said bond was made for the payment of the said fifty pounds. Cook, the issue is well tryed, for the ground of the matter is the usurious contract, and those of Stafford-shire may better know it than they of London. And according to this tryal it hath been before adjudged. H. 28. Eliz. rot. 209. betwixt Sybthorpe and Turner. And P. 31. CCVII. THE QUEEN AND BUCKBERDS CASE.

Quare Impedit. Damages in a Quare Impedit where by King, & e contra. Where only single damages. A man shall not assign for error, that which is for his advantage.

The Queen recovered against Buckberd in a quare impedit; and thereupon a writ of error was brought, and it was assigned for error, that the Queen, post tempus semestre, had judgment to recover damages for the value of the church for half a year. Cook, the same is no error, as it was adjudged, 7 Eliz. 236. See also 34 H. 6. 51. And these damages are not as damages, but as a penalty inflicted upon the disturbance. See Book of Entries, 483. The King in a quare impedit counted to his damage of forty pounds, and 484. 1000 li. and although, tempus semestre transierit, yet the King shall recover damages, but the value of the church for half a year, for the King at all times may present in his own right; for nullum tempus occurrit Regi. At another day it was moved by Fenner Serjeant, and he conceived, that here the Queen is not to recover damages, for she doth not present in her own right, for the incumbent had two benefices without qualifications, & therefore the first was void, and the lapse encurred, and therefore the Queen did present in the right of the Crown, and so is not verus patronus. 14 E. 3. Quare Impedit 54. The King shall not recover damages, although he count of damages, 3 H. 6. Damages 17. And as to the case of 7 Eliz. it doth not appear there, that the King did present by reason of his prerogative, and he shewed divers presidents, that the King shall not recover damages in such case. P. 7. H. 5. rot. 402. 2 H. 6. rot. 316. For the statute was intended to give damages to the very patron, and not otherwise. Cook, where the King presents by lapse he is verus patronus hac vice, as grantee of the next avoidance: vide T. E. 1. Quare Impedit 181. The King recovered damages in the case of a prior. Godfrey said, he had searched the roll of 7 Eliz. and there is more reported in the book than is in the roll, for judgment is given for the presentee, but as for the damages, the Court would advise of it. Gawdy, it is clear, that the Queen shall not recover double damages, for she cannot lose her presentment, quia nullum tempus occurrit, and because eo quod tempus semestre transierit, but she shall have single damages, for they are [150] given for the wrong and disturbance, and not for the presentment; and therefore the damages are well awarded. Wray, if the King be not within one part of the statute (as it is agreed as to the double damages) it is hard that he be within the other branch.

Popham Attorney General, the Queen ought to recover damages, but only single damages, but not double damages; and the words of the statute are general, therefore the Queen shall have the benefit of it, and of all statutes made for the benefit of the subjects, the King shall take advantage: the Statute of Gloucester gives damages in a writ of cosinage, Aiel and Besail, and the King brings an action upon the seisin of his ancestors, he shall recover damages, and in construction of statutes, the opinions of them which were next to the making of them is to be much respected: vide 19 E. 2. Rot. 90. 19 E. 1. Rot. 255, 231, 136. And always the King counts to his damage, &c. and that should be in vain, if he should not recover damages: and as to the presidents shewed to the contrary, that was the default of those clerks which the King had presented; and when in a quare impedit the King had prevailed; they contented themselves with the incumbency without regard of the damages: but if damages be not to be given, yet the judgment to recover the presentment is not erronious. And the judgment only as to the giving of damages shall be reversed, and the defendant in the quare impedit here shall not assign the same for error, because no damages are given, for it is for his advantage. And always where it is found for the Queen in a quare impedit, they enquire of the value of the church, which should be a frivolous thing, if the Queen should not recover damages. Gawdy of things transitorie the Queen may be disturbed, and if she be, wherefore shall she not recover damages? but the doubt is, if the intent of the statute be, if the party shall have single damages in any case: and here in this case the judgment is one and entire, and if it be reversed in part it shall be reversed in the whole; as in dower, the tenant pleads, that he is always ready, &c. the demandant shall have judgment to recover her dower, and a writ shall issue forth to enquire of the damages. And see also 17 E. 3. In an assize of darrein presentment, the plaintiff had judgment to have a writ to the bishop: and the assize was taken after for the damages: and in the mean time the defendant brought a writ of error, and it was holden maintainable, for they are several judgments; but it is not so here, for the entry is, Quod querens habeat bre. episcopo, & quia nescitur quæ damna, &c. for it is one judgment.

Wray, it is but one statute, and therefore it shall be construed with one construction, and it should be a strange construction, that the King should be within one part of the statute, and out of the other. And 34 H. 6. 3. the Kings Attorney could not have damages, which is a great proof and authority, that the judgment for damages in such case is error: the experience and usage of law is sufficient to interpret the same to us, and from the time of E. 3. until now, no damages have been given in such case. Thrice this matter hath been in question, 1. 3 H. 9. and the justices there would not give damages, 34. H. 6. there the councel learned of the King, could not have damages for the King. And 7 Eliz. there was no damages: and whereas it hath been said, that a man shall not have a writ of error, where judgment is given for his benefit, that if judgment be entred that the defendant be in misericordia, where it ought to be, capiatur, yet the defendant shall have a writ of error. And he conceived also, that here is but one judgment: Clench, the first president after the making of that statute was, that damages were given for the King in such case; but afterwards the practice was always otherwise, and that the said statute could not be construed, to give in such case damages, & the reason was because the justices took the law to be otherwise: and the King [151] is not within the statute of 32 H. 8. of buying of tythes, nor any subjects who buy any title of him: and here in our case, the Queen is not verus patronus but hath this presentment, by prerogative: and if title do accrue to the bishop to present for lapse, yet the patron is verus patronus.

At another day the case was moved, and it was said by Wray, that he had conferred with Anderson, Manwood, and Periam, who held, that the Queen could not have damages in this case, but Periam somewhat doubted of it. Gawdy, in 22 E. 4. 46. In dower the demandant recovered her dower, and damages by verdict, and afterwards for the damages the judgment was reversed, and stood for the lands. Clench, it shall be reversed for all, for there is but one judgment. And afterwards judgment was given, and that the Queen should have a writ to the bishop and damages. Popham, the Court ought not to proceed to the examination of the errors, without a petition to the Queen, and that was the case of one Mordant, where an infant levyed a fine to the Queen, and thereupon brought a writ of error, and afterwards by the resolution of all the Judges, the proceedings thereupon were stayed. And afterwards the heir brought a sur cui in vita, and demanded the house by the name of a messuage, whereas part of the house did extend into the land to which he had no right. And by Periam, the writ ought to be of a messuage with an exception of so much of the house which was erected upon the soil of the tenant, as demand of a messuage except a chamber: and it was argued by Yelverton, that the writ ought to abate, for if the demandant shall have judgment according to his writ, then it shall be entred quod petens recuperet messuagium, which should be erronious, for it appeareth by the verdict it self, that the demandant hath not title to part of it; and therefore he ought to have demanded it specially 5 H. 7. 9. parcel of land, containing 10 feet, 16 E. 3. Drue Serjeant contrary, and he confessed the cases put before, and that every thing shall be demanded by writ in such sort, as it is at the time of the action brought: as a writ of dower is brought of two mills, whereas during the coverture they were but 2 tofts; but at the day of the writ brought, mills; and therefore shall be demanded by the name of mills, 14 H. 4. 33. CCXI. Degory and Roes Case.

Debt. Deeds, when to take effect.

Degory brought debt upon an obligation against Roe, as heir to his ancestor, the defendant pleaded, that his ancestor by his deed did covenant with Sir W. Winter, and A. Marsh, to stand seised to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of the defendant and his heirs, and so he had nothing by descent. The plaintiff replicando said, non convenit; and it was found by special verdict that such a deed of covenant was made by the ancestor of the defendant, but the first use was limited to the covenantor and his wife, for their lives, &c. And that he delivered the same to I. S. as his deed, to the use of the said Sir W. Winter, and the said Marsh, if the said Sir W. Winter would agree to the same, and take the charge of it upon him, and if he will not agree, that then it should not be his deed, and [153] further found, that Sir W. Winter died before any agreement; and it was moved by Periam, if the same be presently the deed of the ancestor, or if it do not take effect till the condition be performed, sci. until Sir W. Winter hath agreed to it. See 14 H. 8. 17, 18, 19, 20, 23. And by Walmesly, the same is not the deed of the ancestor until Sir William hath agreed; but by Anderson and Periam, although Sir William Winter doth not agree to it, yet it is the deed of Roe; for although a deed be upon condition, ut supra, yet because he delivered it as his deed, and the condition is subsequent to it, it shall be taken for his deed, and the condition after shall be void, because repugnant: for although that in estates limited to men, the estate may be precedent, and the condition subsequent, and the not performance of the condition may destroy the estate, for the estate is always subject to the condition, yet it is not so in deeds, for being once the deed of the party, it can never cease to be his deed, after it is once delivered as his deed. Owen, although the same be the deed of the party, yet it is not well pleaded; & he conceived the issue is found against him, for the covenant is pleaded, to stand seised unto the use of himself for life, the remainder over: to which the plaintiff replicando saith, non convenit, so as the issue is, if any such deed of covenant was, and the jury find, that the covenant was to stand seised to the use of himself, and his wife, &c. so as it is not such a deed as the defendant hath pleaded, for other estates are limited by it, and therefore it shall not be intended the same deed. Periam, the same is not material, for the substance of the plea is, nothing by descent, &c. and it was adjourned.

CCXII. THE SCHOLARS OF ALL-SOULS IN OXFORD AND TAMWORTHS CASE.

Writ of Right.

In a writ of right by the Colledge of All-souls in Oxford against Tamworth: the writ was, Quod clamat tenere de nobis in liberam puram et perpetuam elemosinam. And exception was taken to it, because it ought to be in liberam eleemosinam, sans pura & perpetua, also it ought to be eleemosina, with a double e, and not elemosina, with a single e, but the exception was not allowed, for as to the first exception, it is but surplusage, and as to the other, it is the common course. Another exception was taken to the writ, because the words are quod clamat esse jus & hæreditatem suam, without saying in jure collegii. Anderson, the writ is good enough. If a parson plead that he is seised, he shall say in jure ecclesiæ, for he hath two capacities, and without such words here shall be intended seised in his own right; but if an abbot plead that he was seised, there needs not such words, for he hath no other capacity; so of dean and chapter, mayor and comminalty: and afterwards, the writ was awarded good, and that the tenant should answer over, &c. See Book Entries, 236, 237. It was also moved, if the colledge shall count of its seisin within 30 years, because that the corporation never dies, and then if he count of its own possession, the same is without limitation. And it was holden, that if the guardian of the colledge which now is, was ever seised, he ought to count upon a seisin within thirty years; but upon the seisin of his predecessor he ought to count of a seisin within 60 years as another common person; for the change of the teste of such a seisin, is as the dying seised, and descent of a common person.

The defendant pleaded that he was seised of the said advowson, as in gross, and presented one Maurice Sackvil, absque hoc, that the advowson was appendant. It was moved, that the defendant ought to traverse the presentment, and not the appendancy, especially as the cause is here, where they both present one and the same person: to which it was said that that doth not appear, for the defendant hath pleaded, that he presented Maurice Sackvil, but doth not say, prædict. Maurice Sackvil. so as it may be he is not the same person, but another. See 10 H. 7. 27. And by the opinion of the whole Court, the same cannot be a good plea, for an obligation cannot deraign a contract or an assumpsit afterwards made. And the truth of the matter was, that the obligation was made after the assumpsit, although that the plaintiff declared of an assumpsit made after. Debt. Administration.

Hawkins brought an action of debt against Lawse, executor of one A. for rent reserved upon a lease for years made to the testator. The defendant pleaded, fully administred, and upon the evidence it appeared, that the said A. made the defendant his executor, and [155] that he did meddle with the possession of divers goods of the testator, and so administred, and afterwards refused in Court; and that the administration was afterwards committed to one B. and that the inventory of the goods of the testator came to one thousand pounds: and it was given in evidence for the defendant, that he himself had paid certain debts, and that divers persons have recovered against the administrator divers sums of money amounting to one thousand pounds, & ultra; and it was moved, if that evidence did maintain the issue for the defendant, because that the defendant had pleaded, plene adminstravit, which implies an administration by himself. And now upon the evidence it appeareth, that the greatest part of the goods of the testator were administred by the administrator.

Periam, if that administrator (who in truth is but a stranger) pay any debts with the goods of the testator without commandment of the executor, the same is not an administration, and the executor cannot give such matter in evidence, to prove his plea of fully administred. Drew Serjeant, if an executor of his own wrong, meddle with the goods of the testator, and afterwards the administrator meddle with the residue and administer them; in debt against the executor, who pleads fully administred, if he can prove that he himself hath administred part, and the administrator the residue, the same is good evidence to maintain his issue. Periam, it may be so there, but here in our case, the defendant is the very executor, and he hath administred, in which case afterwards he cannot refuse; and so the administration is not well committed, and is granted without cause; and he to whom the administration is committed is a mere stranger, and what he did was without warrant; and therefore it is no administration to prove the issue: and then the whole matter by direction of the Court was found by special verdict. And by Periam, in this case an action may be brought, either against the executor of his own wrong, or the administrator, but not against both of them joyntly. See 21 H. 6. 8. by Yelverton and Portington. Periam, if the testator mortgages a lease for years and dyes, and the executors redeem it with their own monyes, the said lease shall be assets in their hands, for so much as the same is worth, above the sum which they have paid for the redemption of it.

CCXVI. IVORY AND FRYES CASE.

It was ruled by the whole Court in this case: that if A. make B. his executor, and B. makes C. his executor and dieth, and a debt is due to A. the first testator, if C. bring an action of debt for the said debt, as executor to B. the writ shall abate: it was moved, if an infant within the age of one and twenty years be made executor, and administration is committed, durante minore ætate, in whose name the action shall be brought, in the name of the infant, or the administrator. Periam, if the will be proved before the administration be committed, the action shall be brought in the name of the infant executor.

CCXVII. READ AND JOHNSONS CASE.

Assumpsit.

In an action upon the case betwixt Read and Johnson, the plaintiff declared that where the defendant was endebted to him, he assumed [156] to pay it: and upon non assumpsit pleaded, this special matter was found, that the plaintiff leased unto the defendant certain lands for years, rendring rent eight pounds per annum, and that the said rent was behind for three years, and that the defendant was not otherwise endebted to the plaintiff, nor made any other promise but the contract upon the reservation of the rent: and by the clear opinion of the whole Court, the action doth not lye, because he hath a proper action, scil. an action of debt, in which no wager of law lyeth.

CCXVIII. WRIGHT AND THE BISHOP OF NORWICHES CASE.

Quare Impedit.

In a quare impedit betwixt Wright and the Bishop of Norwich, it was moved, if the King hath title to present for lapse, and presents; and his clerk is admitted and instituted, but not inducted, and dyeth before induction; if now the King shall present for the said lapse, because the church was not full against the King. And the justices were all clear of opinion, that the King might repeal such presentment before induction: and as to the principal matter, the Court seemed to incline, that the King might present again.

CCXIX. WHISKON AND CLEYTONS CASE.

Devises.

In an ejectione firmæ, upon a special verdict found, the case was this, that C. was seised in fee, and devised the same to Solomon Whiskon his god-son after the death of his wife; and if he fail, then he willed all his part to the discretion of his father, and died; Solomon survived, the father being dead before without any disposition of the land. Gawdy was of opinion, that upon those words, that the father had a fee-simple, as, I will that my lands shall be at the disposition of I. S. by these words, I. S. hath a fee-simple, quod Periam concessit; and they amount to as much as, I will my land to I. S. to give and sell at his pleasure: and by Windham and Periam, there is no difference where the devise is, that I. S. shall do with the land at his discretion, and the devise thereof to I. S. to do with it at his discretion.

CCXX. MICH. 31 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A. leased to B. for years, and before the expiration of the said term leased the same by indenture to a stranger to begin presently, and the first lessee committed wast. A. brought an action of wast against the second lessee, and declared upon a lease made for years without speaking of the indenture. And Gawdy Serjeant demanded the opinion of the Court, if the defendant might safely plead no wast? And they conceived, that it should be dangerous so to do. Then it was demanded if the defendant plead, that the plaintiff had nothing tempore dimissionis, whereof he had counted, if the plaintiff might estop the defendant by the indenture, although he had not counted upon it, and if such replication be not a departure. And it seemed to Periam, and Leonard, custos brevium, that it was not, for it is not contrary to the declaration, but rather doth enforce the declaration.

[157] CCXXI. MICH. 31 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Walmesley Serjeant demanded the opinion of the Court upon this matter. Land is given to husband and wife in special tail (during the coverture) they have issue, the husband is attainted of treason and dieth, the wife continues in as tenant in tail, the issue is restored by Parliament, and made inheritable to his father, saving unto the King all advantages which were devolved unto him by the attainder of his father, the wife dieth. And he conceived, that the issue was inheritable, for the attainder which disturbed the inheritance is removed, and the blood is restored, and nothing can accrue to the King, for the father had not any estate forfeitable, but all the estate did survive to the wife, not impeachable by the said attainder. And when the wife dieth, then is the issue capable to enherit the estate tail. Windham and Rhodes, prima facie, thought the contrary, yet they agreed, that if the wife had suffered a common recovery, the same had bound the King.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff declared, that he had delivered to the defendant, diversa bona ad valentiam 10 li. the defendant in consideration thereof did promise to pay to the plaintiff the debt owing, pro bonis prædictis, and did not shew, that the defendant bought the said goods of the plaintiff, and so it doth not appear that there was any debt; and then a promise to pay it, is meerly void, which was agreed by the whole Court.

CCXXIII. SEAMAN AND BROWNINGS CASE.

Debt.

George Seaman brought debt upon a bond against W. Browning and others, executors of one Marshal; the condition was, that where the said Marshal had sold certain lands to the plaintiff, if the said plaintiff peaceably and quietly enjoy the said lands against the said Marshal, &c. and assigned the breach in this, that the said Marshal had entred upon him, and cut down five elms there, upon which the parties were at issue; and it was found, that A. servant of the said Marshal, by commandment of his said master, had entred and cut, &c. in the presence of his said master, and by his commandment, for he is a principal trespassor: and it was so holden by the Court.

CCXXIV. Mich. 31 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

If the Kings tenant by knights service dieth, his heir within age, and upon office found the King seiseth the body and land, yet the heir during the possession of the King may sell the lands by deed enrolled, or make a lease of such land, and the same shall bind the heir notwithstanding the possession of the King; but if he maketh a feoffment in fee, it is utterly void, for the same is an intrusion upon the possession of the King; but where the King by office found is entituled to the inheritance, as that his tenant dieth without heir, whereas it is false, for which the King seiseth, in such case the tenant of the King, before his ouster le mayne, cannot make a lease for [158] years, or sell the land by deed enrolled: the case depended in London before the Judges of the Sheriffs Court. The King, by colour of a false office, which doth falsely entitle him to the inheritance, is seised of certain land; he who hath right, leased the same for years by deed indented; and then an ouster le mayne was sued, and he enfeoffed a stranger; and it was holden, that the lease should not bind the feoffee, although it was by deed indented, for the feoffee is a stranger to the indenture, and therefore shall not be estopped by it. 18 H. 6. 22. A stranger shall not take advantage of an estoppel, and therefore shall not be bound by it: as if one take a lease for years by indenture of his own lands, the same shall bind him, but if he dieth without heir, it shall not bind the lord in point of escheat.

CCXXV. Gibbs Case.

Trover and Conversion.

Gibbs brought an action upon the case upon trover and conversion of a gelding; and the case was, that one P. had stolen the said horse, and sold the same unto the defendant in open market, by the name of Lister, and the said false name was entred in the toll-book. And it was holden clear by the Court, that by that sale the property was not altered.

CCXXVII. Kimpton and Dawbenets Case.

In trespass, the defendant did justifie by a grant of the land, where, &c. by copy: the plaintiff by replication saith, that the land is customary land (ut supra) and claimed the same by a former copy: the defendant by rejoynder saith, that well and true it is, that the lord may grant copies in possession at his pleasure, and also estates by copy in reversion, with the assent of the copy-holder in possession, but all estates granted by copy in reversion without such assent, have been void. It was argued, that this custom is not good, for it is not reason, that the lord in disposing of the customary possessions of his manor should depend upon the will of his tenant at will; and the same is not like to the case of attornment, for there the attendancy is to be respited, which is not to be done here, for the copy-holder in possession shall continue attendant to his lord, notwithstanding such a grant in reversion: and see for the unreasonableness of the custom, 19 Eliz. 357. in Dyer, Sallfords case: it was moved on the other side, that the custom was good enough; and 3 H. 6. 45. was vouched, that every freehold of a manour upon alienation might surrender his land, &c. It was adjourned.

CCXXVIII. MARRIOT AND PASCALLS CASE IN A WRIT OF ERROR.

Misnosmer of a Corporation.

Robert Marriot one of the Attorneys of the Court of Exchequer, brought an ejectione firmæ against Mary Pascal, and upon not guilty pleaded, the jury found a special verdict, containing this matter; viz. that King H. 7. the fourth year of his reign erected and founded an hospital, by the name of the Master and Chaplains of the Hospital of King Henry the seventh, de le Savoy: and afterwards in the time of Queen Mary, the said master and chaplains being seised, &c. leased the same to the defendant by the name of W. Holgil master of the hospital, Henrici nuper Regis Angliæ septimi vocat. Le Savoy & Capellani Hosspitalis prædict. And afterwards by the former name (which was in truth their very name) leased the same to Thomas Fanshaw, who leased the same to the plaintiff: and if the lease aforesaid made unto the defendant in form and by the name aforesaid, be a good lease, was all the question. And this matter was argued, and many times debated in the Exchequer, as well at the Bench as at the Bar. And it was agreed by Clerk and Gent, Barons there, that the said lease made to the defendant was utterly void by reason of the misnosmer. Manwood argued strongly to the contrary; and judgment was given for the plaintiff, according to the opinions of the said two Barons: upon which the defendant brought a writ of error in the Exchequer-chamber before the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. And now this term it was argued by Godfrey on the part of the defendant: three variances have been supposed in this lease from the original foundation of the hospital in the name of it. 1. The name of the foundation is the master of the hospital, &c. Et Capellani dict. Hospitii; so that in the lease rests part of the name (Capellani) as not immediately annexed to master, as it is in the name of the foundation. But as to that point, the justices assistants delivered Godfrey from the arguing of it, as of a variance not material: another variance hath been objected, because that in the foundation the words are Hospitalis Regis H. 7. and in the lease the words are, Hospitalis Henrici septimi nuper Regis Angliæ, so as this word (nuper) is surplusage, and ex abundant. But of that matter he was also discharged, because it is no variance in substance: but all the difficulty rested in this, that in the foundation the words are (de le Savoy) and in the lease (vocat. Le Savoy). And he put the case 4 Mar. Dyer. 150. The colledge of Eaton was incorporated by the name of Præpositi & Collegii regalis S. Mariæ de Eaton juxta Windsor, and a lease is made by the name Præpositi & Sociorum Collegii regalis de Eaton, and that was holden a void lease: and I confess that in the names of corporations, we ought to resort to the foundation of the corporations, for the name of a corporation is as a name of baptism, & ought to be as precisely observed, but that ought to be intended in matter of substance, and not otherwise, vide 10 Eliz. Dyer. 278. The Dean & Chapter of Carlile was incorporated by the name of Decanus & Capitul. Ecclesiæ Cathedralis Sanct. & individuæ Tri. Carl. and they make a lease by the name,

Decanus Ecclesiæ Cathedralis S. Trin. in Cant. et totum Capit. de Ecclesia prædict. And the same was holden a good lease, notwithstanding that variance, which is not in substance of the name. And the Dean and Chapter of Peterborow was incorporated by the name of Decanus et Capitul. Ecclesiæ Petriburgensis, and they made a lease by the name Decanus et Capitulum Ecclesiæ de Peterborow, and holden good enough, because the variance was not in any matter of substance: and he cited the case betwixt Croft and Howel, 20 Eliz. Plow. Com. 537. The Cooks of London were incorporated by the name of Masters, and Governors, [160] and Commonalty of the Mistery of Cooks, and they by the name of Master and Wardens of the said Craft and Mistery of Cooks made a conveyance, and it was holden that the variance assigned in the abundance of this word (Craft) in the conveyance, which was not in this corporation, was not any material variance, but only matter of surplusage, for (Craft) and (Mystery) are all one, and of one sense, &c. And so in the principal case, the Hospital de le Savoy, and the Hospital vocat. Le Savoy, sound the same, and in effect do not differ. And as it was said by the Lord Chief Baron in his argument in the Court of Exchequer, in this case, four things are only to be respected in the name of a corporation: first the name of the living persons who are the corporation, as in our case the master and chaplains: secondly, the house in which they are resident, and make their aboad: thirdly, the name of the founder: fourthly, the place upon which the place of their aboad is built and erected. And if these four matters are sufficiently set down, although not formally, it is good enough. It hath been objected, that the Hospital de le Savoy, and the hospital vocat. Le Savoy, do much differ, for de le Savoy, implieth the demonstration of the place, but vocat. Le Savoy, trencheth only to the name, as if the Dean & Chap. de Pauls in London. make a lease by the name of Dean and Chap. of St. Paul vocat. London, so if the Master and Fellows of Trinity Colledge; in Cambridge make a lease by the name of Master and Fellows of Trinity Coll. vocat. Cambridge, such leases are utterly void. I do well agree those cases, for the dean and chapter is not all London, but part of London, and therefore cannot be called or said London; and so Trinity Colledge is but part of Cambridge, and therefore cannot be called Cambridge; but here in our case, the hospital is not parcel of the Savoy, but the whole Savoy is the hospital, and there is not any part of the Savoy, which is not the hospital; but if Trinity Colledge in Cambridge make a lease by the name of Master and Fellows Collegii vocat. Trinity Colledge in Cambridge, it is a good lease: and he put a difference, where the word in the name of the corporation, which precedes (de) is all one and of the same nature with the word which follows (de) and where on the contrary, as in our case, the word which precedes (de) is hospital, and the words which follow (de) are Le Savoy, are all one and the same thing, so as the hospital and Savoy are all one and the same, and therefore may be well called Le Savoy, and also (de) and (vocat.) in construction are the same, & so our lease is good enough: and it is found by verdict, that this hospital was erected upon the manor of Savoy, and thereupon it is now commonly called Le Savoy, without any addition of hospital, for as it was called Savoy before it was erected into an hospital, so it is also called after the erection; and true it is that the misnaming of a corporation in any small thing shall abate a writ, for there is only delay, yet it is not of force in a conveyance, unless the misnaming be in a point material. Coke to the contrary, the variance from the true name of a corporation which shall prejudice a conveyance ought to be in matter of substance, for variance in matter of form and circumstance will not hurt it, sed parum differunt quæ reconcordant. And first it is to be confessed, that the name of a corporation is as the name of baptism, which admits of no variance, and therefore it is said 38 E. 3. 15. by Knivet, when a man founds a chantry or a house, &c. it ought to bear such a name as his founder hath given to it, for that is its proper name. And so it hath been reported by Bendloes, Serjeant, 4 and 5 Phi. and Mar. that it was holden for a positive law, by all the Judges of England, that the mistaking of the name of a corporation in any matter of substance, makes the conveyance utterly void, for a name is given to a corporation upon the foundation, and that by the same name they shall implead and be impleaded, but that ut idem nomen, et sub eodem nomine sint habiles ad perquirend. & concedend. to be impleaded, and to implead, but that is to be meant idem re, for [161] it is not necessary, that it be idem litera, for, qui hæret in litera hæret in Cortice, but if it be idem re with the foundation it is well enough. And therefore it hath been adjudged, that where the colledge is incorporated by the name of Masters and Fellows Collegii St. & individ. Trin. in Cantabrig. and they make a lease by the name of Collegii Trin. this is good enough, for the word Trinity, implies, and imports St. & individ. And therefore such variance was holden not material. But here in our case is a variance in substance, betwixt the name given to the hospital upon the foundation, and the name usurped in the lease. And the same will clearly appear upon my argument, viz. if the name given to this hospital upon the foundation of it, and the name usurped in the lease be not unum in sensu. (not in your private understanding as private persons, but in your judicial knowledge upon the record quod coram vobis residet, as Judges of record) then this lease is void; for although you as private persons, otherwise than by record, know, that the Hospital of Savoy, and the hospital vocat. Le Savoy, are all one hospital; you ought not upon that your private knowledge to give judgment, unless also your judicial knowledge agree with it; that is, the knowledge which is out of the records which you have before you: but if the name given upon the foundation, and the usurped name be not idem sensu in your judicial knowledge; and you cannot otherwise conceive the identity of these two hospitals, nor make any construction to imagine it but by the record, for the record is your eye of justice, and you have no other eye to look unto the cause depending before you, but the record; and to this purpose he cited the case of 7 H. 4. 108. where a man killed another in the presence of a Judge travelling on the way where the murther was, and at the next assises in the said county before the same Judge, another man is indicted of the same murder, and arraigned, and convicted by verdict; in that case, the Judge he ought not to carry himself according to his private knowledge, which he hath of the said fact, sci. to acquit the prisoner, but all that he can do is to respite judgment against the party, because of the Judges knowing to the contrary, and to make further relation thereof to the King for his pardon of grace for the party. So in our case, it may be that you in your private knowledge know, that the Hospital de le Savoy, and the hospital vocat. Le Savoy, is all one, but that doth not appear unto you upon the record which is before you, but it may be for any thing that appears in the record, that they are diverse and several hospitals; therefore the lease is void. To prove my minor, I do say that this word (de) as here, de Savoy, designes a place, so as by this word (de) the place is become parcel of the name, but this word vocat. locum non denotat, but only the very name, and so here is a material difference and variance, for here by pretence of the name in this lease, there is not any place of the corporation in the name, but the corporation is transitory, which cannot be, for a corporation especial consisting of many persons, as corpus aggregatum ought to have a certain place of their abiding, or otherwise it cannot be discerned by the law, and it is but a mathematical thing, and nothing else but a fiction, and they cannot be otherwise considered in law, but as they are circumscripti within the bounds of their house, and they cannot appear but by attorney: and if a prebend consist upon a manor, & afterwards the manor by writ be demanded against the prebend, and he lose it, here he hath lost his name, because he hath lost that which giveth to him his name, by contrary by Blake, for his estate and place in the chapter, doth remain unto him: and secondly, for another cause here is a material variance, for this word (de) supposeth a place before the foundation, as the place upon which the hospital was erected was called Le Savoy before the erection of it; but these words (vocat. le Savoy) supposeth the same name Savoy was imposed upon the foundation. Thirdly, these words (de Le Savoy) do import the [162] hospital to be part of the place, which before the foundation, was called Savoy, but vocat. trencheth only to all the place called Savoy: fourthly, (de le Savoy) is matter of certainty and verity; (vocat.) but matter of reputation. And so for these four reasons, great difference in substance appeareth betwixt the very name of the hospital, and the name usurped in the lease. And he cited the case 29 Eliz. in the Kings Bench betwixt Hall and Wingat. King E. 4. did incorporate the Dean and Cannous of Windsor, by the name of Dean and Cannons of the King and Queens Free Chappel of Saint George the Martyr within his castle of Windsor; and made a lease by another name, viz. by the name of Dean and Cannons of the King and Queens Free Chappel there, and the same lease was made in the time of Queen Mary, and it was holden that the same was a variance in substance. And he cited another case 30 Eliz. in the Kings Bench betwixt Fisher and Boys. A colledge in Oxford was by Act of Parliament incorporated by the name of Warden and Scholars, Domus sive Collegii Scholarium de Merton in universitate Oxoniæ, and they make a lease by the name Custus Domus sive Collegii de Merton in Oxonia, and Scholares ejusdum Domus, and the variance in that point, because in the very name of the foundation, Domus sive Collegii Scholarium de Merton, and in the usurped name in the lease Domus sive Collegii de Merton, was holden material, and the true name was de Merton, in universitate Oxoniæ, but in the lease, in Oxonia only, leaving out the word university, and the same was holden a variance in substance: for Oxford doth contain in it self the university, which is a thing of it self, and also the city is a thing by it self: and it may be that there is a colledge in the city called Merton Colledge, and also a colledge which is called by such name in the university: and so in our case, it may be that there is an hospital which is called the Savoy, and also another which is Le Savoy, and then the Court shall be enveigled, &c. And in the end of the argument, the Lord Treasurer, which was the Lord Burleigh, put this case, which was adjudged in his time. The Guild of Boston in Lincolnshire, was incorporated by the name of the Guild of St. Nicholas, and our Lady the Virgin Mary, &c. and they made a lease for years by the name of the Guild of our Lady the Virgin, and St. Nicholas, Religione quadam motus ut nomen Virginis Mariæ, in charta dimissionis, proponeretur nomini Sancti Nicholai; and it was adjudged a void lease for the variance aforesaid. And afterwards at another day, the matter was argued by Atkinson, on the part of the defendant. Starkey 21 E. 4. 56. saith, that the name of the corporation, by which it is incorporated, is as properly the name of a corporation, as the name of baptism is the name of a single and individual person, and yet there is a great difference in the misprision of them, for the name of baptism doth consist of one word, and therefore it cannot admit of any variance, but the name of a corporation doth consist of many words: in which case variance in words which are supplyed by other words, and not in matter of substance, shall not hurt; and that hearing is notably discussed in the case of the Cooks of London, cited before by Godfrey. Four things are to be considered in the name of a corporation, which are of the essence and substance of it: first, the persons incorporated, of which the corporation doth consist, as here the Master and Chaplains de Savoy: secondly, the quality of the corporation, as dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty: thirdly, the patron or founder, as, Merton Colledge; fourthly, the place whereupon the corporation is founded. As to this last point, see 31 E. 3. 28. and fo. 15 by Knivet; and see 6 Eliz. Dyer. King H. 8. erected the Dean and Prebend of Chester, by these words, scil. Decanus et Capit. Cathedralis Ecclesiæ Christi, et Sanctæ Mariæ Virginis Cestriæ. And afterwards by letters patents, gave to the said dean and chapter, certain manors, Decano et Capitulo Ecclesiæ Cathedralis Christi et Sanctæ Mariæ Virginis, by us before erected, and [163] that grant was holden void, because that the place where, &c. is not expressed in the said letters patents, for Cestria is the local place of the incorporation. And as to the objection made upon the word (de) that this word (de) goeth only to part, and (vocat.) goes to the whole, and so here is a great difference; the same is not any reason, for this word (de) extends as well to the whole as to part. As a rent granted percipiend. de manerio de D. the same shall go to the whole mannor, 5 E. 4, 5. ad respondendum I. Abbati Monasterii Sanctæ Mariæ Ebor. where the obligation was, Abbati Monasterii Sanctæ Mariæ Virginis extra Muros Ebor. and yet the writ was well enough, notwithstanding such variance, a fortiori, in the case of a conveyance and interest. And I conceive that it appeareth in the record, that the lease given in evidence of the part of the defendant, is a lease made by the master and chaplains of the Hospital of the Savoy, for it is found by verdict, that King Henry the eighth, upon the site of the manour of Savoy, betwixt the house of the Bishop of Worcester, and the house of the Bishop of Carlisle, and that it was incorporated by the name, &c. and that afterwards Q. Mary by her letters patents, reciting the foundation of the said hospital called the Savoy, and lamenting the ruin of it, being surrendred in the time of E. 6. did restore it, by which it appeareth, that the Hospital of the Savoy, and hospital called the Savoy is one and the same in respect of the bounds, foundation, and situation. And in the whole course of our books, no case can be found, that any corporations have avoided their own acts, by such cause of misnosmer, nor of such matter, is any question moved in our books. And as to that which hath been objected, that although the Judges in their private knowledge well know, that the house de le Savoy, and the house vocat. the Savoy, be all one, yet they ought not to judge according to such their private knowledge, but according to their judicial knowledge, which they have out of the record. I conceive, that the Judges of necessity ought to use in such cases their private knowledge; as where misnosmer of a colledge was objected, viz. Trinity Colledge in Cambridge, where it was incorporated by the name of Masters, Fellows, and Scholars Collegii Sanctæ & individuæ Trin. and they made a lease by the name of Master, Fellows, and Scholars of the Colledge of Trinity, the same was holden a good lease, for the Judges knew well enough, that this word Trinity doth imply in it self sancta & individua, but by what knowledge? not by their judicial knowledge, but by their private knowledge; so in our case. Egerton the Queens Sollicitor to the contrary: It is a clear and plain rule in our law, that the name of a corporation is as a name of baptism to a natural man, and if there be any difference, I conceive, that the law requires more strict certainty in the name of a corporation than in the name of any particular person, for a name is more necessary to a corporation than to another, for when an infant is born, he is presently a perfect creature, before any name given him, and the giving of the name is not a matter of necessity, but of policy for distinction, &c. but in the case of a corporation, the name is the substance and essence of it, and it is not a body before a name be imposed upon it, and therefore in the charters of corporations there is always such a clause, per tale nomen implacitare, & implacitari, acquirere, &c. possint, and without their name, they are but a trunk: but contrary in the case of particular persons; land is given primogenito filio J. S. It is a good gift, although there be no name of baptism: lands given omnibus filiis J. S. is a good name of purchase, and if a man be bound in an obligation by a wrong or false name, and in an action brought upon the same, if it appeareth upon evidence, that he was the same person which sealed and delivered it, the same is sufficient, and the bond shall bind him. But contrary in the case of a corporation, and we cannot give any thing to a corporation by circumstances, inducing or imply-[164]-ing their true name. As land given to the first hospital which the Queen shall found, although that it sufficiently appear, that such a one was the hospital which the Queen first founded, yet the gift is void: and he denied, that the four things remembred before are necessarily required in the name of a corporation: for if the Queen will found a corporation, as an hospital by the name of Utopia, the same is well enough without any respect of persons, place, founder, &c. set forth in the charter. And also other things besides the said four things are sometimes necessary in a corporation; as if the Queen will found an hospital by the name, quod fundavimus ad roga. Christ. Hatton Cancel. Angliæ. all the same ought to be expressed in every grant made by, or to the said hospital; so quod fundavimus ad relevandum pauperes; and sometimes the number of the persons incorporated, if it be in the charter, it ought to be used in all acts made by or to them; as master and six chaplains; so as the said four things recited before, are not so necessary in the name of a corporation, but so far forth as they are parcel of the name given to them in the charter of the corporation: and in our case, 1. The place de le Savoy, is part of their name, set down in the charter of their corporation, and therefore the same ought to be precisely followed. And he relyed much upon the argument of Cook in noting material variances betwixt de le Savoy, and vocat. Le Savoy, as (de) signifies part (vocat.) the whole; (de) signifies the place de facto, vocat. implyes reputation only. There is a place near unto Whitehal called Scotland, because that the Kings of Scotland, when they came to our Parliament used there to reside, as the Lord Treasurer affirmed. There is also a place in England called Normandy, and another called Callais, and also a place here in Westminster called Jerusalem, but these, Scotland, &c. but by reputation, so as what difference is betwixt the very Scotland and Scotland here, &c. such and so much difference is there betwixt the Hospital de le Savoy, and the hospital vocat. the Savoy. And as to that which hath been objected by Atkinson, that that word (de) signifies as well the whole as part, as a rent granted percipiend. de manerio de D. I confess that this word (de) hath many significations, so that we ought not only to consider what (de) signifyes of it self, but rather to observe what goes before, what follows; for, as saith Hillary, intelligentia verborum ex causa dicendi sumenda est. And this word (de) is a material word in the name of a man, therefore also in the name of a corporation, 26 H. 6. 31. Assise by I. de S. and it was found for him, and afterwards the tenant in the assise brought attaint, and in the rehersal of the assise in the writ of attaint he was named I. S. leaving out (de) and for that cause the writ did abate, 28 E. 3. 92. Debt brought by the executor of John Holbech, where the testament was John de Holbech, and for want of this word (de) in the writ, it was abated by award. And in a præcipe quod reddat against Mich. de Triage, he cast a protection for Michael Triage, leaving out (de) and for such variance the protection was disallowed, and a petit cape awarded. And although the Judges in their private knowledge know well enough, that the Hospital de le Savoy, and the hospital vocat. the Savoy, be all one, yet in point of judgment they ought not otherwise receive information, but out of the record, and therefore, if sufficient matter be not within the record to inform the Judges of the identity of the said two hospitals, their private knowledge shall not avail. And he cited the cause of the Lord Conniers, where the parties being at issue, and the jury charged for the trial of it; it was found by special verdict, that a fine was levyed of the lands in question, &c. but nothing found of the proclamations, whereas in truth, the proclamations were as well given in evidence as the fine, but found, quod finis levatus fuit prout per recordum finis ipsius, in evidenciis ostensum, plenius apparet, now in that case, although that the justices, knew well enough, that the proclamations were expressly given in evidence, yet be-[165]cause it did not appear unto them as Judges out of the record, they would not give judgment, according to the truth of matter, but according to the record, for they cannot take notice if the proclamations be in the chirographers office or not: but after it appeared unto them, that that defect was but a slip of the clerk, they commanded the record to be brought before them, and the proclamation to be inserted in the verdict; and then gave judgment according to the verdict reformed as aforesaid. And as to the case of Martin Colledge cited before, he said he was of councel in it, and he knew, that the judgment there was not given for the cause alledged by Cook, but because that this word, scholars, was left out in the lease. And he held, that if in the principal case, the lease had been, that the master and chaplains of the house called the Hospital of the Savoy, &c. it had been well enough, for there is, de le Savoy. See a good case 36 H. 6. fitz. brief. 485. by Danby a corporation cannot be tenants of lands, but according to their corporation, and their foundation, and their very name, nor they cannot be impleaded, nor take lands by a wrong name, nor purchase, nor dispose of their possessions, but by their true name. And afterwards the matter was compounded by the mediation of friends: and Fanshaw had the lease for a certain sum of mony. See now Cook 10 Report, the case of the Mayor and Burgesses of Lyn Regis: see also Cook 11 Report. 18. Doctor Arays case, to this purpose.

CCXXIX. HUSON AND WEBBS CASE.

Debt lieth not against Executor of an Administrator.

Robert Huson brought an action of debt against Anne Webb, administratrix of Joan Webb, and declared of a contract without specialty, the defendant pleaded, that she had fully administred, and it was found against her. And now it was moved for the defendant, that upon the matter an action of debt doth not lye against the executor or administratrix; which was granted by the Court. But the doubt was, if now, forasmuch as the defendant by pleading the plea above, hath admitted the action, she shall now take advantage of the law in that point. For the reason why this action doth not lye against an executor or administrator is, because the testator himself might have waged his law, if he had been impleaded upon it; and by intendment of law the executor or administrator cannot have notice of such a debt, or of the discharge of it; but now by answering to the declaration as above, the defendant hath taken notice of the debt, and in manner confessed it. And by Rhodes and Anderson, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, because it is apparent to the Court, that the action doth not lye. And by Anderson, if judgment be entred against the administratrix, in such an action upon nihil dicit, the Court, ex officio shall give judgment against the plaintiff. Periam and Windham doubted at the first that the defendant by her plea had admitted the whole matter upon the specially administred, pleaded, and had taken notice of the debt, 41 E. 3. 13. 46 E. 3. 10, 11. 13 E. 4. 25. 13 H. 8. CCXXX. HAMBLEDEN AND HAMBLEDENS CASE.

Devises.

The case was, William Hambleden the father of the plaintiff, and the defendant, was seised of the lands, &c. And by his will devised to his eldest son, Black Acre; to his second son, White Acre; and to his third Green Acre, in tail. And by his said will further willed, that in case any of my said sons do dye without issue, that then the survivor be each others heir, the eldest son dieth without issue, &c. It was moved by Gawdy Serjeant, that the second son shall have Black Acre in tail, and he cited the case 30 E. 3. 28. propinquioribus hæredibus de sanguine puerorum, for the construction of such devises. Walmesley argued, that both the surviving brothers should have the said Black Acre, for the words of the devise are quilibet supervivens, which amounts to uterque; and the Court was in great doubt of this point. And they conceived, that the estate limited in remainder to the survivor, &c. is a fee-simple by reason of the words, each others heir; and also they conceived, that both the survivors should not have the land, for the same is contrary to the express words of the devise, the survivor shall be each others heir, in the singular number; see 7 E. 6. Br. Devise 38. A man seised of land hath issue three sons, and deviseth part of his lands to his second son in tail, and the residue to his third son in tail: and willeth, that none of them shall sell the land, but that each shall be heir to the other, the second son dieth without issue, the same land shall not revert to the eldest son, but shall remain to the third son, notwithstanding the words each shall be heir to the other.

CCXXXI. SLYWRIGHT AND PAGES CASE.

[S. C. Goldsb. 101. See Kennedy v. Lyell, 1885, 15 Q. B. D. 495.]

Maintenance.

An information was in the Common Pleas, by John Slywright against Page, upon the statute of 32 H. 8. of Maintentance; and declared that the defendant took a lease of one Joan Wade, of certain lands, whereas the said Joan was not seised nor possessed thereof according to the statute; and upon not guilty, the jury found this special matter, that Edmund Wade was seised, and made a feoffment in fee thereof unto the use of himself, and of the said Joan, who he then intended to marry, and the heirs of the said Edmund. The marriage took effect, Edmund enfeoffed a stranger, who entred, Edmund died, Joan not having had possession of the said land after the death of Ed. her husband nor being now in possession, by indenture demised the said land to the defendant for years, without any entry or delivery of the indenture upon the land, the said defendant knowing the said Joan never had been in possession of the said land, and also the defendant being brother of the half blood of the said Joan. The first question was, if the lease being made by one out of possession, and not sealed or delivered upon the land, and so not good in law as to pass any interest, be within the statute aforesaid. And the whole Court was clear of opinion that it was: for by colour of this pretended lease, such might be undertaken & advanced to the trouble & disquiet of the possession, for amongst the vulgar people, it is a lease, & it is a lease by reputation: another matter was moved, because that the entry of the wife is now made lawful by 32 H. 8. and then she might well dispose of the land.

[167] But as to that, it was said by the whole Court, that the meaning of the statute was to repress the practises of many, that when they thought they had title or right unto any land, they for the furtherance of their pretended right conveyed their interest in some part thereof to great persons, and with their countenance did oppress the possessors: and although here the lease was made by the said Joan to her brother of the half blood, yet by the clear opinion of the Court the lease is within the danger of the statute, and yet in some case the son may maintain his father, & the kinsman his kinsman. And note in this case it was holden by the justices, that of necessity it ought to be found by verdict, that the defendant knowing that the lessor never had been in possession. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCXXXII. BROKESBY AGAINST WICKHAM AND THE BISHOP OF LINCOLN.

Quare Impedit.

In a quare impedit, the plaintiff counted, that Robert Brokesby was seise of the advowson, and granted the next avoidance to the plaintiff, and Humphrey Brokesby, and that afterwards the church became void, and after during the avoidance, Humphrey released to the plaintiff, and so it belongs to him to present. And upon this count the defendant did demur in law. For it appeareth upon the plaintiffs own shewing, that Humphrey ought to have joined with the plaintiff in the action, for the release being made after the church became void, is not of any effect, but utterly void. So is the grant of the presentment to the church where the church is void, for it is a thing in action. See the Lord Dyer, 28 H. 6. 26. 3 Ma. Dyer 129. 11 Eliz. Dyer 283. Walmsley Serjeant put this case, Two joint-tenants of a rent, the one may release to the other, but if the rent be behind, now the one cannot release his interest in the arrearages to the other. And afterwards in the principal case judgment was given that the release was void.

CCXXXIII. SAMMES AND PAYNES CASE.

Tenant by the Curtesie.

In an ejectione firmæ the case was, That the mother being seised of certain lands, had issue two daughters, and by indenture covenanted with diverse persons to stand seised to the use of Eliz. her eldest daughter in tail, upon condition that the said Eliz. should pay to her other daughter within a year after the death of the mother, or within a year after the said other daughter should come to the age of eighteen years, 300l. And if the said E. should fail in the payment of the sum aforesaid, or should dye without issue before such payment, then to the use of the said second daughter in tail, the mother dieth, E. taketh husband, hath issue, & afterwards dieth without issue before the day of payment. And if the husband shall be tenant by the curtesie or not, was the question, and by the Court cleerly, he shall be, for as to the condition of payment of the said sum, the same is not determined; for she died without issue before the day of payment, scil. before the second daughter came of the age of eighteen years; & as to that there is no condition broken; & as to the point of dying without issue, the same is not a condition [168] but rather a limitation of the estate, and the same is no more than what the law saith, and the estate tail in Elizabeth is spent and determined by the dying without issue; and doth not cease, or is cut off by any limitation; and afterwards judgment was given for the tenant by the curtesie. And by Anderson, if a feoffment be made to the use of I. S. and his heirs, until I. D. hath done such a thing, and then unto the use of I. D. and his heirs, the thing is done, and I. S. dieth, his wife shall be endowed.

CCXXXIV. BOWRY AND POPES CASE.

Nusance.

Bowry brought an action upon the case against Pope, and declared, that in the time of E. 6. the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, leased two houses in Saint Martins in London to Mason for sixty years, the which Mason, leased one of the said houses to one A. and covenanted by the indenture of lease with the said A. that it should be lawful for the said A. his executors, and assigns to make a window in the shop of the house so to him assigned, and afterwards in the time of Queen Mary, a window was made accordingly, where no window was there before. And afterwards A. assigned the said house to the plaintiff. And now Pope having a house adjoining, had erected a new building super solum ipsius Pope ex opposito the said new window, so as the new window is thereby stopped. The defendant pleaded, not guilty, and it was found for the plaintiff; and it was moved for the defendant in arrest of judgment, that here upon the declaration appeareth no cause of action, for the window, in the stopping of which the wrong is assigned, appears upon the plaintiffs own shewing to be of late erected, scil. in the time of Queen Mary, the stopping of which by any act upon my own land, was holden lawful and justifiable by the whole Court. But if it were an antient window time out of memory, &c. there the light or benefit of it ought not to be impaired by any act whatsoever; and such was the opinion of the whole Court. But if the case had been, that the house & soil upon which Pope had erected the said building, had been under the estate of Mason, who covenanted as abovesaid, then Pope could not have justified the nusance, which was granted by the whole Court.

CCXXXV. LEE AND MADDOXES CASE.

Covenant. Countermand. Request.

William Lee brought a writ of covenant against Richard Maddox, & Isabel his wife, and declared, that one Errington the first husband of the said Isabel was endebted to the plaintiff in 20l. and that one Georgy Ashley was also endebted to the said Errington, in the like sum of 20l. And also that the said Errington made and constituted the said Isabel his executrix, and died, and afterwards the said Isabel by indenture dum ipsa sola fuit, reciting that whereas her said late husband was endebted to the plaintiff in the sum aforesaid, and whereas the said George Ashley was also endebted unto her said late husband in the like sum, now for the better satisfaction of the plaintiff for his said debt, she appointed and constituted the plaintiff, atturnatum suum irrevocabilem ad petendum, levandum, recuperand. & recipiend. ad usum suum proprium in nomine dict. Isabellæ de dicto Georgio, the said twenty pounds; and the said Isabel covenanted, quod ipsa ad requis. dict. quer. de tempore in tempus, adjuvaret, & manu teneret quamlibet & omnes sectam & [169] sectas quam vel quas dictus querens commensaret & prosequeretur in nomine dictæ Isabellæ, against the said George, to the use of the plaintiff non existendo non-suit voluntarie, or making any discontinuance, release, revocations, Anglice, countermand, without the assent of the plaintiff: and declared further, that the plaintiff had brought a suit against the said George for the said debt, and shewed all in certain. And that the said Isabel, depending the said suit, had taken to husband the defendant without the assent of the plaintiff: and if by this marriage the said suit be countermanded was the question. And first it seemed to the Court that the declaration was insufficient, because there is not any request surmised in the declaration, for the words of the covenant are, quod ipsa ad requisitionem, &c. So as it seemed to the justices, that the plaintiff ought to have notified to Isabel that he had commenced such suit, otherwise the action will not lye. And also the Court was of opinion, that here is not any countermand, for by the taking of the husband the writ is not abated, but only abateable; and therefore the plaintiff ought to have shewed, that by the taking of the husband, the writ by judgment was abated, otherwise it is not any countermand, and then no cause of action.

CCXXXVI. SALWAY AND LUSONS CASE.

Matthew Salway brought a writ of right against Luson, and the writ was, messuag. & 200. acr. jampnor. & brueræ. And exception was taken to the writ, because jampnor. & brueræ, are counted together, where they ought to be distinguished severally, as so many acr. jampnor. and so many acr. bruer. although it were objected on the part of the demandant in the maintenance of the writ, that in the register the writ of right is reditu unius libræ of cloves and mace together, without distinction or severance. And it was said, that in a writ of right we ought to follow the register, and therefore a writ of right was abated, because this word (pomarium) was put in the writ, for in the register there is no such writ, because the word gardinum comprehends it: but in other writs as writs of entry, &c. it is otherwise. See the case of the Lord Zouch, 11 Eliz. 353, in a writ of entre sur disseisin mille acr. jampnor. & bruer. But this exception was not allowed, for it may be that jampnor. & bruer. are so promiscuous that they cannot be distinguished: vide 16 H. 7. 8. 9. The respect the justices had to the register, was such, as they changed their opinions and conformed the same to the register. Another exception was taken to the writ, because thereby the demandant doth demand duas partes custodiæ del Hay in the forrest of C. And the Court was of opinion that the writ ought to be officium custodiæ duarum partium de Hay, &c. and not duas partes custodiæ, as advocationem duarum partium ecclesiæ, and not duas partes ecclesiæ. Another exception, because the writ was, duas partes, &c. in tribus dividend. where it should be diviz. for dividend. is not in any writ, but only in a writ of partition; and by Windham the parts of this office are divided in right, which the Court granted. Another exception was taken, because that in the writ it is not set down in what town the forrest of C. is, so as the Court doth not know from whence the visne should come: for no venire shall be de vicineto forestæ, as de vicineto hundredi, & manerii; and the same was holden to be a material exception. Another exception was taken, because a writ of right doth not lye of an office: for at the common law an assise did not lye of it, but now [170] it doth by the statute of West. 2. cap. 25. for it was not liberum ten, but the party grieved was put to his quod permittat: and of this opinion was the whole Court.

The Queen was seised of a manor whereof Bl. acr. was holden by copy in fee; the Queen leased Bl. acr. to B. for one and twenty years, who assigned the same to the copyholder, who accepted of it. The Queen granted Bl. acr. to C. in fee, the term expired, C. entred, and his entry was holden to be congeable, for by acceptance of the sam term, the customary estate was determined, as if the copyholder had accepted it immediatly from the Queen: it was also holden by the Court, that a lease for years under the Seal of the Exchequer may be pleaded, and that without making mention of the commission, by which the Court of Exchequer is authorized to make such leases: and so are all the presidents as well in this Court as in the Court of Exchequer. And whereas the Court was upon the point of giving their judgment, it was objected by Shuttleworth Serjeant, that here is pleaded a bargain and sale of land, without, saying pro quadam pecuniæ summa: and he stood much upon the exception, and the Court also doubted of it, and demanded of the prothonotaries what is their form of pleading: and by Nelson Chief Prothonotary; these words pro quadam pecuniæ summa, ought to be in the pleading. Scot Prothonotary contrary. Anderson conceived it was either way good, but pro quadam pecuniæ summa is the best: and so Leonard custos brevium conceived. And the opinion of the justices was, that a bargain and sale for dives causes and considerations is not good without a sum of money. And by Windham, Bargain and sale pro quadam pecuniæ summa, although no money be paid, is good enough, for the payment or not payment is not traversable: and by Periam, If pro quadam pecuniæ summa, be not in the indenture of bargain and sale, yet the payment thereof is averrable. CCXXXVIII. BEDEL AND MOORES CASE.

Action upon the Case for not performing an Award. Error. Damages.

Bedel brought an action upon the case against Moore in the Kings-Bench, and declared, that the defendant did assume to perform the award of J. S. and assumed also, that he would not sue execution upon a judgment which he had obtained against the plaintiff in an action of account, &c. And shewed further, that the award was made, &c. (which award in law was utterly void) and that the defendant had not performed the said award, and also that he had sued execution against the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded non-assumpsit, and it was found for the plaintiff, and judgment given accordingly. Upon which Moore brought a writ of error in the Exchequer-Chamber, upon the statute of 27 Eliz. and assigned error, because the plaintiff had declared upon two breaches, whereas for one of them there was not any cause of action, for the award is void in law, & then no breach could be assigned in that; and then when the jury hath assessed damages intirement for both breaches, whereas for one there was not any cause of action by the law, the verdict was void, & then the judgment given upon it reversable; for it is not reason that the plaintiff have damages for such matter for which the law doth not give an action.

of the award so much, and for the suing forth execution so much, then the judgment had been good, and the damages assessed for the not performance, &c. void. Manwood Chief Baron: The verdict is well enough, for here the whole assumpsit is put in issue, and there is but one issue upon the whole assumpsit, but if several issues had been joined upon these several points of the assumpsit, and both had been found for the plaintiff, and damages assessed entirely for both breaches, then was the judgment reversable, for being several issues the jury might have assessed the damages severally, scil. for each issue several damages, but here is but one issue, and it was the folly of the defendant that he would not demur in law upon the declaration for one part, scil. the not performance of the award, and traverse the other part, scil. the suing of the execution, or the assumpsit of it. And in our case, it may be that the jury did assess the damages for the suing of the execution without any regard had to the performance of the award: and note that the verdict for assessing of the damages was in these terms, scil. et assidunt damna occasione non performationis assumpsionis prædict. &c. And Cook who was of councel in this case, put this case. The late Earl of Lincoln, Admiral of England, brought his action of scandalis magnatum, and declared, that the defendant exhibited in the Star-Chamber against him a bill of complaint, containing diverse great and infamous slanders: viz. that the said earl was a great and outragious oppressour; and used outragious oppression, and violence against the defendant, and all the country also. The defendant pleaded, not guilty, and found for the plaintiff, and assessed damages, and it was moved in stay of judgment, first, that the plaintiff had declared upon matter of slander for part, for which an action lyeth, and for part not. For the oppression supposed to be made to himself, no action lieth, because every subject may complain for wrong done unto him, and although he cannot prove the wrong, an action will not lye. But as for the oppression done to others by the supposal of the bill an action lieth, for what is that to him, he hath not to do with it, for he is not pars gravata. But because the jury assessed damages entirement, the judgment was arrested, for the cause aforesaid. And afterwards in the principal case, the last day of this term, judgment was staied.

CCXL. SIR ANTHONY SHIRLEY AND ALBANYES CASE.

Assumpsit. Suspension of Rent.

In an action upon the case, upon assumpsit by Sir Anthony Shirley against Albany, the plaintiff declared, that he was seised of the manor of Whittington for the term of his life, the reversion to the Earl of Arrundel in fee, and so seised, surrendered all his estate to the said earl, who afterwards by his deed granted a rent-charge of 40l. per annum out of the said mannor to him, and afterwards conveyed the manor to the defendant in fee. And afterwards, 27 Maii 22. Eliz. upon a communication betwixt the plaintiff and the defendant concerning the said rent; the defendant did promise to the plaintiff, that if the plaintiff would shew unto the defendant any deed, by which it might appear that he ought to pay to the plaintiff such a rent, he would pay that which is due, and that which should be due from time to time. And further declared, that 27 April 27 Eliz. he shewed unto the defendant a deed, by which it appeared that such a rent was granted, and due; and for eighty pounds due for the two last years, he brought the action. The defendant pleaded, that after the said promise, and before the shewing of the said deed, scil. 14 Jan. 22 Eliz. the plaintiff entred into the said land, and leased the same for three years. The plaintiff replicando said, that 1 Decem. 27 Eliz. the defendant did re-enter, upon which they were at issue, and it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved by Glanvil Serjeant, that by the entry the promise was suspended, and being a personal thing once suspended, it is always extinct. Wray, The action is brought for the arrerages due the two last years, and so at the time of his re-entry the plaintiff had not cause of action, and therefore it could not be suspended. Gawdy, When the plaintiff sheweth the deed, the defendant is chargable to arrerages due before and after the promise; wherefore if the entry maketh a suspending of the rent, the suspension doth continue: but I conceive here is not any suspension, for this promise is a meer collateral thing, and so not discharged by the entry into the land, for it is not issuing out of the land. But if the plaintiff before the deed shewed had released all actions, the same had been a good bar; and I conceive that the deed was not shewed in time, for it ought to be shewn before any arrerages due after the promise, but here it is shewn five years after: but that was not denied by all the other justices. Another exception was taken, that where the promise was, that if the plaintiff shewed any deed by which it might appear, that the defendant should be charged with the said rent, and the declaration is, by which it might appear, that the plaintiff ought to have the rent, &c. so as the declaration doth not agree in the whole. See 1 Ma. 143. in Browning and Bestons case, the condition of the lease was, if the rent should be arrear, not paid by two months after the feast, &c. and the rejoynder was by the space of two months, &c. And the pleading holden insufficient, for per duos menses doth not affirm directly post duos menses, but by implication and argument: and here it was holden, that the condition was a good consideration. Another exception was taken, because the promise is layed, all the rent ad tunc debitum aut deinceps debend. It was holden, that this word (ad tunc) doth refer to the time of the shewing of the deed, and not to the promise. And as to the last exception but one, it was resolved, that the declaration, notwithstanding the same, was good enough (scil.) ostendit factum per quod apparet quod redditus prædict. solvi deberet in forma prædict. Another exception was taken, because here no breach of the promise is [173] alledged, for it is pleaded, that eight pounds de annuali redditu arrer. fuer. but it is not said, de redditu prædict. 8l. ergo it may be another rent, and then the promise, as to this rent, is not broken. Wray, Although the word (prædict.) be wanting, yet the declaration is well enough, and it shall be intended the rent mentioned before. See 21 H. 7. 30. b. Where (Villa West.) shall be intended Villa prædict. 19 E. 4. 1. In a quare impedit the plaintiff doth entitle himself by grant of the next avoydance cum acciderit, and doth not shew in his count that the same was the next avoydance, and yet the count was holden to be good, for so it shall be intended; so here: and he said, it is not necessary that a declaration be exactly certain in every point, but if one part of it expound the other, it is well enough: and although the identity of the rent doth not appear by the word prædict. yet it appeareth by other circumstances, as by the days of payment, &c. and no other rent can be intended. And now, this exception is after verdict, and therefore favourably to be taken: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCXLI. MUSTED AND HOPPERS CASE.

Assumpsit. Verdict. Consideration.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that where he and one Atkinsal, were joyntly and severally bounden by obligation in fifty pounds, to a stranger, for the only debt of the said Atkinsal, which Atkinsal died, and the defendant married afterwards his wife, and so the goods of Atkinsal came to his hands; yet the plaintiff, the first day of May after, which was the day of payment of the money, paid five and twenty pounds for avoiding the forfeiture of the penalty. The defendant as well in consideration of the premisses, as in consideration that he might peaceably enjoy the goods of the testator promised to pay the said sum, cum inde requisitus fuer. And upon non assumpsit, the jury found the payment of the said sum, and all the precedent matter: and that the defendant in consideration præmissiorum, promised to pay the said sum if he might peaceably enjoy the goods of the said testator. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that although here the jury have found sufficient cause of action, yet if the declaration be not accordingly, the plaintiff shall not have judgment. And here the plaintiff hath declared upon two considerations, and the jury hath found but one, scil. if he peaceably enjoy the goods of the testator. Also the plaintiff declared of a simple promise, and the jury have found a conditional, si gaudere potest, &c. And so the promise set forth in the declaration, is not found in the verdict.

Gawdy was of opinion, that the first consideration is good, for the plaintiff entred into bond at the request of the defendant, and then the promise following is good: but the second consideration is void, scil. that the defendant shall enjoy the goods of the testator, &c. as if it had been that he should enjoy his own goods. And all the justices were clear of opinion, that the promise found by the jury is not the promise alledged in the declaration, and so the issue is not found for the plaintiff, and so the judgment was stayed.

CCXLII. CRECKMERE AND PATTERSONS CASE.

Devise conditional.

Upon a special verdict, the case was this, Robert Dookin was seised of certain lands in fee, and having issue two daughters, devised the same to Alice his eldest daughter, that she should pay forty pound to Ann her sister at such a day; the money is not paid, whereupon Ann entreth into the moiety of the land: and it was holden by the whole Court, that the same is a good condition, and that the entry of Ann was lawful. It hath been adjudged, that where a man devised his land to his wife, proviso, My will is, that she shall keep my house in good reparations, that the same is a good condition. Wray, A man deviseth his lands to B. paying 40l. to C. it is a good condition; for C. hath no other remedy, and a will ought to be expounded according to the intent of the devisor.

In an ejectione firmæ, upon a special verdict, the case was, that W. was seised of the land, where, &c. and held the same by copy, &c. and surrendred the same unto the use of E. for life, the remainder to Robert and A. in fee, Robert made a lease to the defendant; E. Robert, & A. surrendred the said land, scil. a third part to the use of Robert for the life of E. the remainder to the right heirs of Robert, and of another third part to the use of Robert for life, the remainder to E. the remainder to Richard, &c. and of another third part to the use of A. and his heirs. After which partition was made betwixt them, and the land where, &c. was allotted to Richard, who afterwards surrendred to the use of the plaintiff. It was holden, that judgment upon this verdict ought not to be given for the plaintiff, for the lessee of Robert had the first possession, and that lease is to begin after the death of E. who was tenant for life, and when E. and he in the reversion joyn in a surrender, thereby the estate for life in that third part is extinct in Robert, who hath the inheritance, and then his lease took effect for a third part. So that the parties here are tenants in common, betwixt whom trespass doth not lye.

CCXLIV. Bulleyn and Graunts Case.

Copyhold. Devise. Copyhold Estate.

Upon evidence to a jury, the case was, that Henry Bulleyn the father, was seised of the land being copyhold, and had issue three sons, Gregory, Henry, and Thomas, and afterwards surrendred to the use of the last will, and thereby devised the said land to Joan his wife for life, the remainder to the said Henry, and the heirs of his body begotten: Joan died, after admittance, Henry died without issue, and afterwards the lord granted it to Thomas and his heirs, who surrendred to the use of the defendant then his wife for life, and afterwards died without issue: Gregory eldest son of Henry Bulleyn entred, &c. Coke, When the father surrendreth to the use of his last will, thereby all passeth out of him, so as nothing accru-[175]-eth to the heir, nor can he have and demand any thing before admittance. Wray, The entry of Gregory is lawful, and admittance for him is not necessary, for if a copyholder surrendereth to the use of one for life who is admitted, and dieth, he in the reversion may enter without a new admittance. It was moved by Coke, if this estate limited to Henry be an estate tail, or a fee conditional, for if it be a fee-simple conditional, then there cannot be another estate over: but yet in case of a devise an estate may depend upon a fee-simple precedent, but not as a will, but as an executory devise. Wray, It is not a conditional estate in fee, but an estate tail. Coke, They who would prove the custom to entail copyhold land within a manor, it is not sufficient to shew copies of grants to persons and the heirs of their bodies, but they ought to shew that surrenders made by such persons have been enjoyed by reason of such matter. Wray, That is not so, for customary lands may be granted in tail, and yet no surrenders have been made within time of memory.

See 9 Eliz. Dyer 258. Coke contrary, that the judgment is good enough, for the writ of execution upon it is habere facias posses-CCXLVI. TEMPEST AND MALLETS CASE.

In nullo est erratum.

In an action of trespass by Tempest against Mallet, judgment was given, and eror brought, and assigned for error; that whereas the action was brought against four, one of them died, meine betwixt the award of the Nisi Prius, and the inquest taken: and it was said on the part of the defendant in the writ of error which was entred upon the record, that the plaintiff shewed unto the Court the death of one of the defendants, and prayed judgment against the others. See 4 H. 7. 2 Eliz. 175. And there is a difference, where in an action of trespass there is but one defendant, and where many. Another error was assigned, the defendant obtulit se per Higgins Attornat. suum, without shewing his Christian name, as John, or William; for Higgins only without the Christian name, is not any name, for it is but an addition to shew, which John, or William. Coke. The same is helped by the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 30. where it is enacted, that after verdict, judgment shall be given notwithstanding the lack of warrant of attorney of the party against whom the issue shall be tried, or any default or negligence of any the parties, their counsellors or attorneys; and of necessity this default here in the Christian name ought to be the fault of one of them. See also 18 Eliz. cap. 14. for want of any warrant of attorney, &c. Glanvil, The statute provides for default of warrant of attorney, &c. Then (Coke) to what end was the statute of 18 Eliz. made? for the statute of 32 H. 8. provides for defects of warrants of attorney. Glanvil, The first statutes for warrants of attorneys of such persons a-[176]-gainst whom the issue was tryed, but the later stat. is general. Another error was assigned, quod defendens capiatur, where the offence, & so the fine is pardoned by Parliament, and therefore the entry of the judgment ought to be, et de fine nihil, quia perdonatur. Coke, The judgment is well enough, for in every general pardon some persons are excepted; and it doth not appear if the defendant here were one of them, and then the fine is not pardoned, for the Court cannot take notice of that, as it was holden in Serjeant Harris case: but if the defendant be charged with the fine, then he ought to plead the pardon, and to shew that he was not any of the persons excepted. And afterwards at another day the defendant did alledge, that there was a warrant of attorney in the Common Pleas. And also it appeareth upon record, that the defendant did appear upon the supersedeas by attorney, who had his full name, and therefore prayed a certiorari de novo, to certifie the same matter, vide 9 E. 4. 32. Wray, A case here greatly debated betwixt the Lord Norris and Braybrook, and upon advice such a writ of certiorari was granted after the plaintiff had pleaded in nullo est erratum; for this plea, in nullo est erratum, goes but to that which is contained within the body of the record, and not unto collateral matter, scil. warrant of attorneys: and afterwards the writ of error was allowed, and upon the day of return thereof, it appeared upon the record of supersedeas, that the defendant did appear by such a one his attorney: but it was said by the Court, that there ought to be two appearances, the one upon the supersedeas, and the other when the plaintiff declares. And now came the defendant by his counsel, and moved that after elegit returned, the plaintiff could not resort to the execution by capias, and therefore prayed a supersedeas, because the capias erronice emanavit. But the whole Court was clear to the contrary; for upon nihil returned upon elegit, the plaintiff shall have a capias, 17 E. 4. 5. See 21 H. 7. 19. A man shall have a capias after a fieri facias, or elegit, 34 H. 6. 20. and here the special return doth amount to as much, as if the sheriff had returned nihil: also the statute of West. 2. which giveth the elegit, is not in the negative, and therefore it shall not take away the execution which was at the common law. And here is no execution returned, for after the former extent ended, he ought to have a new elegit; which Wray granted: and afterwards the said Knowllis was taken by force of the capias satisfaciend. and came into Court in the custody of the sheriff, and the case was opened, and in the whole appeared to be worthy of favour; but by the law he could not be helped, and although he instantly prayed a supersedeas, yet the same was denied unto him.

Pepper, The declaration is not good, for it is not shewed how these particular estates did commence. See 20 E. 4. 10. By Piggot, Lessee for life and he in the remainder, cannot prescribe together; and he in the remainder cannot have common. Also he declares, that tenant for life, and he in remainder demised to him, whereas in truth it is the demise of tenant for life, and the confirmation of him in the remainder; also he doth not aver the life of tenant for life. Popham, He needs not to shew the commencement of the particular estates, for we are a stranger to them, the prescription in them both is well enough, for all is but one estate, and the lease of both. See 27 H. 8. 13. The lessee for life, and he in the reversion made a lease for life, and joyned in an action of wast, and

It was [178] moved, if these words, I agree to surrender my lands, be a present and express surrender. Gawdy, It is not any surrender, for tenant at will cannot surrender, but it is but a relinquishing of the estate, if it be any thing; but in truth it is not any thing in present, but an act to be done in future. Wray, I agree. A. demised the manor of D. at will, it is no lease, no more shall it be here any surrender, or any relinquishing of the estate. Clench conceived, that the intent of the party was, to leave his estate at the time of the speaking, otherwise those words were void, for he might leave it at any time without those words. CCLI. WARD AND BLUNTS CASE.

Trover and Conversion.

In an action upon the case of trover of certain loads of corn at Henden in Middlesex, and the conversion of them; the defendant pleaded, that before the conversion, he was seised of certain lands called Harminglow in the county of Stafford, and that the corn whereof &c. was there growing, and that he did sever it, by force of which he was possessed, and the same casually lost; and that the same came to the hands of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff casually lost the same, and the same came to the hands of the defendant at Henden, aforesaid, and he did convert the same to his own use, as it was lawful for him to do: upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. Atkinson, The plea is good, for the conversion is the point of the action, and the effect of it. For if a man take the same, and do not convert, he is not guilty. And here the defendant doth justifie the conversion, wherefore he cannot plead, not guilty. The general issue is to be taken where a man hath not any colour, but here the defendant hath colour, because the corn whereof, &c. was growing upon his land, which might inveigle the lay people, and therefore it is safest to plead the special matter. But admit, that it doth amount but to the general issue; yet there is not any cause of demurrer, but the plaintiff ought to shew the same to the Court, and pray that the general issue be entred; and the Court ex officio ought to do it. Egerton, the Queens solicitor, contrary, The plea in bar is not good; the plaintiff declares of a trover of his goods, ut de bonis suis propriis, and the defendant pleads, that he took his own goods, which is not any answer to the plaintiff. See 22. E. 3. 18. In trespass of taking and carrying away his trees, the defendant pleads, that they were our trees, growing in our own soil, and we cut them and carryed them away, and the plea was challenged, wherefore the defendant pleaded over, without that that he took the trees of the plaintiff. So 26 Ass. 22. and 30 E. 3. 22. Another matter was, the plea in bar is, that before the time of the conversion, the defendant was seised of the land, and sowed it; and that after the corn was severed, (but he doth not say that he was seised at the time of the severance) and then it might be that he had severed the corn of the plaintiff, &c. and that was holden by the Court to be a material exception, wherefore judgment was given for the plaintiff: but as to the first exception, the same was disallowed, for the Court ex officio, in such case ought to cause the general issue to be entred, but the plaintiff ought not to demur upon it.

Godfrey, The action doth not ly, for here is not any warranty, for the plaintiff is not lessee, but assignee, to whom this warranty in law cannot extend; but admit that the warranty doth extend to the plaintiff, yet it is now determined with the estate of the tenant for life, and so the covenant ended with the estate. CCLV. FISH, BROWN AND SADLERS CASE. INTRAT. MICH. 29. ELIZ. ROT. 606.

Action upon the Case. Assumpsit and Consideration. Covin.

An action upon the case was brought by Fish and Brown against Sadler, Hill. 29 Eliz. rot. 606. and they declared, that they were proprietaries of certain goods, which were in the possession of one A. against which A. Sadler one of the defendants had commenced a feigned and covenous suit in the Ecclesiastical Court in the name of one Collison, to the intent to get the said goods into his possession, of which the plaintiffs having notice, and to the intent that the said plaintiffs should suffer the defendant to recover and obtain the said goods by the said suit, the defendant did promise to the plaintiffs to render to them a true accompt of the said goods; and shewed further, that by the said suit the defend. did obtain the said goods by sufferance of the plaintiff. Tanfield, It is a good consideration, the plaintiffs were not parties or privies at the beginning of the suit, & it is not like Onlies case in 19 Eliz. Dyer 355. where in an action upon the case Onlie declared, that the defendant countess, &c. being a widow, had divers suits and businesses, and that the plaintiff at her request had bestowed great labour and travail, and had expended circa the affairs of the said countess 1500l. Whereupon she promised to the plaintiff to pay all the said expences, and such a sum above, for that matter which is the ground of the action, is maintenance, and malum prohibitum, but such matter is not here; for it is lawful for a man to use means to get his goods. Gawdy; All covins are abhorred in law, and here the plaintiffs are privies to the wrong, and therefore, it cannot be any consideration. Wray, Although that the suit at the beginning was wrongful and covenous, yet when the plaintiffs who were owners of the said goods do assent to such proceedings, now the suit is become just and lawful ab initio, and so no wrong in the consideration, but all the wrong is purged by the agreement. If any covin be, the same is between Sadler and him who is sued, to whom the plaintiffs are not privies. Clench, If this privity betwixt the plaintiffs and Sadler had been before the said suit; then the consideration is without any fraud. Cooper Serjeant conceived here is not any good consideration, upon which the promise of the defendant may be [180] grounded, for the defendant hath not any benefit by it, and he cited the case between Smith and Smith 25 Eliz. Egerton, Here the consideration is good enough, for the plaintiffs forbear their own suit, which was a hinderance unto them. Clench was of opinion, that the plaintiff should not have judgment, for that suit was begun by Sadler in the name of Collison without his privity, and therefor it was unlawful, and the same was for the goods of another man, which is unlawful also, and then when the unlawful act is begun, the illegal agreement afterwards that they shall proceed is unlawful also, and therefore there cannot be any consideration: and as to the covin, it is not material, for without that the matter is illegal enough. Also the declaration is not good in this, because it is not shewed in what Court the suit did depend, so as it might appear unto us, that they had power to hold plea of it. Gawdy agreed with Clench in the first point, and also in the last; and by him, in the assumpsit, the plaintiff declares, that a suit was depending betwixt the defendant and another, and where the plaintiffs if they were produced might have given strong witness against the defendant, the said defendant in consideration that the plaintiffs would not give testimony against him, promised to give to the plaintiff 20l. the same consideration will not maintain this action; because it is unlawful for any man to suppress testimony in any cause. Wray, Here is a consideration good enough, for where Sadler should lose costs upon the first suit, now upon this promise upon his account he shall be allowed the same, the which is a benefit unto him: and as to the shewing in what Court the suit doth depend, that needs not by way of declaration, but the same shall be shewed by way of evidence, and it is not traversable, and it is but inducement to the action. And as to the covin, that is not here, for covin is always to the prejudice of a third person, but so it is not here; but in truth this suit was unlawful, for Sadler so to sue in the name of another, and therefore it cannot be a good consideration. And for that cause it was awarded, quod querens nihil capiat per billiam.

CCLIV. How and Conneys Case.

Trespass.

In an action of trespass by How against Conney, the case was, that one Smith was seised of two houses, and leased one of them to his brother for life, and afterwards by his will devised, viz. I give to my executors, all my lands and tenements free and copy, to hold to them, and they to take the profits of them for ten years, and afterwards to sell the said lands and tenements; and afterwards died, his brother died before the quarter of a year after: and it was found, that the executors entred into the house undemised, and took the profits, but not into the other, and that at the end of the said ten years, they sold the whole. Godfrey, The house only which was in possession, shall pass by the will. (To hold unto them) doth imply matter of possession, so as nothing passeth but that whereof they may take the profits, the which cannot be of a bare reversion; also by this devise, the executors have not interest in the thing devised but for ten years, whereas the brother of the testator had an estate for life, which by possibility might continue above twenty years, and to prove that, the meaning of the devisor to be collected upon the words of the will ought to direct the construction of the will, he cited Chicks case, 19 Eliz. 357 and 23 Eliz. 371. Dyer. At another day it was argued by Cook, that both the houses pass, and the words (take the profit) do not restrain the general words before, (viz. All my lands and tenements) but rather expounds them, sci. such profits that they might [181] take of a reversion, cum acciderit, for it may be that the brother shall die within ten years. And he cited the case 34 H. 6. 6. A man seised of diverse reversions upon estates for life, devises them by the name of omnium terrarum & tenementorum, which were in his own hands, and by those parols the reversion did pass; and yet the reversion (to speak properly) was not in his hands: and if the brother had died in the life of the devisor, they had clearly passed, and then his death or life shall not alter the case. And he resembled the case to the case in 39 E. 3. 21. The King grants to the Abbot of Redding, that in time of vacation the prior and monks shall have the disposition of all the possessions of the said abbey ad sustentationem prioris & monachorum, and if in the time of vacation they shall have the advowsons, was the question, for it was said, that advowsons could not be to their sustentation: but yet by the better opinion the grant of the King did extend to advowsons, for it shall be intended such sustentation as advowsons might give. Godfrey, Our case is not like to the case of 34 H. 6. for there the devisor had not any thing in possession, and therefore if the reversion did not pass, the devise should be utterly void. Gawdy conceived that the house in possession only passed, for the devise extends to such things only, whereof the profits might be taken, but here is not any profit of a reversion. Clench, and Wray contrary, the intent of the devise was to perform the will of his father, and also of his own will; and in case the house in possession was not sufficient to perform both the wills, all shall pass, and therefore the devise by favorable construction is to be taken largely, so as the wills might be throughly performed; and also the devise is general, and further all his lands and tenements, which are not refrained by the subsequent words (to take the profits) for to have and to hold, and to have and to take the profits is all one.

CCLV. SLUGGE AND THE BISHOP OF LANDAFFS CASE.

Prohibition. Trial.

Slugge libelled against the Bishop of Landaff in the Ecclesiastical Court, because where he was presented by the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester to the Church of Penner, the bishop did refuse to admit him, and now the bishop sued a prohibition, and shewed, quod non habetur talis rectoria cum cura animarum in eadem diocesi, sed perpetua vicaria. And by Popham a prohibition doth not lye, but the matter ought to be determined in the Ecclesiastical Court, and when he who is presented to the same church, whether it be a church or not, shall be tried in an action of trespass; and the like matter was ruled, Mich. 14 Eliz. betwixt Weston and Grendon, who was presented by the Queen, and it was holden, that because institution and admission do belong to the Ecclesiastical Court, and not to the Kings Court, that no prohibition should lye, and therefore he prayed a consultation. And note, that the defendant in the prohibition did not demur formally upon the suggestion; for the Judges use, if the suggestion be not sufficient to maintain the prohibition, to grant a consultation without any formal demurrer upon the suggestion, if the insufficiency of the suggestion be manifest; which was granted by the whole Court. Cook, That a consultation ought not to be granted, for whether there be such a rectory or not shall be tried here. So 2 H. 4. 30. Prior or not prior, 49 E. 3. 17, 18. In a quare impedit, no such church within the county. Afterwards, at another day, Popham put the case, Slugge was presented to the vicaridge of Penner, the bishop refused to admit him, and admitted one Morgan Bletthen unto the parsonage [182] of Penner, at the presentment of the Lord St. John; Slugge sued the bishop for contumacy, per duplicem querelam, the bishop said, Non habetur talis vicaria, upon which matter he sued a prohibition, and he conceived, that the prohibition did not ly, for a vicar is but he that gerit vicem personæ, to supply his place in his absence, so as the same is a spiritual matter which ought not to be tried here: also the libel is, to have admission and institution, and the other matter ariseth by their plea, sci. quod rectoria de Penner est ecclesia cum cura animarum, absque hoc quod habetur talis vicaria, and so it is but an incident to the principal matter, wherefore it shall be tried there, and he prayed a consultation. Cook, We have shewed, that in the time of E. 3. one L. was seised of the manour of Penner, to which the church of Penner is appendant; and we alledge presentments from that time, and we convey it to the Lord St. John, which now is, and they would now defeat us by this surmise, that there is no such church with cure of souls, which is triable here. Popham, The libel doth contain nothing but contumacy in the bishop, in that he hath not admitted Slugge, and the other matter comes in the replication, and afterwards by assent of the parties a consultation was granted, quoad institutionem of Slugge only, but that they should not proceed further.

CCLVI. FENNICK AND MITFORDS CASE.

The case was, a man seised of lands in fee, levieth a fine to the use of his wife for life, the remainder to the use of his eldest son, & the heirs males of his body, the remainder to the use of the right heirs of the conusor, the conusor makes a lease for a thousand years to B. the eldest son dieth without issue male, having issue a daughter, the conusor dieth, the wife afterwards dieth, the eldest son enters and leaseth the lands to the plaintiff. Atkinson, That upon this conveyance a reversion was left in the conusor, although by the fine all is conveyed out of the conusor; and so (as it hath been objected) the use limited to the right heirs of the conusor, is a new thing: for it is to be observed, when a man is seised of lands, he hath two things, the land, or the estate, and secondly the use which is the profits; and if he make a feoffment without consideration, by that the estate and possession passeth, but not the use, wherefore the use descends after to the son and heir. And in our case if the wife and son had died without issue in the life of the father, all should be in the father and his heirs. And if a man make a feoffment in fee, unto the use of his last will, it shall be unto the use of the feoffor and his heirs, and in our case, this limitation to the right heirs of the conusor is, as if no mention had been made of it, and then it should be to the father, and his heirs. And afterwards it was adjudged, that it was a reversion, and no remainder, and by Gawdy, this limitation, to his right heirs, is meerly void. Wray, As if he had made a feoffment to the use of one for life, without further limitation.

CCLVII. HOLLAND AND FRANKLINS CASE.

Replevin. Averment. Relation of Records and Deeds.

In a replevin, the defendant made conusans as bailiff to Thomas Lord Howard, and shewed, how that the prioress of Holliwel was seised of the manor of Prior in her demesne as of fee, &c. and 4 Nov. 19 H. 8. by deed enrolled sold unto the Lord Audley, the said manor, who died having issue a daughter, who took to husband Thomas late Duke of Norfolk, who had issue the said Lord Howard, and that after their death the said manor descended, &c. The plaintiff in bar of the conusans shewed, that the said deed was primo deliberatum, 4 Nov. 30 H. 8. And that mean betwixt the date and the delivery, scil. 12 October, the said prioress leased the said manor to one A. for ninety nine years, and conveyed the term to the plaintiff, absque hoc, that the prioress bargained and sold the said manor to the Lord Audley, ante dimissionem prædict. dicto. A. fact. upon which there was a demurrer. Cook, This averment of another delivery than the deed doth purport against the deed enrolled, shall not be received, no more than a man may aver, that a recognizance was acknowledged at another day, &c. for every record imports a truth in it, and express averment shall not be received against it, but a man may confess and avoid; see 7 H. 7. 4. It cannot be assigned for error, that in a redisseisin, the sheriff non accessit ad tenementa, as he hath retorned, for that is against his retorn which is recorded, and the date of the record is the principal part of it, which see 37 H. 6. 21. by all the justices, that matter of record hath always relation to the date, and not to the delivery, contrary of a deed which is not of record, for the same shall have relation always to the delivery; and see 39 H. 6. 32. by all the justices, averment against a deed enrolled that it was not delivered shall not be received; so in the case betwixt Ludford and Gretton, 19 Eliz. Plowd. 149. It is holden by all the justices, that the Kings charter hath relation to the time of the date, because that matters of record carry in them by presumtion of law for the highness of them, truth, and therefore one cannot say, that such a charter was made or delivered at another day, than at that at which it bears date; so of a recognizance, statute, &c. but against letters patents a man may say, non concessit, for perhaps nothing passeth thereby, and then it is not contrary to the record. Atkinson contrary, I confess that the party himself (whose deed it was) cannot take a direct averment against a deed enrolled, but he may confess and avoid it, so as he leave it a record, as if a fine were levyed by another in my name of my land, I am bound by it; but if the fine were levyed by another in my name I am not bound, for I may confess and avoid it, and yet leave the record good; but here the plaintiff is a stranger to his deed enrolled: and some records shall bind all persons, as certificates of bastardy, &c. for all may give evidence in such case, 2 H. 5. Estoppel 91. A. makes a feoffment in fee, and afterwards before the Coroner confesseth a felony supposed to done before the feoffment, the feoffee shall have an averment against it. Egerton the Queen's solicitor, contrary, Matter of record cannot be gainsaid in the point, or in matter of implication, and therefore against that he cannot say, non est factum, 16 E. 3. Abb. 13. A deed enrolled in pais, cannot be denyed, 24 E. 3. 64. A deed enrolled is not a record, but a thing recorded, which cannot be denyed. And here this plea is a violent averment against the deed, for it amounts to as much as if he had said, not his deed at the time of the enrollment: but I confess that such a deed may be avoided by a thing which stands with the deed by matter out of the deed. It hath been objected, that this acknowledging of the deed ought to be made by Attorney, [184] and therefore made in person it is not any acknowledgment, and so against such acknowledgment, non est factum may be pleaded, and a fine or confession in a writ of annuity upon prescription, or in assise shall bind the house, see 16 E. 3. Abb. 13. That a fine, recognizance, and covenant of record shall bind the house in such case. And the acknowledgment of the prioress alone will serve in this case, for the nuns are as dead persons: and posito, that a Master of the Chancery comes into the chapter-house, and receives such an acknowledgment, I conceive that it is good enough. It hath been objected, that here the plaintiff is not estopped to take the averment, because we have not pleaded our matter by way of estoppel; certainly the same needs not here, for the record itself carries the estoppel with it, and the truth appeareth by the record, and the Court ought to take hold of it. Godfrey contrary, A deed enrolled may be avoided by matter, which is not contrary to the record, as 19 R. 2. Estoppel 281. in sur cui in vita, a release of the mother of the demandant with warranty was pleaded in bar, and that enrolled, to which the demandant said, that at the time of the release supposed to be made, our mother had a husband one F. and so the deed was void, and so avoided the deed by matter dehors scil. coverture; so of enfancy, but not by a general averment: a man not lettered shall avoid a deed enrolled by such special matter; so an obligation made against the statute of 23 H. 6. and these special matters shall utterly avoid the deeds against whom they are pleaded; but in our case we do confess the deed to be good to some intent, scil. after our lease expired, for which our case is the better case. And at another day it was objected, that the deed could not be acknowledged without a letter of attorney, being a corporation, which consisted upon divers persons, as prioress and covent, and they are alwaies to be intended to be in their chapter-house, and cannot come into Court to acknowledge a deed: to which it was answered by Cook, that this acknowledgment being generally pleaded, it shall be intended, that it was done by a lawful means, and there is no doubt, but that such a corporation may levy a fine, and make a letter of attorney to acknowledge it, and see, 2 Ma. Fulmerstones case 105. It was further objected, that this deed was enrolled the same day that it beareth date, for the pleading is per factum suum gerens Datum, 2 Novemb. 29 Hen 8. et iisdem die & anno irrotulat. And by the statute such a deed ought to be enrolled within six months next after the date, so as the day of the date is excluded, and so it is not enrolled within six months: as to that it was answered by Cook, that the time of computation doth begin presently after the delivery of the deed, as in the common cases of leases, if a man makes a lease for years to begin from the day of the date, the same is exclusive; but if it be to have and to hold from the date of the deed, it shall begin presently. And an ejectment supposed the same day is good, and then here, this enrolment is within the six months; and yet see 5 Eliz. 128. Dyer, Pophams case. It was also objected, that it is alledged in the conusans, that the manor was sold to the Lord Audley, and that the deed of bargain and sale was acknowledged and enrolled in the Chancery, the said lord being then Lord Chancellor, and he cannot take an acknowledgment of a deed, or enrolment of it to himself, for he is the sole Judge in the said Court, so as the deed is acknowledged before himself, and enrolled before himself, and that is good enough, for here we are not upon the common law, but upon the statute, and here the words of the statute are performed. And the enrolment of the deed is not the substance of the deed, but the deed it self. Also the acknowledgment of the deed, after it is enrolled is not material, for he is estopped to say that it is not acknowledged. And as to the matter it self, a man shall not have averment against [185] the purport of a record, but against the operation of a record, as not put in view, not comprised, partes ad finem nihil haberunt, &c. And against letters pattens of the King, non concessit, is a good plea, which see 18 Eliz. for by such plea it is agreed, that it is a record, but that nihil operatur.

CCLVIII. OSBORN AND KIRTONS CASE.

Debt. Protection.

In debt upon an obligation, the defendant cast a protection, upon which the plaintiff did demur. Tanfield, The protection is not good, for the defendant is let to bail, and so is intended always in prison, for so the record makes mention, and then the protection quia moratur in portubus Zeland is against the record, and the Court ought to give credit to records especially. Secondly, the words of the protection are, that Kirton is imployed in obsequio nostro, which is no cause of protection, for the usual form (and so is the law) that such a person be imployed in negotio regni, for the defence of England, &c. for if the King will give aid unto another princes subjects employed in such service, he shall not have protection. And afterwards variance was objected betwixt the bill and declaration, and the protection: for the bill is against John Kirton of A. gentleman, and the protection is John Kirton only: but the same was holden no such variance being only in the addition, for before the statute 1 H 5. additions were not necessary in any actions.

And at the day, the obligee doth refuse the assurance, and afterwards 27

Eliz. request is made to have the hundred pounds, it was the clear opinion of the whole Court, that the said request was well enough for the time, and he might make it at any time during his life, and he is not restrained to make it before the day in which the assurance is to be made, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCLX. KNIGHT AND SAVAGES CASE.

Error.

A writ of error was brought upon a judgment given in Leicester in debt: Tanfield assigned error, because in that suit there was not any plaint, and in all inferior Courts, the plaint is as the original at the Common Law, and without that no process can issue forth. And here upon the record nothing is entred but that the defendant summonitus fuit, &c. and therefore the first entry ought to be A. B. queritur adversus, C. &c.

[186] Clench, A plaint ought to be entred before process issueth, and the summons which is entred here, is not any plaint, and for that cause the judgment was reversed: it was said, that after the defendant appeared, a plaint was entred, but it was said by the Court, that that shall not mend the matter, for there ought to be a plaint out of which the process shall issue, as in the Courts above out of the original writs.

CCLXI. KIRBY AND ECCLES CASE.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff declared, quod cum quædam communicatio fuisset betwixt the plaintiff, and one Cowper, that Cowper should mast certain hogs for the plaintiff, the defendant did promise, that in consideration, that the plaintiff promised give unto the defendant three shillings and four pence, for the fatting of every hog, that the said hogs should be redelivered to him well fatted; to which promise and warranty, the plaintiff giving faith, delivered to the said Cowper one hundred and fifty hogs to be masted; and that one hundred of them were delivered back, but the residue were not: it was moved, that here is not any consideration for which the defendant should be charged with any promise: but it was argued, on the other side, that the promise was the cause of the contract, and being made at the time of the communication and contract, should charge the defendant; but if the promise were at another time, it should be otherwise. There was a case lately betwixt Smith and Edmunds, two merchants, being reciprocally endebted the one to the other, agreed betwixt themselves to deliver all their bills and bonds into the hands of one Smith, who promised that he would not deliver them to the parties until all accounts were ended betwixt them; and yet he did deliver them, and for that an action brought against him was adjudged maintainable: yet there was not any consideration, nor was it material, for the action is grounded upon the deceit, and so is it here, upon the warranty: and of that opinion were Clench and Wray, Justices; but Gawdy was of a contrary opinion.

CCLXII. WOODSHAW AND FULMERSTONES CASE.

Obligation.

Woodshaw, executor of Heywood, brought debt upon a bond against Richard Fulmerstone, and the writ was dated October Mich. 29 & 30 Eliz. and the condition of the bond was, that if Fulmerstone died before his age of one and twenty years, and before that he had made a joynture to A. his wife, daughter of the testator Heywood, then if the said defendant caused one hundred pounds to be payed to the said Heywood, within three months after the death of the said William, that then the bond should be void; and the said William Fulmerstone died 30 September 30 Eliz. which matter he is ready, &c. The plaintiff doth traverse, absque hoc, that the said Heywood died intestate. Tanfield, It appeareth of record that the plaintiff hath not cause of action, for this one hundred pounds, was to be paid within three months after the death of William Fulmerstone, as the defendant hath alledged, which is also confessed by the plaintiff, and this action is entred Mich. October 30 Eliz. scil. within a month after the death of William Fulmerstone, and so before the plaintiff hath cause of action, and therefore he shall be barred. Gawdy, Where it appeareth to the Court, that the [187] plaintiff hath not cause of action, he shall never have judgment, as in the case betwixt Tilly and Wordy, 7 E. 4. But here it doth appear that the plaintiff hath cause of action, for where a man is bound in an obligation, the same is a duty presently, and the condition is but in defeazance of it, which the defendant may plead in his discharge.

CCLXIII. Windham and Sir Edward Cleers Case.

C. declared that the said Ed. being a justice of peace in the county of N. and where the plaintiff was a loyal subject, and of good fame all his life time, nor ever touched, or reproched with any offence of robbery, &c. the defendant, malitiose & invide machinans ipsum Rogerum, de bonis, nomine, fama et vita deprivare, directed his warrant to divers baylifs and constables of the said county to arrest the said plaintiff: and it was alledged in the said warrant, that the plaintiff was accused before him of the stealing of the horse of A. B. by reason of which the plaintiff was arrested, and so detained until he had entred into a bond for his appearance, &c. whereas in truth, he was never accused thereof, nor ever stole such horse; and whereas the defendant himself knew that the plaintiff was guiltless; by reason of which, he was greatly discredited, &c. And it was found for the plaintiff; and it was moved, that upon this matter an action doth not lye, for a justice of peace if he suspect any person of felony, or other such offence may direct his warrant to arrest him. 14. H. 8. 16. Gaudy and Clench, If a man be accused to a justice of peace for felony, for which he directs his warrant to arrest him, although the accusation be false, the justice of peace is excused, but if the party in truth was not accused before the justice, it is otherwise: it was a case lately betwixt the Lord Lumley and Foord, where Foord in a letter written by him, had written, it is reported, that my Lord Lumley seeketh my life: if it was not reported, an action upon the case lieth, but if reported, no action lieth: so here, if he was accused no action lieth, but if not, an action lieth: and afterwards in the principal case, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCLXIV. Isleys Case.

Isley and others were plaintiffs in an ejectione firmæ, and upon the general issue it was found for the plaintiffs, and 4 days after the verdict given, was moved in stay of judgment a special matter in law, whereof the justices were not resolved for the law, but took advisement and gave day over; and in the mean time one of the plaintiffs died, which matter the defendant shewed to the Court in further stay of the judgment:

but by Coke, the same is not any cause, for the postea came in Quindena Pasch. which was 16 Aprilis, at which day the Court ought to have given judgment presently, but took time to be advised, and the 19 of April, one of the plaintiffs died; and the favour of the Court ought not to prejudice us; for the judgment here shall have relation to the 16 of April, at which time he was alive; and it was so of late adjudged in the case of Derick James, who died the day after the verdict, and yet judgment was not stayed, for the Court after verdict cannot examine surmises, and they have not a day in Court to plead, and in our case, it was but a day of grace, and no entry is [188] made of it; although no plea can be now pleaded after verdict, yet as amicus curiæ, one may inform us of such matter: and sometimes in such case, judgment hath been stayed, as 9 Eliz. and sometimes notwithstanding such exception, as 2 Eliz. So as I conceive the matter is much in the discretion of the justices. And because the same was a hard verdict, and much against the evidence, it is good discretion upon this matter to stay judgment, and such was the opinion of the Court.

CCLXV. STEED AND COURTNEYS CASE.

Error. Prescription to levy a Fine, not good.

Error was brought upon a fine levied upon a plaint in a writ of covenant in the City of Exceter. And two errors were assigned: first, the plaint was, quod teneat convent. de duobus tenementis. Whereas in truth, the word tenement doth not comprehend any certainty, for in the word (tenement) is understood, messuage, land, meadow, pasture, &c. and whatsoever lyeth in tenure: and 11 H. 6. 18. by grant of lands and tenements, rent of common shall pass. And an ejectione firmæ doth not lye of a tenement, nor a forcible entry supposed in a tenement, 11 H. 7. 25. & 38. H. 6. 1. Another error was, because the fine was levyed in the Court of the City of Exceter: which see 44. E. 3. 37, 38. Those of Exceter can prescribe to have the conusans: but the same ought to be by special charter of the King by express words. Egerton the Queens solicitor, who sate under the justices, and was not of counsel in the case said, that he was of counsel in a case betwixt Bunbery and Bird, where such a fine levyed in Chester by prescription was in question, was by a writ of error reversed: and afterwards in the principal case the fine was reversed for the first error.

The father and son died without issue male, the son having issue a daughter, who entred and assured the land unto one Hawes, and covenanted, that she was seised of the said messuage of a certain and sure estate in fee-simple. Godfrey, That the daughter shall take the last remainder, as right heir at the time that it ought to be executed, & to the heirs males of her body, as if it had been devised to her by her proper name, so she hath but an estate tail, and so the covenant is broken. Cook contrary: At the time that the devise took effect by the death of the devisor, the father was his right heir, so as the remainder vested in him immediately, and shall not expect in abeyance until the father and son dye without heir male of the son, for the father is a person able to take, so that upon the death of the devisor, the father is tenant for life, the remainder to the son, and the heirs males of his body, the remainder to the father in tail ut supra, the reversion to the father in fee, and the daughter hath the same reversion by descent after the entayls spent; all which Wray Justice granted.

Galliard brought an action upon the case against Archer; the plaintiff declared, that he himself was possessed of certain goods, which by trover came to the hands of the defendant, who hath converted them to his own use: the defendant pleaded, that before the trover supposed, one A. was possessed of the said goods as of his proper goods, and sold them to the defendant, and that he had not any notice that the said goods were the goods of the plaintiff, upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. And by Anderson the plea is not good, for the plaintiff may chuse to have his action against the first finder, or against any other, which gets the goods after by sale, gift, or trover; and by some, the defendant having the goods by sale, might traverse the finding: see contr. 27 H. 6. 13. a. And see by some, in detinue, where the plaintiff declares of a bailment, the defendant may say, that he found them, and traverse the bailment, 39 H. 6, 37. by Moile; and by Windham Justice, the defendant may traverse the property of the goods in the plaintiff, 12 E. 4. 11.

And so the said goods, wares, and merchandizes, being in the possession of the defendant Tedbury to be carried to Exceter, the said A. caused them to be attached in the hands of the said carrier, for the debt of the said Edwards, the said carrier being then priviledged in the Common Pleas, by reason of an action there depending. And by the clear opinion of the whole Court, the said attachment ought to be dissolved. S. and thereupon had caused the said I. S. to be arrested, the said defendants did conspire together to delay the plaintiff of his said suit, in peril of his debt, had let the said I. S. go at large without taking bail. Periam Justice, conceived, that upon that matter, the action doth not lye, for the not taking of bail is a judicial act, for which he shall not be impeached: but all the other justices were strongly of opinion against him, for the not taking of bail is not the cause of the action, but the conspiracy.

But if the by-law had bin, that none should put in his cattel before such a day, the same had bin good, for such by-law doth not take away, but order the inheritance; for the nature of a by-law is to put order betwixt the tenants concerning their affayrs within the manor which by law they are not compellable to do: and by Periam, The avowant ought to have averred, that this by-law was for the common profit of the tenants: see the Lord Cromwells case. 15 Eliz. CCLXXI. WICKS AND DENNIS CASE.

Wicks brought a replevin against Dennis, who avowed, that one Dennis his father was seised of the manor, &c. and granted out of it to the avowant a rent of twenty pounds per annum, and further granted, that if the said rent be arrear unpaid six days after the feasts, &c. wherein it ought to be paid, si licite petatur, that then it should be lawful to distrein; the grantor afterward by indenture covenanted with the Lord Treasurer and others, to stand seised of the same manor, unto the use of himself and his heirs, until he or his heirs have made default in they payment of one hundred pounds per annum, until three thousand pounds be paid, and after default of payment, to the use of the Queen and her heirs, until the sum of three thousand pounds should be paid and levied; the grantor afterwards levied a fine to the said Lord Treasurer and others to the uses aforesaid, the rent is arrear; default of the payment of the hundred pounds is made, office is found, the Queen seised the land, the avowant during the possession of the Q. demanded the rent, and the arrearages thereof, the Queen granted over the manor to W. & B. & D. the grantee did distrain for the rent, & arrearages demanded, ut supra. It was moved by H. Serjeant that this demand of several sums payable at several days before, is not good; for every sum ought to be severally demanded when it was first due, scil. si licite petatur, scil. within the six days; for otherwise without such demand, distress is not lawful, and he resembled it to the case of Sir Thomas Gresham 23. Elizabeth Dyer, 372 of several tenders. Periam [191] conceived that the demand ought to be several. Anderson, That the demand is good enough. And as to the demand made during the possession of the Queen, it was holden by the whole Court to be good enough; for although the possession of the Queen be priviledged, as to the distress, yet the demand is good, without any wrong to her prerogative; for the rent in right is due, and the possession of the Queen is in right charged with it, and the rent is only recoverable by petition, as it was by way of distress; and if the partie sueth to the Queen by petition for the said rent, he ought to shew in his petition, that he hath demanded the rent, for if the possession had bin in a common person, he could not distreyn before demand, nor by consequence have assise: and the rent, notwithstanding the possession of the Queen, is demandable and payable for to entitle the party unto petition against the Queen, and to distress against the subject when the possession of the Queen is removed. And see 7 H. 6. 40. disseisee may make continual claym, although the possession of the land of which he is disseised be in the King. And 34 H. Br. seisin 48. If the heir at full age intrude upon the possession of the King, and pays rent to the lord of his land holden of a subject, the same is a good seisin, and shall bind the heir after he hath sued his livery 5 E. 4. 4. and see 13 H. 7. 15. That distress taken upon the possession of the King is not lawful, but seisin obtained during it, is good. So in 21 H. 7. 2.

CCLXXII. ASHEGELLS AND DENNIS CASE.

Quare Impedit.

Ashegel brought a quare impedit against Dennis, and the plaintiff counted that the defendant had disturbed him to present ad vicariam de D. and shewed that the Queen was seised of the rectory of D. and of the advowson of the vicaridge of D. and by her letters patents gave unto the plaintiff rectoriam prædictam cum pertinentiis, & etiam vicariam ecclesiæ prædict. And it was holden by the whole Court, that the advowson of the vicaridge by these words doth not pass; nor so in the case of a common person, much less in the case of the King: but if the Queen had granted ecclesiam suam of D. then, by Walmesley Justice, the advowson of the vicaridge had passed.

CCLXXIII. COLLMAN AND SIR HUGH PORTMANS CASE.

Ejectione firmæ. Surrender of Copy-holder.

In ejectione firmæ by Collman against Sir Hugh Portman it was found by special verdict, that the lands where were holden by copy of the manor of D. whereof Sir H. Portman, was seised, and that the plaintiff was copyholder in fee, and further found, that the said Sir H. pretending the said copy-hold lands to be forfeited, entred into communication with Collman touching the same, upon which communication it was agreed betwixt them, that the said Collman should pay to the said Sir Hugh five pounds, which was paid accordingly, & that in consideration thereof, Collman should enjoy the said customary lands, except one wood called Combwood for his life, and also of Alice his wife, durante sua viduitate, and that Collman should have election whether the said lands should be assured unto him and his said wife by copy, or by bill, &c. & he chose by bill, which was made accordingly; and further found, that the said Sir H. held and enjoyed in his possession the said wood, &c. & upon this matter, the Court was clear in opinion, that here is a good surrender of the said lands, and that for life only, and that the said Sir Hugh had the wood discharged of the customary interest.

CCLXXIV. THETFORD AND THETFORDS CASE.

Debt.

In an action of debt for rent, the plaintiff declared, that land was given to him, and to T. his wife, and to the heirs of their bodies, and that his wife leased the lands to the defendant, and that the donees were dead, and that the plaintiff as heir, &c. for rent arrear, &c. and upon non demiserunt, the jury found that the husband and wife demiserunt, by indenture, and afterwards the husband died, and the wife entred, and within the term died: now upon the matter it seemed clear to Anderson, that the jury have found for the defendant, scil. non demiserunt, for it is now no lease ab initio, because the plaintiff hath not declared upon a deed. 1 Ma. Dyer 91. and also the wife by her disagreement to it, and the occupation of the land after the death of her husband, hath made it the lease of the husband only.

CCLXXV. ROCKWOOD AND ROCKWOODS CASE.

Assumpsit.

In an action upon the case, the case was this. The father of the plaintiff and defendant being sick, and in danger of death, and intending to make his will, in the presence of both his sons the plaintiff and defendant, declared his meaning to be, to devise to the plaintiff his younger son a rent of 4l. per annum, for the term of his life out of his lands, and the defendant being the eldest son (the intention of his father being to charge the land with the said rent) offered to his father and brother, that if the father would forbear to charge the land with the said rent, he promised he would pay the 4l. yearly to his brother during the life of his brother, according to the intention of his said father; whereupon the father asked the plaintiff if he would accept of the offer and promise of his brother: who answered, he would; whereupon the father relying upon the promise of his said eldest son, forbore to devise the said rent, &c. so as the land descended to the eldest son discharged of the rent: and the opinion of the whole Court in this case was clear, that upon the whole matter the action did well lye.

CCLXXVI. PETTY AND TRIVILIANS CASE.

Livery of Seisin.

Humphrey Petty brought second deliverance against William Trivilian, and upon special verdict the case was, that A. was seised of certain land, and leased the same for years, and afterwards made a deed of feoffment unto B. and a letter of attorney to the lessee, C. and D. conjunctim vel divisim in omnia & singula terras et tenementa intrare et seisinam inde, &c. secundum formam chartæ, &c. Lessee for years by himself makes livery and seisin in one part of the land, and C. in another part, and D. by himself in another part; it was first agreed by the justices, that by that livery by lessee for years his interest and term is not determined, for whatsoever he doth, he doth it as an officer, or servant to the lessor. Secondly, it was agreed, that these several liveries were good and warranted by the letter [193] of attorney, especially by reason of these words, In omnia & singula, &c. So as all of them, and every of them might enter and make livery in any and every part. And so it was adjudged.

CCLXXVII. RIGDEN AND PALMERS CASE.

Replevin. Avowry.

Rigden brought a replevin against Palmer, who avowed for damage feasant in his freehold: the plaintiff said, that long time before that Palmer had any thing, he himself was seised, until by A. B. and C. disseissed, against whom he brought an assise, and recovered, and the estate of the plaintiff was mean between the assise, and the recovery in it: the defendant said, that long time before the plaintiff had any thing, one Griffith was seised, and did enfeoff him; absque hoc, that the said A. B. and C. vel eorum aliquis aliquid habuere in the lands, at the time of the recovery. Walmsley Justice was of opinion, that the bar unto the avowry, was not good, for that the plaintiff hath not alleged, that A. B. and C. ter-tenants tempore recuperationis, and that ought to be shewed in every recovery, where it is pleaded. And then when the defendant traverseth that which is not alledged it is not good. Windham contrary: for the assise might be brought against others as well as the tenants; as against disseisors: but other real actions ought to be brought against the ter-tenants only, and therefore it needs not to shew, that they were ter-tenants at the time of the recovery; and also the traverse here is well enough; another exception was taken, because the avowry is, that the place in which, conteineth an 100 acres of land, the plaintiff in bar of the avowry saith, that the place in which, &c. conteins 35 acres, &c. but that exception was not allowed, for it is but matter of form, and is helped by the statute of 27 Eliz. Another exception was taken, as to the hundred of cattel, and doth not shew in certain, if they were ewes, or lambs, or how many of each: which also was disallowed, for the sheriff upon returno habendo may enquire what cattel they were in certain, and so by such means the avowry shall be reduced to certainty.

CCLXXVIII. RUSSELL AND PRATS CASE.

Error. Writ of Enquiry of Damages. Action, de bonis Testatoris.

Rusell brought an action upon the case against Prat, and declared, that certain goods of the testator casually came to the defendants hands; and upon matter in law judgment was given for the plaintiff, sed quia nescitur quæ damna, &c. Ideo a writ of enquiry of damages issued, and now Prat brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber upon the statute of 27 Eliz. cap. 8. But note, that the judgment was given before the said statute, but the writ of enquiry of damages was retorned after the said statute, the said statute doth not extend but to judgments given after the making of it. And it was moved, that the said judgment is not to be examined here; but by the clear opinion of Anderson, Manwood, Windham, Walmesley, Gent, and Clark, Justices of the Common Pleas, and Barons of the Exchequer, the writ of error lyeth here by the statute, for in an action of trespass (as this case is) full judgment is not given, until the writ of damages be retorned; and if before the retorn of it any of the parties dieth, the writ shall abate: and the first judgment which is given before award of the writ is not properly a judgment, but rather a rule, and order, and so in a writ of accompt, where [194] judgment is given that the defendant computet cum querente, he shall not have error upon that matter, for it is not a full judgment. See 21 E. 3. 9. So as to the judgment in a writ of trespas, scil. that no writ of error lyeth before the second judgment after the return of the writ of enquiry of damages are given: and also it was holden by all the said Justices and Barons, that an executor shall have an action upon the case de bonis testatoris, casually come to the hands and possession of another, and by him converted to his own use in the life of the testator, and that by the equity of the statute of 4 E. 3. 7. de bonis asportatis in vita testatoris.

CCLXXVIII. ARRUNDEL AND THE BISHOP OF GLOUCESTERS AND CHAFFINS CASE.

Quare Impedit. Writ to the Bishop.

Sir John Arrundel brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Gloucester, and Chaffin, and counted upon a disturbance to present 1 Novembris. Chaffin, as incumbent pleaded, that 1 Maii next after the said 1 Novemb. he himself was presented to the church by the Queen, the presentment to the said church being devolved unto her by lapse. Upon which the plaintiff did demur in law: and the plea was holden insufficient, for the plaintiff counted upon a disturbance to him 1 Novem. and the defendant entitleth himself to an incumbency 1 May after, in which case the disturbance set forth in the count is not answered by traverse, nor confessed, nor avoided: and of that opinion was the whole Court: for the disturbance, of which the plaintiff hath declared, is confessed. And afterwards, it was moved by the Queens serjeants, that the Queen might have a writ to the bishop, for the title of the Queen appeareth to be by lapse which is confessed, but the whole Court were clear of opinion against it: for although it appeareth that he was lawfully presented to the said church, and so once lawful incumbent, yet it appeareth also, that the title of the Queen is once executed, and so gon, and nothing remains in the Queen, and now when the defendant hath lost his incumbency by ill pleading (as he may) as well as by resignation or deprivation, yet the same shall not turn to the advantage of the Queen, for where the Queen presents for laps, and her clark is instituted and inducted, the Queen hath no more to do, but the incumbent must shift as well as he can for the holding of it, for by what manner so ever he loseth his incumbency the Queen shall not present again; otherwise it had been, if the Queen be patron, and afterwards the plaintiff had a writ to the bishop.

CCLXXIX. THE LORD PAGETS CASE, IN A MONSTRANS DE DROIT, THE CASE WAS.

Declaration of Uses. Use cannot rise out of a Possibility. Use what it is.

Thomas Lord Paget, father of William Paget, was seised of the mannor of Burston, and divers other mannors in three several counties in his demesne as of fee, and so seised by indenture, between the said lord of the one part, and Trentham and others on the other part, and in consideration that the said Trentham and others, with the profits of the said mannors should pay his debts, and such sums of money which were contained in such a schedule, and which he should appoint by his last will, covenanted to stand seised of the said mannors [195] to the use of the said Trentham of one Eusal, &c., for the term of four and twenty years, and after the expiration or end of the said term of twenty four years, unto the use of the said William Paget, his son in tail, with diverse remainders over: and afterwards the said Lord Paget was attainted of high treason. It was here holden and agreed by all the justices, and by the council of both sides, that the uses limited to Trentham, and others are void, for here is not any consideration sufficient to raise an use, for the mony which is appointed for the payment of his debts is to be raised of the profits of the lands of the said lord, which is not any consideration on the part of Trentham and others: but if the consideration had been, that they with the profits of their own lands should pay the debts, &c., it had been a good consideration. It was agreed also, that the term for twenty four years to Eusal is void for want of sufficient consideration: and then it was moved, if this lease being void, the use limited to the said William Paget, son of the said Lord Paget should begin presently upon the death of the Lord Paget, or should expect until the twenty four years were encurred after the death of the Lord Paget, or not at all. And it was argued, that an use to be raised upon an impossibility should never rise, as if I covenant to stand seised to the use of B. and his heirs, after the end of the term for years, which I. S. hath in the mannor of D. whereas in truth, I. S. hath not any term in it, the said use shall never rise: so here, no use to the son can rise, for the lease for twenty four years shall never end, for it never can begin for want of sufficient consideration as is aforesaid; and if the said use in tail should at all rise, it should not rise before the expiration of the said twenty four years. As if I covenant to stand seised of certain lands to your use when my son and heir shall come to the age of one and twenty years, now if my son dieth before such age, the use shall not begin before the time in which my son (if he shall live) should attain unto his said age. Egerton the Queens solicitor, Uses may be limited to begin at times certain before which they shall not begin: and so in our case, the use in tail is limited to begin when the term of twenty four years, is ended, and therefore until the term be ended no use shall rise: and the use is limited to rise upon the end of the time or term of four and twenty years, and not upon the end of the estate, and so William Paget hath begun his monstrans de droit before his time. The Lord Paget had but an estate for life; and if so, then the remainders are not contingent uses, but vest presently: as if a man covenant, that after his death his son and heir shall have his lands, now the father hath but an estate for life, and the inheritance is vested in the son. Cook, I covenant, that after twenty four years ended, I and my heirs shall stand seised to the use of my son, &c. there the use in fee doth vest in my son presently: so I covenant, that after my death, I and every one who shall be seised, &c. shall be seised of the said land to the use of my brother, the said use shall rise to my brother presently: I devise, that after the death of such a monk, I. S. shall have the land, nothing passeth to I. S. till the death of the monk; but if the land be devised to a monk for life, and afterwards to another in fee, the devisee in fee shall have the land presently. Manwood, A devise or use limited to one for life, the remainder in tail, the first devisee doth disagree. Cook, The remainder doth vest presently. Manwood, I devise lands unto one until my son comes of full age. Cook, The remainder doth vest presently. Manw. A use limited to one to begin at Mich. next, the remainder over, if in the mean time the lessee obtain the good will of I. S. which he cannot obtain, the same remainder is not good. And if one covenant to stand seised to the use of Salisbury Plain, for the life of I. S. and after the remainder to A.; it is a plain case, that he in the remainder shall take presently, 37 H. 6. 36. Cestuy que use willed, that his feoffees should make an estate to A. for life, the remainder to C. in fee, & A. would not take the estate, C. shall [196] have a subpœna against the feoffees after the death of A. See there the case; and if land devisable, be devised to one for life, the remainder over to another in fee, and the devisee for life doth refuse; quære, if the devisee in remainder shall enter presently, see Fitz. subpœna; and also he put the case, where land is devised to a monk for life, the remainder over to another in fee, he in the remainder shall enter presently, see the same case in Perkins 108, for the monk never took any thing by the devise, and notwithstanding that there is not any particular estate upon which a remainder can depend, yet the intent of the devisor shall be observed in as much as it may, and the particular estate limited to the monk is meerly void, of which every stranger shall take advantage, &c. And it was resembled to a case in Baintons case, where an use in remainder limited upon good consideration shall be good in law, although the particular use be not grounded upon good consideration, & so faileth: and he urged a case alleadged by Popham in the case of the Earl of Bedford, that if in Cranmers case, the estate for years limited to the executors, had been limited to administrators, it had been meerly void, and the use in tail limited in tail should begin presently, & that was by reason of the interval betwixt the death of Cranmer, & the taking of the letters of administration, in which mean time there is not any person capable, and therefore the remainder shall vest presently, which is a fit case to prove the case at bar; and he remembered that in the argument of Cranmers case, Lovelace Serjeant, would have an occupancy in the case of such a term limited to administrators, quod omnes justiciarii negaverunt: and in the said case of Cranmer, it was holden that the lease for years being void, the estate in the remainder did begin presently, without expecting the effluxion of the years, &c. And truly, a term imports in itself an interest, but if the limitation had been after the term of twenty four years, &c. the same implyeth but a bare time: and to that purpose he cited the case 35 H. 8. Br. Exposition, 44. A. leaseth to B. for ten years, & it is covenanted betwixt them, that if B. pay unto A. within the said ten years one hundred pounds, that then he shall be seised to the use of B. in fee. B. surrenders his term to A. and within the said ten years pays the one hundred pounds to A. here B. shall have fee, for the years are certain; contrary, if the covenant had been, if he pay within the term.

Popham Attorney General contrary, The use shall not go beyond the contract, & here the term doth not vest, in that it was limited for want of sufficient consideration, of the Lord Paget, & the intent was not that his son should have possession of the land before the term of 24 years expired.

A use is a thing in conscience, according to confidence to be guided by the intent of the parties: & upon such case at the common law W. Paget should not have a subpœna before the years expired, and this word (term) doth not alter the case; and there is a great difference betwixt an use raised by feoffment and an use raised by covenant, for in the first case the feoffor doth dipossess himself utterly, & if it takes not effect to one purpose it shall take effect to another purpose: but in the case of a covenant it is otherwise, for the use riseth according to the contract & not otherwise, & here the contract is, that W. Paget shall have the land not immediately after the death of his father, but after the 24 years expire.

Owen Serjeant, It hath been agreed of both sides, that every use shall go according to the intent of the parties, and here it appeareth, that it was the intent of the Lord Paget, to put all the use out of himself, and I see not any difference betwixt an use raised by covenant and a use raised by feoffment, for a use limited utrovis modo to Pauls steeple for the life of A. and after to the use of B. in fee, the first use is void, but the second good; and here the meaning of the Lord Paget plainly appears, for there is a proviso in the indenture, that after the said debts and legacies paid, the use limited for 24 years shall cease, and [197] it is expressly averred, that they are paid 11 H. 4. A. leaseth for life, the remainder in tail to himself, the remainder over to a stranger in fee, the mean remainder limited by A. to himself is void, and the remainder over shall be immediate to the estate for life. Egerton, The words of the indenture, and the intent of the parties are the rules of uses. The first use is void, for the intent of the Lord Paget was void, because contrary to the law, and Eusal, to whom the use for years was limited, could not take presently, for his estate is limited to begin after the death of the Lord Paget; and there is a great difference betwixt uses raised by covenant, and by feoffment, for when a use is raised by feoffment, there all is out of the feoffor, the land is gone, the use is gone, the trust is gone, nothing remaineth but a bare authority to raise uses out of the possession of the feoffees, & being new uses; there although some of them be void, yet the other shall stand; but where a use is raised by way of covenant there the covenantor continues in possession, there the uses limited, if they be according to law, shall raise & draw the possession out of him, but if not, the possession shall remain in him, until a lawful use shall arise, which before its time shall not rise for any defect in the precedent use. And here is no term, therefore no end, for that which hath not a beginning hath no ending, and if there be no estate, then no term, & if there be so, then it is to be taken for the time of 24 years, which is not as yet expired, and then was there in the Lord Pawlet an estate descendable for 24 years, which by the attainder doth accrue unto the Queen. And he cited the case of 13 Eliz. Dyer. 300. Feoffment to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of a woman which he entendeth to marry, until the issue which he should beget on the said woman should come unto the age of 21 years, and then to the use of the woman during her widow-hood; they are married, the husband dieth without issue, the wife shall hold the land: but by him, if this use had bin raised by way of covenant it should be otherwise. Coke, Admit that all the uses be good, yet his meaning was, that the debts and legacies being paid W. Paget should have his land, for it is provided by the indenture, that when the debts & legacies are paid, the estate for 24 years shall cease. Manwood, The payment of the debts cannot end that which never was, and as to the two first estates, they were never out of him, therefore they came unto the Q. by his attainder. Coke, After debts and legacies paid all other estates but the estate of W. Paget cease, therefore William Paget shall have the land. And the rule of Shelly 35 H. 8. 56 is worthy to be received, scil. that learning is honest, & wished to be used, that every man learned in the law, do construe deeds according to the meanings of the makers. Manwood, A feoffment to the use of Salisbury Plain for the life of I. S. the remainder over, the same use shall come into possession presently, for there is not any person capable of the particular estate, but where the first use is limited to a bastard, the remainder over, there, the remainder shall not come into possession presently, for the bastard is a person capable, but not by such form of conveyance in consideration of natural affection. Popham, in the case of bastard, there was an estate for life executed to the father in possession, & then a remainder to a bastard, the remainder to the sons lawfully begotten; but here in our case no estate is created to precede the estate of William Paget, upon which the remainder can depend.

At another day, it was argued by Coke, It is to be agreed on both sides, that the estate for four and twenty years is meerly void, and also the first use limited to Trentham and others, and it is not reason, that the use limited to William Paget, should expect until the four and twenty years be expired by effluxion of time, and to that purpose he cited Cranmers case, where an estate in use was limited to Cranmer for life, the remainder to his executors for one and twenty years, the remainder over in tail to his son [198] and heir, &c. Cranmer is attainted of treason and heresy, so as he could not make a will, or executors, there it is holden, that the term is void, because no executors, and that the remainder in use should vest presently, and should not expect until the said number of years expire by effluxion of time. And difference hath been put betwixt the case of Cranmer, and the case at bar, because in Cranmers case there was a possibility at the beginning that the term for years might be good, for the term became void by matter ex post facto, sci. by the attainder of him, which disabled him to make executors, but in the case at bar, the term for twenty four years was expressly void ab initio: but that difference is without reason, for what reason is there, that the remainder should be further off the possession when the estate for years is originally void, than when it becomes void by matter ex post facto? Suppose that the Lord Paget had by indenture covenanted as above for the two first uses (being in truth void in law) and afterwards by another indenture, reciting, that whereas he had covenanted, that in consideration, that A. with the profits of his lands should pay his debts, &c. to stand seised of the said lands for his own life: now he covenants, to stand seised to the use of William Paget, and his heirs, should not he presently be seised to the use of Willlam Paget, and his heirs, although the words be, that then and from thenceforth? For I hold it a clear case, that his estate begins presently, being limited, to begin upon a void estate, although the limitation be by words de futuro. And to this purpose he cited the case 3 E. 6. Br. Lease 62. A man leaseth for years, habendum post dimissionem inde fact. to J. S. finitam, where no such demise is made, the same lease shall begin presently: If an indenture be made to a monk, and another, habend. to the monk for one and twenty years, and after the end of that, to the other for one and twenty years, the other shall have it presently. And he put a case 7 E. 3. in the new impression 19. and in the old impression 317. Where one Maud brought a formedon in the remainder, and counted that one Hamond was seised, and gave the said tenement to one Robert, &c. in tail, and that for want of such issue, that the tenements should return to the said Hamond for life, the remainder to the demandant in fee, and counted further, that Robert is dead without issue, and that Hamond is also dead, &c. It was holden, although that the remainder reserved to the donor, be void, yet the remainder over in fee is good, &c. And in that case although that the remainder in fee was future, sci.

after the death of Hamond, & the estate reserved to Hamond meerly void, & that originally, & not by matter ex post facto, yet the remainder in fee was good, and should begin presently upon the death of Robert without issue, and should not expect the death of Hamond. Mr. Attorney hath given a rule, that the intent of the parties is the direction of uses, as also of wills, and therefore I will put one case of wills, 37 H. 6. 17. If a man devise lands to a monk for four and twenty years, and after the same ended to another in fee, here the monk being a dead person cannot take the estate limited to him, and therefore it is void: but the fee limited to the other is good, and shall take effect presently: if it be so in a will, why not so also in uses? For the intents of the parties to direct the constructions of both: and our case here is a stronger case than the case cited 37 H. 6. 36. for there where land is devised to a monk for life, there may be colour of an occupant during the life of the monk, who might take it, although the monk himself cannot take it, and so the remainder doth not take effect presently as to the possession, but shall stay till after the death of the monk; but here is not any colour of an occupancy, for the estate here is a lease for years, which cannot admit an occupant. And see also 37 H. 6. 36. If a man devise that his feoffees shall make an estate to I. S. for life, the remainder over to C. in fee, and I. S. will not take his estate, C. shall [199] have a sub-pœna against the feoffees to make an estate to him, leaving out I. S. and see Amy Townsends case in the Commentaries, where the husband seised in the right of his wife, makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself, and his wife for their lives, the remainder over to another, the husband dyeth, the wife refuseth the estate limited to her by the husband, she brings sur cui in vita, not against the heir, but against him in the remainder, to whom the land doth accrue by the refusal of the wife; not against the heir of the feoffor; and I grant, that where an estate in use, or otherwise is to begin upon a condition precedent which is impossible, or against the law, the estate shall never rise or begin. And here the case of the Lord Borroughs, 35 H. 8. Dy. 55. was cited, where the father covenanted in consideration of marriage of his son, that immediately after his death his eldest son shall have the possession or use of all his lands according to the same course of inheritance, as then they stood, and that all persons now seised, or to be seised, should be seised to the said use and intent, and it was holden, that upon that matter no use is changed: but if the words had bin immediately after his death, they should remain, then although the words of the limitation be in futuro, the use of the fee shall rest in the son presently; and the words in futuro ought not to be interpreted, but in benefit of him to whom the use, and estate is limited, 9 Eliz. Dyer. 261. A. leaseth for thirty years, and four years after the beginning of the said term he makes another lease for years by these words, Noverint, &c. dictis 30 annis finitis & completis, demisisse omnia præmissa, to the said, &c. habendum & tenendum a die confectionis præsentium, termino prædict. finito, usque ad finem 30 annorum. And by the opinion of all the justices, this new lease shall commence in possession at the end of the former term, and not before, and if it should not be expounded, the second lease should be in effect an estate, but for ten years, which was not the intent of the parties, and every grant shall be expounded most strongly for the grantee, and to his advantage, to which purpose he said he had vouched this case. Also by him there is not any difference, where the use is limited by way of covenant, or upon a feoffment: and if a man enfeoffeth B. upon condition that he shall enfeoff C. now if he offer to enfeoff C. and he refuseth, the feoffor may re-enter. But if the condition were to give to C. in tail, then upon such refusal of C. the feoffor shall not re-enter. See 2 E. 4. 2. 19 H. 6. 34. Et si equitas sit adhibenda in coustruction of conditions a multo fortiori in case of uses: a feoffment in fee upon condition, that the feoffee shall grant a rent charge to J. S. who doth it, but J. S. refuseth, the feoffor shall not re-enter, for that was not the intent of the condition: if in the principal case, the limitation of the use had been after the expiration of twenty four years, then no use should rise before the twenty four years expire, but where, not the time, but the estate is material, there if the estate be void, the use shall go to him in the remainder presently, and shall not stay the time, &c.

Egerton solicitor, first it is to see, if the use limited to William Paget be good; secondly, if William Paget doth not come before his time to shew his right: if this use limited to William Paget be a remainder or an estate to begin upon a contingent, or a present estate, the estates formerly limited being void, and he conceived, that it is not a remainder, for there is not any estate upon which it may depend; and the words are after the estate for twenty four years ended or expired, that then and from thenceforth to the use of William Paget, &c. so that no use is limited to him before the particular estate is ended, therefore no remainder, for a remainder ought to begin when the particular estate begins. Without doubt that was not the intent that William Paget should have the land during the life of his father, and yet the use limited during the life of his father, was void, and if the remainder should take effect during the said twenty four years against Eusall [200] and his companions, wherefore should it not also take effect against Trentham and the others, to whose use it was limited during the life of the Lord Paget: and here, the use limited to William Paget is to begin upon a collateral contingent, upon which if it cannot rise, it shall not rise at all, and I conceive that the use limited to William Paget, shall never rise, or begin, for it is limited to begin when the term of twenty four years is ended, and that is never, for that which cannot begin, cannot end, and this term is meerly void, ergo, it cannot begin, ergo, it cannot end, then this thenceforth cannot be, and so this contingent can never fall. H. 6. & 7. E. 6. A lease was made for years upon condition, that if the lessee do not pay such a sum of money, that he should lose his indenture, the meaning and sense of these words is not that he should lose the indenture in parchment, but that he should lose his term: the judgment in an eectjone firmæ, is, quod querens recuperet terminum suum, that is to be understood, not the time, but his interest in the land for the term (and Coke secretly said, that in that case there is not any contingent, for the estates precedent never began). And as to the case cited before by Coke, Br. Leases 62. if the last lease be made by indenture, reciting the former lease, certainly the second lessee shall not be concluded to claim the land demised presently, but shall tarry until the years of the first term be expired by effluction of time. And as to Mawnds case cited before, there is an estate upon which a remainder may depend, scil. the estate tail alledged to Robert, &c. If such as now is limited to William Paget had been limited at the Common Law to a younger son, the eldest brother should have the land in the interim discharged of any use, and now after the statute no use limited to William Paget, before the contingent; where, therefore, is it in the mean time: in the Lord Paget, who being attainted, it accrues to the Queen; and out of the possession of the Queen, this use shall never rise, although that the contingent be performed, for now the use is locked up; a use doth consist in privity of the estate and confidence of the person, if these be severed, the use is gone: and here, if the possession be in the Queen, she cannot be seised to another use. Note by Godfrey, that the opinion in Baintons case, 8 Eliz. Dyer 37. is not law, and so hath the law been taken of late. Popham contrary; If before the statute of 27 H. 8. the father covenant in consideration of advancement of his son to stand seised to the use of I. S. for life, and after the death of I. S. to the use of my son in fee, here the estate of I. S. in the use is void, and yet the estate in the use limited to my son, shall not take effect before the death of I. S. for the estate of my son is not limited to take effect till after the death of I. S. and therefore the possession of the father is not charged with the use during the life of I. S. But if by way of feoffment I. S. had refused, the son should have it presently, and the father should not have it, for he by his livery hath put all out of him, and it was not the intent of the feoffment, that the feoffee should have the land to his own use. Popham allowed the difference mentioned before out of 2 E. 4. & 19. H. 6. betwixt a feoffment upon condition to enfeoff a stranger, and to give in tail to a stranger, and that is grounded upon the intent of the parties. And Owen Serjeant put the case cited before 13 Eliz. Dyer 330. A feoffment is made by the husband to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of one Ann, whom he intended to marry, for, during, and until the son which he should beget on the body of the said woman had accomplished the age of thirty one years, and after such time that such son should come unto such age unto the use of the said woman, quamdiu she should live sole, they entermarry, the husband dyeth without issue, the wife entreth immediately, and continues sole, and her entry was adjudged lawful, and the estate in remainder good, although she never had any son, and thereupon a writ of error was brought, and the first judgment was af-[201]-firmed (& note by Tanfield, and others at the bar, that that was the most apt case to the purpose in the law) and the reason of such judgment was, because they took it, that deeds ought to be expounded according to the meaning of the parties, and estates in possession: I grant there ought to be a particular estate, upon which a remainder may depend, but the same is not necessary where the conveyance is by way of use. And if I covenant that A. shall have my lands to him & his heirs, to pay my debts and legacies, the same is by way of bargain and sale, and nothing passeth without enrolment. And here the attainder doth not prevent the use, as it hath been objected by Master Solicitor, for the use doth rise before the attainder, for William Paget had a remainder in tail, in the life of his father, upon the first limitation, &c. Periam Justice, I lease my lands to you, to begin after the expiration of a lease, which I have made thereof to I. S. and in truth he hath not any lease, the same lease shall never begin. Manwood Chief Baron, I lease my lands to you, or grant a rent to you to begin after the death of Prisoit Serjeant at Law, when shall that begin? Coke, Presently. Manwood, Cujus contrarium est lex.

CCLXXX. THE QUEEN AGAINST THE ARCH-BISHOP OF CANTERBURY, FANE, AND HUDSON.

Quare Impedit.

The Queen brought a quare impedit against the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Chichester, Fane and Hudson, and counted that John Ashburnham was seised of the advowson of Burwash, & was outlawed in an action of debt, during which out-lawry in force, the church voided, for which it belongs to the Queen to present. The arch-bishop and bishops plead, that they claim nothing but as metropolitan and ordinary. Fane pleaded that King E. 4. ex gratia sua speciali, &c. and in consideration of faithful service, &c. did grant to the Lord Hastings the castle and barony of Hastings, and hundred, &c. Et quod ipse haberet omnia bona & catalla tenentium, residentium & non residentium, & aliorum residentium quorumcunque hominum, de & in castro baronia, &c. or within the same, pro munero debit. &c. tam ad sectam regis, &c. quam, &c. Ut legatorem, & quid ipse faceret, per se vel per his sufficient deputies, &c. And from him derived to the now Earl of Huntington as heir; and the said earl so seised, and the said Ashburnham seised of the advowson as appendant to the manor of Ashburnham, holden of the said barony, the church aforesaid during the out-lawry aforesaid, became void, for which the said Fane, ad dictam ecclesiam usurpando presentavit the said Hudson, who was admitted and instituted, &c. with this, that idem T. C. verificare vult, that the said church of Burwash is, and at the time of the grant was, within the precinct, liberty, and franchise aforesaid, and that the said manor of Ashburnham, at the time of the grant aforesaid was holden of the said barony: and the incumbent pleaded the same plea: & if by that grant of King Edward the fourth, to the Lord Hastings, scil. omnia bona & catalla, &c. The presentment to the church should pass or not, was the question. Shutleworth Serjeant, argued for the Queen, he confessed that the King might grant such presentment, but it ought to be by special and sufficient words, so as it may appear by them, that the intent of the King was to grant such a thing, for the general words (omnia bona & catalla) will not pass such special chattel in the Kings grant: and he conceived that by the subsequent words, no goods or chattels shall pass by such grants, but such which may be seised, which [202] the avoidance of a church cannot be, & quod ipse liceret, per se vel ministros suos ponere se in seisinam, 8 H. 4. 114. 15. the King granted to the Bishop of London, that he should have catalla felonum & fugitivor. de omnibus hominibus & tenentibus de & in terris & feodis prædict. and of all resiants within the lands and fees aforesaid, ita quod, si prædict. homines, tenentes & residentes de & in terris & feodis prædict. seu aliqui eorum, seu aliquis alius infra eadem terra & feodis pro aliqua transgressione, &c. vid. librum, &c. and by Tirwit, by that grant the goods of those who are put to pennance shall not pass; so of the goods of one felo de se, vid. 42 E. 3. 5. One being impanelled on the grand enquest before the justices of oyer and terminer, pleaded the charter of the King of exemption from enquests, and because in the said charter was not this clause, licet tanget nos & hæredes nostros, upon challenge, it was rejected, and the party charged and sworn: and if the King grant to me to appropriate an advowson, which in truth is holden of the King, such a grant is void, if there be not special words by which it might appear that the King had notice of it, and that his intent was that the grant should extend unto it, 16 E. 3. Grants 58. & 33 E. 3. Grants 103. So here the presentment is a special chattel, and is not usually intended or thought upon, when men speak generally of goods and chattels. But admit that it be, yet the plea doth not lye in the defendants to plead, for they do not derive any interest under this grant, but are meer strangers to it, and therefore they shall not take any advantage, by laying this grant in the Queens way, for the Q. hath good title against all persons but those who claim under the grant, but that is nothing to the defendants, for one cannot cross the title of the King, if he do not make a title to himself, as 39 E. 3. 18. 37. E. 3. 11. If the title of the King be found by a false office, the party grieved cannot traverse the Kings title without making title to himself found by office, and then the King may choose whether he will maintain his own title found by office, or traverse the title of the other. Walmesley, contrary: This title of presentment is a chattel, rex habebit omnia catalla felonum, &c. A term of years is a chattel, so the issues and profits of the lands of men outlawed for felony, so a right of action for goods; therefore a title to present, and if such a title accrue to the King, by such general words they shall pass from the King. And as to that which hath been objected, that the grant of King Edward the fourth doth not extend but only to such goods and chattels which may be seised, he cited the case of 39 H. 6. 35. b. Where the grantee of a rent for term of years granted omnia bona & catalla sua, tam viva quam mortua, the rent doth pass, and yet the grantor cannot put him in seisin of it, but ought to expect the day of payment of it. And this title to present is not a thing in action, for if no disturbance be made, the party may have the benefit of it without any action. Anderson conceived, that this title to present cannot pass by those general words (bona & catalla) for they do not extend to rights, or things in action, for such things only which are commonly known and understod, shall pass by such words: by grant of goods, chattels real will not pass; for when men speak of goods, household-stuff, mony, and such personal things only are understood: so a man cannot be said to have a chattel but where he is possessed of it, and here this interest is but jus præsentandi.

[203] Periam, this interest is a chattel, for if the church become void, and before presentment the patron dieth, the executors shall have the presentment, for it was a chattel vested in the testator: it was adjorned.

CCLXXXI. Jones Case.

Hen. Jones had stolen the plate of Trinity Colledge in Oxford, and by mediation of his friends it was concluded and agreed, that no evidence should be given against him at the sute of the colledge, and that the colledge should be recompenced for the losse, and two of his friends, Brien and Brice were bound unto Doctor Underhil, Rector of Lincoln Colledge in Oxford (but unto the use of the master and scholrs of Trinity Colledge) upon condition that if the said obligor paid forty pounds within six months after, the said Hen. Jones should be acquitted & released of the troubles wherein he now is, with the safety of his life, that then, &c. In debt upon the obligation the defendants pleaded that he was indicted at the Assises at Ox. & arraigned upon it scil. for the stealing of the said plate, and found guilty thereof, and had his clergy, and was burned in the hand, & he demanded judgment of this action, upon which there was a demurrer: Wind. If the words had been to pay the money, after that Henry Jones should be released and acquitted of the troubles in which he now is without any more, the defendants had been bounden to pay the mony. Periam, If the words of the condition had been, that after Henry Jones should be acquitted of the felony, then no mony payable, but here the words are with safety of his life: but here he conceived, that the intent of the obligation was that no evidence should be given, and so to save his life from the gallows, for which the defendants might have shewed the special matter, and averred that the obligation was made for the discharge of a felon, and so against the law, &c. but now, they cannot take advantage of it, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCLXXXII. CASTLE AND OLDMANS CASE.

Debt.

Castle brought debt against Oldman for a pain assessed in a court baron, and declared that the defendant was presented at the court baron for such an offence, and if he did not amend it before the next court, he should pay such a pain: and at the next court it was presented, that the defendant had not amended it, and so he had incurred the pain upon which the action is brought, and now the defendant would wage his law, and it was much doubted whether wager of law lay in the case. Shutleworth, 13. H. 7. 31. Upon a recovery in a court baron, wager of law lyes not, by Conisby, which Periam denyed; and by him upon an account by another hand, it doth not lye, for it is a matter of which the country may have conusance; so here the matter is notorious, whith lyeth in the knowledge of all the jurors who presented it: and by him, the pain ought to be afferred, which Anderson denied. For there is a difference betwixt an amercement and a pain, which Windham granted. And see for the amerciament in the Leet, 10 H. 6. 7. 12. R. 2. Ley. 43. But in a Court baron, because it is not a Court of Record; so in debt upon an arbitrament, the law lyeth. And Waler one of the secondaries shewed unto the Court a president, 6 Eliz. [204] where debt was brought by Sir Thomas Tyndal, upon a pain forfeited for the breaking of a by-law in a Court baron against Tyler; and the party was received to wage his law.

CCLXXXIII. THETFORD AND THETFORDS CASE.

Partition.

In wast the plaintiff declared, upon the demise of the moyety of the manor, whereof part of the tenants were copy-holders, and part freeholders, and that A. was seised of the manor, and had issue two daughters, and dyed seised, the daughters entred, and made partition of the demeans only, but the services of the free-holders and copy-holders did remain in common; one of the daughters took husband the husband and the wife make a lease of the moyety of the manor to the plaintiff for years by word, rendring rent, the lessee entred into the demeans allotted to the wife of the lessor. The husband died, and the wife brought an action of wast. Anderson, By the partition the demeans are now become in gross, and severed from the manor; and if partition be made of a manor, so as the demeans be allotted to one sister, and the services to the other, now the mannor is dissolved, yet if the other sister dieth without issue, and her part descendeth to the other, now it is become a manor again, which Windham and Periam granted, see 12. H. 4. 271. And Anderson was of opinion, that the moyety of the demeans did not pass by the words of the moyety of the manor, as if one seised of a manor maketh a feoffment in fee of part of the demeans, and afterwards re-purchaseth them, and then makes a feoffment of the whole manor, the demeans repurchased will not pass thereby, for they were once severed from the manor, and not re-united by the purchase. Periam, Although that in truth it is not a manor nor any part of a manor, yet if it hath been reputed the moyety of the manor, it shall pass by such name, which Anderson granted, but it is not like to our case. Periam, This is an ancient partition, as appeareth by the verdict, ten years past, and also it hath been reputed the moyety of the manor, therefore it shall pass. Windham concessit Periam, The intent of the grantor is the best interpreter of these words, without relying strictly upon the words. Anderson, If we shall take the intents of men for law, we shall fall into many confusions in our proceedings, but the law is to judge of the meanings of men by their words. Ever in the constructions of wills, the intent of the testators have not had further favour than the words have given leave. As to the other point: it was argued by Walmsley, that the lease made by the husband and wife without deed was void, see 1 Ma. Dyer. 91. And if the wife after the death of her husband accepts the rent upon such a lease reserved, it shall not bind her, for the consent of the wife ought to be at the beginning of it, which cannot be without deed. Anderson conceived that the lease is not meerly void, see 15 Eliz. Smith & Stapletons Case, Plowd. 431. Periam, The matter is clear, for although the plaintiff declares generally of a lease made by the husband & wife, yet the jury hath found, that it was by indenture, and that is pursuant enough. And if the husband and wife make a feoffment of the wives land, it is the feoffment of both of them; which Walmesley granted: it was adjorned.

CCLXXXIV. SMALWOOD AND OTHERS, AGAINST THE BISHOP OF LICHFEILD AND OTHERS, QUARE IMPEDIT.

Quare Impedit.

Humphrey Smalwood, Richard Say, and Thomas Say, executors of William Say, brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfeild, and M. incumbent, quod permittat præsentare ad Archidiaconatum de Derby, which was void, et ad præsentationem testatoris in vita sua, & nunc in retardationem executionis testamenti, did belong to the executors: exception was taken because these words (in retardationem executionis testamenti) could not be applied to a disturbance in the life of the testator. Windham, There is not any writ in the register of quare impedit, upon a disturbance made to the testator. Anderson, What then? therefore no remedy because no writ according to his special matter, 25 E. 3. 25. Goods are taken out of the possession of the testator, upon which the executors brought trespass, in retardationem executionis testamenti, writ abated, for it ought to be where the executors themselves were possessed. Periam, The advowson it self is valuable, not the presentment, therefore it cannot be said in retardationem. Periam, Before the statute of 4 E. 3. 73. In case were damages were only to be recovered, the action moritur cum persona, but where the thing it self was to be recovered, there the action accrued to the executors. Anderson, 7 H. 4. 73. Ejectione firmæ of an ejectment made unto the testator was maintained by the executors be equity of the statute of 4 E. 3. cap. 6. And by the opinion of the whole Court, the executors might have a quare impedit upon a disturbance made to the presentment: it was objected also, that a quare impedit doth not lye of an archdeaconry-ship, for it is not local, nor any indenture made of it, but is only a matter of function, but it was not allowed, for an archdeacon hath locum in coro: and by the statute a quare impedit lyeth of a chappel, and by the equity of it, of a prebend, &c. See the statute of West. 2. Quare impedit of a chappel, prebend, &c. It was moved, if the executors had presented after the death of the testator, whether the archdeacon ought to receive the clark of the testator, or of the executors, and the opinion of the Court was, that the bishop should have election therein: and afterwards judgment was given, that the writ should abate, for the disturbance to the testator cannot be supposed new matter (in retardationem executionis testamenti). But yet it was agreed, that the executors might have their special writ upon their case for the said disturbance.

TRIN. 31 ELIZ. IN COMMUNI BANCO.

In an action brought against one as executor, who pleaded that he refused, upon which the parties were at issue: the bishop did certifie, quod non recusavit, whereas in truth he had refused before the commissary: Fenner Serjeant moved, to have the advice of the Court upon that matter, and argued that the Court ought to write to the commissary: which was denyed by the whole Court, for he is not the officer unto the Court to that purpose, but the bishop himself is the officer: and the party cannot aver against the certificate of the bishop, no more than against the retorn of the sheriff: the Court was also of opinion, that the only remedy for the defendant was by action upon the case against the bishop for his false certificate: but it was moved, that the issue joyned upon the refusal ought to be try-[206]-ed by jury, and not by the certificate of the bishop, and so was the opinion of Windham and Walmesley. Periam, Where the issue is whether the executor did refuse before such a day, or after, there the tryal shall be by jury; contrary where the issue is upon refusal generally, because the refusal is before him as a Judge, as also is resignation.

CCLXXXVII. SUTTON AND HOLLOWAY AND DICKONS CASE.

Estoppel.

In an ejectione firmæ by Richard Sutton against Robert Holloway, and Thomas Dickons, upon not guilty pleaded, the jury found this special matter, scil. that the said Thomas Dickins had not any thing in the lands in question at the time of the making of the lease, upon which the action is brought, scil. who leased by indenture to the plaintiff for certain years, who entred, and afterwards the said Thomas Dickins, contra indenturam suam prædictam intravit upon the plaintiff, and, if the same should be a good lease by estoppel was the question; the jury having found the truth of the matter, scil. that the lessor had not any thing at the time of the demise; Walmesley objected, that the jury ought not to find the indenture, because it was not pleaded, for the plaintiff doth not declare upon any indenture; but the exception was not allowed, but in old time the law was such, 22 E. 3. but at this day the law is otherwise, See Scholastica's case, 14 Eliz. Plowd. 411. But where a release or other writing ought to be pleaded, there it ought to be shewed to the Court. Walmesley, In rei veritate, the lease is void, for a man cannot let land in which he hath not any thing: but in respect of the parties themselves, the lessors and lessee both are concluded to say, that is no lease, for none of them can say to the contrary: but here the jury which is a third person, is not estopped to say the truth, but they may find the special matter and the truth of the case, and the estoppel hath not place there; but the truth of the matter appearing to the Judges, the Judges ought to adjudge upon the same, scil. if a man may make an effectual lease of lands, in which he hath not any thing. At another day it was moved by Shutl. Although that the jury be not estopped, yet the parties themselves are estopped, for the law makes the estoppel betwixt the parties, and the law will not permit a man to say any thing against his own deed being indented, nor any matter contained in it. Periam and Anderson clearly for the plaintiff, that it is a lease by estoppel; and by Periam, It hath been adjudged in the Kings Bench, that the jury in such case are compellable upon pain of attaint to find the estoppel: Walmesley, Here the estoppel is out of doors, for the truth of the matter disclosed by the verdict, not by the parties only maketh the estoppel, & he much replied upon the case of Littleton, 149. a. A woman seised of lands in fee, taketh a husband, who alieneth to another in fee, the alienee leaseth to the husband and wife for their lives, now the wife is remitted, and seised in fee as before, here if the alienee, i.e. the lessor, brings an action of wast against the husband and wife, the husband cannot bar the plaintiff by the truth of the matter; scil. the remitter of his wife; for he is estopped to say against his own feoffment, and his retaking of the particular estate to himself and his wife: but if in an action of wast, the husband make default at the grand distress, and the wife prayeth to the received, she may well shew the whole matter: so here the jury: Windham, The plaintiff ought to have demurred upon the evidence: Periam, What if the defendant will not joyne with the plaintiff in the demurrer? Windham, There the Court ought to over-rule them, & if [207] the parties had demurred upon the evidence, we should have adjudged upon that evidence, that a man cannot lease lands in which he hath not any thing: and here, the estoppel could not be pleaded, for the defendant hath pleaded the general issue, but if he had pleaded non demisit, then the estoppel should have holden place.

A jury did surmise at the bar, that he was a tenant in ancient demesne, and had his charter in his hand, and prayed to be exempted from the jury and discharged, but the Court did not regard it, but caused him to be sworn. And Windham said, that he might have his remedy against the sheriff; and Nelson Prothonotary said, if he had made default and lost issues, he might shew his charter in the Exchequer upon the amercement estreated, and there he should be discharged: in that case, it was holden by the Court, that if a feoffment be made of a house, and the deed be delivered in the house without other circumstance, the same doth not amount to a livery of seisin, but if he do any act by which the intent of the feoffor appeareth that the feoffee should have livery and seisin; as if the parties go of purpose to the place intended to pass, to the intent that the deed may be delivered in that kind, the same doth amount to a livery, by Anderson, and the whole Court.

CCLXXXVIII. BRADSTOCKS CASE.

Estates. Conditions.

Robert Bradstock seised in fee of certain lands, made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself in tail, and for want of such issue to the use of John Bradstock, his brother in tail, and for want of such issue to the use of Henry Bradstock, another brother in tail, provided always, that if the said John or Henry do go about to avoid any estate or demise by copy, made or to be made of the premisses, or any part thereof, that then his estate should cease. Robert died without issue, John entred and levyed a fine, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. of the land: and the opinion of the whole Court was, that this fine was not any offence against the said proviso; for these words (made or to be made) do not extend to estates made or limited by the said feoffment, but only to estates before made, and to be made afterwards.

CCLXXXIX. LONG AND HEMMINGS CASE.

Quare Impedit.

In a quare impedit by Long against Hemming and the Bishop of Gloucester, of the church of Frombillet, upon the pleading the issue was, if Tho. Long father of the plaintiff did enfeoff the plaintiff of the manor of From. to which the advowson of the said church was appendant before he granted the advowson to one Strengtham who granted it to the def. or not. And the jury gave a special verdict, scil. that the Abbot of S. was seised of a capital messuage in Frombillet, & of one hundred [208] acres of land there, and that there was a tenancy holden of the said capital messuage by such services, and that the said capital messuage had been known time out of mind, by the name of the manor of Frombillet, and that the advowson was appendant to it, and conveyed the said capital messuage and advowson to the King by the dissolution, and from the King, to the said Thomas Long, who so seised, without any deed did enfeoff the plaintiff of the said manor, and made livery and seisin upon the demesnes, and that the said Thomas Long by his deed made a grant of the said advowson, to the said Strengham, and afterwards the free-holder attorned to the plaintiff: and by the clear opinion of the whole Court, here is a sufficient manor to which an advowson may be well appendant, and that in law the advowson is appendant to all the manor, but most properly to the demesnes, out of which at the commencement it was derived, and therefore by the attornment afterwards, within construction of the law shall have relation to the livery, the advowson did pass included in the livery: and the grant of the advowson made mesne between the livery and the attornment was void; and afterwards judgment was given, and a writ to the bishop granted for the plaintiff.

CCXCI. LANCASTERS CASE.

An information was against Lancaster for buying of pretended rights and titles upon the statute of 32 H. 8. and upon not guilty pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff, & it was moved in arrest of judgment, because the informer had not pursued the statute, in this, that it is not set forth, that the defendant nor any of his ancestors, or any by whom he claimed, have taken the profits, &c. and the same was holden a good, and material exception by the Court: & although it be layed in the information, that the plaint. himself hath been in possession of the land by twenty years before the buying of the pretended title, for that is but matter of argument, & not any express allegation, for in all penal stat. the plaintiff ought to pursue the very words of the stat. and therefore by Anderson, It hath been adjudged by the Judges of both benches, that if an information be exhibited upon the Stat. of Usury, by which the defendant is charged for the taking of twenty pounds for the loan and forbearing of one hundred pounds for a year, there the information is not good, if it be not alledged [209] in it, that the said twenty pounds was received by any corrupt or deceitful way or means: and in the principal case, for the cause aforesaid, judgment was arrested.

CCXCII. BAGSHAW AND THE EARL OF SHREWSBURIES CASE.

Annuity.

Bagshaw brought a writ of annuity against the Earl of Shrewsbury, for the arrerages of an annuity of twenty marks per annum, granted by the defendant to the plaintiff, pro consilio impenso & impendendo. The defendant pleaded, that before any arrerages incurred, he required the plaintiff to do him service, and he refused: the plaintiff by replication said, that before the refusal, such a day and place the defendant discharged the plaintiff of his service, &c. And the opinion of the Court was, that the plea in bar was not good, for he ought to have shewed for what manner of service to do, the plaintiff was so retained, and for what kind of service the annuity was granted; and then to have shewed specially what service he required of the plaintiff, and what service the plaintiff refused. Another matter was moved, if the discharge shall be peremptory, and an absolute discharge of the service of the plaintiff, and of his attendance, so that as afterwards the defendant cannot require service of the plaintiff. And by Walmesly Justice, it is a peremptory discharge of the service, for otherwise how can he be retained with another master; and so he should be out of every service. Windham contrary, For here the plaintiff hath an annuity for his life, and therefore it is reason that he continue his service for his life, as long as the annuity doth continue, if he requireth: but where one is retained but for one or two years, then once discharged, is peremptory and absolute.

CCXCIII. MATHESON AND TROTS CASE.

Devises. Descent, where takes away entire.

Betwixt Matheson and Trot the case was, Sir Anthony Denny seised of certain lands in and about the town of Hertford, holden in socage, and of divers mannors, lands, and tenements in other places holden in chief by knights-service, and having issue two sons, Henry and Edward, by his last will in writing, devised the lands holden in Hertford to Edward Denny his younger son in fee, and died seised of all the premises, Henry being then within age: after office was found without any mention of the said devise; the Queen seised the body of the heir, and the possession of all the lands whereof the said Sir Anthony died seised, and leased the same to a stranger, during the minority of the heir; by force and colour of which lease the lessee entred into all the premises, and did enjoy them according to the demise. And the heir at his full age sued livery of the whole, and before any entry of the said Edward in the land to him devised, or any entry made by the said Henry, the said Henry at London, leased the said lands by deed indented to I. S. for years, rendring rent, by colour of which the said I. S. entred, and paid the rent divers years to the said Henry: and afterwards by casualty the said Henry walked over the grounds demised by him, in the company of the said I. S. without any special entry or claim there made, I. S. assigned his interest to I. D. who entred in the premisses, and paid the rent to the said Henry, who died, and afterwards the rent was paid to the son and heir of Henry: and after four and twenty years after [210] the death of the said Sir Anthony, the said Edward entred into the land to him devised by the said devise; and leased the same to the plaintiff, &c. And it was moved here, if this dying seised of Henry of the lands in Hertford, and descent to his heir, should take away the entry of Edward the devisee. And by Anderson cleerly, If here upon the whole matter be a descent in the case, then the entry of Edward the devisee is taken away, although that the devisee at the time of the descent had not any action or other remedy, for it shall be accounted his folly that he would not enter, and prevent the descent. But Windham, Periam, and Walmesly Justices, were of a contrary opinion, for a devisee by a devise hath but a title of entry, which shall not be bound by any descent, as entry for mortmain, for condition broken. And after long deliberation they all agreed that there was not any descent in the case, for by the devise, and death of the devisor, the frank-tenement in law, and the fee was vested in the devisee Edward: and then when the Queen seised, and leased the same during the nonage of Henry, and the lessee entred, he did wrong to Edward, and by his entry had gained a tortious estate in fee, although he could not be said properly a disseisor, nor an abator: and afterwards when Henry after his full age, when by his indenture he leased without any special entry, ut supra, and by colour thereof of the lessee entred, now he is a wrong-doer to Edward the devisee and by his entry had gained a wrongful possession in fee: and then the paying of the rent to Henry, nor the walking of Henry upon the land without any special claim, did not gain any seisin to him: and so he was never seised of the land, and could never die seised, and then no discent; and then the entry of Edward was lawful, and the lease by him made to the plaintiff was good: and so judgment was given for the plaintiff.

In a replevin between Greenwood and Welden; the defendant made conusans as bayliff to John Cornwallis, & shewed how that seven acres of land called Pilles, is locus in quo: and at the time of the taking were holden of the said Cornwallis by certain rent, and other services: and for rent arrear he made conusans, as bayliff to Cornwallis. The plaintiff pleaded out of the fee of Cornwallis, upon which they were at issue: and it was found that the plaintiff is seised of seven acres called Pilles, holden of Cornwallis, ut supra: but the jury say, that locus in quo doth contain two acres, which is called Pilles, and these two acres are, and then were, holden of Agmondesham of the Middle-Temple: and if upon the whole matter, videbitur curiæ, &c. And by the opinion of the whole Court, out of his fee upon that matter is not found, for although it be found, that the two acres be holden of Agmondesham, yet it may be that they are within the fee of Cornwallis, for it may be that Cornwallis is Lord Paramount, and Agmondesham mesne, and then within the fee of Cornwallis: and therefore for the incertainty of the verdict, a venire facias de novo was awarded.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that the 5 Junij, 30 Eliz. the defend. And it was moved in arrest of judgment, that it appeareth upon the declaration, that the plaintiff hath not cause of action, for the Trinity Term intended is not yet come, for the day of the assumpsit is the fifth of June, and the fourth day was the first day of the said term, scil. the day of essoins, and the seventh day 4. die post, and then the promise being made at the day aforesaid, after the commencement of the said term, the same is not the term intended, but the plaintiff must expect the performance of the promise until a year after: and of that opinion was Anderson, but the three other justices were strongly against him to the contrary, for by common intendment amongst the people, the term shall not begin until 4. die post, and so it is set down usually in the almanack; and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

S. or his heirs, or their council should devise: and shewed, that before any further assurance was made, the said I. S. died, his son and heir being within age: and now by advise of council, and of the friends of the infant, it was devised that for such further assurance and cutting off the remainder, a common recovery should be suffered, in which the said infant should be tenant to the præcipe, and should vouch the vendor, and because that the said term of seven years is almost expired, and that the said recovery is intended to be unto the use of the said infant and his heirs, it was prayed that such a recovery might be received and allowed. CCICVII. COTTONS CASE.

Fines levied to use. Estates. Tails.

It was found by special verdict, that Berwich and Tesdel seised of certain lands, conveyed the same to Sir Thomas Cotton for life, the remainder to Wil. Cotton, & primogenito filio suo, & hæredi masculo, & sic de primogenito ad primogenitum dict.

William, the remainder to the right heirs of the body of Sir Tho. Cotton, and Wil. Cotton lawfully issuing, the remainder to the right heirs of Sir Tho. Cotton: Wil. had issue a son born here in Eng. and went beyond the sea to Antwerp, and there continuing, and his son being within age in England, Sir Thomas Cotton [212] levied a fine of all the land, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. And afterwards by indenture covenanted to stand seised to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of Robert Cotton his son in fee: William died at Antwerp, his said son being within age in England, Sir Tho. Cotton died, Robert entred, and leased the lands for years to Sary, and the infant son and heir of William leased the land to one Chewn at will, who entred and ousted Sary, who thereupon brought ejectione firmæ. It was here holden by the Court, that Sir Tho. Cotton was tenant for life, the remainder to William for term of his life, the remainder to the heirs of both their bodies issuing: so as unto one moyety Sir Thomas Cotton had an estate tail dependant upon the said estates for life; and so the fine levied by him was a bar to the issue of William for a moyety. And as to the other moyety they held that the said fine was not any bar, but that the party interessed at the same time might avoid the fine at any time during his nonage, & five years after, for Wil. his father was not bound by the statute of 4. H. 7. because at the time of the fine levied, he was beyond the seas, and although he never returned but died there, yet by the equity of the statute his issue shall have five years after his death to avoid the fine, if he were of full age, and if he were within age, then during his nonage, and five years after. At another day the case was argued and put in this manner, viz. lands were given to Sir Thomas Cotton for life, without impeachment of wast, the remainder over to Cheny Cotton his eldest son, & primogenito filio & hæredi masculo, of the said Cheny, & sic de primogenito filio in primogenitum filium, the remainder to the heirs males of the body of the said Cheny, & for want of such issue, the remainder to Wil. Cotton his second son, & primogenito filio, in primogenitum filium, the remainder over to the said Sir Thomas, and the said William, and the heirs males of their bodies lawfully begotten. Cheny Cotton died without issue, William having issue, went beyond the sea, Sir Thomas Cotton, 19 Eliz. levied a fine with proclamation, and afterwards William the father died in Antwerp, his son being within age, Sir Thomas by indenture limited the use of the fine to himself for life, the remainder over to Robert Cotton his third son in tail, Sir Thomas died (but it doth not appear at what time) William the son being yet within age entred (but non constat quando) and 31 Eliz. leased the lands to the defendant at will. Drue Serjeant argued for William Cotton. And he conceived, that William the father had an estate-tail, and then the entry of William the son was congeable for the whole: but admitting that it is not an estate-tail in William the father for the whole, yet he hath by the second remainder an estate-tail in the moyety, and then his entry good as to one moyety; and then Robert being tenant in common of the other moyety, his lessee without an actual ouster cannot maintain an ejectionæ firmæ against the lessee of his companion. And he conceived here is a good estate-tail in William Cotton by virtue of the limitation to William, & primogenito filio & hæredi masculo ipsius Guliel. & sic de primogenito filio in primogenitum filium, &c. for according to the statute of West. 2. the will of the donor ought to be observed, and here it appeareth that the intent of the donor was to create an estate-tail, although the words of the limitation do not amount to so much. And the estates mentioned in the statute aforesaid, are not rules for entails, but only examples, as it is said by Trew, 33 E. 3 F. Tail 5. & see Robeiges Case, 2 E. 2. 1 Fitz. Tail: and 5 H. 5. 6. land given to A. and B. uxori ejus, & hæredibus eorum & aliis hæredibus dicti A. si dict. hæredes de dictis A. & B. exeuntes obierint sine hæredibus de se, &c. and that was holden a good entail; so a gift to one and his heirs, si hæredes de carne sua habuerit, & si nullos de carne sua habuerit revertatur terra, and adjudged a good tail: so 39 E. 3. 20. land given to husband and wife, & uni hæredi de corpore suo ligitime procreat. & uni hæredi ipsius hæredis tantum, and that was hol-[213]-den a good tail; and so he conceived in this case, that although the words of the limitation are not apt to create an estate-tail according to the phrase and stile of the said statute of West 2. yet here the intent of the donor appears to continue the land in his name and blood, for William the son could not take with his father by his limitation, for he was not in rerum natura, and therefore all shall vest in William the father, which see 18 E. 3 Fitz.

Feoffments & Fait. 60 Now it is to see, if upon the limitation to Sir Thomas Cotton and William his son, by which the remainder is limited to Sir Thomas Cotton and William, and the heirs males of their bodies issuing, the said Sir Thomas Cotton and Wil. have a joynt estate-tail; in respect that the issue of the body of the son, may be heir of the body of the father: and so because they might have one heir which shall be inheritable to his land, it shall be one entire estate-tail in them: but he conceived that they are several estates-tail, and that they are tenants in common of an estate tail, 3 & 4 Phil. & Mar. Dyer 145. Land given to the father and son, and to the heirs of their two bodies begotten, the remainder over in fee, the father dieth without other issue than the son only, and afterwards the son dieth without issue, a stranger abates: or if the son hath made a discontinuance, if he in the remainder shall have but one or two several formedons was the question. And by Saunders, Brook, and Brown, but one formedon, and quære left of it; yet admitting that, yet notwithstanding that, it might be that they had several estates-tail, 17 E. 3. 51. 78. Land given to a man and his sister, and to the heirs of their two bodies issuing, they have several estates tail, and yet one formedon. And see 7 H. 4. 85. land given to a man and his mother, or to to her daughter in tail, here are several entails and here in the principal case, Sir Thomas Cotton hath one moyety in tail expectant upon his estate for life: and therefore as to the moyety of Sir Thomas Cotton he is bound by the fine. And the other moyety is left in the son, who may enter for a forfeiture upon the alienation made by his father, as well in the life of the father, as afterwards. Now after this fine levied, the entry of William the son by virtue of his remainder is lawful after the death of Sir Thomas, although that William the father was beyond the sea at the time of the fine levied, and there afterwards died, William the son being within age. The words of the statute of 4 H. 7. are, Other than women covert, or out of this realm, &c. so that they or their heirs make their entry, &c. within five years after they return into this land, &c. So that by the bare letter of the act, Will. the son hath not remedy, nor relief by this act against the fine, because that William, the father died beyond the sea, without any return into England; yet by the equity of the statute he shall have five years to make his claim, although his father never return, for if such literal construction should be allowed, it should be a great mischief, and it should be a hard exposition, for this statute ought to be taken by equity, as it appeareth by diverse cases, 19 H. 8. 6. My uncle doth disseise my father, and afterwards levies a fine with proclamations; my father dieth, and after within five years my uncle dies, that fine is no bar to me, yet the exception doth not help me, for I am heir to him that levied the fine, and so privy to it, but my title to the land, is not as heir to my uncle, but to my father: so if an infant after such a fine levied, dieth before his full age, his heir may enter within five years after, and yet that case is out of the letter of the statute. And by Brown and Sanders, if the disseisee dieth, his wife enseint with a son, the disseisor levieth a fine, the son is born, although this son is not excepted expressly by the words, because not in rerum natura at the time of the fine levied, &c. yet such an infant is within the equity and meaning of the said statute. See the case betwixt Stowel and Zouch, Plow. Com. 366. And by him, [214] it was holden, 6. Eliz. that an infant brought a formdon within age, and adjudged maintainable, although the words of the statute be, that they shall take their actions or lawful entries within five years after they come of full age: and he also argued, that here, when Sir Thomas being tenant for life, levyed a fine, which is a forfeiture, he in the remainder is to have five years after the fine levied, in respect of the present forfeiture, and also five years after the death of the tenant for life: and that was the case of one some adjudged accordingly in the Common Pleas: it hath been objected on the other side, that the defendant entring by color of the lease at will made to him by William who was an infant, that he was a disseisor as well to the infant as to the lessor of the plaintiff, who had the moyety as tenant in common with the infant, and then when the lessor of the plaintiff entred upon the defendant, and leased to the plaintiff, and the defendant entred and ejected the plaintiff, he is a disseisor; to which he answered, that the defendant when he entred by the lease at will, he was no disseisor, for such a lease of an infant is not void, but only voidable, &c. and then a sufficient lease against the plaintiff, although not against the infant. Beaumont Serjeant, to the contrary; by this manner of gift,

William the son took nothing, but the estate setled only in William the father, but not an estate tail, by the words, hæredi masculo, &c. And voluntas donatoris, without sufficient words cannot create an estate tail; but where the intent of the donor is not according to the law, the law shall not be construed according to his intent: but this intent shall be taken according to the law. And he held that Sir Thomas and William had several estates in tail, and several moyeties, and not one entire estate, and here, upon all the matter, Sir Thomas is tenant for life of the whole, the remainder of one moyety to him in tail, the remainder of the other moyety unto William in tail, and, rebus sic stantibus, Sir Thomas levying a fine of the whole, now as to one moyety which the conusor had in tail, the fine is clearly good, and so as to that, Robert the lessor of the plaintiff had a good title, as to the said moyety; and as to the other moyety he conceived also, that William is bound, for this statute shall not be construed by equity, but shall bind all who are expresly excepted, and that is not William the son, for his father never returned, and then his heir is not releived by the statute: also William had a right of entry at the time of the fine levied, scil. for the forfeiture, and because he hath surceased the time, for the said right of entry, he shall not have now five years after the death of tenant for life, for he is the same person, and the second saving which provides for future rights, extends to other persons than those who are intended in the first saving, and he who may take advantage of the first saving, cannot be relieved by the second saving, for no new title doth accrue to him in the reversion or remainder, by the death of tenant for life, for that title accrued to him by the forfeiture, so as the title which he hath by the death of the tenant for life, is not the title which first accrued unto him: also by this forfeiture, the estate for life is determined, as if tenant for life had been dead; for if tenant for life maketh a feoffment in fee, the lessor may have a writ of entry ad terminum qui prætерijt. Fitz. 201. which proves, that by the forfeiture the estate is determined, and then no new title doth accrue to him in the remainder, by the death of the tenant for life, but that only which he had before the alienation, so that his non-claim after the five years shall bind him. Then, when William the infant having a right to a moyety, and Robert the lessor of the plaintiff a right to the other moyety, and the infant leaseth unto the defendant at will, who entreth, now is he a disseisor as well to Robert as to the infant: then if the defendant be disseisor and hath no title by the infant, Robert who hath right in a moyety may well enter into the whole, for he hath the possession per my & per [215] tout by his entry, and then when the defendant doth eject him, he hath good cause of action. And after at another day the case was moved, and it was agreed, that for one moyety the infant is bound, for Sir Thomas had an estate tail in a moyety, for he was issue of the body of the conusor: but for the other moyety, the fine levied by tenant for life, William the father being then tenant beyond the sea, it was holden by Anderson, Windham, and Walmesly, that the infant was not barred, notwithstanding the objection abovesaid, that William the father never returned into England, and notwithstanding the words of the statute of 4 H. 7. And by Walmesley, If an infant make his claim within age it is sufficient to avoid the fine, and yet the said statute seems to appoint to him time within five years after his full age, so that according to the very words, a claim made before or after should be vain, yet in equity, although he be not compellable to make his claim until the time allowed by the statute, yet if he make it before, it is good enough. And by Anderson, Although that William the father did not return, yet if he makes not his claim within five years after the death of his father being of full age, and without any impediment, &c. he shall be barred. If in such case a man hath many impediments, he is not compellable to make his claim when one of the impediments is removed, but when they are all removed. So if the ancestor hath one of the said impediments, and dieth before it be removed, and his heir is within age, or hath other impediment, he is not bound to make his claim till five years after his impediment is removed. And Somes case cited before was holden and agreed to be good law, for the forfeiture may not be known unto him. And as to the objection against the lease at will, because it was made by an infant, and no rent reserved upon it, nor the lease made upon the land, and therefore the lessee should be a disseisor, to that it was answered, be the defendant a disseisor, or not, it is not material here, for if the plaintiff had not title according to his declaration, he cannot recover, whether the defendant hath title or not, for it is not like unto trespass where the very possession without other title is good, contrary in actions against all who gave not title; but in ejectione firmæ, if the title of the plaintiff be not good and sufficient, be the title of the defendant good or not, he shall not recover: and afterwards judgment was given for the defendant, Hill. 33. CCXCVIII. CHENY AND SMITHS CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ by Cheny and his wife against Smith: the plaintiffs declared upon a lease made by the master of the house or Colledge of S. Thomas of Acons in London to I. S. who assigned it over to Knevit, who by his will devised the same to his wife, whom he made also his executrix, and dyed, and afterwards she took to husband one Waters, and died; Waters took letters of administration of the goods and chattells of his wife, and afterwards leased to the plaintiffs: and upon not guilty they were at issue. And it was given in evidence that the lease given in evidence, was not the lease whereof the plaintiffs have declared, for the original lease shewed in Court, is, master of the house, or hospital, where the lease specified in the declaration is, master of the house or colledge, 38 E. 3. 28. And some of the justices conceived that there is not any material variance (but if the parties would, it might be found by special verdict) for by them colledge and hospital are all one. And afterwards the Court moved the plaintiffs to prove if the wife were in as executrix, or as lega-[216]-tee, for by Anderson, and Periam, until election be made he shall not be said to have it as legatee, especially if it be not alledged in fact, that all the debts of the testator are paid; and Anderson doubted, although that it be alledged, that the debts be paid, if the executor shall be said to have the said lease as a legacy, before she hath made election, vid. Weldens case, and Paramours case in Plowd. And afterwards it was given in evidence, that the wife after the death of the husband had repaired the banks of the land, and produced witnesses to prove it, as if the same should amount to claim it as a legacy; and the Court said, that that matter should be referred to the jury: and it was further shewed in evidence, that the said wife executrix, and her said husband Waters formerly made a lease by deed, reciting thereby, that where the husband was possessed in the right of his said wife as executrix of her first husband, &c. And by the opinion of the whole Court, the same was an express claim as executrix; and then when the wife died, if the husband would have advantage of it, he ought to take letters of administration of the goods of her first husband, and not of the wife; but if she had claimed the land and the term in it as legatee, and had not been in possession, administration taken of the rights and debts of the wife, had been good as to that intent, that his wife was not actually possessed of it, but only had a right unto it, and of such things in action, the husband might be executor or administrator to his wife, but here they have failed of their title; the administration being taken of the goods of the wife, where it should be of the goods of the testator the first husband; and for this cause the plaintiffs were non-suit, and the jury discharged. And it was agreed by all the justices, that if the wife before election had taken husband, that the husband might have made the election in the case aforesaid.

CCXCIX. THE LORD COBHAM AND BROWNS CASE.

The case between the Lord Cobham and Brown, was, that the Abbot of Grace was seised of the mannor of Gravesend in the county of Kent, which mannor doth extend to the parishes of Gravesend, and Milton, and that the said abbot and all his predecessors, &c. time out of mind, &c. have had a water-court within the said mannor, which court had been holden at Gravesend Bridge in the end of it, and that all the inhabitants within the said parishes, which have boats either entirely or joyntly with others, and have used to transport or carry passengers from Gravesend to London, & e contra, and have used to fasten their boats at the said bridge of Gravesend, have used to do suit at the said court, and there have used to enquire of all mis-orders, and mis-demeanors of watermen there, and that the said abbots, &c. have used to have the fines and amercements of the same court, and conveyed the said mannor to the plaintiff, and that at a court there holden, the defendant being sworn with the residue of the enquest to enquire of such dis-orders, refused to give his verdict, for which for the said contempt, the defendant, by the then steward was amerced twenty shillings, for the which amercement the plaintiff brought an action of debt: it was moved by Beaumount Serjeant; that the action did not lye, for the prescription upon which the action is grounded is not good; first, he claims to have this court within his mannor, and as a thing appertaining to it, and yet he claims suit at his court of all the inhabitants of the said two parishes, and to have them suitors at it, being meer strangers to the mannor, & which do not hold of it, for although it be alledged, that the said mannor doth extend [217] in the said parishes, yet the same doth not prove that every part of the said parishes is within the said manor, and if it be not so, the prescription may extend as well to all the county of Kent, as well as to the said two parishes, for such a prescription cannot bind but those which are tenants of the said manor, and cannot extend to strangers, which see 21 H. 7, 40, the case of pound-breach. Secondly, it is not alleadged here, that the steward ought and had used to assess amercements, for by the common law no steward hath authority to assess amercements or fines in a court baron, for there the suitors are judges and not the steward; and that this water-court is a court baron, it appeareth by the declaration, for there it is said that it is a court belonging to such a manor, and that prima facie shall be meant a court baron, if the contrary be not shewed, vi. Fitz. 75 g. Thirdly it is not shewed that the amercement was affered, which see ib. 75. Harris Serjeant, to the contrary: This court upon the whole matter is in nature of a leet for the reformation of mis-orders between the watermen, and the prescription here will warrant such a court well enough, and there are many courts in England which are not court barons, but grounded upon prescription, 40 E. 3, 17. The court before the Chancellor of Oxford, prescription to have Swan-mote, and it is reason that this prescription should hold place, for here is quid pro quo, for watermen receive their carriage and loading at this bridge, and also discharge their loading there, and they use to fasten their boats there, and therefore in lieu of that benefit, it is reason that they be attendant at the court which is upon the said bridge, and upon that reason is the prescription of toll traverse, 5 H. 7, 9. And to have a land bird, 2 R. 3, 15. and toll of every vessel which passeth the river, 21 H. 7, 16. And this court may be a court within the manor, and yet no court baron, but in the nature of a leet, and the prescription shall be good in law by reason of the recompence to the suitors, and then, if it be not a court baron, but rather in the nature of a leet, then it follows, that the suitors are not judges but the steward; and it behoves not to prescribe for the amercement, for that is incident to a court leet, for otherwise how can the suitors be compelled to do their suit at it, or their defaults, or contempts at the same be punished? and as to the affering of the amercement, it needs not here, for it is a fine for the open contempt, and despite done unto the court, and not an amercement, and it may well be assessed by the steward alone, vi. 23 H. 8. Br. Leet, 37. Drill Serjeant, to the contrary: For this prescription is not reasonable, to drive strangers to do suit at a court baron, for there is sufficient consideration in the case of tenants of the manor; for it may be at the beginning, the tenancies were given upon such consideration to do such suit: but in the principal case, the prescription is their ground, and therefore unreasonable, because without consideration, 22 E. 4, 43, see the case there, and 21 H. 7, 20. A custom alleadged, that if any tenant distrain the beasts of another damage feasant, that he ought to bring such beasts to the pound of the lord of the manor, and if not, that at the next court he should be amerced twelve pence, and the same was holden no good custom, because against common right and common law. Puckering Serjeant: If this court shall be reputed in law a court baron, then the prescription, for the maner of it is not good, for in such case, the amercement cannot be assessed by the steward; but he held, that this court is in the nature of a court leet, and not a court baron, and all inhabitants within the precinct of it, are bounden to do their suit at it by reason of their reliancy, & their trade there, if they have boats, or shares in boats, and such court is for the better government of such watermen, and the exercise and practise of their trade, and for the redressing of misdemeanors betwixt them, and so this court hath a reasonable commencement, being [218] instituted for the publick good, and if customs which concern the private benefit of any be allowable; as the mayor and burgesses of a town prescribe to have of every tun which cometh in any ship into their port, and put upon the land 6d. for toll. See 21 H. 16. A fortiori, a custom or prescription which concerns the publick good, is good: & it is not strange that such court hath been maintained by prescription, for the Court of Stanneris is so without any commencement or erection, but by custom. And although that toll cannot be paid at any market for things brought to market, but for things sold, yet by custom toll shall be paid for every thing brought to market, and for the standing of the seller there; for the sale of victuals is for the good of the common wealth, which thing is the ground of the prescription in the principal case, & therefore the prescription in the manner of it is good; and if the prescription be good for the court, then to have a steward to keep the court, to assess fines for contempts and disorders is good without any special prescription, for it is incident to it. Periam Justice, If it be a court baron then cannot the steward impose or assess any fine: which Windham granted; but he said it is not a court baron, but a court by prescription. Periam, If the plaintiff claim it as belonging to his manor, it shall be intended a court baron, but yet a man may have a court within his manor by prescription, which is not a court baron. Anderson was of opinion that it is not a court baron, for although it be appertaining to the manor, yet that is not any proof that it is a court baron: for a leet may be appertaining to a manor. It was adjourned.

CCC. GREEN AND EDWARDS CASE.

Between Green and Edwards the case was this, land is demised to A. for nine years, if he shall so long live, and if he die within the term, that B. his wife shall have it durante toto residuo termini prædict. The husband dieth during the term: if the wife shall have the residue of the term was the question. And by Periam & Walmesly Justices, by the death of the husband the term is determined, and thereupon nothing can remain, especially by way of grant, but by way of devise it might be. See 9 Eliz. 253. A lease for forty years to A. if he shall live so long, and if he die within the term that E. his wife shall have the residue of the years: where it was holden, that by the death of A. the term is determined, and then there is no residue, and so the limitation is void, vide 3 & 4 Phil. & Mar. 150. Anderson, If the husband and wife had been parties to the deed of demise, then the residue of the term should go to the wife after the death of the husband: and this word (terminum) shall not be taken for the interest which is given to the husband, but for the time, so it is as much as to say, that if the husband die before forty years expired, that then his wife shall have the residue for forty years; and it is reason to make such construction rather than to construe the said part of the deed to be void: for if in the construction of this grant, the term shall be taken for the interest, then the limitation shall be void. And in all grants, the deeds shall be taken most beneficially for the grantee, and most strongly against the grantor, especially ut res magis valeat quam pereat: and here are several grants and several terms: but if such matter be limited to the wife not named in the deed, all is void, for it is incertain when the term shall begin, & it cannot vest during the particular estate, and it is not certain, whether the husband shall survive the term, or not. And by Walmesly & Windham the said limitation is meerly void: as if a termer grants all his term for so many years as shall be behind after his death, the same is a void grant, for the lessee may over-live all the term, and then [219] it is incertain when it shall begin: and in this case this word, term shall be taken for the interest, and not for time, vide 35 H. 8. Br. Conditions 203, vide Co. 1 part, in the rector of Chedingtons case, this case vouched.

CCCI. GAWTON AND THE LORD DACRES CASE.

[See Lyell v. Kennedy, 1889, 14 App. Cas. 460.]

In debt upon surplusage of an accompt by Gawton, against George Lord Dacres; it was said by Periam Justice, and not denied by any, that if I make J. S. my auditor, generally to take accompts of all my bayliffs and receivors, that he is not a sufficient auditor without a patent; for when a man is made an auditor generally, he is an officer, and an officer cannot be without a deed. But if a bayliff, or receiver be accomptable to me, it is as cleer on the other side, that I may appoint one to be my auditor to take the accompt of him, pro hac vice by word; which Anderson granted: but if he afterwards takes an accompt of any by force or colour of the said warrant without my commandment, he is not a sufficient auditor to such intent, either to take the accompt, or to assess the arrerages if the accomptant be found in arrear, or to make allowance if he be found in surplusage: and by him, if one become my bayliff of his own wrong, without my appointment, he is accomptable to me, but I am not compellable to make him any allowance for his expences about my business. And if I assign to such bayliff of his own wrong an auditor, he cannot make allowance of such expences. Anderson, If my auditor make allowance to my bayliff for any collateral expences, which he hath expended in my affairs, which do not concern my manor, whereof he is bayliff, such allowance shall not bind me. And note, that in this action the plaintiff declared that he was bayliff to the defendant of certain manors, receiver of certain monies, and so retained, ad diversa negotia procurandum: and upon accompt the allowance was made unto him for his board-wages, and other expences in riding circa negotia. And by Anderson, These allowances shall not bind the defendant; for as bayliff of a manor, no expences shall be allowed unto him, but those which the bayliff hath expended within the manor: and if I retain one to go about my business he is not accomptable. Windham, If I retain one to follow my business, and deliver to him mony to disburse in such business, he is accomptable. Anderson, It is so truly, but it is not in respect of the said retainer, but as he was receiver, and if he expend more than he hath received, he doth it without warrant and no allowance shall be made unto him. If the bayliff be found in surplusage in the conclusion of the accompt, the auditor ought to enter. Allocatur super determinationem compt. in surplusagiis, so much for such and such expences, allocatis allocandis upon the next accompt: but in this case it appeared upon the evidence, that the entry upon the foot of the accompt was, and so he is in surplusage upon the determination of this accompt twenty six pounds: but the auditor being examined, said, that it was not his meaning to allow unto him so much, but only to find and express the certainty of the whole accompt, and so refer the allowance of it to the defendant to whom he was auditor: and upon that the Court said to the jury, if they believed the auditor, that they should find against the plaintiff, for upon the matter here is not any accompt, and so no allowance; for the allowance if it had been according to law ought to be entred, before allocatur, &c. and such allowance is as a judgment, but here is not any allowance, for the auditor did refer the same to the defendant: but if the jury doth not give credit to the auditor, then the Court moved the jury to find [220] it specially that the party was auditor without deed, and the finding of the accompt as it is set down in the declaration, and the manner of the conclusion of it. viz. that the plaintiff was in surplusage upon the determination of the accompt for his expences in riding circa negotia defendentis, and for his board-wages twenty six pounds.

CCCII. CHAMBERLAYNS CASE.

Cattel taken in Withernam, worked.

In this case it was moved, whether beasts taken in withernam, might be used and worked by the party as his proper beasts: and it was said by the Court, that beasts distrained, as cows, could not be milked, nor horses wrought, but they ought to be put in the pound open, and there the owner might milk them and fodder them. But if cows be taken in withernam, because they are delivered to the party in lieu of his own cattel, he may milk them, or if they be oxen, or horses, reasonably work them, otherwise he should be at great charges of keeping and pasturing of them, and no profit, or consideration for it. Anderson, It should be a great inconvenience to the common-wealth: for if the cows are not milked, the milk is lost, and also the cows impaired thereby.

CCCIII. BYNE AND PLAYNES CASE.

Assumpsit. Request.

In an action upon the case by Byne against Playne, the plaintiff declared, that whereas he himself had recovered against Thomas Ward in the Court of the Queen in Southwark, holden before Omesley Steward there for the Mayor of London, the sum of twenty pounds, and had obtained out of the said Court a levari facias directed to the bayliff to do execution upon the goods of the said Thomas Ward, which then were in the possession of the said plaintiff; and where the said bayliff by vertue of the said writ was ready to have done execution of the said goods, the defendant came to the now plaintiff, and assumed to him, that in consideration that the said plaintiff would deliver to the defendant the said goods, that he would in fourteen days after Michaelmas next pay to the plaintiff twenty pounds, or otherwise deliver to him the said goods again, if in the mean time no other makes title unto them, and prove them to be his own goods. And further, that the plaintiff shall have free ingress and regress to a chamber in the house of the defendant in the meantime. And upon non-assumpsit pleaded, it was found by the jury, that such a recovery was in the said Court, and that the defendant did assume, &c. But they further say, that before the said recovery, the said Thomas Ward was possessed of the said goods as of his own proper goods: and, by deed indented, sold them to his brother R. W. in consideration of a certain sum of mony, with a proviso, that the said Tho. Ward, notwithstanding the said sale should have the possession of them for four years, which are not yet expired, paying to the said R. Ward twenty shillings by the year, and if, at the end of the said four years, the said Thomas did repay the said sum of mony to the said R. Ward, that then the said sale should be void. And they further say, that the said Robert Ward made title to the said goods by vertue of the said sale. Exception was taken to the declaration, because it was not shewed by what authority or title the Court was holden; also it sheweth, that the bailiff was ready to do execution upon the said goods, but doth [221] not shew where the said goods then were, but the exceptions were not allowed, for these matters are but inducement and conveyance to the action, and not the matter, or substance of it. Another exception was taken, because the request is not sufficiently alleadged, licet sæpius requisitus, but that exception was not allowed, for here the assumpsit is to pay at a certain day, and then the request is not material; but where a request is parcel of the assumpsit, there an express request ought to be taxed, as if the payment should be upon request. As to the matter in law, here is not any consideration, for the goods were not subject to execution, for Thomas Ward had but a special property in them, but the general property was in R. Ward, and so no cause to deliver them back to the plaintiff; and here by the verdict the forain title is proved; for proof ought to be by verdict, which see Perk. 154. a. & 7. R. 2. Tit. Bar. 241. For it appeareth, before the said recovery, Thomas sold the goods with promise, ut supra. Owen, Although it be found that R. Ward had the general property, yet Thomas had the special and present property, and that against R. Ward himself, so that during the said four years R. Ward could not entermeddle with the goods; and though that no execution can be had against him who hath such a special property, yet that is not the case here, for here one who hath the possession of certain goods, delivers them to another, and in consideration thereof, he to whom the delivery is made, promiseth to re-deliver them unto the bailee, or to pay so much mony, this is a good consideration, when a lawful property or title he hath who makes the delivery. And of that opinion were all the justices, for it appeareth, that the plaintiff had a possession of the said goods, and that the said Thomas Ward had a special property, and because of such possession was chargeable to an action of the said Thomas Ward, be it that the plaintiff comes to the said goods by baylment or trover, for by Periam, if goods come to another by trover, and he delivereth them over, he is answerable to him who hath right unto them: the delivery of these goods to the defendant, is a good consideration, and the defendant hath benefit by the use of them, and the property of the goods is not to be argued in this case, but the delivery to the defendant is the only matter: and because the delivery of the goods to the defendant, and the assumpsit upon it, it was holden, although the goods were not liable to execution, yet the assumpsit was good, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCIV. VANDRINK AND ARCHERS CASE.

Trover and Conversion.

Vandrink brought an action upon the case against Archer, and declared, that whereas he himself was possessed of twenty ells of linnen cloath, as of his own goods, the same came to the hands of the defendant by trover, and he knowing the said goods to be the goods of the plaintiff, sold them unto persons unknown, and the mony thereof proceeding did convert to his own use: the defendant pleaded, that as to twenty four ells of the said linnen cloath, long time before the losing, one Copland was possessed thereof, ut de bonis suis proprijs, and sold them to the defendant, who before any notice that they were the goods of the plaintiff, & before any request, sold them to persons unknown: and as to the other three ells, he was always ready to deliver them to the plaintiff, and yet is, and upon these pleas, the plaintiff did demur in law. Owen Serjeant, for the plaintiff, that both pleas are insufficient, the first plea is not an answer but by argument, for the plaintiff declares of a commission of his own goods, and the defendant answers to a commission of his own goods, 33 H. 8. Br. Action [222] sur le case, 109. In an action upon the case the plaintiff declares, that the defendant found the goods of the plaintiffs, and delivered them to persons unknown, non deliberavit modo & forma, is no plea, but he ought to plead not guilty; and in an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that he was possessed of certain goods, ut de bonis suis proprijs, and the defendant found them, and converted them to his own use; it is no plea for the defendant to say, that the plaintiff was not possessed of the said goods as of his proper goods, but he ought to plead not guilty to the mis-demeanor, and give in evidence, that they were not the goods of the plaintiff, and 4 E. 6. Br. Action upon the case 113. The plaintiff declared that he was possessed of certain goods as of his proper goods and lost them, and the defendant found them and converted them to his own use; the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff pawned the said goods to the defendant for ten pounds, for which he detained them according to the said pawn, and traversed the conversion; and by some it was holden, that he ought to plead not guilty, and give the especial matter aforesaid in evidence; and 2 & 3 Phil. and Ma. Dyer 121. The case of the Lord Mountegle, in an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared upon a trover of a chain of gold, and that the defendant had sold it to persons unknown, the defendant pleaded, that ipse non vendidit modo & forma, & upon that the plaintiff did demur in law, and see 27 H. 8. 13. Where goods come to one by trover, he shall not be charged in an action, but for the time he hath the possession; but that is to be intended in an action of detinue, and not in an action upon the case, for such action upon the case is not grounded upon the trover, but upon the mis-demeanor, that is, the conversion, and as to the other plea it is utterly insufficient, for the plaintiff declares of a conversion, and he pleads a possession, that he is always ready, and so doth not answer to the point of the action. Yelverton Serjeant, to the contrary, and he conceived for the first plea, that it is a direct answer, for he hath justified his sale to persons unknown, for that he hath bought the goods of one Copland whose goods they were, and because the plaintiff hath demurred upon the plea, he hath confessed the truth of the matter contained in it, scil. that the property of the goods was to Copland, and so in defendant by the said sale, and then he hath good cause to convert them to his own use by sale or otherwise; and he conceived, that there is a difference, 27 H. 8. 13, betwixt baylment, and trover, for in case of trover, the party is not chargeable but in respect of the possession, which being removed, the action is gone against the finder, for he who findeth goods is not bound to keep them, nor to give an account for them. And he put the case reported by Dyer, 13 & 14 Eliz. 306, 307. R. Fines brought an action upon the case, and declared, he was possessed of a hawk, as of his proper goods at W. and casually lost it at B. and that it afterwards casually came to the hands of the defendant by trover, and that he knowing it to be the plaintiffs hawk, sold the same for mony to persons unknown; the defendant pleaded that the hawk first after the losing of it came to the hands of one Jeoffryes, who sold it to one Rowly, who gave it to the defendant at A. who sold it to Poulton, and the same was found a sufficient bar; and it is hard where goods, as oxen or horses come to another by trover, that he should be charged to keep them and pasture them until the owner claimeth them, and therefore it is not reason but that he discharge himself by the quitting of the possession of them. And as to the other plea, the matter of the plea is good enough, and the defect is but in the form, which because the plaintiff upon his demurrer hath not shewed to the Court according to the statute, he shall not take advantage of it, but the matter of the plea is sufficient, scil. the finding, and the offer to deliver it to the plaintiff. Anderson Justice, for the examination of the insufficiency of this plea, the nature of the action, and [223] the cause of it is to be considered; The nature of the action, it is an action upon the case, the cause, the trover and conversion; then for the latter plea his readiness, to deliver it, it cannot be any answer to the declaration of the plaintiff: for this action is not debt or detinue, where the thing itself is to be delivered, for in such case, the plea had been good, but the conversion is the special cause of this action, which by this is not answered, and for the other plea, the declaration is not answered by it. But here is some matter of justification, for when a man comes to goods by trover, there is not any doubt but by the law he hath liberty to take the possession of them, but he cannot abuse them, kill them, or convert them to his own use, or make any profit of them, and if he do, it is great reason that he be answerable for the same, but if he lose such goods afterwards, or they be taken from him, then he shall not be charged, for he is not bound to keep them, and so he conceived judgment ought to be for the plaintiff. Windham Justice, Neither plea is good; as to the first plea, he confesseth the conversion, but hath not conveyed unto himself a sufficient title to the goods by which he might justifie the conversion, for the plaintiff declares of a conversion of his own goods, and the defendant justifies, because the property of the goods was in a stranger who sold them to him, which cannot be any good title for him without a traverse, unless he had shewed, that he bought them in an open market, and then upon such matter he might well have justified the conversion. And as to the other plea, the same is naught also, for the goods are not in demand, and then the said plea is not proper to say, that he is ready to deliver them, for damages only for the conversion are in demand, and not the goods themselves, and therefore the same is a plea but by argument, scil. he is ready to deliver, ergo, he hath not converted, and yet the same is not a good argument, for if a man find my horse, and rides upon him, or hereby he becomes lame, or otherwise by excessive travel misuseth him, so as my horse is the worse thereby; he may be ready to deliver me my horse, and yet this action will ly, for such an abusing of the horse is a conversion to his own use. Periam Justice, The latter plea clearly is insufficient, for it amounteth but to not guilty, but for the first plea, he doubted of it, for first the property is not traversable, nor the knowing; but upon the general issue pleaded, such matter may be given in evidence. And he conceived, that where a man buyes goods of one who comes to them by trover, that he may sell them, and shall not be answerable for them. And although it may be said, that the said matter may be given in evidence, yet it is not good to put the same to the people, but to refer the matter to the judgment of the Court. Walm. Justice, The latter plea is clearly insufficient, but for the first he doubted of it, for he conceived that the sale of the goods is not a conversion. Anderson, The first plea is, ut supra, and nothing in that is material or traversable, for all the plea may be true, and yet the defendant is guilty, for it may be that the defendant himself sold them to the plaintiff, or to another who sold them to the plaintiff, and that afterwards the defendant found them, and here the conversion is confessed, and not so voided by sufficient justification, and by him, the sale to persons unknown is no good plea, for his sale is his own act, and it cannot be but he must have notice of the buyers, and therefore he ought in his plea to shew their names. Periam, contrary to that matter as to the naming of the buyers, for it should be an infinite thing for a draper to take notice of every one who buyeth an ell of cloath of him. And afterwards the same term judgment was given for the plaintiff upon the insufficiency of the plea.

Trover and Conversion.

An action upon the case was brought upon a trover and conversion of twenty barrels of butter, and declared, that by negligent keeping of them, they were become of little value, upon which there was a demurrer in law: and by the opinion of the whole Court upon this matter, no action lieth; for a man who comes to goods by trover, is not bound to keep them so safely, as he who comes to them by baylment. Walmesley, If a man find my garments, and suffereth them to be eaten with moths by the negligent keeping of them; no action lieth: but if he weareth my garments it is otherwise, for the wearing is a conversion.

Alice Alexander, administratrix to her last husband, brought an action of debt for the arrerages of an annuity, against the Lady Gresham, executrix of Sir Thomas Gresham her late husband, incurred in the lifetime of her late husband Sir Thomas Gresham: the defendant pleaded that she had fully administred; the plaintiff replyed, assets, scil. that the defendant had divers goods in her hands not administred, which were the goods of the said Sir Thomas at the time of his death, upon which they were at issue. And it was found by special verdict, that Sir Thomas Gresham being seised of divers manors and other lands in fee, devised them by his last will to his wife the defendant, to use at her own pleasure: and by his said will requested his wife to pay his debts and legacies: and further it was found, that at the Parliament holden 22 Eliz. a private act was made, by which it was enacted, that the said lady should take upon her the charge of all her husbands debts, and for the discharge thereof, she shall sell so much land as will yield so much mony as will serve for the payment of the said debts, and if she shall fail therein, that then certain commissioners shall be appointed for the sale of so much land, &c. and for all such debts as the said lady should not acknowledge to be good and true debts, that then the creditors to whom they were due, should repair to the said commissioners, and they should determine both of the certainty of the sum of the due debts, and of the damages for the forbearing thereof; and that afterwards the said creditors should have their remedy against the said lady for such sums of mony so agreed upon by the said commissioners: and found the statute at large, and that the said Lady Gresham had sold certain lands parcel of the possessions of the said Sir Thomas, by which sale she had received the sum of twenty thousand pounds, which yet is unadministered for the greatest part of it. And if upon the whole matter the said sum of twenty thousand pounds be assets, then they find for the plaintiff, but if not, then for the defendant.

And it was moved by Hammon Serjeant, that here is assets upon this matter, and that by the common law, for it appeareth upon the will, that the lands were devised to the lady, to the intent that she should pay his debts. And although the words of the charge are, that the testator requests the lady to pay his debts, the same in a will doth amount to a condition, and so the meaning of the devisor appeareth to be, that the [225] money which is levied by such sale shall be assets, &c. 2 H. 4. 21. 22. A man makes a feoffment in fee to divers persons, upon condition that they sell the land, and the money thereof coming distribute for his soul; the feoffor dieth, the feoffees (who were also executors of the feoffor) sell the lands, the money thereof coming is adjudged assets. And see 3 H. 6. 3. And although it be not assets by the common law, yet it is assets by the special statute, which ordains, that he shall be charged with the debts, and that the lands shall be sold. And it was found by the verdict, that such lands were sold, and such money levied upon the sale, which are administered. And although the said twenty thousand pounds were never the goods of the testator, yet as the case is, 3 H. 6. 3. if executors recover damages in trespass of goods taken away in the life of the testator, such damages so recovered are assets. So if executors redeem a pledge with their own proper goods, the same is assets in their hands, by Kingsmill, Vavasour, and Fisher, 20 H. 7. 42. And where the executors took of one who was indebted to their testator in a simple contract, the same is assets, 31 E. 3. And see many cases of such special assets, 7 Eliz. in Plowdens Comment. in Chapman and Daltons case, 292. It hath been objected, that the special assets enacted by Parliament, do not maintain the general assets intended in the issue; but he conceived the same is well enough. As 27 H. 8. 21. in an action upon the statute of 21 H. 8. for that the defendant hath occupied land to farm against the statute, the defendant pleaded, non tenuit ad firmam contra formam statuti: and gave in evidence, that he had taken to farm for the maintenance of his house, the same is a good evidence, and shall maintain the issue, for he did not occupy against the form of the statute: for there is a clause in the statute to that purpose. Puckering Serjeant to the contrary, that it cannot be said assets by the statute, and that the plaintiff upon this general issue shall not take advantage of the special assets enacted by Parliament: and here the plaintiff hath not pursued the statute, for in case the defendant will not confess the debt, by the statute the commissioners ought to determine of it, and assess damages for the forbearing and then the party is to have her remedy for all as shall be so determined by the commissioners by action of debt: and because the plaintiff hath not followed the said statute, those twenty thousand pounds shall not be assets as to her, for they are not agreed of the debt, nor of the damages for it; but the commissioners are to appoint sale of the lands, so as the money arising of the sale of any lands, shall not be assets but of such lands which have been appointed to be sold by the order of the commissioners. And as to the common law, the same is not assets; but where lands devised to be sold by the executors for the payment of debts and legacies, in such case the money arising of such sale is assets. And see 9 Eliz. 264. Dyer. A man devised his lands to be sold by his executors, and that the money thereof coming shall be disposed in payment of legacies expressed in his will, the land is sold; by Catlin, Dyer and Sanders, The money thereof coming is assets: but 4 & 5 Ph. & Mar. Dyer 152. the law was otherwise taken. Where a man devised that his executors should sell his land, and that his daughters should have such portions out of the monies thereof coming, the land is sold accordingly, the daughters sued the executors in the Spiritual Court. In that case a prohibition lieth, for it is not a legacy testamentary, but out of the land, &c. And also in the principal case, the lands are not devised to be sold; but there is only a request to his wife, that she would pay his debts, without any condition, or express direction, or limitation, 30 H. 8. Land devised to executors to sell, and the money thereof coming to be divided between his children: the money shall not be assets, and if it be not assets by the common law, but special assets by a special law, the [226] plaintiff ought to have shewed the same in his declaration, and then to have maintained against the defendant the said special assets upon the statute: as if in debt upon an obligation, the defendant will plead, non est factum, and give in evidence the statute of 23 H. 6. the same shall not maintain his plea of non est factum; but he ought to have pleaded the special matter in bar. And see 4 H. 7. 8. So the plaintiff here ought to have in her replication shewed the especial matter upon the statute. Anderson and Walmesly conceived, that the same is assets within the stat. and that the defendant is chargable as executrix, otherwise there is no remedy, and the act confirms her to be executrix, and ordains, that she shall take upon her the charge of payment of debts, and that the goods and all the monies which come by sale of the lands and woods shall be assets. And because that by the said act the money coming by sale of woods and lands are joyned together with the goods of the testator in the same plight, all are in the same degree, and both equally assets. Periam did not speak to that; but Windham held, that these assets found by the verdict, are not assets intended in the will, and that the plaintiff hath not pursued the statute, which makes such matter assets. It was adjorned.

CCCVII. THE QUEEN AND THE BISHOP OF YORKS CASE.

Quare Impedit. Collation gains not the Patronage of the King. Plenarty no Plea against the King.

The Queen brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of York, and one Monck; and counted upon a presentment made by him, Hen. 8. in the right of his dutchy of Lancaster, and so conveyed the same to the Queen by descent: the bishop pleaded, that he and his predecessors have collated to the said church, &c. and Monck pleaded the same plea, upon which there was a demurrer. And it was moved by Beaumont Serjeant, that the plea is not good, for a collation cannot gain any patronage, and cannot be an usurpation against a common person, much less against the Queen, to whom no lapses shall be ascribed; and although the Queen is seised of this advowson in the right of her dutchy; yet when the church becomes void, the right to present vests in the royal person of the Queen: and yet see the old Register 31. Quando rex præsentat non in jure coronæ tunc incurrit ei tempus. Hammon Serjeant, By these collations the Queen shall be put out of possession, and put to her writ of right of advowson; but the same ought to be intended not where the bishop collates as ordinary, but where he collates as patron, claiming the patronage to himself, for such a collation doth amount to a presentation; and here are two or three collations pleaded, which should put the Queen out of possession, although she shall not be bound by the first during the life of the first incumbent. Vide Br. Quare Impedit 31. upon the abridging of the case of 47 E. 3. 4. that two presentments the one after the other shall put the king out of possession, and put him to his writ of right of advowson, which Anderson denied. And it was holden by the whole Court, here is not any presentation, and then no possession gained by the collations: and although the bishop doth collate as patron, and not as ordinary, yet it is but a collation. And there is a great difference betwixt collation and presentation, for collation is a giving of the church to the parson, and presentation is a giving and offering of the parson to the church, and that makes a plenarty, but not a collation. And although that the Queen hath the advowson by the right of her dutchy, yet that makes not any matter, for the person of the Queen priviledgeth all her capacities: and therefore plenarty is no plea against the Queen, be she seised of the advowson in the right of her Crown, or of her dutchy; but when she claims by lapse; it is otherwise. [227] And afterwards exception was taken to the writ, because it is not set forth in the writ how the Queen claimed the advowson; as where the King had right to present by reason of the temporalties of the bishop in his hands, the writ shall say, ratione archiepiscopatus cant. nunc vacant. or ratione custodiæ: and so because this advowson is parcel of her dutchy, the writ ought to say so. And Anderson Chief Justice was of opinion, that the writ was good enough, notwithstanding the want of that clause, ratione ducatus, for both ways it is good and sufficient, generally or specially; as where a man hath an advowson in the right of his wife, and the husband brings a quare impedit, the writ shall be general, ad suam special donationem, without the mentioning of his wife. See the Book of Entries 483. the writ is general, but the count is special. And there is the very case of the dutchy of Lancaster, and then the writ is general, but the count is ratione ducatus sui Lancastr. And such an avoidance of a church, parcel of the dutchy, may be granted under the Great Seal: and see the case of the dutchy of Lancaster in Plowden to that purpose; and afterwards a president was shewed, in An. 32. H. 6. where the writ was general, and the count was ratione ducatus.

CCCIX. Blagrave and Woods Case.

Surrender to the Steward out of Court.

In an action of trespass brought by Blagrave against Wood of lands in Totting in the county of Surrey, concerning a surrender made to the use of Sir Thomas Holcroft, by Alice Pagnam, 7 E. 6. before one Forcet then steward there: the issue was, if at the time of the said surrender, the said Forcet was steward of the said manor. And the jury found a special verdict, scil. that the said Forcet circa 9 Aprilis, 7. E. 6. was retained by one Elizabeth Pagnam, then, before and afterwards lady of the said manor, to be her steward there for the keeping of the courts of the said manor; and this retainer was only by word in the countrey, and no fee or annuity given for the exercise of the said office: and that the said Forcet, according to the said retainer, had kept courts there divers times. And further, that such a day and year at St. Dunstans in the east, the said Forcet took a surrender, which was entred in the rolls the next court: and that before that and after he took divers surrenders as well out of Court, as in Court, and had holden divers courts there. And upon this verdict, it was moved by Snagg Serjeant, that Forcet upon the matter found by the verdict is not such a steward, that may take surrenders out of Court, being retained only by word, although to do other acts in Court he be a sufficient steward, for in the Court he is as a Judge, and no body is to dispute his authority there. And there is a great difference betwixt a steward of a manor, and a steward of Courts; and a steward of one manor hath not as great an authority as the steward of another manor, for a steward of a manor may take surrenders in any place, otherwise it is where a steward is retained to keep [228] Courts, for he hath no authority to keep Court, and all his power, is within the Court, and not without. See 8 Eliz. Dyer 248. Drew Serjeant to the contrary. Here Forcet upon this retainder was steward at the will of the lady of the manor, which will shall not be said to be determined, until the lady doth discharge him: and the difference which hath been taken betwixt steward of Courts, and a steward of a manor is nothing to the purpose, for there is not any reason in it: and it is true, an assise cannot be brought of such an office, without a patent of it, for it cannot pass for life without a deed; and although a steward in the courts of copyholders be a judge, yet he may be appointed without deed: as where two submit themselves to the arbitration of others, now the arbitrators are judges as to that intent, and yet they may be appointed arbitrators, and discharged without deed, 19. H. 6. 6. 5 E. 4. 3. 21 H. 6. 30. but they cannot by their award transfer free-hold from one to another, 21 E. 3. 26. 14 H. 4. 18. and 17. by Culpeper and Skreen; and see as to a steward retained by word, 8 Eliz. 248. and see 12 H. 7. 25, 26, 27. where a bayliff of a manor may be appointed without deed, and so of an under-sheriff, and yet he is a Judge. Owen Serjant contrary, Here Forcet at the time of this surrender was not steward, but the retainer void. 1. No fee is allowed unto him for the exercise of the said office, 3 H. 6. A labourer may be retained without promise of any sallary in certain, for it is appointed by the law. 2. He is not retained by deed, and although he may be retained without deed to hold court, pro hac vice, yet if the retainer be for life, or for years, it ought to be by deed. 3. He was retained to keep the court, but not to be steward, which shall be intended to hold court, and then when that is past his authority shall cease, and then all which he doth afterwards is void. But if he had been retained to be steward of the manor, then the surrender taken out of Court had been well enough. 4. There is not any custom found by the verdict, to warrant such a surrender taken out of Court, and then if the surrender be not warranted by their custom it is void. Yelverton to the contrary, In all cases in real actions which concern lands, the suitors are the judges; but in personal actions under the sum of forty shillings the steward is judge: and although he be a judge, yet he may be appointed without deed. And whereas it hath been objected, that no fee is appointed for the exercising of the office, the same is not material as to the grant, but the party is not compellable without a fee to do the service: and a man may be constituted bayliff of such a manor without deed, and yet more doth appertain to the office of the bayliff, than to the steward: as if the lord of a manor be beyond the sea, (More 1 Rep.) the writ of right shall be directed to the bayliff of the manor: and see 21 H. 7. 36, 37. Where the sheriff, or steward of a manor may be without deed: and here in the principal case, the retainer is not to keep one court, but to keep the courts of the lady of the manor, scil. all her courts, until he be discharged. It was adjourned.

CCCX. Ascew and Fuliambs Case.

Audita Querela.

Ascew was bounden by statute to Fuliamb, and there was not two seals put to the statute, and execution was sued upon the said statute, the conusor brought an audita querela, and they were at issue, if two seals were to the said statute, and tried for the plaintiff in an audita querela by the sheriff of the City of Lincoln; and it was moved by Glanvil Serjant, that the issue ought to have been tryed [229] by the certificate of the mayor of Lincoln, before whom the acknowledgment was, and not by jury, which was denyed, for the issue is not whether any such statute was acknowledged or not, but whether the statute in question hath two seals or not, and that is not recorded by the Mayor, as the statute it self is: another exception was taken, It appeareth by the margent of the record, that the issue was tryed by the county of Lincoln, where it ought to be tryed by the county of the City of Linc. for Linc. only is in the margent. But to that it was said, that such is the usual form, to which the preignothories agreed, and the book of 18 E. 3. 25. was urged, where execution of lands of the conusor was awarded upon a statute merchant, and the statute was to pay, &c. 16 E. 3. But the original writ which issued to take the body of the conusor was 14 E. 3. And upon that error brought: and the Court agreed that case, but these two cases do differ, for there the process was misawarded, not so here: and although a writ of error may lye, yet the same doth not prove, but that an audita querela may lye also: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCXI. Jennings and Gowers Case.

In the case betwixt Jennings and Gower, the words were; That if the wife of the devisor would permit one Wats to enjoy such a term for the term of three years next following, that then she should have all the residue of his goods and chattels as his sole executrix, &c. Anderson Chief Justice conceived, that she should not be executrix; for she is to be executrix, upon a condition precedent to be performed before that she be executrix: and the condition is impossible to be performed, and then she shall never be executrix, for where an estate is be created upon a condition impossible to be performed, there the estate shall never come in esse, and here the condition is impossible, for how can she suffer Wats to enjoy the term for 3 years, next following, & the 3 years ought to be past before she hath any power, either to permit, or resist, for until the three years be encurred, she cannot be executrix, nor before the three years expired can she bring any action as executrix, for her authority doth not begin before the three years be expired. Walm. Peri. & Wind. contrary; Although a grant upon a condition precedent doth not take effect until the condition be performed, yet such a construction ought not to be used in this case, so the intent of the devisor in this case shall stand: if the condition had been, that if the wife will find meat and drink to such a person until his death, that then she shall be executrix, shall not the wife be executrix till after the death of such party: truly yes, for otherwise she should never be executrix, which is utterly against the meaning of the testator; for it was not his intent that the ordinary should commit administration of his goods in the mean time: and afterwards Anderson changed his opinion, and agreed with the other justices: Periam, The subsequent words prove directly, that the meaning of the testator was, to make his wife executrix immediately, until she were disturbed by the said Wats, for the words are, that if she refuse to suffer the said Wats to enjoy, &c. Then his son shall be his executor, which words imply, that by a disturbance made by the wife her executor-ship should cease, and that the son should have it, which cannot properly be if she was not executrix from the beginning. And it is the usual course in the construction of wills, to consider all the clauses of the will, and to judge upon all the words of the will, and not upon one part only, and such construction the Judges used in the cases of Param. and Yardley, and Welden, and Elhing, and afterwards at [230] another day judgment was given for the wife; that she was executrix presently, and her authority should not expect until the three years were expired, if not that any actual disturbance can be proved to be or have been made by the wife against the will of the devisor, and the words of the will, will receive such construction, that she shall be executrix until an actual disturbance of Wats.

CCCXII. PALMES AND THE BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGHS CASE.

Quare Impedit. Refusal of the Bishop.

In a quare impedit by Margaret Palmes against the Bishop of Peterborough, who pleaded, that the plaintiff did present unto him one I. S. of whom the bishop asked if he were within orders; and if he had his letters of orders, and because the presentee could not shew the bishop his orders, he refused him: and commanded him to come another time and shew to him his orders, and that the presentee did never do it, nor offered to the said bishop his said orders, without that he did disturb him in other manner. And by Periam and Anderson it is no plea, for upon his own shewing the defendant is a disturber: for although that the statute of 13 Eliz. requires that no man shall be admitted to a benefice with cure of souls, if he be not a deacon, yet the statute doth not extend, to compel the clark to shew his orders, and therefore when he for such a frivilous cause doth refuse to admit him, the same is a disturbance; and afterwards exception was taken to the count, because that the plaintiff being tenant for life of the advowson of the gift of her husband, had not alleadged any presentment in her husband, or any of his ancestors, but only in her self: but that was not allowed, for that point hath been lately over-ruled in this Court, in the case betwixt Specot and the Bishop of Exeter, & 8 H. 5. 4. adjudged accordingly, vi. 9 H. 7. 23. And the clear opinion of the Court was, that the count was good notwithstanding that exception: as to the matter of the plea the Court doubted of it, for the plea was, that the bishop demanded, of the clerk presented, his letters of orders, and letters testimonial, of his good behaviour, and his letters missive, and he did not shew them but requested of the bishop the space of a week, to satisfie the bishop in those points, which was allowed unto him, but he never returned, for which cause the bishop afterwards refused, &c. And it was said upon that plea, that the clark who is presented, ought to make proof to the bishop that he is a deacon, and that he hath orders; otherwise by the statute of 13 Eliz. the bishop is not bound to admit such clark, but the statute doth not compel the clark to shew his orders, for perhaps he hath lost them, but how his orders should be proved, it was much doubted: Anderson, The bishop may examine him upon oath, if he hath orders or not; but as to the letters testimonial of his good behaviour and sufficiency, the bishop ought to examine the same himself, and if he give day and defer the admission because he is not resolved therein, he is a disturber if the clark come to him in a convenient time: and the bishop cannot refuse a clark for the want of letters testimonial.

TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCXV. WARD AND KNIGHTS CASE.

Toll. Prescription.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas Lostock parcel of the mannor of E. in the county of Suffolk is an ancient town, and ancient demesn of the Crown of England, and that, time out of mind, &c. all the men, and tenants of ancient demesn ought to be quitted of toll in all places within the realm, for them, their goods and chattels, &c. And whereas the Queen by her letters patents the tenth of September, the nineteenth of her reign, commanded all mayors, bayliffs, constables, &c. to permit and suffer the men and tenants of ancient demesn, to be quit of toll, murage, and other exactions throughout the whole realm; and whereas the plaintiff was an inhabitant, and tenant in Lostock aforesaid, and such a day and year carried his goods to Yarmouth in the said county, the defendant not ignorant thereof, had taken and carried away a cable of the plaintiffs goods, of the value of eight pounds for toll, to his damage, etc. The defendant pleaded by protestation, that Lostock was not ancient demesn, and by protestation that the tenants of ancient demesn ought not to be quit of toll, he said, that the town of Yarmouth is an ancient borough, and that they had been incorporated by the name of bayliff and burgesses, &c. And that they have had, time out of mind, &c. an officer called a water-baly, and that, time out of mind, &c. they and their predecessors have had and taken toll of the tenants and inhabitants of Lostock, for any of their goods brought thither to merchandize with, and if it be not paid, they have used time out of mind, to distrain for it by their water-bayly: and said, that the plaintiff such a day brought to the said town of Yarmouth, two thousand weight of cable ropes to sell, for which there was due for toll six pence, for murage six pence, for thronage four pence, and the defendant being water-bayly demanded of the plaintiff the said sum which he refused to pay, for which he took the said cable, nomine districtionis, for the said thronage, &c. Golding for the plaintiff, The defendant hath not set forth in himself any authority to demand the duty: for he shews, that they have used to distrain by their water-bayly, but not that they have used to demand it by him, and it may be, that they have several officers, one to demand it, and another to distrain for it. And always when a man demands a thing against common right, he is [232] to shew authority express in the whole: and as to the matter in law, scil. the prescription to have toll of the tenants in ancient demesn, it cannot have a lawful beginning: as 21 H. 7. 40. The lord of a mannor says, that he hath had a pound within his mannor, time out of mind, &c. and that he hath used to have of every one who breaks his pound, three pounds, the same is a void custom to bind a stranger, for it cannot have a lawful beginning, and see 5 H. 7. 9. b. One prescribed, that if any cattel be taken in such a place, damage feasant, that he might distrain them and put them in pound until the owner had made amends, at the will of him who distrained them, the same is a void prescription, for it cannot have a lawful beginning, and time cannot make such a thing to be good. The King may grant tollage, pontage, &c. but not to the prejudice of another, as 22 E. 3. 58. The King cannot grant to one thorough-toll to pass by highways, for it is an oppression to the people, for every highway shall be common to every one, see 16 E. 3. Grants 53. and here the tenants of ancient demesn are quit of toll by the common law, and not by prescription, which see Fitz. 14. and such tenants have an inheritance in such liberties, which the King by his grant cannot take away, and then if it cannot have a lawful beginning, it cannot be good by prescription: also this prescription is against the common-wealth, therefore it is a void prescription, and the common-wealth is much respected in law, and things which in themselves are justifiable by reason, are not justifiable if they be injurious to others, as 21 E. 4. & 8 E. 4. 18.

Fishers may prescribe to dry their nets upon the lands of others, and none can prescribe against such a prescription, so here, all lands which are ancient demesn, are holden in socage, so as they were all husbandmen, who manured their lands for the sustentation of the Kings subjects, to which they had such priviledges to be the better able to follow their husbandry, and therefore to disable such profitable subjects, and to prescribe against these liberties and priviledges, is to take away the name of ancient demesn, and to make their lands at the common law. Hobart contrary: To shew the authority to demand is not necessary, for our prescription is not upon demand to distrain: for the common officer hath authority to demand, for they ought to demand it, who ought to take the thing demanded, and those are the bailiffs and burgesses, and then when their water-bayly doth it, it is as much as if it had been done by the corporation, which see 48 E. 3. 17. The Mayor and Comminalty of Lincoln, brought an action of covenant against the Mayor and Comminalty of Derby, and declared, that the Mayor and Comminalty of Derby had covenanted with the Mayor and Comminalty of Lin. that they should be quit of murage, pontage, custom and toll within the town of Derby, of all merchandises of those of the town of Lin. and further declared, that I. W. and H. M. two burgesses of the town of Derby, had taken certain toll of certain burgesses of the town of Lin. &c. Exception was taken to this declaration, because they had alleadged the taking of such toll, not by the corporation of Derby, but by I. and H. two of the burgesses of it, in which case the plaintiffs might have an action of trespass against the burgesses, for the act of any of the corporation is not the breaking of the covenant, made by the comminalty, but it was not allowed; for if the common officer of the town doth any thing for their common use, as it is intended such thing was done by the officer, it is reason all the town be answerable for it, and the whole comminalty by intendment cannot come at one time to take, &c. and so in our case, for as much as the corporation ought to make the demand, and their common officer doth it to their use, the same is the act of the whole corporation. As to the matter in law, we have pleaded specially; that we took toll only of those things which are brought by sea by merchants, and not otherwise, and I conceive that tenants in ancient demesn, are not discharged of toll, for [233] all things, but only for such which arise out of their tenements, or are bought for their tenements or families there, and their sustentations, according to the quantity of their tenements, 9 H. 6. 25. 19 H. 6. 66. They shall be quit of toll, of all things sold and bought coming of their lands, or for the manurance of their lands; and 7. H. 4. 111. Tenants of ancient demesn, ought to be quit of toll for oxen or beasts bought and sold for tillage, and manurance of their lands, and for their sustenance and maintenance of their families, and for putting them to pasture to make them fat and more vendable, and so to sell them, &c. And see accordingly, F. N. B. 224. D. See Crook 138. 139. 28 Eliz. A judgment was given for the said parties, for the plaintiffs: but there the plaintiff declared generally, and the defendant did demur in law generally, wherefore by common intendment, the cattel were bought for the tillage and manurance of their lands: for there it was not shewed (as it is here) that it was to merchandize: also we have justified, not only for toll, but also for trouage, and that they have not shewed, and therefore as to the trouage our justification is good enough, for their priviledge shall not be construed to extend beyond the words of it: as the priviledge of the law is, that if I leave my horse at a smiths forge to be shod, there my horse cannot be distrained, but if I or my servant take the saddle from the horses back, and lay it in the smiths forge, the saddle may be distrained. Then here are two customs meeting together, and to begin together, and the one was not before the other, then the particular custom shall stand: and I conceive that by the writ, de exoneratione sect. Fitz. N. B. 161. b. the tenants in ancient demesn, have not always such priviledges, for the writ saith, quod si ita sit, then, &c. and nisi ipsi, & eorum antecessores tenentes de eodem manerio venire consueverunt temporibus retroactis, and see the same matter in the Register, 181. And afterwards judgment was given, quod querens nihil capiat par billam, for the justices were of opinion, that the tenants in ancient demesn should pay toll for their merchandizes.

CCCXVI. LANCASTER AND LUCAS CASE.

Leases. Attornment.

Trespass was brought for entering into the parsonage-house of Ringhall, and divers lands appertaining to it: the defendant being farmor of the parsonage, pleaded, not guilty; and the jury found, that one Tybbin was parson of the said church, and that one Ash and Dorothy his wife, Wivell and Drausfield were patrons of the said church, scil. Ash and his wife in the right of his wife, Wivell as tenant by the curtesie, the reversion to his son, and Drausfield also as tenant by the curtesie, but without issue by his wife, &c. so as the inheritance of the said parsonage was in Wivell and Ash: and afterwards the Bishop of Chester being ordinary, the parson and patron, 4 E. 6. joyned in a lease of the rectory (which lease was void as to the wife of Ash) to S. who assigned it to the defendant. All the lessors dyed: and further found, that Ash and Wivell were heirs of the patronage, and that the church being void, the presentment came to the bishop by reason of lapse, and that the successor of the bishop had collated his clark. Cook argued, and he conceived that the same now incumbent should avoid the lease in toto; and the case is but [234] this: three coparceners patrons of an advowson, or tenants in common, the parson, three patrons, and the ordinary joyn in a lease (where the one of them is a feme-covert, and so her act void) if the successor of the incumbent being presented by lapse shall avoid it in all: and he conceived that he should, for all three have interest in the parsonage, and all three ought to agree, but the agreement of the one is worth nothing: but it hath been said, that that is but matter of assent; and that the assent of the one is as strong as the assent of them all; as if many joint-tenants hold by certain services, and the lord granteth the services to a stranger, and one of the joint-tenants attorneth to the grant, the same is as sufficient as if they had all attorned, Lit. 128. 566. Otherwise it is of a rent-charge, for there all the joint-tenants of the lands charged upon the grant of the said rent ought to attorn to the grant; for the ter-tenant ought to attorn, and one of them is not ter-tenant: and in case of a rent-charge, the avowry is upon the lands: but attornment differs from our case, for attornment is but a bare assent, without any interest in him who attorns, for an abator may do it; but here is matter of interest, and in attornment, attornment for one acre is effectual for all, 18 E. 3. Fitz. variance 63. but otherwise it is in case of confirmation for one acre, the same doth not extend to the rest, for in such case an interest passeth. So here, the one of them is not patron, therefore all of them ought to concur, 31 E. 3. Grants 61. that such act of the patron shall not bind but according to the estate of the patron, which see Lit. 112. 528. as if tenant in tail confirm, the same shall not bind the presentee of the issue, see Fitz. Grants 104. In R. 2. the case was that the Bishop of Covent. and Lichfeild had two chapters, one of Coventry, the other of Lichfeild, and he made a conveyance, but one chapter only did confirm it, the same doth not bind the successor, for both are but one chapter in respect of the bishop, and see the case abridged by Statham Title Assize, for if the bishop is chosen by both chapters, there a confirmation must be of them both: the case in Dyer 11 Eliz. 282. Thark, Archbishop of Dublin, hath two deans and chapters, the one surrendreth without the assent of the bishop, and afterwards the other dean and chapter confirmeth a lease made by the bishop, the same is good: I confess that; for the surrender was by Act of Parliament, and so one sole chapter remained: and in our case, the lease cannot be good in part, and void for the residue, for all are but one patron, as 22 H. 6. 47. two coparceners are, they make composition to present by turns, a writ of annuity is brought against the incumbent, he shall have aid of both. And see the case betwixt Gore and Dawbney in the Exchequer Chamber upon a writ of error, where two are accountable, an account made by the one is not good, for both the accountants shall make but one account, and therefore the account of the one cannot be good: and the Lord Anderson put this case, two joynt-tenants of a manor, the one of them doth grant a copy, the same is void, for he is not dominus pro tempore: and see as to the assent of them all, &c. 3 Eliz. 190. Dyer. But it hath been objected, that now the incumbent comes in by the ordinary, and not by the presentment of the patron, and the ordinary is bound by the confirmation of his predecessor, so that the collation of the bishop by lapse, is in the right and sted of the patron, and as the presentee of the heir of the patron shall avoid, &c. so also of the ordinary: and 20 E. 3. Br. Presentment 12. the patron shall have a writ of darrein-presentment upon the present. of the bishop for lapse, and 22 H. 6. if a man can recover an advowson, and after the bishop collate for lapse, the same is an execution of the judgment, and will make a possessio fratris, as Moyle saith: and in our case this confirmation is void in all, because non sunt concurrentes ii qui in hac parte concurrere debuerant: and it is an entire act, and cannot be avoided in part, and stand for the residue, and the pre-[235]-sentee comes in in the right of the heir, for which he may avoid it, &c. Popham contrary, It is to be here considered, if the ordinary hath interest in the church by this lapse, or only an authority; for if he hath an interest, then it will follow, that every one of his successors shall be bound by his confirmation, and also their presentees: it hath been objected, that there ought to be a full and entire patron who makes such a lease, otherwise it is void: but that is not so, as if the patron be tenant for life, his lease or confirmation shall not be void in all, but shall be good during his life, which see 31 E. 3. Grants 61. and 19 Eliz. 356. A parson makes a lease for forty years, the bishop being patron and ordinary confirms it, the patron dyeth, the bishop presents, and afterwards is translated, this lease shall stand during the life of the bishop, and of the new incumbent who found the church charged, and then such lease may be good for part, and void for part. See for the same, 2 E. 3. 8. If the advowson of a church be appropriated unto a prior and his successors, if afterwards the wife of the grantor be endowed of it, and present her clerk, the church is become dis-appropriated during the life of the wife, but afterwards shall stand. See the case cited to the contrary, 29 Eliz. in the case of the Earl of Bedford 7 Co. 8. At the beginning the patron was not restrained to any time to present his clerk, but the six months was appointed at the instance and suit of the ordinaries by a canon, confirmed in the councel of Lateran, before which time, the ordinaries had not any lapses, but after the said canon, they had an interest in the church, and this appeareth in the register: and see F. N. B. 37. f. that after the ordinary is entituled to lapses, the plaintiff in a quare impedit cannot have a ne admittas, for now the ordinary hath an interest: and if the bishop hath title to present by lapse, and before presentment he dyeth, so as his temporalties come to the King, the King shall present, which proves that it is an interest, and the civilians call it, interesse caducum & conditionale: and in our case the confirmation of the coparcener shall bind the other coparceners; in a nativo habendo, shall bind them all, and the villain shall be free for ever. And it was moved also, if an usurper, or the clerk who is in by him shall avoid this clause, and by the words of the statute of West. 2. si tempus semestre transierit per impedimentum alicujus, ita quod Episcopus ecclesiam conferat, & verus patronus ea vice præsentationem suam amittat, adjudicentur damna ad valorem ecclesiæ pro duobus annis; wherefore what the patron loseth, the ordinary hath the same, therefore it is an interest, and in lieu of that loss the statute gives damages to the patron, &c. And the case was adjorned to be further argued at another day, &c.

CCCXVIII. PET AND BALDENS CASE.

Prohibition.

In a prohibition the plaintiff declared, that whereas Michael Pett was seised of divers lands, and made his will, by which he made the plaintiff his son his executor, and thereby devised unto A. his wife one hundred pounds, in consideration and recompence of her dower of all his lands, and dyed, and the said A. took to husband the defendant: and that after betwixt the plaintiff and defendant, colloquium quoddam habebatur, &c. upon which conference and communica-[236]-tion, the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff promised to pay to him the said one hundred pounds, promised to make to him a discharge of the said one hundred pounds, and also of the dower of his wife, and shewed further, that notwithstanding that the said Pett was ready, and offered the said one hundred pounds, and dower also, yet, &c. Upon which there was a demurrer in law; it was moved by Tan. that here is not any cause to have a prohibition, for the agreement upon the communication is not any cause, for it doth not appear that it was performed. Coke, A prohibition lieth, for the wife cannot have both, money, and dower, for that was not the meaning of the devisor, and therefore it hath been holden, that if a man deviseth a term for years to his wife, in satisfaction and recompence of her dower, if she recovereth dower, she hath lost her term; also here is modus and conventio which alters the law, scil. mutual agreement: so if the parson and one of the parishioners agree betwixt them that for forty shillings per annum he shall retain his tithes for three years, &c. as it was in the case betwixt Green and Pendleton, &c. it is good.

CCCXIX. MARTINGDALL AND ANDREWS CASE.

Action upon the Case for Wast.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that one Mildmay was seised of a house in A. and that he and all those whose estate, &c. time out of mind, &c. have had a way over certain lands of the defendants called C. pro quibusdam averiis suis, and shewed, that the said Mildmay enfeoffed him of the said house, and that the defendant stopt the said way, to his damage, &c. and it was found for the plaintiff, and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the title to the way is not certainly set forth, i.e. pro quibusdam averiis suis, quod omnes justiciarii concesserunt: but Gawdy Justice conceived, that the same was no cause to stay judgment: for it appeareth to us, that the plaintiff hath cause of action, although that the matter be incertainly alleadged, and of this incertainty the defendant hath lost the advantage, having surceased his time by pleading to it, as 20 E. 3. Trespass for taking and carrying away of charters, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and it was found for the plaintiff to the damage, &c. and error was brought, because the plaintiff had not set down in his declaration, the certainty of the lands comprized in the charters: but non allocatur, for the defendant ought to have challenged that before, and also 47 E. 3. 3. in a writ of covenant the plaintiff declared of a covenant, by which the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff to assure to him all his lands and tenements which he had in the counties of Gloucester and Lincoln, and declared, that at a certain day he required the defendant to make him assurance of all the lands, &c. And the writ of covenant was general, quod teneat conventionem de omnibus terris quas habeat in, &c. And it was objected (as here) that the writ wanted certainty, as how many acres, or such a mannor, but non allocatur, for here the plaintiff is not to recover land, but only damages, and the writ was awarded good. Fenner Justice, The cases are not like to the case at bar, for in the said cases, the certainty is not needful, but for the taxing of the damages; but here, the certainty of the number of the cattel is part of the title.

CCCXX. BEALE AND TAYLOR CASE.

Leases. Retainer of Rent.

Upon evidence to a jury, it was holden by Gawdy and Clench Justices, that if a lease for years be made, and the lessor covenants to repair during the term; if now the lessor will not do it, the lessee himself may do it, and pay himself by way of retainer of so much out of the rent, which see 12 H. 8. 1. 14 H. 4. 316. A lease for years by indenture, and the lessor covenants to repair the houses, and afterwards the lessor commands the lessee to mend the houses with the rent, who doth it accordingly, and expends the rent in the charges, &c. So 11 R. 2. Bar. 242. The lessor covenants, that the lessee shall repair the tenements when they are ruinous, at the charge of the lessor: in debt for the rent, the lessee pleaded that matter, and that according to the covenant he had repaired the tenements being then ruinous with the rent, and demanded judgment; if action, &c. and good. Fenner Justice contrary, for each shall have action against the other, if there be not an express covenant to do it. Quære, if the lessor covenant to discharge the land leased, and the lessee, of all rent-charges issuing out of it. If a rent charge be due, if the lessee may pay it out of his own rent to the lessor, ad quod non fuit responsum.

CCCXXI. OFFLEY AND SALTINGSTON, AND PAYNES CASE.

Escape.

Offley and Saltingston, late sheriffs of London, brought an action upon the case against Payne, because that he being in execution under their custody for fifty three pounds, in which he was condemned at the suit of one Spicer, made an escape, the debt not satisfied, by reason whereof they were compelled to pay the money; the defendant confessed all the matter, but further pleaded, that after the escape Spicer had acknowledged satisfaction (being after the escape) upon record of the sum recovered, upon which there was a demurrer: Owen Serjeant argued, that the acknowledging of satisfaction, being after the escape, was not any plea, for when the plaintiffs sheriffs have paid the money recovered, there was no reason that Spicers acknowleding satisfaction should stop to the sheriffs of their remedy against Payne. It was holden by the justices, that the plaintiffs in this action ought to shew, that they had been impleaded by him who recovered, for they cannot have this action before they are sued. For perhaps the plaintiffs who recovered must be contented to hold themselves to the defendant, and to be satisfied by him. It was said by Glanvil Serjeant, that by the escape the debt was cast upon the sheriffs, and the defendant discharged: and that it was the case of Sir Gervas Clyston, who being sheriff suffered him who was in execution, and in his custody, to go and see a play, and the same was adjudged an escape, and the party could not be in execution again: and then he said, that this acknowledgment of satisfaction could not be any bar to the plaintiffs. At another day the case was moved again. And then it was the clear opinion of the whole Court, that the action was maintainable, although that the plaintiff in the first action had acknowledged satisfaction: and it hath been adjudged here in this Court, in the case betwixt Hill and Hill, that notwithstanding such satisfaction, that the action lieth. See F. N. B. 130. b. for the payment after doth not take away the action, but mitigate the damages only, for the act of third person shall not take away an action once vested.

CCCXVII. GREENLIFF AND BAKERS CASE.

Assumpsit.

The plaintiff declared, that whereas he was bound to the defendant in an obligation of forty pounds for the payment of twenty pounds, the defendant the second of No. after, in consideration that the plaintiff at the request of the defendant had paid the said twenty pounds without suit at law, promised to deliver to the plaintiff before such a day an obligation, by which one A. was bounden to the defendant in forty pounds, with a letter of attorney to demand the same of the said A. and to sue for it in the name of the defendant, which he had not done, and in that matter the plaintiff had judgment, and thereupon the defendant brought a writ of error: first, here is not any consideration; for the payment of the mony is no more than he ought to do, and which he was compellable to do, &c. Secondly, the same is no benefit to the plaintiff, but only a matter of charge to sue the said bond against A. Thirdly, upon the venire facias, the sheriff returned but twenty three jurors. As to the first error it was the opinion of Gawdy and Fenner Justices, that here is not any consideration, for the defendant hath not any benefit by it, and the plaintiff doth no more than he ought to do, and the payment was in respect of the debt, and not of the defendants request. And by Gawdy, Upon this promise an action doth not lye, for the plaintiff is not to have any benefit by it, but travel. Fenner contrary, And that the action lieth for that; as to the third error, the same is helped by the statute of 32. H. 8. and the statute of 18 Eliz. of imperfect and insufficient return of any sheriff: Fenner, Not only the return is naught, but also the pannel, is insufficient. And it was moved by Tanfield, that it was adjudged in this Court, Pasch. 25 Eliz. betwixt Cook and Huet, that where A. was bounden to B. in forty pounds, B. promised to A. that if A. would pay the mony without suit he would deliver him the said bond, by which he is bound to the said B. and it was holden a good consideration, quod fuit concessum per totam curiam; but that is not like to the case at bar, and it was holden in the same plea, that if the obligor pay the duty at the day and place, that if the obligee will not deliver the bond, yet the obligor shall not have the detinue for it.

CCCXII. GUILDFORDS CASE.

Indictment upon the Statute of 23 Eliz.

Guilford was indicted upon the statute of 23 Eliz. cap. 1. for withdrawing divers persons, Her Majesties subjects, from the religion established in England to the Roman religion, and to promise obedience to the Church of Rome, and for that he himself was with-drawn from the obedience of the Queen. Coke took exception to the indictment, because that the indictment was not found within the year after the offence committed. In the said Act there is a proviso, that all offences against the Act, shall and may be enquired of within the year and day after the offence committed. Popham Attorney General, This case is not within that proviso, but both depend upon other statutes before, viz. 1, 5, & 13 Eliz. touching the acknowledging of Her Majesties supream government in causes ecclesiastical, or other matters touching the service of God, or coming to church, or establishing of true religion within this realm, shall and may be enquired as well before the justices of the peace, as other justices named in the said sta-[239]-tute, within one year and a day after such offence committed: and he said, these words in the proviso refer only to such offences contained in the said Act, which toucheth the supremacy and causes ecclesiastical, &c. and such offences ought to be enquired within the year and day: but this indictment here doth consist upon other matter, for withdrawing himself from the obedience of the Queen, which is an offence out of the compass of the said proviso, and therefore the enquiry of it not restrained unto any time; and the statute of 13 Eliz. extends to bills, writings, instruments, &c. and not to the words (with-drawing by words) which is supplied by 13 Eliz. (with-drawing by other means) and the restraint of the enquiry at the time, goes to the hearing of mass, and saying of mass, and not (repairing to the church;) but as to with-drawing, the same is at large, not restrained by that statute: and he said, that this indictment doth consist upon many offences, some to offences within the proviso, and as to those the judgment is void: some to other offences, as treason, the offence of with-drawing, the enquiry of which is not restrained, and therefore this indictment shall stand: also it was the intent of this statute, not to restrain this Court, but only the justices of peace, for they are specially named. Coke conceived, that this word touching, &c. did not extend to anything contained in the statute of 23 Eliz. but only to offences within the Acts of 1, 5, & 13 Eliz. which were incertain before;

also this proviso is in the disjunctive, against this or against the Acts of 1, 5, or 13 Eliz. so as that which follows is to be applied to the last disjunctive, and not to the whole sentence; and always when a thing is named certain, and after general things, the words subsequent shall be referred to the general words, and not to that which is certain. Also if (touching, &c.) doth refer to this statute, the sentence would have begun with it; but here it begins with the supremacy, of which nothing is spoken in this statute, and therefore it ought to be referred to the statute which begins it, and that is 1 Eliz. and then it shall be preposterous to come after 23 Eliz. and these words (shall and may) ought to be so construed, (shall) is restrictive of itself, and (may) shall be referred to that which was restrained before, as the proceedings upon the statute of 1 Eliz. cap. 2. were restrained to the next sheriffs: and he conceived, that this Court is as well restrained to time as any other Court, for the words are as well before justices of the peace, as before other justices named in the said statutes, and in the statute of 5 Eliz. this Court is especially named: Wray, This proviso begins with justices of the peace, therefore it doth not extend to offences which are treason; and the meaning of this statute of 23 Eliz. was to enlarge the statutes of 1, & 5 Eliz. for where the offence against the statutes before was to be enquired at the next session, and the other within six months; now by this statute it may be enquired at any time within the year and day, but it doth not extend to restrain the proceedings against offences of treason, for the words of the statute are, that such offences shall be inquired before justices of peace within a year, &c. But in the next clause, the justices of peace may punish all offences against this Act, but treason, by which it appeareth that no offences are restrained to time, but those which the justices of the peace have authority to hear and determine, and that is not treason: Gawdy to the same purpose: For all the proviso is but one sentence, and there the whole shall be referred to spiritual offences, as the not coming to church &c.

CCCXXIII. FILCOCKS AND HOLTS CASE.

Assumpsit.

In an action by Filcocks against Holt, administrator of A. the plaintiff declared, how that the husband of the defendant, who died intestate, was indebted to the plaintiff in ten pounds by bill, and that the defendant in consideration, that the plaintiff would permit the defendant to take letters of administration, and give to her further day for the payment of the said ten pounds, promised to pay the said ten pounds to the plaintiff, at the day; and upon a writ of error brought in the Exchequer, upon a judgment in the Kings Bench, in that case, it was assigned for error, that here is not any consideration, for by the law she is to have administration, being wife of the intestate; and as to the giving of further day for the payment of the ten pounds, the same will not make it good, for it doth not appear that she was administratrix at the time of the promise made, and then she is not chargeable, and then, &c. And such was the opinion of the Court. And it was said by Periam Justice, and Manwood Chief Baron: That the bishop might grant letters of administration to whom he pleased, if he would forfeit the penalty limited by the statute: also it was said, where an executor or administrator is charged upon his own promise, judgment shall be given de bonis propriis, for his promise is his own act.

Tanfeild, The action doth not lye, for if my servant depart out of my service, and another doth retain him, an action doth not lye at the common law, if he do not procure him to leave my service, and afterwards retain him, or immediately taketh him out of my service. And this action is not grounded upon any statute. See 11 H. 4. 176. 47 E. 3. 14. 9 E. 4. 32. Gawdy, The action lieth, for here is damage and wrong done to the plaintiff. CCCXXV. NASH AND MOLLINS CASE.

Prohibition. Tithes.

Nash and Usher sued a prohibition against Mollins, for that the defendant had libelled against them in the Spiritual Court, for tithes of wood, growing in Barking Park in Essex; the other did surmise, that the lands were parcel of the possessions of the prior and covent of Cree Church, and that the said prior, and his successors, time out of mind, &c. had held the said lands discharged of tithes, and held them so at the time of the dissolution, &c. and the other part traversed it, whereupon they were at issue, if the prior, &c. [241] held the land discharged, tempore dissolutionis, &c. And now on the part of the plaintiff in the prohibition certain old persons were produced, who remembred the time of the monasteries, and that they did not pay any tithes then, or from thence; exception was taken to the suggestion by Coke, that here is nothing else than a prescription, de non decimando, for here is not set forth any discharge, as composition, unity of possession, priviledge of order, as templarii, hospitiarii, &c. Fenner Justice: Spiritual persons may prescribe in non decimando, for it is not any prejudice to the church: Wray, although it is not set down the special manner of discharge, yet it is well enough, for we ought to take it that it was by a lawful means, as composition, &c. or otherwise: for the statute is, that the King shall hold discharged as the abbot, &c. and we ought to take it, that it was a lawful discharge of tithes tempore dissolutionis: and afterwards the jury found for the plaintiffs in the prohibition: but no evidence was given to prove, that the defendant did prosecute in the Spiritual Court, contrary to the prohibition.

CCCXXVI. SHELDON'S CASE.

Indictment upon the Statute of 23 Eliz. Exposition of Words.

Sheldon, Talbot, and two other, four persons in all, were indicted upon the statute of 23 Eliz. of Recusancy; the words of the indictment were, quod illi nec eorum uterque venerunt to any parish church, &c. It was moved by Atkinson, that the indictment is not good, for uterque doth refer unto one of them, and not where they are many, as here, and so is an insensible word, and so upon the matter there is no offence laid to their charge. And the Justices doubting of it, demanded the opinions of grammarians, who delivered their opinions, that this word (uterque) doth aptly signifie one of them, and in such signification it is used by all writers: Gawdy, I conceive, that the opinions of the grammarians is not to be asked in this case; but I agree, that when an unusual word in our law comes in question, for the true construction of it, then the opinion of grammarians is necessary: but (uterque) is no unusual word in our law, but hath had a reasonable exposition heretofore, which we ought to adhere unto, which see 28 H. 8. 19. Three bound in an obligation:

obligamus nos & utrunque nostrum, and by the whole Court (uterque) doth amount to quilibet: and see 16 Eliz. Dyer 337, 338. Three joyntenants in fee, and by indenture tripartite each of them covenanteth and granteth to the others, & eorum utrique, to make assurance, and there it was holden that the word (uterque) doth amount to quilibet. Wray, Admit it shall be so taken in a bond, yet it shall not be so taken in an indictment: as if a man make a lease for years, rendring rent payable at the day of St. Martin, although there be two days of St. Martin in the year, yet the reservation is good, and the rent shall be taken payable at the most usual day of St. Martin there in the country: but in an indictment, if an offence be laid to be done on St. Martins Day, without shewing which in certain, it is not good. Fenner, The word uterque is matter of surplusage, and therefore shall not hurt the indictment.

CCCXXVII. BLUNT AND WHITEACRE'S CASE.

Error. Amercement.

A writ of error was brought upon a judgment given in the Common Pleas in a replevin, where the defendant did avow as fermor of the manor of F. in the county of Berks, to St. Johns Colledge in Oxford, and laid a prescription there in him and his fermors to distrain for all amercements in the court of the said manor, and shewed that the plaintiff in the replevin was presented by the homage for not repairing of a house, being a customary tenant of the said manor, according to a pain imposed upon him at a former court, for which he was amerced by the steward to ten shillings, and was also presented for not ringing of his swine, for which he was amerced three shillings four pence, and for these amercements he distrained: and upon nihil dicit judgment was given for the avowant to have return, upon which a writ of error was brought: and error assigned, in that there is not any prescription laid in the avowry for the lord to amerce the tenants, and of common right he cannot do it. See 48 E. 3. And such amercement is extortion, for the lord cannot be his own judge, and therefore he ought to enable himself to distrain by prescription; another error, because the fine is laid to be assessed by the steward, whereas by the law it ought to be by the suitors, for they are judges, and not the steward: another, because that in the avowry it is set down, quod præsentatum fuit, that he had not repaired a certain house; but he doth not say, in facto & categorice, &c. that he had not repaired, for that is matter traversable. 4. Here is no offence, for a copy-holder is not bound to repair by the common law, if it be not by prescription, for he cannot have house-boot upon the land as a termor may, if it be not alledged a custom. Fenner, The steward may assess fines for a contempt; but not amercements if not by prescription. Gawdy, The lord of a mannor cannot assess amercements for a trespass done to himself upon his own lands; but otherwise it is of a common trespass, or a trespass done in the land of another; but for the distress he ought to prescribe, and the judgment was reversed.

Error.

Error was brought upon a judgment given in Lyn, where by the record it appeareth, that they prescribe to hold plea every Wednesday, and it appeared upon the said record that the Court was holden, 16 Feb. 26 Eliz. which was dies Dominicus, and that was not assigned for error in the record; but after in nullo est erratum pleaded, it was assigned at the bar: and almanacks were shewed to the Court in proof of it, and it was holden clearly to be error; but the doubt was, if it should be tried by jury, or by the almanacks, and it was said, that the justices might judicially take notice of almanacks, and be informed by them, and that was the case of one Robert in the time of the Lord Catline, and by Coke; so was the case betwixt Galery and Bunbury, and afterwards the judgment was reversed.

The issue in tail entreth, he in the remainder for life entreth, &c. And it was conceived, that this acceptance of the rent of the lessee for life doth affirm also the remainder. See Litt. CCCXXX. THE LORD MORDANT AND VAUX CASE.

The Lord Mordant brought an action of trespass against George Vaux, and declared of a trespass done in quodam loco, called N. parcel of the manor of Hawarden. The case was, William Lord Vaux was seised thereof, and thereof levied a fine to the use of the Lord Vaux, which now is, for life, and after his decease to the use of Ann and Muriel daughters of the Lord Vaux and their assigns, until Ambrose Vaux should return from the parts beyond the seas, and should come to the age of 21 years, or dye, if they should so long live: and after the return of Ambrose from beyond the seas, and the age of 21 years, or death, whichsoever of the said days or times should first happen, to the use of the said Ambrose and the heirs of his body begotten, with divers remainders over. Ambrose returned, and 31 Eliz. before he came of full age (for it is not pleaded that he was of full age) levied a fine to the use of George Vaux, the defendant in tail, with divers remainders over. Afterwards the Lord Vaux being tenant for life, enfeoffed the Lord Mordant in fee, upon whom the said George Vaux entred for a forfeiture, upon which entry the Lord Mordant brought the action. Buck argued for the plaintiff. Amb. Vaux had nothing in the lands in question until his return from beyond the seas, and his full age, and the estate doth not begin until both be past; and he said, that no use did arise to Ambrose until the time incurred, for the time of the beginning is uncertain and upon a contingent, as 13 Eliz. Dyer 301. A. makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of B. who he intendeth to marry, until the issue which he shall beget on her shall be of the age of 21 years, and after the issue shall come of such age, then unto the use of the said B. during her widowhood; the husband dieth without issue, the wife entreth, and her entry holden lawful. But error was brought upon it; and also Calthrops case was cited to the same purpose, 16 Eliz. Dyer 336. This estate limited to Ambrose doth refer to the estate limited to Muriel and Ann, and not to the time, for ever the first estate is to be respected, as 23 Eliz. Dyer 371. He in the remainder in fee upon an estate for life deviseth it to his wife, yielding and paying during her natural life yearly 20 shillings, and dieth, living tenant for life, the rent shall not begin until the remainder falleth: so as the general words refer to the beginning of the estate, although the words imply that the rent shall be paid presently: and see also such construction, 9 Eliz. 261. A lease was made for thirty years, and four years after the lessor makes another lease by these words, nos dictis

30 annis finitis, dedisse & concessisse, &c. habend & te-[244]-nend. a die confectionis præsentium, termino prædict. finito, usque terminum, &c. And although, prima facie, the beginning of this term seems incertain, yet the justices did respect the former estate, and so the lessee hath the interest of the term from the making of the deed, but no estate until the first term expire: then Ambrose before his age of 21 years levying a fine, the fine shall not bind the feoffee, for it enures only by way of conclusion, and so binds parties and privies, but not a stranger: and the party needs not to plead against this fine, quod partes to the fine nihil habuerunt, for that appeareth upon their own shewing. Wiat contrary; The state of Ambr. accrues and rises when any of the said times come, first full age, return, death, for the words are, And after the return of Ambrose from beyond the seas, and the age of 21 years, or death, &c. This word (or) before (death) disjoyns all, and makes the sentence in the disjunctive, and he cited a case lately judged in the Common Pleas: a lease was made to Trewpeny and his wife for one hundred years, if he and his wife, or any child or children betwixt them begotten should so long live; the wife died without issue, the husband held the land, &c. for the disjunctive before (child) made the sentence disjunctive. Gawdy Justice, That had been law if no such word had been in the case. And Wiat said, that although the return be incertain, yet it is certain enough that he shall come to the age of 21 years, or dye. And also this is by way of use, which needs not to depend upon any estate, and if the remainder shall vest presently upon his return, then it would be doubtful what remainder it is, if it be a remainder depending upon the estate for the life of Ann and Muriel, or for years, i.e. until Ambrose shall come of the age of 21 years: but be it incertain, yet the fine is good, for here is a remainder in Ambrose, and both are but particular estates, and there is not any doubt, but that one may convey by fine, or bar by fine such contingent uses, for which see the statute of 32 H. 8. All fines to be levied of any lands intailed in any wise to him that levieth the fine, or to any his ancestors in possession, reversion, &c. which word (use) goes to contingent uses, for at the time of the making of that statute, there was no other use. Fenner Justice remembred the case adjudged M. 30 & 31 Eliz. betwixt Johnson and Bellamy, which ruled this case. Gawdy Justice, Here is a certainty upon which the remainder doth depend, i.e. the death of Ambrose; but the case had been the more doubtful if no certainty at all had been in the case. Atkinson contrary; Here the Lord Vaux is tenant for life, the remainder to George in tail; now when the Lord Vaux levies a fine, this is a forfeiture, and then the entry of George is lawful. It hath been objected on the other side, that this remainder was future and contingent, and not vested, therefore nothing passed to George by Ambrose. The words are (quousque Ambrose shall return). This word (quousque) is a word of limitation, and not of condition, and then the remainder may well rise when the limitation hapneth. It hath been said, that this remainder is contingent, and then the remainder which is to vest upon a contingency, cannot be granted or forfeited before that the contingent hapneth: and he cited the case of 14 Eliz. 314. Dyer. A fine is levied to A. to the use of B. for life, the remainder to E. in tail, the remainder to B. in fee. Proviso, that if B. shall have issue of his body, that then after such issue, and 500l. paid to, &c. within six months after the death of such issue, the use of the said lands, after the death of the said B. and the said six months expired, shall be to the said B. and the heirs of his body: and it was holden, that before the said contingent hapneth, B. had not any estate tail, for there it was incertain if the said contingent would happen: but in our case, the contingents or some of them will happen, or run out by effluxion of time, and that makes the remainder certain in Ambrose. And he also argued, that the limitations are several, by reason of the dis-[245]-junctive, and the last part of the sentence, and that the said sentence is in the disjunctive appeareth by the subsequent words (which of the said days or times shall first happen) and then the return of Ambrose (for that first hapned) vests the remainder in him, and therefore the plaintiff ought to be barred. Buckley contrary: The estate of the daughters doth depend upon a copulative, i.e. the return of Ambrose and his full age, and both is but one limitation; it is clear, that the first limitation is upon a contingent, and the remainder cannot vest until both are performed. And as to that which hath been said, that there is a certain limitation, i.e. the return of Ambrose, 18 Eliz. the case was, lands were given to husband and wife, the remainder to such of them as should survive the other, for years, the husband makes a lease for years and dieth, it was holden, that although the limitation was upon a certain estate, yet because it is not known in which of the parties the estate secondly limited shall begin, the lease is void; so here it is not certainly appointed when the estate limited to Ambrose shall begin, upon the return, full age, or death of Ambrose, and he said, that here are but two times of limitation, first return and full age, second death; return and full age determines the estate of the daughters, and also the death, if it shall first happen, and if these three times shall be construed in the disjunctive, the same would overthrow the estate of the daughters, which is an estate for years determinable, upon the death of themselves or Ambrose. The last words of the limitation do not distinguish or disjoyn it, but respect the estate precedent. And by Clench Justice, if the use limited to Ambrose, shall depend only upon the limitation of his death, the same should be void, for then he should not be in esse to take. But the other justices were of a contrary opinion, and that the use is good, 7 H. 4. Gawdy, Although that here be three things, yet but two times; for the words are not (or) at such of the said days or times, as shall first happen, for that would alter the case: but here these words ought to be intended as if they were spoken before in the limitation of the estate to the daughters, and cannot divide the former limitation: and he said, that if by reason, that the limitation upon the death, which is certain, it shall vest in Ambrose presently, then if after the other limitation shall fall, then his remainder which vested in him upon the said certain limitation should be devested, and should now accrue to him upon the other limitation, which should be absurd and inconvenient, &c. It was adjorned.

CCCXXXI. Thomas and Wards Case.

In ejectione firmæ, by Thomas against Ward, upon a lease made to him of the Manor of Middleton Cheney by one Chambers, the defendant pleaded, that long time before the lessor of the plaintiff had anything, the Bishop of Rochester was seised, and leased the same to the defendant: the plaintiff by replication said, that the said lease was upon condition, viz. the lessee by the indenture of the said lease, did covenant that he would not put out, or disturb any of the tenants inhabiting within the said manor out of their tenancies, doing their duties according to the custom of the said manor; and shewed, that the defendant had put out one Ann Green a tenant dwelling there upon a tenement parcel of the said manor, late in the possession and occupation of the said Ann, and that the bishop had re-entred for the condition so broken, and made a lease to the lessor of the plaintiff, upon which replication, the defendant hath demurred in law: [246] Tanfeild argued for the defendant, that the bishop had no cause to re-enter, for there is not any condition in the case, but only a covenant, for it comes in only on the part of the lessee, and they are words of covenant only, whereas every condition ought to be the words of the lessor, and the bishop hath sufficient remedy by action of covenant: but if the words had been indifferent and absolute without depending on the lessor or lessee, then it had been otherwise, as 3 E. 6. Dyer, 65. Non licebit, to the lessee, dare, concedere, vel vendere statum vel terminum, without the licence of the lessor, under pain of forfeiture, the same is a good condition, but here it is merely a covenant, and it cannot be both. Haughton, Although the words sound in covenant, and be the words of the lessee, yet the lease being made by indenture, the same is the deed of both, and every word in it is spoken by both parties, and although that he may have an action of covenant, yet he cannot thereby overthrow the lease, as by entry, by condition broken, and yet by the words it seems the meaning of the indenture was, that by the breach of this covenant, the estate should be defeated, for so are the words, sub pœna forisfactur. And here by way of action he cannot have the benefit of the whole covenant, and therefore he shall have it by way of condition: and see the case betwixt Browning and Beston, Plow. 132. If it happen the rent to be behind, that then the lessee covenants, that although the rent be not demanded, that the said lease should be utterly extinct, void, and of no effect; and 24 Eliz. there was a case betwixt Hill and Lockham, where by the indenture of lease, the lessee covenanted to grind all his corn at the mill of the lessor, and afterwards in the end of the said indenture, the lessee covenanted to perform all the covenants, sub pœna sorisfactor. and by the opinion of the whole Court, the same was a condition: and see 21 H. 6. 51. where in an obligation where A. was bound to B. the condition is written in this manner, prædict. B. vult & concedit, that if the said A. doth stand to the arbitrament of such a one that then, &c. the same is a good condition, although they are the words of the obligee, and the deed of the obligor, and so here is a good condition. And such was the opinion of Wray and Gawdy, and Fenner did not contradict it: wherefore Tanfeild said, Admit here it is a condition, yet here is not any breach of it sufficiently set forth, for the breach is assigned because he had put out a woman, unam tenentem, & inhabitantem, out of certain lands parcel of the said manor, late in the possession and occupation of the said woman, and that might be, that she was but tenant at will, and the covenant doth refer only to copy-holders: and it may be also, that she had disseised one of the tenants of the manor, in which case, the putting out of such a tenant being in by wrong, is no breach of condition. Also it is not averred in facto, that Ann was tenant of any part of the mannor: also the replication is, that the said defendant had ousted the said Ann, where she had done her duty, fecit debitum suum, before the ouster, and that might be, that she had done her duty once, but not after, and therefore he ought to have said, that she had done her duty always, before her putting out, and this word (duly) being single, is too general, for it may be understood of curtesie, where the words in the indenture are (Doing their duty according to the custom of the manor.) And also it might be, that Ann Green was tenant and inhabitant, but was not put out of the land which was parcel of the manor. And Wray said, that these exceptions were incurable: and therefore judgment was given against the plaintiff.

And if, notwithstanding the said exception, the lessee should have the under-woods, was the question: and it was argued, that the lessee should have subbois, i.e. underwoods, for that is granted by express words, and the exception extends only grossis arboribus, for this word (grossis) in the exception extends to all that which follows: Gawdy Justice, If it were in the case of a common person, it is clear, that upon such matter the underwoods are not excepted, 7 E. 6. Dyer, 79. A lease is made of a mannor except timber and great woods, the underwoods shall pass. Fenner Justice, The proviso, that the lessee should have house-boot, shews the Queens intent, that the under-woods should not pass. Prohibition. Tithes.

And the bishop did suggest, that he and all his predecessors had been seised of the said manor, and that as long as it was in their possessions, had been discharged of tithes, and shewed, that in the time of E. 6. the said manor was conveyed to the Duke of Somerset in fee, and afterwards was re-granted to the bishop and his successors; it was moved, that the prescription was not good, because de non decimando: and admit that the prescription be good, the same is interrupted by the seisin of the Duke of Somerset; and although that the manor be re-assured to the Bishop of Lincoln, yet the prescription is not revived: as homage ancestrel if it be once in a forrain seisin, although it be re-assured, yet it is not revived. But by Wray, Gawdy, and Fenner, The prescription is good in the case of a spiritual person, but not in the case of a common person. And they all were clear of opinion, that the prescription is not gon by this interruption, for tithes are not issuing out of the lands, neither can unity of possession extinguish them, neither are they extinguished, by a release of all right of land, &c. CCCXXXVII. DETHICK, KING OF ARMS CASE.

Indictment. Misnosmer in an Indictment.

William Dethick, alias Garter king of arms, was indicted upon the statute of 5 E. 6. for striking in the church-yard: for that the said Dethick in Pauls Church-yard in London, struck I. S. It was moved; if cathedral churches be within the meaning of the statute: the Court was clear of opinion, that they were. And afterwards the defendant pleaded, that before the indictment found, he was created and crowned by the letters patents of the Queen which he shewed, chief and principal king of arms, and it was granted by the said letters patents, that he should be called Garter, and that that name is not in the indictment, and demanded judgment: the Kings Attorney by replication said, that by the law of arms and heraldry, every one who is made king of arms before he receives his dignity ought to be led betwixt two officers of arms, by the arms, before the Earl Marshal of England, or his deputy, and before him are to go four officers of arms, whereof the one is to bear his patent, another a collar of esses, the third a coronet of brass double guilt, fourthly a cup of wine, and his patent shall be read before the Earl Marshal; and afterwards his coronet shall be set upon his head, and the collar of esses about his neck, and afterwards the wine poured upon his head: and that the defendant had not received these ceremonies, for which cause he is not king of arms, nor to be [249] called upon, to which the defendant did demur in law. Broughton argued for the defendant, and he took exception to the replication, because it is pleaded there, that secundum legem heraldorum, Garter upon his creation ought to receive, &c. of which law this Court cannot have conusance, and therefore the replication ought to be, scil. secundum legem Angliæ: if in appeal the defendant wage battel, although that belongs unto arms and heraldry, yet it shall be pleaded according to the law of the land, and shall not speak of the law of arms. So if an infant be made a knight, and he be to plead in discharge of his wardship, he shall plead according to the law of the land, and yet the degree of a knight belongs to the law of arms, 11 E. 3. Dower against the Earl of Richmond, who was also Duke of Britain, who pleaded to the writ, that he was Duke of Britain, and not so named in the writ; but the Court did not regard it, for they cannot have knowledge of it, so not here of the law of heraldry: also this Court cannot write to the heralds to certifie it, as they may to the Marshal of the King, or to the bishop: but we have sufficiently shewed our matter, scil. that we have letters patents of the Queen, and that we were sworn in the said office, and so we are king of heralds by matter of record, against which is pleaded only matter in defect of ceremony and circumstance, which is not material. An earl is created with the ceremonies of putting a sword broad-wise about his body, and a cap with a coronet upon his head. Yet the King may create an earl without such ceremonies: and may also create an earl by word, if the same be after recorded; when a knight is made, spurs ought to be upon his heels, yet without such ceremony such degree may be conferred to and upon another, for such ceremonies are or may be used, or not used at the Kings pleasure. Afterwards it was objected, that the same is but a name of office, but not a name of dignity. To which it was answered, that this word coronamus always imports dignity, and this is a dignity and office, as earl, marquess, &c. Fenner Justice, The patent is, Nomen tibi imponimus, and therefore (Garter) is parcel of his name: and therefore he ought to be indicted by such name. And it should be hard, to tye estate and degrees to ceremonies. Gawdy was of opinion, that this is but a name of office, and therefore the indictment good, as 1 Mar. writ of summons of Parliament issueth without these words (supream head) and the writ was holden good, for it is not parcel of the name, but addition only: so here, Fenner and Wray, contrary, for the words are creamus, coronamus, nomen imponimus, ergo, part of his name, which Clench also granted, and afterwards Dethick was discharged.

An. 1. of his reign, granted to them all fines pro licentia concordandi, of all their homages and tenants, resiants, and non-resiants within their fee, and shewed, that 29 Eliz. a fine was levied in the Common Pleas, betwixt the plaintiff and one A. of eleven acres of lands, whereof the place where is parcel, and the post-fine was assessed to 15s. and afterwards Scambler the forain opposer did allow to them the said 15s. because the said land was within their fee: and afterwards, in behalf of the said dean and chapter, he demanded of the plaintiff the said fifteen shillings, [250] who refused to pay it, wherefore he in the right of the said dean, &c. It was moved, that it is not averred that the land whereof the fine was levied was within their fee; but they say that Scambler allowed it to be within their fee, and the same is not a sufficient averment; which the Court granted. And it was the opinion of the Court, that the dean and chapter cannot distrain for this matter, but they ought to sue for it in the Exchequer, as it appeareth 9 H. 6. 27. in the Dutchess of Somersets case. Gawdy, This grant doth not extend to the post fine, for fine pro licentia concordandi, is the Queens silver, and not the post fine. CCCXXXIX. SHEREWOOD AND NONNES CASE.

Covenant.

In an action of covenant, the plaintiff declared, that Charles Grice and Hester his wife were seised of certain tenements called Withons, with divers lands to the same appertaining, and of another parcel of land called Dole, containing eight acres, to them and the heirs of the body of the said Charles on the body of the said Hester his wife lawfully begotten, and so seised, 15 Eliz. leased the same to the defendant by indenture for years, by which indenture the lessor covenanted, that the lessee should have sufficient house-boot, fencing-wood, and hoop-wood upon the lands during the term; and that further the lessee covenanted for him, his executors and assigns, with the lessor, &c. That it should be lawful for them to enter upon the lands during the said term, and to have egress and regress there, and to cut down and dispose of all the wood and timber there growing, leaving sufficient house-boot, fencing-wood and hoop-wood to the lessee, upon the lands called the Dole, for his expences at Withons; and further, that he would not take any wood or timber upon the premisses, without the assent or assignment of the lessor or his assigns, otherwise than according to the indenture and true meaning thereof. And further declared, that the said Charles and his wife so seised, levied a fine of part of the land to R. S. and his heirs, to whom the defendant attorned, and that the said R. S. afterwards devised the same to I. his wife, the now plaintiff for years, the remainder over to another, and died, and that the defendant had felled and carried out of the lands called Withons, twenty loads of wood without the assent and assignment of the lessor or his assigns, for which the plaintiff as assignee brought the action. The defendant pleaded, that after the lease John Grice and others by assignment of Hester had cut down and carried away fifty loads of wood in the said lands called the Dole, and so they had not left sufficient woods for his expences at Withons according to the indenture, for which cause he took the said twenty loads of wood upon Withons for his expences, upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. Godfrey, The plea is not good; this plea is no more, but that sufficient wood was not left upon the Dole for his expences, and although there be not, yet the defendant cannot cut wood elsewhere, for he hath restrained himself by the covenant. Also the covenant of the lessor is, that the lessee shall have sufficient wood upon the Dole for his expences at Withons, but in his satisfaction he doth not alledge, that he had need of wood for to spend at Withons, nor doth aver that he hath spent it there, for otherwise he hath not cause to take, &c. And the meaning was, that the lessee should have sufficient wood when he had need of it. Hobart for the defendant, He would not speak to the plea in [251] bar; but he conceived that the declaration was not good, for here no breach of covenant is assigned, for the covenant is in the disjunctive, scil. that the defendant should not take wood without the assent or assignment of the lessor or his assigns: and the plaintiff chargeth the defendant with cutting of wood without the assent and assignment of the lessor, so he would compel us to prove more than we ought, for if he did it with their assent only, or by their assignment only, it is sufficient; but if the covenant had been in the copulative, both was necessary: and for the nature of copulatives he cited the case, where two churchwardens bring an action of trespass, the defendant pleads, that the plaintiffs are not churchwardens, upon which they are at issue. The jury find, that the one was churchwarden, and the other not, and for that the plaintiffs could not have judgment, for if the one of them be not churchwarden, then the plaintiffs are not churchwardens, for the copulatives ought not to be disjoyned: and he cited the case lately ruled in the Common Pleas betwixt Ognel and Underwood concerning Crucifeild Grange, A. leased unto B. certain lands for forty years, B. leased part of the same to C. for ten years. A. grants a rent-charge out of the lands in tenura & occupatione B. It was resolved, that the lands leased to C. should not be charged with that rent, for although it was in tenura B. yet it was not in his occupation, and both are exquisite because in the copulative: so here, the lessee may cut wood with the assent of the lessor without any assignment. Also here, the substance of the covenant cannot charge the defendant, for although it be in the negative, yet it is not absolute in the negative, but doth refer unto the covenant precedent; for the words are, that the lessee shall not cut woods, aliter quam, according to the intent of the indenture, where the covenant precedent is not, that the lessee shall not cut woods but in the Dole, but that the lessor might cut down any trees in the Dole leaving sufficient for the lessee, which covenant in it self doth not restrain the lessee to cut down any trees in any part of the lands demised, nor abridgeth the power which the law giveth to him by reason of the demise. Then when this last covenant comes, i. e. that the lessee will not cut, aliter, then according to the meaning of the indenture without the assent, &c. the same doth not restrain him from the power which the meaning of the indenture gives, and so no breach of covenant can be assigned in this. For by virtue of the lease, the lessee of common right may take necessary fuel upon any part of the land leased: also this first covenant being in the affirmative doth not abridge any interest, as 28 H. 8. 19. The lessor covenants, that the lessee shall have sufficient hedge-boot by assignment of the baily. It is holden by Baldwin and Shelley, that the lessee may take it without assignment, because there are no negative words, & non aliter. So 8 E. 3. 10. A rent of ten pounds was granted to husband and wife, and if the husband overlive his wife that he shall have three pounds rent, and if the wife do overlive the husband, she shall have forty shillings, there it was holden that the rent of ten pounds continued, not restrained by the severance of any of them. And although peradventure it appeareth here, that the meaning of the parties was, that the lessee should not cut down any wood but in the Dole, yet forasmuch as such meaning doth not stand with the law, it shall be rejected, as it was holden to be in the case betwixt Benet and French, where a man seised of divers lands, devised parcel of it called Gages, to the erecting of a school, and another parcel unto B. in fee, and all his other lands unto one French in fee, the devise of Gages was holden void, because too general, for no person is named; and it was further holden, that it passed by the general devise to French, and yet that was not the meaning of the devisor: also the plaintiff is not assignee but of parcel of the reversion, for if [252] the reversion is granted to him for years, and such assignee cannot have an action of covenant, for a covenant is a thing in action, and annexed to the reversion, so that if the reversion doth not continue in its first course as it was at the time of the creation of the covenant, but be altered or divided, the covenant is destroyed, and therefore it was holden, 32 H. 8. betwixt Wiseman and Warringer, where a lease for years was made of one hundred acres of lands, rendring ten pound rent, and afterwards the lessor granted fifty acres of it, that the grantee should not have any part of the rent, but all the rent was destroyed. So in our case here, the grantee hath but parcel of the estate, a term for years, and so is not an assignee intended, as the case betwixt Randal and Brown in the Court of Wards: Randal being seised of certain lands, covenanted with B. that if he pay unto him, his heirs and assigns, five hundred pounds, that then he and his heirs would stand seised to the use of the said B. and his heirs. Randal devised the land to his wife during the minority of his son, the remainder to his son in fee, and died, having made his wife his executrix. Brown at the day and place tendred the money generally, the wife having but an estate for years in the land took the money. It was holden, that the same was not a sufficient tender, for the wife is not assignee, for she hath an interest but for years, and here the son is to bear the loss, for by a lawful tender the inheritance shall be devested out of him, and therefore the tender ought to be made to him and not to his wife. Also as the case is here, he is no assignee, for although Charles Grice and his wife hath the reversion, to them and the heirs of the body of Charles, and levy a fine without proclamations, nothing passeth but his own estate, and then the conusee hath not any estate, but during the life of Charles, and then when a man is seised to him and his heirs during the life of another, he hath not such an estate as he can devise by the statute, and then when he deviseth it to his wife for years, it is void, &c. It was adjorned.

CCCXL. SMITH AND HITCHCOCKS CASE.

Assumpsit. Traverse.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff declared, that whereas the defendant was indebted to him, 19 Maii 30 Eliz. the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff would forbear to sue him until such a day after, promised at the said day to pay the debt. The defendant pleaded, how that 29 Maii 29 Eliz. he was indebted unto the plaintiff in the said sum, for assurance of which afterwards he acknowledged a statute to the plaintiff, upon which he had execution, and had levied the money, absque hoc, that he was indebted to the plaintiff, antea, vel post, the said day, aliquo modo, upon which the plaintiff did demur. It was argued that the traverse was not good, for the consideration in assumpsit is not traversable, because it is but conveyance, and amounts to the general issue, as in debt upon the sale of a horse, it is no plea for the defendant to say, that no such horse was sold to him. Partridge, If the conveyance be the ground of the suit it is traversable; an action upon the case against an hostler, it is a good plea that he is not an hostler, 2 H. 4. 7. See 26 H. 8. Br. Traverse 341. In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas the defendant, habuit ex deliberatione of the plaintiff certain goods, the said defendant in consideration of ten shillings, assumpsit and eidem querenti promisit salvo custodire, &c. Non habuit ex deliberatione, is a good plea. Godfrey, The defendant doth not answer the point of our action, which is the assumpsit, but only by way of argument, 11 E. 4. 4. In trespass upon the statute of 5 R. 2. by the master of a colledge and his con-[253]-freers, the defendant doth justifie by reason of a lease made by a predecessor of the plaintiff, and his confreers, by their deed under their common seal, the plaintiff, replicando saith, that at the time of the making of the lease there was no such colledge, and it was holden no plea, for it is no answer but by argument. Gawdy Justice, In all cases where the defendant may wage his law, there the conveyance is traversable. Wray, The cause of the action is the assumpsit, therefore the consideration is not traversable, for it is not the point with which the plaintiff is charged: and it is common here, that the declaration in such action upon the case, in consideration of divers sums of money, without any more certainty is good, which should not be good if the consideration were traversable, but the consideration is to be given in evidence; and it is also common, that in an action upon the case in trover and conversion, the trover is not traversable, for the conversion is the point of the action. Fenner Justice, The debt here is no cause of the action, but only the assumpsit. In debt upon arbitrament, the arbitrament is traversable: so in debt for rent upon a demise, the demise is traversable, for the arbitrament and demise is the cause and ground of the action. At another day it was moved again, and Gawdy, mutata opinione said, that consideration executory is traversable; as where one in consideration that he may marry my daughter, or of service promiseth to pay, the same consideration is traversable, contrary of a consideration executed. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCXLI. ESTONS CASE.

Eston was seised of lands in fee holden of the King in chief, and took a wife seised of other lands holden in socage, they have issue, and the husband dieth; and afterwards the wife dieth. Owen Serjeant conceived, that the Queen should not have the wardship of the land of the wife, or the primer seisin of it: and if the husband had survived his wife being tenant by the curtesie, the Queen should not have primer seisin of it after his decease. Wray, If the father be seised of lands holden in socage, and the mother of lands holded in knights service, and the husband over-lives his wife being tenant by the curtesie the king shall have all. Anderson denied that, and he conceived, that the opinion of Stamford is not law; and yet see 13 H. 4. 278. Where the father is seised of lands in chief, and the mother of other; and the father dieth, and afterwards the mother dieth, both shall be in ward. And it was said, that if there be grandfather, father, and son, and the father dieth seised of lands holden in socage; and afterwards the grandfather dieth seised of lands in knights service, the lands in socage shall not be in ward. Anderson held strongly, that the Queen should have primer seisin of the lands of the mother. Wray contrary. Quære.

CCCXLII. ELLIS HARTOPS CASE.

Ellis Hartop was seised of divers lands, whereof part was holden of the King in knights service, and devised two parts thereof to W. Denham and his heirs, to the use of T. his brother, and his wife, and afterwards to the use of the said T. and his heirs males. T. died in the life [254] of the devisor, and afterwards a son is born; first it was agreed that a devise might be to the use of another; then, when cesty que use dyeth in the life of the devisor, the devisee shall take it, and when a son is born, it shall go to him: but if the use be void, then the devisee shall have it to his own use, for every devise doth imply a consideration: Coke was of opinion, that the son takes by descent, when cestuy que use, to whom land is devised, doth refuse the use, the devisee cannot take it, for he shall not have it to his own use, for if the use be void, the devise is also void: and the use is void, for cestuy que use died in the life of the devisor, which see Bret and Rygdens case. A man seised of three acres, bargains and sells one of them, without shewing which, and that before the statute of 27 H. 8. the bargainee dyeth before election, no election descends to the heir, for then he should be a purchaser: and by Wray, and Anderson, the devise is void, and it is all one with Brett and Rigdens case. And by Anderson, A man deviseth lands to the use of one, which use by possibility is good, and by possibility not good; if afterwards cestuy que use cannot take, the devise shall be to the use of the devisor and his heirs.

CCCLXIII. WESTON AND GARMONS CASE.

Assize.

Assize was brought of a rent of fifty pounds per annum, and the plaintiff made his plaint to be disseised of his free-hold in H. E. and H. W.; and shewed, that John Vaughan and Amy his wife, who before was the wife of one Weston, and mother of Sir Henry Weston, the plaintiff in the assize was seised of the said manors of H. W. and H. E. lying in Barton and Kinton in fee. And 18 Eliz. a fine was levied betwixt Robert Vaughan, and Miles Whitney complainants, and the said John Vaughan and Amy his wife, and Francis their son deforceants of the said two manors, inter alia per nomen of the manors of H. E. and H. W. and of fifty messuages, three hundred acres of lands, two hundred acres of meadow, cum pertinentiis, in the said towns, by which fine the said deforceants, did acknowledge the right of the said manors and tenements, to be the right of the complainants, come ceo, &c. with warranty, of the said husband and wife, for which the complainants did render a rent of fifty pounds, per annum, with clause of distress, in dictis manerijs, to the said, John & Amy, & the heirs of Amy, and also rendred the tenements aforesaid, with the appurtenances to the said John and Amy for their lives, the remainder to the said Francis their son in tail, the remainder to the said Amy and her heirs; and that John and Amy dyed, by force whereof the said rent descendeth to the said plaintiff, as son and heir of the said Amy, and that the said Francis entred into the said mannors as in his remainder, and was seised in tail, and was seised of the said rent by the hands of the said Francis, and afterwards thereof did enfeoff the said Garmons the defendant &c. The tenant pleaded, that the plaintiff was never seised so as he could be disseised, and if, &c. nul tor. nul disseisin, which was found for the plaintiff who had judgment and execution, upon which the tenant brought a writ of error: Stephens assigned error, first, the fine is levyed of two manors, inter alia, so as no other lands passed by the fine besides the manors, and so the rent is granted out of the said lands and manors, and no other lands which passed by the fine, and then upon the plaintiffs own shewing it appears, that all the tenants of the lands charged with the rent in demand, are not named in the assize: second error: this rent is granted only out of the estate tail, for Amy hath fee in both, as well the rent as the land, and then when the [255] estate tail is determined, the rent is also determined, and he hath not averred the life of the tenant in tail, or any of his issue, wherefore it shall be intended that he is dead without issue, and then the rent is gone, and then he hath not any cause to have assise: Bourchier, As to the first conceived and argued that it is not error, for although these words (inter alia, &c.) yet it shall not be intended that the conusor had any other lands, or that the rent is issuing out of other lands than those two manors which are expressed, & not inter alia: as to the second, the continuance of the tail needs not to be averred, for the tenant in tail hath enfeoffed the tenant of the land, by which the estate tail is discontinued; and although the tenant in tail be dead without issue, yet the rent doth remain until recovery of the land by formedon in the remainder. Fenner Justice was of opinion, that the per nomen should go unto the mannors only, and should not extend to the inter alia: for if a man in pleading saith, that J. S. was seised of twenty acres of land, and thereof (inter alia) did enfeoff him per nomen of Green-wead, the same shall not have reference to the inter alia, but only to the twenty acres: and the averment of the continuance of the tail needs not, for the estate-tail is discontinued. Gawdy Justice was of opinion, that the per nomen should go as well to the inter alia, as to the two manors, and then all the ter-tenants are not named in the assise, and the same not to be pleaded, for it appears of the plaintiffs own shewing, and there needs no averment of the continuance of the tail for the cause aforesaid. Clench Justice, The per nomen doth refer to all, which see by the fine, which shews that other lands passed by the fine, than the said two manors. And as to the second point he said, there needed no averment. Gawdy, As to the first error, the same cannot be saved by any way, but to say, that the conusor was not seised of any other lands than the said two manors, and then the fine doth not extend unto it, and then no rent is granted out of it. Fenner, In the Common Pleas, in the great case of fines, it was holden, that in pleading of a fine, it needs not to say, that the conusor was seised, for if the conusor or conusee were seised, it is sufficient: for such pleading is contrary in it self; for a fine, sur conusance de droit come ceo, &c. doth suppose a precedent gift: it was also objected, that here is a confusion in this fine, for the rent is rendred to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the wife, and the land is rendred to the husband and wife for their lives, the remainder to Francis in tail, the remainder to the wife and her heirs: and these matters cannot stand together in a fine, but the one will confound the other: but as to that, it was said, that the law shall marshall these two renders, so as they both shall stand; and it is not like unto a rent-service, for a rent-service issueth out of the whole estate: and therefore if a remainder upon an estate for life escheats, the seigniory is gone even during the life of the tenant for life; which see, 3 H. 6. 1. contrary of a rent-charge: for if the grantee of a rent in fee purchaseth the remainder of the land out of which it is depending out of an estate for life, he shall have the rent during the life of the tenant for life. And of that opinion were all the three justices, for the conusors took by several acts, and the estate is charged, for it cometh under the grant. Fenner Justice, There is a difference betwixt a rent service and a rent-charge, or common, for that shall charge only the possession, but a rent-charge shall charge the whole estate: and therefore if he who hath a rent-service releaseth to him in the remainder upon an estate-tail, or for life, the rent is extinct; which Gawdy denied: and this case was put, the disseisee doth release to the lessee for years of his disseisor, nihil operatur; but if the disseisor and disseisee joyn in a release to such lessee, the same is good, for first it shall enure as the release of the disseisor, and then of the disseisee, &c.

Debt.

In debt upon a bond, the defendant pleaded, that the condition was, that whereas John Hallywel had put himself to be an apprentice to the plaintiff, if the defendant John Hallywel during his apprenticeship, or any other for him, by his consent or agreement take, or riotously spend any of the goods of his said master the plaintiff: if then the defendant within one month after notice thereof given to him, do pay and satisfie the plaintiff for all such sums of monies, wares, &c. so taken or riotously spent by the defendant, or by any other by his procurement or consent, the same being sufficiently proved; that then, &c. the defendant by protestation; quod nec ipse, nor any other by his procurement or consent had taken, or riotously spent the goods of the plaintiff: for plea saith, that the plaintiff before the writ brought had not sufficiently proved, that the said John Hallywel took, or riotously spent any of the plaintiffs goods: upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. It was argued by whole Court, that Richard Hart being seised with seven others, unto the use of himself and his heirs, might well devise all the use, although his use was in part suspended, because he was joyntly seised with seven others to his own use, and so the use for the eighth part suspended, for when this devise is to take effect, i.e. at the time of his death, all the possession of the land by the survivor passeth from the use, and then the use being withdrawn from the possession shall well pass. And by Wray, A use suspended may be devised: as if feoffees to use before the statute of 27 H. 8. be disseised, by which disseisin the use is suspended, and afterwards during the disseisin, cestuy que use, by his will deviseth, that his feoffees shall re-enter, and then make an estate to I. S. in fee, the same is a good devise, for by that disseisin the trust and confidence reposed by cestuy que use in the feoffees, is not suspended: secondly, it was holden that here a use implied was limited to Joan the wife of William, although there be not any express devise of it, according to the book of 13 H. 7. 17. Thirdly, when a use is limited to the heir of the body of William and Joan lawfully begotten for life, and afterwards to the heir of the body of the same heir for life, &c. Geofry Justice was of opinion, that here is in effect an estate tail, for the estates limited are directed to go in course of an estate tail; for he wills, that every heir of the body of his son shall have the land, and the special words shall not make another estate to pass, but that which the law wills: as if lands be given to one for life, the remainder after his death to the heirs of his body lawfully begotten, notwithstanding that the words of the limitation imply two several estates, yet because the law so wills, it is but one estate. Gawdy Justice said, that every issue begotten betwixt William and Joan should have an estate for life successive, and a remainder in tail expectant as right heir of the body of William, and this estate tail shall not be executed in possession by reason of the mesne remainder for life limited to the heir of the body of William and Joan, and although that these mesne remainders are but upon a contingent, and not in esse, yet such regard shall be had to them, that [258] they shall hinder the execution of the estates for life, and in tail in possession: as if an estate be made to A. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of B. in tail, the remainder in fee to A. although the estate tail be in abeyance, and not in esse during the life of B. yet in respect thereof the free-hold and fee shall not be conjoyned. Southcote Justice, to the same purpose: and he put a case lately adjudged betwixt Vaughan and Alcock: land was devised to two men, and if any of them dieth, his heir shall inherit, these devisees are tenants in common, because in by devise, but contrary if it were by way of grant: lands are devised to A. and B. to be betwixt them divided, they are tenants in common. Wray, William and Thomas have but for life, for they are purchasors by the name (heir) in the singular number, but when he goes further, and says, for want of such issue to the heirs of the body of William, in the plural number, now Will. hath an inheritance: and if a devise be made to one for life, and then to his heir for life, and so from heir to heir in perpetuum for life, here are two estates for life, and the other devisees have fee, for estates for life cannot be limited by general words from heir to heir, but by special words they may: and here, Thomas being next heir of the body of William and Joan, hath an estate for life, and also being heir of the body of the said William, hath a remainder in tail to him limited, & the mesn remaineth limited to others, i.e. to the next heir of the body of Thomas being in abeyance, because limited by the name heir, his father being alive, shall not hinder the execution of these estates, but they shall remain in force according to the rules of the common law: then Thomas so being seised levyeth a fine against the provision of the will, by which Thomas hath forfeited his estate for life, and so his next heir shall have the land during his life: and a great reason wherefore the heirs, ut supra, after the two first limitations shall have tail, is, because that if every heir should have but for life, they should never have any interest in the lands by these limitations, for by the express words of the devise, none shall take but the heir of the first heir for ever, i.e. when Thomas aliens, by which the use vests in Francis, and when afterwards Francis levieth a fine, then the use vests in Percival Hart, being next heir of the said Francis at the time of the fine levyed (notwithstanding that afterwards Francis had a son which is his next heir) and therefore the use in Percival by the birth of the said son in Francis shall not be devested, because it was a thing vested in him before by purchase, 9 H. 7. 25. A. enfeoffs B. upon condition on the part of A. to be performed, and dyeth, having issue a daughter, the daughter performs the condition, and afterwards a son is born, the daughter shall hold the lands against the son : so 5 E. 4. 6. A woman hath issue a daughter, and afterwards consents to a ravisher, the daughter enters, and afterwards a son is born, yet the daughter shall hold the lands for ever, i.e. And Geofries Justice said, Francis being in by force of the forfeiture, shall not be subject to the limitation of the will, i.e., to any forfeiture if he alien, for the estate which Francis hath for his life is but an estate gained by the offence of his father, and the use was limited to him upon the will of Richard, and then the said estate is not subject to the proviso of the will, and then hath not Francis committed any forfeiture : and admit Francis shall forfeit, yet Percival shall get nothing thereby, but the estate which Francis had at the time of the fine levied, scil. the free-hold only, for no estate of inheritance was in him living his father. As to the regress of the feoffees, Geofries was of opinion, that where an use is limited to a person certain, and thereupon vested in the person to whom it is limited, that the entry of the feoffees in such case is not requisite, notwithstanding that the first estates be discontinued, but where the use (as in our case) is not limited to a person certain in esse, but is in abeyance, not vested in any person upon the limitation of it, some estate ought to be left in the feoffees to maintain that use, and to render it according to the limi-[259]-tation, and in our case, these uses not in esse at the time of the making of the statute of 27 H. 8. could not be executed by the said statute, but now at the appointed time by the limitation shall be raised and revived by the entry of the feoffees, but here by the fine and non-claim, the feoffees are bound, and their entry taken away, and so no use can accrue to Percival Hart by such entry. Southcote Justice was of opinion, that the feoffees cannot enter at all, because that by the statute of 27 H. 8. nothing is left in them at the time of the making of the statute, which saves the right of every person, &c. other than the feoffees, so as no right is saved to them but all is drawn out of them by the operation of the statute, and the second saving of the statute, saves to the feoffees all their former right, so as the right which the feoffees had by the feoffment to the use is utterly gone. But Percival Hart may well enter, for he is not bound to the five years after the fine levied, for he had not right at the time of the fine levied, but his right came by the fine. Wray Chief Justice, The feoffees are not to enter, for the statute of 27 H. 8. hath two branches, 1. gives the possession to cestuy que use in such manner as he hath in the use, 2. takes away all the right out of the feoffees, and gives it to cestuy que use, so as nothing at all remains in the feoffees ; for if an Act of Parliament will give to me all the lands, whereof my brother Southcote is seised, and that I shall be in the seisin thereof, now is the actual possession in me without my entry : so where an use is often executed by the statute, cestuy que use without any entry hath an actual possession. i. As to the uses contingent, nothing remains in the feoffees for the setling of them when they happen, but the whole estate is setled in cestuy que use, yet subject to such use, and he shall render the same upon contingency : and if any estate should remain in the feoffees, it could be but an estate for life, for the fee simple is executed in cestuy que use, with an estate in possession, and then the feoffees should be seised to another use than was given them by the livery. Also if a feoffment be made unto the use of the feoffor, and his heirs, until J. S. hath paid unto the feoffor 100l. from thenceforth the feoffor and his heirs shall be seised to the use of the said J. S. and his heirs, if upon such feoffment any thing should remain in the feoffees before the payment by I. S. the same should be a fee-simple, and then there should be two fee-simples of one and the same lands, one in the feoffor, and the other in the feoffees, which should be absurd, and therefore the best way to avoid such inconveniences is to continue the statute, that it draws the whole estate of the land, and also the confidence out of the feoffees, and reposeth it upon the lands, the which by the operation of the statute, shall render the use to every person in his time according to the limitation of the parties : and also if any interest doth remain in the feoffees, then if they convey to any person upon consideration who hath not notice of the use, then the said use shall never rise, which is utterly against the meaning of the said statute, and the meaning of the parties, and therefore, to construe the statute, to leave nothing in the feoffees will prevent all such mischief : and if a feoffment in fee be made to the use of the feoffor for life, and afterwards to the use of his wife which shall be for life, and afterwards to the use of the right heirs of the feoffor; the feoffor enfeoffeth a stranger, taketh a wife, now cannot the feoffees enter during the life of the feoffor, and after his death they cannot enter, because they could not enter when the use to the wife was to begin upon the intermarriage, and then if the entry of the feoffees in such case should be requisite, the use limited to the wife by the act of the feoffor should be destroyed against his own limitation, which is strong against the meaning of the act aforesaid, for by the said act, the land is credited with the said use, which shall never fail in the performance of it. And such contingent estates in remainder may be limit-[260]-ed in possession, a fortiori in use, which see 4 E. 6. Colthirsts case, 23. And Plesingtons case, 6 R. 2. And it is true, at the common law, the entry of the feoffees was requisite, because the wrong was done unto them by reason of the possession which they then had; but now by the statute, all is drawn out of them, and then there is no reason that they medle with the lands wherein they have now nothing to do, and the scope of the statute is, utterly to disable the feoffees to do any thing in prejudice of the uses limited, so as the feoffees are not to any purpose but as a pipe to convey the lands to others; so as they cannot by their release or confirmation, &c. bind the uses which are to grow and arise by the limitation knit unto the feoffment made unto them, which see Br. 30. 30 H. 8. Feoffments to uses 50. A. covenants with B. that when A. shall be enfeoffed by B. of three acres of land in D. that then the said A. and his heirs shall be seised of land of the said A. in S. to the use of B. and his heirs, and afterwards A. enfeoffeth a stranger of his lands in S. and afterwards B. enfeoffeth A. of his lands in D. now the feoffee of A. shall be seised to the use of B. notwithstanding that the said feoffee had not notice of the use, for land is bound with the use in whose hands soever it come: and see the like case, ibid. i. Ma. 59. Upon the reason of which cases many assurances have been made, for it is the common manner of mortgage, i.e. if the mortgagor pay such a sum, &c. that then the mortgagee and his heirs shall be seised after such payment, to the use of the mortgagor and his heirs; in that case although that the mortgagee alien, yet upon the payment, the use shall rise well enough out of the possession of the alienee, and the lands shall be in the mortgagor without any entry: for the mortgagee could not enter against his own alienation, to revive the use which is to rise upon the payment, and therefore without any assistance of such entry, it shall arise: as at the common law, land is given to A. in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of B. A. levies a fine, makes a feoffment, suffers a recovery, &c. although the same shall bind the issues, yet if B. dyeth, and afterwards A. dyeth without issue, now notwithstanding this fine, &c. the right heir of B. may enter: and always a use shall spring out of the land at his due opportunity, and it is a collateral charge which binds the lands by the first liberty, and cannot be discharged, vi. 49. Ass. 8 & 49 E. 3. 16. Isabell Goodcheapes case: A man deviseth, that his executors shall sell his lands, and afterwards dyeth without heir, so as the land escheats to the King, yet the authority given to the executors shall bind the lands in whose hands soever it comes, &c. And so a title of entry continues notwithstanding twenty alienations: but an use is a less thing than a title of entry, especially an use in contingency, and an use as long as it is in contingency cannot be forfeited: as if the mortgagor be attainted and pardoned mean betwixt the mortgage and the day of redemption, &c. Then when Thomas levies a fine, Francis may well enter; and Thomas before the fine had an estate tail executed to his free-hold, and therefore by the fine he gave an estate of inheritance to the conusee, and then no right of entail remained in Francis, but he took an estate for life only, and that as a purchasor by the limitation of the will, and then when Francis levied a fine, his estate was gone (which was but for life) and then the right of the entail, and all the other estates which are especially limited are also gone, and so Percival Hart, to whom no estate was specially limited hath not any cause to enter, &c. And it was further said by Wray: Husbands and wife tenants in special tail, the husband levies a fine with proclamations and dieth, the wife enters, the issue in tail is barred, but if the wife enter after the death of her husband, and before the proclamations pass, the issue is not bound by the fine: and if tenant in tail granteth totum statum, and after levieth a fine thereof with proclamations, come ceo, &c. The issue is barred; contrary where the fine is upon a release, &c.

CCCXLVI. HENNINGHAM AND WINDHAMS CASE.

Error. Error and Attaint, by him to whom the Land is to descend.

Arthur Henningham brought a writ of error against Francis Windham upon a common recovery had against Henry his brother, and the case was, that land was given in special tail to Thomas Henningham, father of the said Henry and the said Arthur, the remainder in general tail (the estate tail in possession was to him and the heirs males of his body) Thomas had issue the said Henry and three daughters by one woman, and the said Arthur and two other sons by another woman, and dyed seised. Henry entred, and made a feoffment, a common recovery is had against the feoffee, in which Henry is vouched, who vouched over the common vouchee according to the usual course of common recoveries. Henry dyed without issue, and Arthur brought a writ of error being but of the half blood to Henry : and it was resolved by the whole Court, that error and attaint always descends to such person to whom the land should descend : if such recovery, or false oath had not been ; as if lands be given to one and the heirs females of his body, &c. and suffers an erronious recovery and dyeth, the heir female shall have the writ of error : so upon recovery of lands in borough English, for such action descends according to the land, quod fuit concessum per totam curiam : but it was objected on the defendants part : that because that the feoffee being tenant to the præcipe is to recover in value a fee-simple, and so Henry is to yield a fee-simple which should descend to the heir at the common law if this recovery had not been, therefore he to whom the same should descend, should have the writ of error, for he hath the loss : but the said exception was not allowed : and it was said, that tenant in tail upon such a recovery, shall recover but an estate in tail, scil. such estate which he had at the time of the warranty made, &c. And afterwards judgment was given that the action was maintainable : so if a man hath lands of the part of his mother, and loseth it by erronious judgment and dyeth ; that the heir of the part of the mother shall have the writ of error.

CCCXLVII. FOSTER AND PITFALLS CASE.

In ejectione firmæ the case was : Brook devised lands to his wife in general tail, the remainder over to a stranger in fee, and dyed, she took another husband, and had issue a daughter : the husband and wife levied a fine to a stranger : the daughter as next heir by 11 H. 7. entred : it was agreed by the whole Court, that an estate devised to the wife, is within the words, but not within the meaning of the statute : secondly, it was resolved, that no estate is within the meaning of the statute, unless it be for the joynture of the wife : thirdly resolved, that the meaning of the statute was, that the wife so preferred by the husband should not prejudice the issues or heirs of her husband ; and here nothing is left in the issues or heirs of the husband, so as the wife could not prejudice them, for the remainder is limited over.

CCCLXVIII. GREENES CASE.

Acceptance of Rent. Entry.

Greene made a lease for years rendring rent with clause of re-entry, and the rent due at the Feast of the Annunciation was behind being demanded at the day, which rent the lessor afterwards accepted, and afterwards entred for the condition broken, and his entry holden lawful, for the rent was due before the condition broken; but if the lessor accepts the next quarters rent, then he hath lost the benefit of re-entry, for thereby he admits the lessee to be his tenant. And if the lessor distrain for rent due at the said Feast of the Annunciation after the forfeiture, he cannot afterwards re-enter for the said forfeiture, for by his distress he hath affirmed the possession of the lessee: so if he make an aquittance for the rent as a rent, contrary, if the acquittance be but for a sum of mony, and not expressly for the rent, all which tota curia concessit.

The case was, lessee for life, the remainder for life, the remainder in tail, the remainder in fee: the two tenants for life make a feoffment in fee. Dyer, A woman tenant for life in joynture, the remainder for life, the remainder in fee; the tenants for life joyn in a feoffment, the entry of him in the remainder in fee is lawful by 11 H. 7. And if tenant for life be impleaded, and he in the remainder for life will not pray to be received, he in the last remainder may; and so in our case, inasmuch as he in the remainder for life was party to the wrong, he in the remainder in tail shall enter: which Harper and Munson granted, i.e. Manwood, Although that this feoffment be not a disseisin to him in the remainder in tail, yet it is a wrong in a high degree; as by Littleton, a disseisor leaseth for life to A. who aliens in fee, the disseisee releaseth to the alienee; it is a good release, and the disseisor shall not enter although the alienation was to his disinheritance, Lit 111. which Dyer granted: and if tenant for life alieneth in fee, and the alienee enfeoffeth his father, and dieth, the same descent shall not avail him no more than in case of disseisin. It hath been objected, that this is the livery of the first tenant for life, and the confirmation of him in the remainder for life. Dyer was of opinion, that by this livery the remainder for life passeth, and this livery shall be as well the livery of him in the remainder as of the tenant in possession; and although where an estate is made lawfully by many, it shall be said the livery of him only who lawfully may make livery: yet where an estate is wrongfully made it shall be accounted in law, the livery of all who joyn in it. And in this, the remainder for life is extinguished by the livery in the feoffee, and the livery of him in the remainder for life shall be holden a void livery, especially when he joyns with such a person who hath not authority to make livery; as if the lord and a stranger disseise the tenant, and make a feoffment over, the whole seigniory is extinct, as if he solely had been seised: so if he in the reversion, and a stranger disseise for life, and make a feoffment over, the seigniory is gone, and yet it is the livery of the lessee only. And although it be but the confirmation of him in the remainder for life, yet thereby the remainder is gone and extinct. And afterwards judgment was given, that the entry of him in the remainder in tail was lawful: and it was said by the L. Dyer, that if tenant for life be, the remainder for life, the remainder in fee, [263] tenant for life in possession alieneth in fee, that he in the remainder in fee cannot enter, for it was not to his disinherisin.

The case was, that a capies ad satisfaciend. was delivered to the sheriff, and after the sheriff did arrest the party against whom the capias issued, by force of a capias utlagatum, and then the party in the capias came to the sheriff, and prayed that the party remain in execution for his debt also, and notwithstanding that the sheriff let the prisoner go at large, and upon both writs returned, non est inventus. It was the opinion of all the justices, that the sheriff was not bound in point of escape to detain the prisoner for the debt of the plaintiff; and it is not like where one is in the Fleet in execution, there (if other condemnations in other Courts be notified to the warden of the Fleet) he shall be chargeable with them all. It was holden also, per curiam, that if the body had been returned by capias utlagatum, that the Court at the prayer of the party would grant that the prisoner might remain in execution for the debt as in case of a capias pro fine.

And it was said by Manwood, In a writ of account the defendant is awarded to account; if the defendant account, and be found in arrearages and dieth, the writ shall not abate, but judgment shall be given that the plaintiff shall recover, and the executor shall be charged with the arrearages, and yet account doth not lye against them.

Bracebridges Case.

The case was, Thomas Bracebridge seised of a manor in fee, leased a messuage, parcel of it to one Curtes for 21 years, and afterwards 35 H. 8. leased the same to one Moore for 26 years, to begin after the expiration of the former lease; and afterwards 5 E. 6. he enfeoffed Griffith and others to the use of the feoffees themselves, and their heirs, upon condition, that if the feoffees did not pay to the said Thomas Bracebridge 2000l. within 15 days after, that then immediately after the said 15 days, the feoffees should stand seised of the said manor [265] to the use of the said Thomas Bracebridge, and Joyce his wife, for their lives, without impeachment of wast, and afterwards to the use of T. B. their second son in tail, with divers remainders over, the feoffees do not pay the said mony within the said 15 days, afterwards Curties attorns to the feoffees. It was moved, if the reversion of the lands passed to Curties, passeth by the feoffment of the manor without attornment, which see Littleton 133, 134. 2. If by the attornment of Curties, after the 15 days the uses can rise to Bracebridge and his wife, &c. and it was said, that the case 20 H. 6. Avowry 11, 12. If a manor be granted for life, the remainder over in fee; tenant for life dieth, if the tenants attorn to him in the remainder, the same is good; and if a reversion be granted to two, and one of them dieth, attornment to the survivor is good; and if a reversion be granted to husband and wife in special tail, the wife dieth afterwards without issue, attornment to the husband is good; and if a reversion be given in frank-marriage, and afterwards the husband and wife are divorced, and afterwards the particular tenant attorns to the wife, the same is good; and by Manwood, If a man seised of a manor, the demesns of which extends into two counties, and hath issue a son and a daughter by one woman, and a son by another woman, and dieth, the eldest son enters into the demesns in one county only, and takes the profit in one county only, and dieth without issue, the daughter shall have and inherit the demesns or services whereof her brother was seised, and the son of the half-blood the rest: and by Manwood, The attornment of Curties, who was the first lessee, shall bind Moore the second lessee, for he ought to attorn, against whom lieth the quid juris clamat: and if a lease for years be made of a manor, and the reversion of it be granted to another in fee, if the lessee for years attorneth it shall bind the tenants of the manor, 18 E. 2. A man seised of a manor in the right of his wife, leased parcel of it for years without his wife, the reversion thereof is not parcel of the manor; contrary if the lease had been made by husband and wife. And by Dyer, If tenant in tail of a manor leaseth parcel for years, and afterwards makes a feoffment of the whole manor, and makes livery in the demesns not leased, the reversion of the land leased doth not pass; for by the feoffment a wrong is done to the lessor, which the law shall not further enlarge than appeareth by the deed; contrary in case of tenant in fee of a manor, and that without deed with attornment. And it was the case of one Kellet, 25 H. 8. Kellet was cestuy que use before the statute of 27 H. 8. of divers lands by several conveyances, the use of some being raised upon recovery, of some upon fine, and of some upon feoffment, and he made a feoffment of all these lands by deed, with a letter of attorney to make livery; the attorney entred into part of the land, and made livery in the name of the whole, and it was agreed by all the justices, that the lands passed, notwithstanding in others possession, i.e. other feoffees: and by Dyer, If the tenants of a manor pay their rents to the disseisor, they may refuse again to pay them; and if a lease be made for years, the remainder for life, if the lessor will grant over his reversion, the lessee for years shall attorn, and his attornment shall bind him in the remainder for life; and if a lease be made to one for years, the remainder over for life, the remainder to the lessee for years in fee. Now if the lessee for years grant all his interest, &c. there needs no attornment: and if grantee of a rent in fee leaseth for life, and afterwards grants the reversion to another, the attornment of the ter-tenant is not requisite, but only of the grantee for life. It was also holden, that this attornment by Curties two years after the livery was sufficient, for it shall have relation to the livery to make it parcel of the manor, but not to punish the lessee for waste done mean between the livery and [266] the attornment, but betwixt the feoffor and the feoffee it shall pass ab initio. It was holden also, that although the uses for it limited are determined by the default of payment within the 15 days, yet the feoffees shall take the reversion by this attornment to the second uses; and if I enfeoff one upon condition to enfeoff J. S. who refuseth, now the feoffee shall be seised to my use; but if the condition were to give in tail, contrary: so here is a limitation beyond the first use, which shall not be defeated for want of attornment to the first uses; and here it was not the meaning of Bracebridge to have the lands again upon breach of the condition in his former estate, but according to the second use; and judgment was given in the principal case according to the resolutions of the Judges, as aforesaid. And it was said by Harper Justice, that if a feoffment in fee be made to J. S. upon condition that he shall grant to A. a rent-charge, who refuseth it, J. S. shall be seised to his own use.

Seisin.

The case was this, lord and tenant by service to pay every year such a quantity of salt; but since 10 H. 7. the tenant hath always paid the money for salt. The question was, if the lord might resort to the first service, and if the money be seisin of the salt. And Manwood took this difference, i.e. where the lord takes a certain sum of money for the salt, the same is not any seisin, for the service is altered, as at the first, socage tenure was a work done by labor, i.e. plowing; but now it is changed into certain rent, and the lord cannot resort to have his plowing; and in Kent divers tenants in ancient time have paid barley for their rent, but the same afterward was paid in a certain sum of money, so as now the Lord of Canterbury, who is lord of such tenements cannot now demand his barly, &c. but if the sum which hath been used to be paid be incertain one year so much, according to the price of salt, then such a payment of money is a sufficient seisin of the salt. Accompt by the Heir of a Copyholder. Custom.

In accompt, brought by an heir copyholder, for the profits of his copyhold lands taken during his nonage, the defendant pleaded, that by the custom of the said manor, the lord of the manor might assign one to take the profits of a copyhold descended to an infant, during his nonage to the use of the assignee, without rendring an accompt, and the same was holden to be a good custom, as a rent granted to one and his heirs, to cease during the nonage of every heir; but admitting that the custom were void, yet this action doth not lye, for the defendant hath not entred and taken the profits, as prochein amy, in which case although he was not prochein amy, &c. he is chargeable, as prochein amy according to his claim; but here he claimeth by the custom and grant of the lord, and not in the right of the heir; and therefore it was adjudged in this time of this quære, that if one entreth into lands claiming by devise, where in truth the land devised is entailed, he should not be charged in accompt, &c.

Exposition of the Statute of 32 and 34 of Wills.

Note, it was holden by the whole Court, that the Statute of 32 & 34 H. 8. of Wills, did not extend to lands in London, but that the devise of the whole is good: and if houses in London, parcel of the possessions of abbies came to the Crown by dissolution, and he grants them over to hold in chief by knights service, these lands are devisable: but it was holden, that the said statutes as acts executed, extended to lands in London, and shall be good but for two parts: and if a man hath lands in tail, and in fee-simple, which are of double the value of the lands in tail, and deviseth all his lands, all the land in fee-simple shall pass. Dyer, One seised of three manors, the one in capite in fee, and two in socage in tail, and deviseth all his land in capite, it is good against the King for all capite land, and he shall be tied to have the lands in socage, but it shall not bind the heir: and a devise of the third part (where all is devised) is void as well against the heir as against the King. And he said, that if a man be seised of twenty acres in socage, and ten acres in capite, and deviseth two parts of his lands, it is reasonable to say, that all the socage lands shall pass; but if the devise was of two parts of all his lands, it is otherwise, for this word (all) implies, that the two parts shall be per my & per tout, as well capite as socage, i.e. it was argued by Fenner, that the lands in London are now devisable as they were before the statute, for if the devisee of lands in London be disturbed, he shall have ex gravi querela, otherwise it is of lands at the common law: and if an assize of mortdancester be brought of lands in London, it is a good plea to say, that the lands are devisable: but in an assise of mortdancestor of lands at the common law, it is not any plea: and if a man gives lands at the common law, i.e. not devisable by the common law, he cannot devise the reversion, for the statute shall not do wrong to the person, i.e. to the donee, who there shall lose his acquittal: but of lands devisable by custom, it is otherwise; and if land in a burrough was devisable for life by the custom, and afterwards came the statute of 32 H. 8. which made all lands devisable, now that land is devisable for life by the custom, and the reversion by the statute.

Wast. View.

In an action of wast, of wast assigned in a wood, the jury viewed the wood only without entring into it: and it was holden that the same was sufficient, for otherwise it should be tedious for the jury to have had the view of every stub of a tree which had been felled. Yet Meade Justice said, that if wast be assigned in several corners of the wood, then the jury is to have the view of every corner; but contrary where wast is assigned in the whole wood; and if wast be assigned in every room of a house, the view of the house generally is sufficient. And Dyer Justice said, that if wast be assigned in several places, and of some of them the jury had not the view, of that they may find no wast done.

CCCLXII. FERRAND AND RAMSEYS CASE.

Rents. Reversion. Feoffments upon Condition. Regula.

In an ejectione firmæ brought of a house in London, the defendant pleaded, that long before the lessor of the plaintiff had anything, &c. one Ann Ramsey was seised in fee, and died seised, and that the same descended to William Ramsey as son and heir to the said Ann, who was disseised by Israel Owen, who leased to the plaintiff, upon whom the said William Ramsey did re-enter: the plaintiff replicando, that the said Ann did not die seised, said, that before the ejectment one Robert Owen was seised, and died seised, and from him descended the said house to Israel Owen as son and heir of the said Robert, absque hoc, that the said Israel did disseise the said Ann, upon which they were at issue, and at nisi prius in London, it was given in evidence of the defendants part: that Crofton and Langhton were seised in fee of the said messuage, and by deed indented conveyed it to one John Ramsey, Robert Dakins, and four others and their heirs, upon condition that the said feoffees, their heirs or assigns should pay to the said Ann and her heirs, six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence: and also should enfeoff the said Ann, if to the same they were required by the said Ann in her life, or within four days next following such request in fee unto the use of the said Ann and her heirs, cum & quando ad hoc per eandem Annam requisit, fuerint, and if the said Ann died before such request, that then the said

feoffees or their heirs should enfeoff such issues of the said Ann, or such other persons which the said Ann should name, cum & quando ad hoc per eandem Annam requisit. fuerint, or within four days after such request, the said feoffees or their heirs should be seised of the said house, to the use of the said Ann and her heirs. Afterwards the seventh of April, 16 Eliz. Ann demanded of William Ramsey, son and heir of John Ramsey, six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence, being due to the said Ann, ut supra, the which sum the said William Ramsey did refuse to pay, by force of which, and by the statute of 27 H. 8. the said Ann Ramsey was thereof seised, and died seised, and from her descended the said house [269] to William Ramsey. The plaintiff confessed the feoffment to Crofton and Langhton, to John Ramsey and others, and shewed further, that the said Ann required the surviving feoffees to enfeoff one Robert Owen of the said house, who three days after made the feoffment accordingly, Robert Owen enfeoffed John Owen, who died thereof seised, and from him the said house descended to Israel Owen. Crafton died, Langhton having issue two daughters died; all the feoffees but one died, Ann the time aforesaid demanded the said six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence of the said William Ramsey in another house in London, due at the Feast of St. Michael last before, who denied to pay it; the second daughter of Langhton entred, and thereof enfeoffed the said Israel Owen, who leased the same to the plaintiff, and upon that evidence the defendant did demur in law: and first it was resolved by the whole Court, that the said sum to be paid to the said Ann was not a rent, but a sum in gross, because reserved to a stranger, &c. which see Lit. 79. And by Munson Justice, If the words of the reservation had been twenty nobles rent, yet it had been but a sum in gross, but otherwise it had been by devise. Also there is not any condition for the payment of it, but only a limitation, for the word subsequent which limits the future use, takes away all the force of the words of the condition, as 27 H. 8. 24. Land given in tail upon condition that the donee and his heirs shall carry the standard of the donor when he goes to battel; and if he fail thereof, then the same to remain to a stranger, the limiting of the remainder hath taken away the condition, and hath controlled it, and now the condition is become a limitation; but where the words subsequent are against law, as if upon failer, that then it shall be lawful for a stranger to enter, &c. these words because they are against law (for a rent cannot be reserved to a stranger, &c.) do not destroy the condition, by Mead, contrary by Munson, for the condition is utterly gone. And by Mead, Feoffment in fee upon condition, that if the feoffor shall do such a thing that he shall re-enter and retain the land to the use of a stranger, the use is void, and the feoffor shall hold the land to his own use. A feoffment in fee upon condition, that the feoffee shall marry my daughter, and if he refuse to marry her, that then he shall be seised to the use of I. S. the same is not a condition, but a limitation; and in all cases afterwards of a condition, where an interest is limited to a stranger, there it is not a condition, but a limitation. And Mead said, that the said annual sum is not demandable, but the party ought to pay it at his peril, Lit. 80. But by Munson, It ought to be demanded, for so this word (refuse) doth imply: and when at the request of Ann the feoffment is made, by Munson, Mead, and Windham, the rent is gone; but Dyer contrary, unless the feoffment be made to Ann herself: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff, Hil. 19 Eliz. Rot. 748. There was a case betwixt Shaw and Norton. One Green devised his lands to A. and devised also, the said A. should pay a rent to B. and that B. might distrain for it; and if A. fail of the payment of it, that the heirs of the devisor might enter, the same is a good distress, and a good condition. And by Munson, Demand ought to be made of the rent, for the words are (refuse) which cannot be without demand or request: and it was certified, that such a clerk refused to pay his tenths, and because it was expressly set down in the certificate, that he was requested, &c. for that cause he was discharged. And it was also holden, that if request be necessary, that in this case request is to be made, that it ought to be made to the surviving feoffee, or his heir, and not to the heirs of any of the feoffees who are dead.

CCCLXIII. LACYES CASE.

Indictments. Commission repealed.

Lacy was indicted of the death of a man upon Scarborough Sands, in the county of York, between the high water-mark, and the low water-mark, and the same indictment was removed into the Kings Bench, and being arraigned upon it, he shewed, that the said indictment was sued by vertue of a commission which issued the first day of May, directed to the Justices of Assize, and other justices of peace in the said county, to enquire of all murders, felonies, &c. and pleaded further, that the second day of May aforesaid, issued another commission directed to the Lord Admiral and others upon the statute of 28 H. 8. cap. 15. by force of which the said Lacy was indicted of the same murder, whereof he was now arraigned, and the said last commission was, ad inquirendum, tam super altum mare, quam super littus maris, & ubicunque locorum infra jurisdictionem nostram maritimam: and that the said indictment taken before the Admiral, was taken before this, upon which he was arraigned, and upon the whole matter prayed to be dismissed: and the opinion of all the justices was, that the first commission was repealed by the second, and so the indictment upon which he was arraigned, taken, coram non judice, 10 E. 4. 7. If a commission for the peace issueth into one county, and afterwards another commission issueth to a town within the same county and parcel of it, the first commission is repealed, which Gawdy granted, if notice be given, &c. but Wray denied it; but the whole Court, by this last commission to the Lord Admiral, the first commission, as to the jurisdiction in locis maritimis is determined and repealed; for these two commissions, are in respect of two several authorities; the first commission meerly by the common law, the other by the statute aforesaid, and thereupon the party was discharged against the Queen, as to that indictment. Note, that in the argument of this case, it was said by Coke, and agreed by Wray, that if a man be struck upon the high-sea, whereof he dieth in another county afterwards, that this murder is dispunishable, notwithstanding the statute of 2 Ed. 6.

CCCLXIV. THE QUEEN AND BRAYBROOKS CASE.

The Queen brought a writ of error against Braybrook, the case was this, That King Ed. 4. was seised of the manor of Marston, and gave the same to Lionel Lord Norris, and A. M. and the heirs of the body of the lord, the remainder to H. Norris in tail, L. and A. entermarry, L. suffered a common recovery against himself only, without naming the said A. Hen. Norris is attainted of high treason by Act of Parliament, and by the same Act all his lands, tenements, hereditaments, rights, conditions, &c. the day of the treason committed, or ever after, &c. Hen. Norris is executed, Lionel dieth without issue, the Queen falsified the said recovery for one moiety by scire facias, because Anne who was joint-tenant with Lionel was not named party to the said recovery: and afterwards the Queen granted to the Lord Norris, son of the said Hen. Norris, manerium suum de Merston, & omnia jura in eodem, and now upon the said recovery, the Queen brought a writ of error, and it was argued by Egerton the Queens sollicitor, that this right to a writ of error is such a right as is transferred to the Queen by the Act of Parliament, for the words are, omnia jura sua quæcunque, and here is a right, although not a present [271] right, yet a right although in futuro, so it is a right of some quality, as A. tenant in tail, the remainder in tail to B. A. makes a feoffment in fee, B. is attainted of high treason, and by such Act all his lands, &c. given to the King. A. dieth without issue, the Queen shall have a formedon in the remainder; and although the Queen hath granted to the Lord

Norris, manerium suum de Merston, & omnia jura in eodem, yet by such general words, a writ of error doth not pass, which see 32 H. 8. Br. Patents 98. And also this action rests in privity of record, and cannot be displaced from thence, but by Act of Parliament, see Br. Chose in Action 14. 33 H. 8. for when the King will grant a thing in action, he ought in his patent to recite all the circumstances of the matter, as the right, and how it became a right, and because the Queen here doth not make mention of this right, as of the entail, the recovery, and the attainder, for that cause the right doth not pass. The case betwixt Cromer and Cranmer, 8 Eliz. the disseisee was attainted of treason, the Queen granted to the heir of the disseisee all the right which came unto her by the attainder of his ancestor, nothing passed, causa qua supra: and always where the King grants any thing, which he cannot grant, but as King, that such a grant without special words, is to no purpose. Coke contrary, & he agreed the case put by Egerton, for at the time of the attainder, B. had a right of remainder; but in our case Hen. Norris had not any right, but a possibility of a right of action, i.e. a writ of error; and he said that this writ of error is not forfeitable (for it is an action which rests in privity) no more than a condition in gross, as a feoffment in fee is made upon condition of the party of the feoffor who is attainted ut supra: This word (right) in the Act of Attainder shall not transfer this condition to the Queen, and of the Act of Attainder to Hen. Norris, it is to be conceived that the makers of the Act did not intend, that by the word (right) every right of any manner, or quality whatsoever should pass to carry a condition to the Queen, and therefore we ought to conceive, that the makers of the Act did not intend to touch rights which rested in privity: and as to the grant of the Queen, to the Lord Norris of the mannor of Merston, et omnia jura sua in eodem, he conceived, that thereby the right of the writ of error did pass; for it is not like Cranmers case, but if in the said case, the land it self had been set down in the grant, it had been good enough, as that Cranmer being seised in fee of the manor of D. was thereof disseised, and so being disseised was attainted of high treason: now the Queen grants to his heirs totam jus suum in his manor of D., &c. and so in our case, the Queen hath granted to the Lord Norris, manerium suum de Merston & omnia jura sua in eodem, &c. at another day it was moved by Plowden, that this right of writ of error was not transferred to the Queen by the Act, but such right might be saved to a stranger, &c. the words of the Act are, omnia jura sua, and this word (sua) is pronomen possessionis, by which it is to be conceived, that no right should pass, but that which was a present right, as a right in possession, but this right to a writ of error, was not in Hen. Norris at the time of his attainder, but it was wholly in him against whom the erroneous judgment was had: and therefore if in a præcipe quod reddat, the tenant vouch and loseth, and judgment is given, and before execution, the tenant is attainted by Act of Parliament, by words ut supra, and afterwards he is pardoned, the demandant sueth for execution against the tenant, now notwithstanding this attainder, the tenant may sue execution against the vouchee, and afterwards Wray Chief Justice openly declared in Court, the opinion of himself and all his companions justices, and also of all the other justices to be, that by this Act of Parliament, by which all lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all rights of any manner and quality whatsoever Henry Norris had, the day of his attainder, or ever after, Lionel then being alive, and overliving the said Hen. Nor-[272]-ris, that this writ of error was not transferred to the Queen: and that the said Act by the words aforesaid could not convey to the King this possibility of right, for at the time of the attainder, the right of the writ of error was in Lyonel, and Hen. during the estate tail limited to Lyonell had not to do with the land, nor any matter concerning it: and judgment was given accordingly; and it was holden, that he in the reversion, or remainder upon an estate tail might have a writ of error by the common law, upon a rectory had against tenant in tail in reversion.

It was found by special verdict, that the place where, &c. was customary lands of the plaintiffs, holden of the defendant, and that the trees whereof, &c. were chery trees, de magnitudine sufficienti effendi maremium, and that the place where they growed, was neither orchard, nor garden: it was said by the Court, that by the custom the copyholder could not cut down such trees, but the lord might, and that the cutting down of such trees which were not wast, the copyholder might justifie without punishment: but because by the verdict it did not appear that the trees for which the action was brought were timber in facto, but only de magnitudine effendi maremium, the plaintiff had judgment.

Upon recovery in debt against the Lord Stafford, certain lands of the lord were extended by elegit; the Queen because the Lord Stafford was endebted unto her, by prerogative ousted the tenant by elegit: Fleetwood Serjeant moved the Court in the behalf of him who recovered, and surmised to the Court that the Queen was satisfied, and therefore prayed a re-extent; but the Court would not grant it, because they were not certain of the matter, but advised the party to sue a scire facias against the said Lord Stafford, to know and shew cause, why a re-extent should not issue forth, the Queen being satisfied, &c.

Egerton solicitor moved against the prohibition, because the libel is against Gibbs, rectorem ecclesiæ paroch. de Beddington, and the prohibition was, de Nether Beddington, and it was not averred that Beddington in the libel, and Nether Beddington, is unum & idem, and non diversa; it was said by the Court, that upon the matter there is not any prohibition against rectorem ecclesiæ de [273] Beddington only, and therefore said to the plaintiffs counsel, let the parson proceed in the Spiritual Court at his peril.

CCCLXVIII. RUSSELL AND HANDFORDS CASE.

Nusance. Words of Prescription. Seisin in Fact, and in Law.

Russell brought an action upon the case against Handford, and declared, quod cum quoddam molendinum ab entiquo fuit erectum, upon such a river, de quo, one Thomas

Russell whose heir the plaintiff is, was seised in his demesn as of fee, and died thereof seised, after whose death the same descended to the plaintiff, by force of which the plaintiff was seised in his demesn as of fee, and so seised, the defendant upon the same river had levyed a new mill, per quod cursus aquæ prædict. coarctatus est, and upon not guilty, it was found for the plaintiff: it was moved in arrest of judgment, that it is not layed in the declaration, that his mill had been a mill time out of mind, &c. And then if it be not an ancient mill time out of mind, &c. it was lawful for the defendant to erect a new mill; and it was said, that these words (ab antiquo) are not fit or significant words to set forth a prescription, but the words, a tempore cujus contrarii memoria hominum non existit, are the usual words for such a purpose: see the Book of Entries, 10, 11. See 11 H. 4, 200. If I have a mill and another levies another mill there, and the miller hinders the water to run to my mill, or doth any such nusance, an action lyeth without any prescription, as it seems by the book in 22 H. 6, 14. The plaintiff declared, that he was lord of such a town, and that he and all his predecessors, priors of N. lords of the same town, have had, within the same town, four mills time out of mind, &c. And that no other person had any mill in the said town, but the plaintiff and his predecessors, the said four mills, and that all the tenants of the plaintiff within the same town, and all other resiants there, &c. ought, and time out of mind, &c. had used to grind at the said mills of the plaintiff, and that the defendant, one of the tenants of the plaintiff, had erected and set up a horse mill within the said town, and there the resiants grinded, &c. And it was holden, that peradventure upon such matter an action lyeth, because the defendant being one of the tenants of the plaintiff is bound by the custom and prescription, so as he hath offended against the privity of the custom and prescription. And as to the case in question, it was the opinion of all the justices, that if the mill whereof the plaintiff hath declared, be not an ancient mill, that this action doth not lye upon the matter, eo quod cursus aquæ coarctatur; but yet at last, it was holden by the Court to be good enough, notwithstanding the exception. Another exception was taken to the declaration, because that here is set forth the seisin of the father of the plaintiff, and the descent to the plaintiff, by force of which he was seised in his demesn, &c. without shewing that after the death of the father that he entred into the said mill, &c. so as no seisin in fact is alleadged, but only a seisin in law, and if the plaintiff was not seised in fact, he cannot punish his personal wrong, but the exception was disallowed, for such a seisin in law is sufficient for the maintenance of this action. And afterwards the plaintiff had judgment to recover his damages. See for the action it self contained in the declaration. 8 Eliz. Dyer, 248.

CCCLXIX. CLEYPOOLS CASE.

Informations, upon the Statute of 5 Eliz. of Tillage.

Information in the Exchequer against Cleypool, upon the Statute of Tillage, 5 Eliz. setting forth, that the defendant hath converted three hundred acres of arable lands of tillage, to pasture, and the same conversion hath continued from 15 Eliz. unto the two and twentieth of Eliz.: the defendant as to the conversion pleaded not guilty, and as to the continuance, the general pardon by Parliament, 23 Eliz. upon which the Attorney-General did demur in law. It was argued, that that pardon did not extend to the continuance of the said conversion: and first the Barons were clear of opinion, that if A. be seised of arable lands, and converts the same to pasture, and so converted, leaseth it to B. who continues it in pasture as he found it, he shall be charged by that statute: and it is not any good construction, where the exception in the pardon is, excepting the converting of any land from tillage to pasture, made, done, committed, or permitted, that the conversion excepted out of the pardon shall be intended and construed the bare act of conversion, but the whole offence, i. the continuance and practice of it is understood: as if by general pardon all intrusions are excepted, now by that, the instant act of intrusion, i. the bare entry is not only excepted, but also the continuance of the intrusion, and the perception of the profits: and note, the words of the statute are (conversion permitted) and conversion continued is conversion permitted: and the said statute doth not punish the conversion, but also the continuance of the conversion, for the penalty is appointed for each year in which the conversion continues: and Egerton solicitor put this case, 11 H. 8. It was enacted by 3 H. 7, cap. 11, that upon recovery in debt, if the defendant in delay of execution sues a writ of error, and the judgment be affirmed, he shall pay damages, now the case was, that one in execution brought such a writ of error, and the first judgment is affirmed, he shall pay damages, and yet here is not any delay of the execution, for the defendant was in execution before, but here is an interruption of the execution, and the statute did intend the execution it self, i. the continuance in execution, ibidem moraturus quousque: it was said on the other side, that the conversion and continuance thereof are two several things, each by it self, and so the conversion only being excepted in the pardon, the continuance thereof remains in the grace of the pardon: and it appeareth by the statute of 2 and 3 Ph. & Ma. that conversion, and continuance are not the same, but alia, atque diversa, and distinct things in the consideration of the law; for there it is enacted, that if any person shall have any lands to be holden in tillage according to the said statute, but converted to pasture by any other person, the commissioners, &c. have authority by the said statute to enjoyn such persons to convert such lands to tillage again, &c. And in all cases in the law, there is a great difference betwixt the beginning of a wrong, and the continuance of it: as if the father levyeth a nusance in his own lands to the offence of another and dyeth; an assize of nusance doth not lye against the heir for the continuance of that wrong, but a quod permittat, see F. N. B. 124. It was adjorned.

CCCLXX. POWLEY AND SIERS CASE.

Debt.

Powley brought debt against Sier executor of the will of A.: the defendant demanded judgment of the writ, for he said, that one B. was executor of the said A. and that the said B. did constitute the defendant his executor, so the writ ought to be brought against the defendant as executor of the executor, and not as immediate executor to the said A. The plaintiff by reply said, that the said B. before any probate of the will, or any administration dyed, and so maintained his writ. Wray Justice was against the writ, for although here be not any probate of the will of A. or any other administration, yet when B. made his will, and the defendant his executor, the same is a good acceptance in law of the administration and execution of the first will, for the defendant might have an action of debt due to the first testator: Gawdy and Ayliff Justices, the writ is good: see Dyer, 23 Eliz. 372, against Wray.

CCCLXXII. CURRITON AND GADBARYS CASE.

Leases.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff should make a lease for life to the defendant of certain lands, habendum after the death of A. before the tenth of August next following, promised to pay the plaintiff ten pounds, the first day of May next after the promise which was before the tenth of August: and the truth was, that the said ten pounds was not paid at the day, ut supra, nor the said lease made: and now both sides being in default, the plaintiff brought an action; it was said by Wray Justice, If the plaintiff had made the lease according to the consideration, and in performance thereof the action would have lyen, but now his own default had barred him of the action: but for another cause, the declaration was holden insufficient, for here is not any consideration, for the promise is, in consideration that the plaintiff shall lease to the defendant for life, habendum after the death of A. which cannot be good by way of lease, but ought to enure by way of grant of the reversion, so as here is no lease, therefore no consideration, and notwithstanding [276] that if a lease be made for life, habendum after the death of A. the habendum is void, and the lease shall be in possession according to the premises, yet the law will not give such construction to the words of a promise, contract, or assumpsit, but all the words ought to be wholly respected according to the letter, so as because that no lease can be made according to the words of the consideration, no supply thereof shall be by any favorable construction: and so it was adjudged: but before the same imperfection was espied, judgment was entred, and therefore, the Court awarded that there should be a cesset executio, entred upon the roll, for it is hard as it was said by Wray to drive the party to a writ of error in Parliament, because Parliaments are not now so frequently holden as they have used to be holden, and the execution was staid accordingly.

Error. Amercement.

In a writ of error, it was assigned for error, that whereas in the first action, the parties were at issue, and upon the venire facias one Gregory Tompson was returned; but upon the habeas corpora, George Tompson was returned, and the jury was taken, and found for the plaintiff; and judgment given accordingly; it was argued on the part of the plaintiff in the first action; that the same is a thing amendable: as 9 E. 4, 14, a jury was impannelled by the name of I. B. and in the habeas corpora he was named W. B. and by such name sworn, &c. And upon examination of the sheriff, it was found that he was the same person who was impannelled, and it was amended and made according to the pannel; but the opinion of the whole Court was, that as this case is it was not amendable, and it is not like the case of 9 E. 4, for there the examination was before the verdict when the sheriff was in Court, but here it is after verdict, and the sheriff is out of Court, and cannot be examined, and for these causes the judgment was reversed.

CCCLXXIV. OGNELL AND THE SHERIFFS OF LONDONS CASE.

Escape.

Ognell brought debt upon an escape by bill in the Exchequer against the Sheriffs of London, the case was, that one Crofts was bound to the now plaintiff in a recognisance, and afterwards committed for felony to the prison of Newgate, of which he was attainted and remained in prison in the custody of the sheriffs: afterwards Ognell sued a sc. fac. upon the said recognisance against Crofts, the sheriffs returned a cepi, and the especial matter aforesaid, and after judgment given against Crofts for Ognell, Crofts got his pardon, and escaped: it was argued, that notwithstanding this attainder, Crofts is subject to the execution obtained upon the recognisance: see the case of escape betwixt Maunser and Annesley, 16 Eliz. in Bendloes case, 2 E. 4, 1. It is said by Watman, that a man outlawed for felony shall answer, but shall not be answered: see 6 E. 4. 4. One condemned in redisseisin, was taken by a capias pro fine, and committed to prison, and afterwards outlawed of felony, the King pardons the felony, yet he shall remain in execution for the party, if he will; but if the party be once in execution for the party, and then outlawed of felony, it seems by 6 E. 4. Fitz. Execution, 13. that the execution is gone. And all the barons were clear of opini-[277]-on in the principal case for the plaintiff. And they also said, that if one who hath a protection from the King be taken in execution, and escape, the gaoler shall answer for the escape, and that was one Hales case. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff, and one of the causes of the judgment was, because that the sheriffs had returned cepi upon the process.

CCCLXXV. BISHOP AND REDMANS CASE.

Words which amount to Covenant.

Bishop, a doctor of the civil law, brought an action of covenant against Redman Archdeacon of Canterbury, and declared upon an indenture, by which the defendant did constitute the plaintiff officialem suum of his archdeaconry for three years, and gave to him by the said indenture, authoritatem admittendi, & inducendi quoscunque clericos ad quæcunque beneficia ecclesiastica infra archidiaconatum prædict', and also probate of wills; and further granted to him, omnen & omnimodam archidiaconatum jurisdictionem suam prædict' absque impetitione, denegatione, restrictione, &c. after which Doctor Young was created Bishop of Rochester, which is in the jurisdiction of the said archdeaconry; and the defendant took upon him to enthronize the said bishop in his said church, and took of him for his fee twenty nobles, whereupon the plaintiff brought this action. It was moved for the defendant, that upon the matter the action doth lye; for the office of enthronizing or enstalling of a bishop doth not pass by the said indenture, nor is there any word in the indenture that doth extend unto it, for the bishop is not a clark, and the plaintiff by the indenture hath not to do but with clarks, not with bishops; and it appeareth by the grant of subsidies, by the clergy in Parliament, that a bishop and a clark are distinct things. See instrumentum hereof, prælatus & clericus, &c. Also the plaintiff hath not to do with a bishoprick, but with benefices, and a bishoprick is not a benefice, but a higher thing: and further the plaintiff hath power to admit and induct, which doth not extend to installing, or inthronization, for that belongs to a bishop; and the Court was clear of opinion, that by this grant there did not pass any power to instal or inthronize bishops; and the general words, i.e. omnem & omnimodam jurisdictionem archidiaconatum prædictam, did not mend the matter, for the word (prædictam) doth not restrain the words, omnem, & omnimodam, &c. but admitting that; it was moved, if upon this indenture covenant lieth, for there is not any express covenant, yet the words absque impetitione, denegatione, restrictione, do amount to so much, to make the defendant subject to his action, if the matter in itself would have served for him, and so was the opinion of the Court.

CCCLXXVI. LADY LODGES CASE.

Prohibition.

The Lady Laxton of London by her will bequeathed to Matthew Luddington, and Andrew Luddington, several legacies in monies to be paid to them respectively at their several ages, &c. and made the Lady Lodge her daughter her executrix and died, Andrew died before his full age, Matthew took letters of aministration of the goods of Andrew, and sued the Lady Lodge in the Spiritual Court for the legacy [278] bequeathed to Andrew; before which suit begins, the Lady Lodge, with Sir Thomas her husband, gave all the goods which she had as executor of the said Lady Laxton to Sir William Cordel Master of the Rolls, and to William Lodge son of the said Sir Thomas and his lady, depending which suit the Lady Lodge died, after which sentence was given against her being dead, and now a citation was out of the Spiritual Court against William Lodge executor of the said Lady Lodge, to shew cause why the sentence given against the said Lady Lodge should not be put in execution against him; and sentence was given against the said William Lodge, who appealed to the delegates, and there the sentence was affirmed. And now came William Lodge into the Kings Bench, and set forth the grant of the said Lady Lodge, as aforesaid, and that the same was not examinable in the Spiritual Court, and thereupon prayed a prohibition: and Awbrey, Doctor of the Civil Law, came into Court to inform the justices, what their law was in certain points touching the case in question; and as to the sentence given against the Lady Lodge, after her death he said, that if the defendant died before issue joyned, which is called Litis contestationem, the suit shall cease, but if he dieth after litis contestationem, it is otherwise, for in such case the suit shall proceed; for after litis contestationem, the right of the suit is so vested in the proctor, that he is a person suable until the end of the suit: and also he reported their law to be (Bro. Devise, 27, 45), that if a legacy be bequeathed to an infant to be paid when he shall come to the age of twenty-one years, if such a legatory dieth before such age, yet the executor or administrator of such legator shall sue for the said legacy presently, and shall not expect until the time, in which if the infant had continued in life he had attained his full age, and as to the prohibition it was argued by Egerton Solicitor-General, that the grant aforesaid is not triable in the Spiritual Court: as if the said Lady Lodge had suffered a recovery to be had against her as executor by covin, &c. the same is not examinable in the Spiritual Court, but belongs to the temporal conusans, and therefore he prayed a prohibition: but on the other side it was said, that if the prohibition be allowed, the legatory hath no remedy; but that was denied, for the party might sue in the Chancery. And after the prohibition granted, the Court awarded a special consultation, quatenus non extendat ultra manus executoris, & quatenus non agitur de validitate facti, i. the grant aforesaid.

CCCLXXVII. HUDDY AND FISHERS CASE.

Debt. Attaint.

Debt was brought upon a bond, the condition of which was for the performance of covenants, grants and agreements in an indenture: and in the indenture it was recited, that in consideration that the said Huddy should build a mill upon the land demised by the defendant to the plaintiff by the same indenture, and a water-course by the land demised, the defendant leased the said land to the plaintiff, and the lease was by the words dedi & concessi. And the plaintiff assigned the breach of the said covenant in law, in that the defendant had stopped the said water-course so made by the plaintiff, upon which they were at issue, and it was found for the plaintiff, upon which the defendant brought attaint, and the false oath was found; and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that here is no issue, and then by consequence no verdict, and then no false oath, and then no cause of attaint; for here the issue is taken upon the stopping of the water-course, which upon the shewing of the party is not any cause of action, for in the indenture there is not any [279] express covenant, clause, or agreement, that the lessee should enjoy the water-course so to be made, only there is a covenant in law rising upon these words dedi & concessi, which cannot extend to a thing not in esse at the time of the making the indenture. Coke, who argued for the defendants in the attaint resembled this case to the case in 23 E. 3. Garr. 27. where it is holden, that the warranty knit to the manor shall not extend to the tenancy escheated: and 30 E. 3. 14. the recovery in value shall not be in larger proportion than the land warranted was at the time of the warranty made. So in our case, this covenant shall not extend to anything which was not in esse at the time of the covenant made: and see 25 Ass. 2. where the Court shall reject a verdict, or part of a verdict, &c. And because the now plaintiff might after the verdict have alledged the same in arrest of judgment, which he did not, he shall not be helped by attaint, but it shall be accounted his folly that he would not for his own ease, and to avoid circuity of action shew the matter in stay of judgment; as 9 E. 4. 12 by Littleton: if a man be indicted of felony, if the judgment be insufficient, but he takes not advantage of it, but pleads the general issue, and is acquitted, he shall never after have a writ of conspiracy, &c. And for another cause judgment ought not to be given in this case, because it doth not appear that execution hath been sued, and then here is no party grieved: and then this action being conceived upon the statute of 23 H. 8. cap 3. which gives it to the party grieved doth not lye, for a party grieved cannot be intended without execution sued. See 21 H. 6. 55 by Paston; false oath, judgment, and execution do entitle the party grieved to attaint. And see the stat. of 23 H. 8. which enacts, that the party shall be restored to as much as he hath lost, therefore he ought to lose (by execution) before he be a person able to bring this action: but as to that matter, see the statute of 1 E. 3. 6. by which it is enacted, that the justices shall not leave to take attaint for the damages not paid, so as before the said statute no attaint lay before execution, 33 H. 6. 21. by Prisoit 5 H. 7. 22. t. E. 1. Attaint 70. 8 E. 2. Assize 396. And it was moved, that for another cause the attaint doth not lye, as it is pursued in process upon it, for the plaintiff hath not pursued the statute, upon which the attaint is grounded, for the said statute gives special process in this case against the petit jury, grand jury, and the party, viz. summons, re-summons, and distress infinite; but in this case the plaintiff hath sued otherwise, which is against the direction of the statute. And that was taken to be a material exception by Clench and Gawdy Justices, for the verdict doth not save the matter of process in this case by the statute of 18 Eliz. which doth not extend to proceedings in penal causes; which see, by the words of the statute, by an express proviso: but quære, if it be a penal statute, because a lesser punishment is enacted by it, than that which was before inflicted upon such offenders: and as to the matter of execution, quære, if the plaintiff be not pars gravata in hoc only, that he is subject to the said judgment, and so liable to execution.

CCCLXXVIII. PENRUDDOCK AND NEWMANS CASE.

Execution. Return of the Sheriff. Surrender.

In an ejectione firmæ, the plaintiff declared upon a lease made by the Lord Morley, and upon not guilty pleaded, this special matter was found, that William Lord Mountegle, seised of the manor of D. whereof &c. became bounden in a statute in such a sum to A. who died, the executors of A. sued execution against the said lord, i. upon the extendi facias, a libertate issued forth, upon which the said manor was [280] delivered to the said executors, but was not returned. It was further found that the said executors being so possessed of the said manor, the said lord commanded a court baron to be holden there, which was holden accordingly by the sufferance of the executors, and the said executors were also present, at which time the executors in the presence of the said lord said these words, viz. We have nothing to do with this manor. And upon this verdict two things were moved, if because the liberate was not returned, the execution was good: and as to that divers books were cited, 21 H. 6. 8. 18 E. 3. 25. And it was said that there was a difference betwixt a liberate, and a capias ad satisfaciendum, and a fieri facias, for these writs are conditional, ita quod habeas corpus, &c. Ita, quod habeas denarios hic in curia, 3 H. 7. 3. 16 H. 7. 14. But contrary in the writ of liberate, habere facias seisinam, for in such writs there is not such clause, and therefore if such writs be not returned, the execution done by virtue of them is good enough: and see 11 H. 4. 121. If the sheriff by force of an elegit delivers to the party the moiety of the land of the defendant, and doth not return the writ; if now the plaintiff will bring an action of debt de novo, the defendant may plead in bar the execution aforesaid, although the writ of execution were not returned, and yet the execution is not upon the record. And see the case there put by Hankford: and it is not like to the case of partition made by the sheriff, the same ought to be returned, because that after the return thereof, a new and secondary judgment is to be given, i. quod partitio prædicta firma & stabilis maneat in perpetuum, firma & stabilis in perpetuum teneatur, see the Book of Entries 114. And Egerton solicitor cited a case lately adjudged betwixt the Earl of Leicester and the widow Taufield, that such execution without return was good enough. Another matter was moved; admit, that here be a good execution, if now the executors being in possession of the said manor by force of that execution and permitting and suffering the conusor to hold a court there in the manor-house, and saying in his presence the words aforesaid, if the same doth amount to a surrender by the executors to the said conusor, or not. And Wray Chief Justice said, that here upon this matter is not any surrender, for here the words are not addressed to the said conusor who is capable of a surrender, nor to any person certain: and it is not like to the case of 40 E. 3. 23, 24. Chamberlains Assize, where tenant for life saith to him in the reversion, that his will is that he enter, the same is a good surrender, for there is a person certain who can take it; but contrary in this case, for here it is but a general speech. It was adjorned.

CCCLXXIX. BASKERVILE AND THE BISHOP OF HEREFORDS CASE.

Quare Impedit. Averment.

In a quare impedit by Walter Baskervile, against the Bishop of Hereford, &c. the plaintiff counted, that Sir Nicholas Arnold was seised of the advowson as in gross, and granted the same to the said Baskervile and others, to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of Richard Arnold his son in tail; proviso, that if the said

Nicholas die, the said Richard being within age of twenty-three years, that then the grantees and their heirs shall be seised to them and their heirs until the said Richard hath accomplished the said age: Nicholas dieth, Richard being of the age of fourteen years, by force of which the grantees were possessed of the said advowson, and afterwards the church became void, and so it belonged to them to present: and exception was taken to the count, because the plaintiff had not averred the life of [281] Richard, upon whose life the interest of the plaintiffs doth depend. And Gawdy Serjeant, likened it to the case of the parson which hath been adjudged, that where the lessee of a parson brought an ejectione firmæ, and it was found for him, and in arrest of judgment exception was taken to the declaration, because that the life of the parson was not averred, and for that cause judgment was stayed. Anderson Chief Justice: Upon the dying of Sir Nicholas Rich, being but of the age of fourteen years, an absolute interest for nine years vests determinable upon the death of Richard, or rather, they are seised in fee determinable upon the coming of Richard to the age of twenty-three years. Rhodes and Windham contrary: that here is an interest in the grantees, determinable upon the death of Richard within the term, for if Richard dieth without issue within the term, the remainder is limited over to a stranger. And as to the exception to the count, it was argued by Puckering Serjeant, that the count was good enough, for although the life of Richard be not expressly averred, yet such averment is strongly implied, and so supplied: for the count is, that dictus Nicholas obiit dicto Ric. being of the age of fourteen years, & non amplius, by force of which the plaintiff was possessed of the said advowson, quo quidem sic possessionato existente, the church became void, and possessed he could not be, if the said Richard had not been then alive, and the same is as strong as an averment. See 10 E. 4. 18. In trespass for breaking his close, the defendant pleads, that A. was seised, and did enfeoff him; to which the plaintiff said, that long time before A. had anything, B. was seised and leased to the said A. at will, who enfeoffed the defendant, upon which B. did re-enter, and leased to the plaintiff at will, by force of which he was possessed until the defendant did the trespass, and the same was allowed to be a good replication, without averring the life of B. who leased to the plaintiff at will, for that is implied by the words, i. virtute cujus; the plaintiff was possessed until the defendant did the trespass. And see also 10 H. 7. 12 in an assize of common, the plaintiff makes title, that he was seised of a messuage, and of a carve of land, to which he and all those whose estate, &c. have had common appendant, &c. And doth not say, that he is now seised of the messuage: but this exception was disallowed by the Court, for seisin shall be intended to continue until the contrary be shewed. It was adjorned.

CCCLXXX. Caries Case.

Tithes.

In an information in the Exchequer, by the Queen againt Cary, the case was this; a man grants situm rectoriæ cum decimis eidem pertinent. habend. situm prædict. cum suis pertinentiis, for twenty years, the first grantee dieth within the term. If now because the tithes are not expressly named in the habendum, the grantee shall have them for life only, was the question. It was moved by Popham Attorney-General, that the grantee had the tithes but for life, and to that purpose he cited a case adjudged 6 Eliz. in the Common Pleas: a man grants black acre and white acre, habendum black acre for life, nothing of white acre shall pass but at will; and in the argument of that case, Anthony Browne put this case; Queen Mary granted to Rochester such several offices, and shewed them specially, habendum two of them, and shewed which in certain, for forty years. It was adjudged that the two offices which were not mentioned in the habendum, were to Rochester but for life; and determined by his death: and so he said in this case, the tithes not mentioned in [282] the habendum shall be to the grantee for life, and then he dying, his executors taking the tithes are intrudors: but as to that, it was said by Manwood Chief Baron, that the cases are not alike, for the grants in the cases cited are several, intire, and distinct things, which do not depend the one upon the other, but are in gross by themselves. But in our cases the tithes are parcel of the rectory; and therefore for the nearness betwixt them, i. the rectory and the tithes, the tithes upon the matter pass together with the site of the rectory for the term of twenty years, and judgment was afterwards given accordingly.

Debt. Razure of Deeds.

Thomas Lord Darcy, executor of John Lord Darcy, brought debt upon a bond against Sharpe, who pleaded that the condition of the bond was, that if the said Sharpe did perform all the covenants, &c. contained within a pair of indentures, &c. By which indentures the said John Lord Darcy had sold to the said Sharpe certain trees growing, &c. And by the same indentures Sharpe had covenanted to cut down the said trees before the seventh of August 1684, and shewed further, that after the sealing and delivery of the said indenture, the said Lord Darcy now plaintiff, caused and procured I. S. to raze the indenture, quod penes prædict. querentem remanebat, and of 1684. to make it 1685. and so the said indenture become void: and the opinion of the whole Court was clear against the defendant, for the razure is in a place not material, and also the razure trencheth to the advantage of the defendant himself who pleads it; and if the indenture had become void by the razure, the obligation had been single and without defeasance.

It was objected against this judgment, that where damages are trebled, no costs shall be given, as in wast, &c. But it was clearly agreed by the whole Court, that not only the costs assessed by the jury, but also those which were adjudged de incremento should be trebled, and so were all the presidents, as was affirmed by all the prothonotaries, and so are many books, 19 H. 6. 32. 14 H. 6. 13. 22 H. 6. 57. 12 E. 4. 1. CCCLXXXIII. JENNOR AND HARDIES CASE.

Devises.

The case was, Lands were devised to one Edith for life, upon condition that she should not marry; and if she died, or married, that then the land should remain to A. in tail, and if A. died without issue of his body in the life of Edith, that then the land should remain to the said Edith, to dispose thereof at her pleasure: and if the said A. did survive the said Edith, that then the lands should be divided betwixt the sisters of the devisor, A. died without issue living Edith. Shutleworth Serjeant; Edith hath but for life; and yet he granted, that if lands be devised to one to dispose at his will and pleasure without more saying, that the devisee hath a fee-simple; but otherwise it is when those words are qualified and restrained by special limitation: as 15 H. 7. 12. A man deviseth, that A. shall have his lands in perpetuum during his life, he hath but an estate for life, for the words (during his life) do abridge the interest given before. And 22 Eliz. one deviseth lands to another for life, to dispose at his will and pleasure, he hath but an estate for life: and these words (if A. dieth without issue in the life of Edith, that then the lands should remain to Edith to dispose at her pleasure) shall not be construed to give to Edith a fee-simple, but to discharge the particular estate of the danger, penalty, and loss, which after might come by her marriage, so as now it is in her liberty. And also he said, that by the limitation of the latter remainder, i. that the lands should be divided betwixt the daughters of his sister, the meaning of the devisor was not, that Edith should have a fee-simple, for the remainder is not limited to her heirs, &c. if A. dieth in the life of the said Edith; for the devisor goeth further, that if A. overlives Edith, and afterwards dieth without issue, that the said land should be divided, &c. Walmesley contrary: and he relyed much upon the words of the limitation of the remainder to Edith. Quod integra remaneat dictæ Edithæ, and that she might dispose thereof at her pleasure, for the said division is limited to be upon a contingent, i. if A. survive Edith, but if Edith survive A. then his intent is not that the lands should be divided, &c. but that they shall wholly remain to Edith, which was granted by the whole Court, and the justices did rely much upon the same reason; and they were very clear of opinion, that by those words Edith had a fee-simple: and judgment was given accordingly. Anderson conceived, that it was a condition; but although that it be a condition, so as it may be doubted, if a remainder might be limited upon a condition, yet this devise is as good as a new devise in reversion upon the precedent condition, and not as a remainder, quod Windham concessit; but Periam was very strong of opinion, that it is a limitation. Two joyntenants of a term, A. and B. A. grants his part to B. nothing passeth by it, for (as a grant) it cannot be good; for as one joyntenant cannot enfeoff his companion, no more can he vest any thing in him by grant, for he cannot grant to him a thing which he hath before; for joyntenants are seised and possessed of the whole, all which was granted per Curiam; and Anderson said, that if lands be granted to A. and B. and the heirs of A. B. cannot surrender to A. for a surrender is as it were a grant; and as a release it cannot enure, for a release of a right in chattels cannot be without a deed.

CCCLXXXIV. HOLLINGSHED AND KINGS CASE.

Debt. Priviledges of London.

Hollingshed brought debt against King, and declared, that King was bounden to him in a recognizance of two hundred pounds before the Mayor and Aldermen of London, in interiori camera de Guildhall London, upon which recognizance the said Hollingshed heretofore brought a scire facias before the said mayor, &c. in exteriori camera, and there had judgment to recover, upon which recovery he hath brought this action; and upon this declaration the defendant did demur in law, because that in setting forth of the recognizance he hath not alledged, that the Mayor of London hath authority by prescription or grant to take recognizances, and if he hath not, then is the recognizance taken coram non judice, and so void: and as to the statute of West. 2. cap. 45. it cannot be taken to extend to recognizances taken in London, which see by the words, de his quæ recordat. sunt coram cancellario domini Regis and ejus justiciariis qui recordum habent, & in rotulis eorum irrotulatur, &c. And also at the time of the making of that statute, London had not any sheriffs, but bayliffs; and the said statute ordains, that process shall go to sheriffs, &c. But the whole Court was clear of a contrary opinion, for they said, we will know that those of London have a Court of Record, and every Court of Record hath an authority incident to it to take recognizances, for all things which concern the jurisdiction of the said Court, and which arise by reason of matters there depending. Another matter was objected, for that the recognizance was taken in interiori camera, but the Court was holden in exteriori camera, and therefore not pursuant. But as to that, it was said by the Lord Anderson, that admit that the recognizance was not well taken, yet because that in the scire facias upon it, the defendant did not take advantage then thereof, he shall be bounden by his said admittance of it, as if one sue forth a scire facias, as upon a recognizance, whereas in truth there is not any recognizance, and the party pleads admitting such record, and thereupon judgment is given against him, it is not void, but voidable. Fleetwood, Recorder of London, alledged many cases, to prove that the Courts of the King are bounden to take notice, that they of London have a Court of Record, for if a quo warranto issueth to justices in eyre, it behoves not them of London to claim their liberties, for all Courts of the King are to take notice of them. And at last, after many motions, the opinion of the Court was for the plaintiff. And it was said by Anderson, and in manner agreed by the whole Court, that if depending this demurrer here, the judgment in London upon the scire facias be reversed, yet the Court here must proceed, and not take notice of the said reversal.

CCCLXXXV. BEDINGFEILD AND BEDINGFEILDS CASE.

Dower. Primer seisin.

Dower was brought by Anne Bedingfeild against Thomas Bedingfeild. The tenant out of the Chancery purchased a writ, de circumspecte agatis, setting forth this matter, that it was found by office in the county of Norfolk, that the husband of the demandant was seised of the manor of N. in the said county, and held the same of [285] the Queen by knights service in chief, and thereof dyed seised, the tenant being his son and heir of full age, by reason whereof the Queen seised as well the said manor as other manors, and because the Queen was to restore the tenements, tam integre, &c. as they came to her hands, it was commanded the Judges to surcease, domina Regina inconsulta: it was resolved, per Curiam, that although the Queen be entituled to have primer seisin of all the lands, whereof the husband of the demandant dyed seised, yet this writ did not extend unto any manors not found in the office, for by the law, the Queen cannot seise more lands than those which are contained in the office: and therefore as to the land not found by the office, the Court gave day to the tenant to plead in chief: and it was argued by Serjeant Gawdy for the tenant, that the demandant ought to sue in the Chancery, because that the Queen is entituled to have her primer seisin, and cited the case of 11 R. 2. and 11 H. 4. 193. And after many motions, it was clearly agreed by the Court, that the tenant ought to answer over, for the Statute de Bigamis cap. 3. provides that in such case, the justices shall proceed notwithstanding such seisin of the King, and where the King grants the custody of the tenant himself, 1 H. 7. 18. 19. 4 H. 7. 1. Exchange.

The case was, The husband was seised of lands in the right of his wif, the husband and his wife both joyned in exchange of the lands with a stranger for other lands, which exchange was executed, the husband and the wife seised of the lands taken in exchange, aliened the same by fine, it was holden by Rhodes and Windham Justices, that the wife after the death of her husband might enter into her own lands notwithstanding that fine; and Rhodes resembled it to the case reported by my Lord Dyer, 19 Eliz. 358. The husband after marriage assured to his wife a joynture, they both levy a fine, sur conusans de droit come ceo que il ad of the gift of the husband; that the same is not any bar to the wife of her dower, for the election is not given to the wife to claim her joynture, or her dower, until after the death of her husband: and so in the principal case judgment was given for the wife.

And that William had issue who dyed without issue; here, although it cannot be litterally said, that William did depart this world not having issue, yet the intent of the devisor is not to be restrained to the letter, that such construction shall be made, that whensoever William dyeth, in law, or upon the matter without issue, that the land shall be subject to sale, according to the authority committed by the devisor to his sons in law: and now upon the matter William is dead without issue: as in a formedon in reverter or remainder, although that the donee in tail hath issue, yet if after the estate tail be spent, the writ shall suppose that the donee dyed, without issue, a fortiori in the case of a will, or devise, such construction shall be made. As to the other point, concerning the sale of the lands, Wray asked, if the sons in law were named in the will, and the clerks answered, No: see 30 H. 8. Br. Devise, 31. and 39 Ass. 17. Sir Gilbert Gerrard Master of the Rolls, libelled in the Spiritual Court, against Sherrington, and A. his servant for tithes parcel of a rectory, whereof the said Sir Gilbert was fermor to the Queen; it was moved by Egerton Solicitor General, that against the Kings fermor a prohibition doth not lye: but the opinion of the whole Court was, that a prohibition doth lye, and so it hath been adjudged before. And afterwards, exception was taken to the surmise, because the said Sir Gilbert had libelled against the said Sherrington and his servant severally, and now in the Kings Bench they both had made a joynt surmise, whereas they ought to have severed in their surmises according to the several libels: and it was so adjudged by the Court, and therefore they were driven to make several surmises: and afterwards exception was taken, because the said Sherrington and his servant, had delivered their surmises and suggestions by attorney, where they ought to be in proper person: see the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 13. The party shall bring and deliver to the hands of some of the justices of the same Court, &c. the true copy of the libel, &c. subscribed or marked with the hand of the party, &c. and under the copy shall be written the surmise or suggestion; and although it was affirmed by the Clerks of the Court, that the common use and practice for twenty years had been, not to exhibit such surmises or suggestions by attorney: yet it was resolved by the whole Court, that it ought to be by attorney.

Request.

In an action upon the case upon assumpsit to pay mony to the plaintiff upon request: it was agreed, that the plaintiff by way of declaration ought to alledge an actual request, and at what place, and at what day the request was made: and it is not sufficient to say, as in an action of debt, Licet sæpius requisitus, &c. and so it was adjudged.

CCCXCI. COLE AND FRIENDSHIPS CASE.

Leases. Assignment.

In ejectione firmæ, the case was, that Fricarrock was seised, and by indenture betwixt himself of the one part, and one Friendship, his wife and the children betwixt them begotten at the assignment of the husband of the other part, leased the said land to the said husband his wife and their children, at the assignment of the husband, for years, they having at the time of the said lease but one child, i. a son; afterwards they had many children, the wife dyed, the husband by his will assigned his second son born after the making of the lease, to have the residue of the said term, and by the opinion of the Court nothing can come to the said son by that lease, or by that assignment, for if the interest doth not vest at the beginning, it shall never vest; and afterwards it was moved, in as much as nothing could vest in any of the children born after the lease made, if these words (at the assignment of the husband) should be void, and then the case should be no more, but that land is devised to the father and mother, and their children: at another day, viz. Trin. 26 Eliz. the case was moved again, and as to the first point, the Court was of opinion as before, that the child assigned after the lease made, should not take: and then it was moved, that because Friendship and his wife at the time of the making of the said lease had one son, that he should take with his father and mother; and that the words (at the assignment of Friendship) should be void, is matter of surplusage, and the word children a good name of purchase: but the whole Court was against that conceit, for these words in the case, at the assignment of Friendship are not void, but shew what person should take, if the intent of the party should take effect, i. he who the father by assignment should enable, for no child shall take but he who the father shall assign, that is part of the contract; and although by such assignment no title accrues to the child assigned, yet without assignment no child is capable, for by the lease the father hath such liberty that he may assign what child he will: and [288] by Wray, If the words of the lease had been (at the assignment of the father within one month) and the father surcease his month, the interest should not vest in any of the children: and by Ayliff Justice, If the words of the lease had been (to the husband and wife and their son John, where his name is William) nothing should vest: and peradventure in this case at the Bar, if the father had assigned his son then born, and had assigned him before or at the time of the lease, i. the delivery of the lease, it had been well enough: note that this action was brought by Cole lessee of the son of the husband and wife born at the time of the lease made: and afterwards Wray, with the assent of all the rest of the justices, gave judgment that the plaintiff nihil capiat per billam.

CCCXCIV. THE LORD DACRES CASE.

Stewardship of a Manor: Office of Trust. Grants per Copy, Deputy Steward.

In ejectione firmæ, the case was, that the Lord Dacres was seised of the manor of Eversham, and that I. S. held the place where of the said manor by copy for term of his life, and the said lord granted the stewardship of the said manor to the now Marquess of Winchester, who appointed one Chedle to be his deputy to keep a Court, & ad tradendum, the said lands (I. S. being now dead) to one Wilkins by copy for life, afterwards, the said Chedle commanded one Hardy his servant to keep the said Court, and grant the said land by copy, ut supra, which was done accordingly, the copy was entred, and the Lord Dacres subsigned it & confirmed it: it was further found, that Hardy had many times kept the said Court both before and after, and that the custom of the manor was, that the steward of the said manor for the time being, or his deputy might take surrenders, and grant estates by copy: and if this estate so granted by Hardy were good or not, was the question, because by the servant of the deputy, whereas the custom found did not ex-[289]-tend further than the deputy: it was argued that the estate granted, ut supra, was void, for a deputy cannot transfer his authority over, for it is an office of trust: see 39 H. 6. 33, 34. 14. E. 4. 1. and 6 Eliz. it was adjudged, that the Duke of Somerset had divers stewards of his lands, and they, in the name of the said duke made diverse leases of the lands of the said duke, rendring rent, and the duke, afterwards assented to the said leases, and received the rents reserved upon them, and yet after the death of the said duke, the Earl of Hertford his son and heir avoided them: so here, the assent, and the subsignment of the copy by the Lord Dacres, doth not give any strength to the copy which was void at the beginning; against which it was said, that to take a surrender, and to grant an estate by copy is not any judicial act, but meerly an act of service, and no matter of trust is transferred to Hardy, for trust is reposed in him who may deceive, which can't be in our case, for here is an express commandment, which if Hardy transgress it is absolute void, for nothing is left to his discretion: and the admitting of a copy-holder is not any judicial act, for there need not be any of the suitors there who are the Judges: and such a Court may be holden out of the precinct of the manor, for no pleas are holden, which was concessum per totam Curiam: and by Ayliff Justice, if the lord of such a manor makes a feoffment of a parcel of his manor which is holden by copy for life, and afterwards the copy-holder dyeth, although now the lord hath not any Court, yet the feoffee may grant over the land by copy again. And the whole Court was clear of opinion, that the grant for the manner of it was good, especially because the Lord Dacres agreed to it; and judgment was given accordingly.

CCCXCV. BURGESSE AND FOSTERS CASE.

Surrenders.

In ejectione firmæ, the case was, that the Dean and Chapter of Ely were seised of the manor of Sutton, whereof the place where, &c. is parcel, demised and demisable by copy according to the custom, and by their deed granted the stewardship of the said manor to one Adams to execute the said office, per se vel legitimum suum deputatum eis acceptabilem: afterwards Adams made a letter of deputation to one Mariot, ad capiendum unum sursum redditionem of one I. W. and I. his wife, and to examine the said I. aforesaid, ea intentione, that the said I. W. and A. might take back an estate for their lives, the remainder over to one John Buck in fee (note, the surrender ought be, de duobus messuagiis) Mariot took two several surrenders from the said husband and wife, the remainder over to the said John Buck in fee, upon condition to pay a certain sum of money, &c. It was moved, that the surrender is void, and without warrant, for the warrant was, ad capiendum unum sursum redditionem, and here are two several surrenders, and so the warrant is not pursued, and then the surrender is void: another matter was because the remainder to John Buck by the words of the deputation was absolute and without condition, and now in the execution of it, it is conditional, so as this conditional estate is not warranted by the deputation: but the whole Court was clear of a contrary opinion in both the points, and that all the proceedings were sufficient and well warranted by the deputation: another matter was objected, because that this surrender and regrant is entred in the roll of a Court, dated to be holden the second of Maij, and the letter of deputation bears date the third of June after: but as to that, the Court was clear of opinion, that the mis-entry [290] of the date of the Court should not prejudice the party, for this entry is not matter of record, but is but an escape, and if the parties had been at issue, upon the time of the surrender made, or of the Court holden, the same should not be tryed by the rolls of the manor, but by the country, and the party might give in evidence the truth of the matter, and should not be bound by the roll, and according to this resolution of the Court, judgment was given.

The case was: tenant in tail leased for sixty years, and afterwards levied a fine to Lee and Loveday, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. with a render to him and his heirs in fee; and upon a scire facias against the conusees, supposing the lands to be ancient demesn, the defendants made default for which the fine was avoided, and now the issue in tail entred upon the lessee for years, and he brought an ejectione firmæ, and it was found, that the land was frank fee; and all the question was, if by the reversal of the fine by writ of disceit, without suing forth a scire facias against the ter-tenant should bind him, or should be void only against the conusee, and not against the lessee? Atkin. It shall not bind the lessee for years: for a fine may bind in part, and in part not: as bind one of the conusees, and not the other, 7 H. 4 111. A fine levied of lands, part ancient demesn, and part at the common law, the same was by writ of disceit reversed in part, as to the land in ancient demesn, and stood in force for the residue, 8 H. 4. 136. And there by award of the Court issued forth a scire facias against the ter-tenants, and the justices would not adnul the fine, without a certificate that the land was ancient demesn, notwithstanding that the defendant had acknowledged it to be so, but as to them who were parties to the fine, the fine is become void as to the said parties, and he who had the land before might enter, i. And he said it should be a great inconvenience, if no scire facias, or other proces should be awarded against the ter-tenant, for he should be dispossessed and disinherited without privity, or notice of it, where upon a scire facias he might plead matter of discharge, in Bar of the writ of disceit, as a release, &c. which see Fitz. N. B. 98. And so although the fine be reversed, yet he might retain the land, and he resembled this case to the case of 2 H. 4, 16, 17. In a contra formam collationis against an abbot, a scire facias shall issue forth against the feoffee, and so by the same reason here: and for the principal matter he said, that the fine should be avoided against the parties, but not against the lessee: Kingsmill, The scire facias brought against the parties only is good enough, for they were parties to the disceit, and not the ter-tenants: it was adjorned.

Error. Appearance by Attorney. If the Grantee of Tenant after possibility shall atturn.

A writ of error was brought upon a judgment in a quid juris clamat; it was assigned for error, that the tenant did appear by attorney, whereas he ought not but in person, because he is to do an act in proper person, if it be not in case of necessity, where the attorney may be received by the Kings writ, or plead matter in bar of the attornment, as if he claim fee, &c. or other peremptory matter, after which plea pleaded he may make attorney, 48 E. 3. 24. 7 H. 6. 69. 21 E. 3. 48. 1 H. 7. 27. Tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct shall not be driven to attorn, 46 E. 3. 13. 27. Ergo, neither his grantee: Williams contrary, As to the appearance of the tenant by attorney, because the same is admitted by the Court, and the plaintiff, the same is not error, which see 1 H. 7. 27. by Brian and Conisby, 32 H. 6. 22. And he said, that the grantee should be driven to attorn, for no other person can have the estate of the tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, but the party himself, therefore not the priviledge; and although he himself be dispunishable of wast, yet his grantee shall not have such priviledge. CCCXCVIII. GRAVENOR AND MASSEYS CASE.

Error.

Gravenor brought a writ of error upon a common recovery against Massey: and in the said recovery four husbands and their wives were vouched, and now the plaintiff brought this writ of error as heir to one of the husbands, and exception was taken to his writ, because the plaintiff doth not make himself heir to the survivor of the four husbands. Egerton, The writ is good enough, for there is a difference betwixt a covenant personal, and a covenant real, for if two be bound to warranty, and the one dyeth, the survivor and the heir of the other shall be vouched, and he said each of the four and their heirs are charged, and then the heir of each of them being chargeable, the heir of any of them may have a writ of error. And afterwards the writ of error was adjudged good: and error was assigned because the vouchees appeared the same day that they were vouched by attorney, which they ought not to do by law, but they might appear gratis the first day without proces in their proper persons, and so at the sequatur sub suo periculo: see 13 E. 3. Attorn, 74. and 8 E. 2. ib. 101. Another error was assigned, because the entry of the warrant of attorney for one of the vouchees is po. lo. suo, I. D. against the tenant, where it should be against the demandant, for presently when the vouchee entreth into the warranty, he is tenant in law to the demandant. Coke, As to the first error, although he cannot appear by attorney, yet when the Court hath admitted his appearance by attorney, the same is well enough, and is not error: as to the other error, I confess it to be error, but we hope that the Court will have great consideration of this case as to that error, for there are one hundred recoveries erronious in this point, if it may be called an error: and then we hope, to avoid such a general mischief, that the Court will consider and dispense with the rigor of the law: as their predecessors did, 39 H. 6. 30. in the writ of mesne: but I conceive, that the writ of error is not well brought, for the voucher in the said recovery is of four husbands and their wives, and when voucher shall be intended to be in [292] the right of their wives, which see 20 H. 7. 1. b. 46 E. 3. 28. 29 E. 3. 49. And so by common intendment, the voucher shall be construed in respect of the wife; so also the plaintiff here ought to entitle himself to this writ of error as heir to the wife: and for this cause, the plaintiff relinquished his writ of error; and afterwards he brought a new writ, and entituled himself as heir to the wife.

CCCCII. WILLIAMS AND BLOWERS CASE.

Error. Joynder in Action. Regula. Deprivation. Scire facias.

Reignold Williams and John Powell brought a writ of error against the Bishop of Hereford and Blower, upon a recovery had in a writ of disceit by the said bishop and Blower against the said Williams and Powell, for that the said Williams had before brought a quare impedit against the said Blower and the bishop, and had recovered against them by default, whereupon Williams had a writ to the metropolitan to admit his clerk, and in the writ of disceit judgment was given for the plaintiffs: for it was found, that the summons was the Friday to appear the Tuesday after, and so an insufficient summons, and in that writ of disceit the defendants Williams and Powell pleaded, that Blower the incumbent was deprived of his benefice in the court of audience, which sentence was affirmed upon appeal before the delegates; and notwithstanding that plea, judgment was given against Williams and Powell defendants in the said writ of disceit: and upon that judgment this writ of error is brought. Beaumont assigned four errors, first, because the bishop and Blower joyned in the writ of disceit, for their rights are several, 12 E. 4. 6. Two cannot joyn in an action of trespass upon a battery done at one time to them: so if one distrain at one and the same time, the several goods of divers persons, they according to their several properties shall have several replevins, 12 H. 7. 7. By Wood: So if lands be given to two, and to the heirs of one, and they lose by default in a præcipe brought against them, they shall have several writs, the one quod ei deforceat, the other a writ of right: 46 E. 3. 21. A fine levied to one for life, the remainder to two husbands and their wives in tail, they have issue and die; tenant for life dieth, the issues of the husbands and wives shall have several scire facias's to execute the fine by reason of their several rights: lands in ancient demesn holden severally of several lords are conveyed by fine, the lords cannot joyn in a writ of disceit, but they ought to have several writs; so here the plaintiffs in this writ of disceit, and the bishop claims nothing but as Ordinary, and he loseth nothing in the quare impedit; and therefore by the writ of disceit he shall be restored to nothing. The second error was, because the bar of the defendants in the writ of disceit was good, i. the deprivation, &c. and the Court adjudged it not good, for the clerk being deprived, he could not enjoy the benefice, if the judgment in the qu. impedit had been reversed, and where a man cannot have the effect of his suit, it is in vain to bring any action. Lessee for the life of another loseth [294] by erronious judgment; cestuy que use dieth, his writ of error is gone, for if the judgment be reversed he cannot be restored to the land, for the estate is determined, 31 E. 3. Incumbent 6. The King brought a quare impedit against the incumbent and the bishop, the bishop claimed nothing but as Ordinary: the incumbent traversed the title of the King, against which it was replyed for the King, that the incumbent had resigned pendant the writ, so as now he could not plead any thing against the title of the King, for he had not possession, and so could not counterplead the possession of the King. And here in our case, by this deprivation the incumbent is disabled to maintain this action of disceit, 15 Ass. 8. If the guardian of a chappel be impleaded in a præcipe for the lands of his chappel, and pendant the writ he resign, the successor shall have a writ of error, and not he who resigns, for he is not to be restored to the lands, having resigned his chappel. So in our case, a deprivation is as strong as a resignation. The third error, because in the writ of disceit, it is not set forth that Blower was incumbent, for the writ of disceit ought to contain all the special matter of the case, as an action upon the case, 4 E. 3. Disceit 45. The fourth error, that upon suggestion made after verdict, that Blower was incumbent, and in, of the presentment of the Lord Stafford, and that he was removed; and Griffin in by the recovery in the quare impedit by default, a writ to the bishop was awarded without any scire facias against Griffin, for he is possessor, and so the statute of 25 E. 3. calls him, and gives him authority to plead against the King, and every release or confirmation made to him is good, 18 E. 3. Confirmation made by the King after recovery against the incumbent is good: and 9 H. 7. if a recovery be had in a contra formam collationis, the possessor shall not be ousted without a scire facias, so in audita querela upon a statute staple, scire facias shall go against the assignee of the conusee, 15 E. 3. Respon. 1. See also 16 E. 3. Disceit 35. 21 Ass. 13. A fine levied of lands in ancient demesn shall not be reversed without a scire facias against the ter-tenant. Walmesley contrary, The case at the Bar differs from the case put of the other side, for they are cases put upon original writs, but our case is upon a judicial writ, and here nothing is demanded, but the defendant is only to answer to the disceit and falshood. And in this case the issue is contained in the writ which is not in any original writ, and the Judges shall examine the issue without any plea or appearance of the tenant, and here the defendant is not to plead any thing to excuse himself of the wrong: and here the judgment is not to recover any thing in demand, but only to restore the party to his former estate and possession, and if he hath nothing, he shall be restored to nothing; and he put many cases where persons who have several rights may joyn in one action, as a recovery in an assize against several tenants, they may joyn in one writ of error, 18 Ass. Recovery in assize against disseisor and tenant, they shall both joyn in error, why not also in disceit? 19 E. 3. Recovery against two coparceners, the survivor and the heir of the other shall joyn in error. As to the second error, Williams and the sheriff ought not to joyn in the plea, and also the plea it self is not good, for the writ of disceit is, that Williams answer to the disceit, and the sheriff shall certifie the proceedings, and therefore he shall not plead: and also the plea it self is not good, for although the interest of the incumbent be determined in the church, yet his action is not gone; as if in a præcipe quod reddat, the tenant alieneth pendant the writ, and afterwards the demandant recovereth, yet the tenant although his interest be gone by the feoffment, yet he shall have a writ of error, and so here; and as to the scire facias, there needs none here against the new incumbent, for he comes in pen-[295]-dant the writ, and that appears by the record; but if it had been in before the writ brought, then a scire facias would lye. See 9 H. 6. It was adjorned.

Wray and Anderson, Of such offence done before, and now he is indicted again; for which it was awarded, that he suffer imprisonment for a year, and shall be adjudged ipso facto, deprived of all his spiritual promotions: and upon the indictment Flemming brought a writ of error, and assigned error, because in the second indictment no mention is made of the first indictment, in which case the second indictment doth not warrant such a judgment. Wray, Justice, If the first indictment be before us, then is a second judgment well given; contrary, if it be before other justices. Clench, The second indictment ought to recite the first conviction; and if one be indicted for a rogue in the second degree, the first conviction ought to be contained in such indictment; in an indictment the day and time are not material as to true recovering in facto: and it might be, that this last indictment was for the first offence for any thing appeareth. Coke, who argued to the same intent, compared it to the case of 2 R. 2. 9. and 22 E. 4. 12. 12 H. 7. 25. Indictment certified to be taken coram A. B. Justiciariis Domini Regis ad pacem, &c. without saying, necnon ad diversas felonias, &c. is void, and if a man hath been once convicted, he shall not have his clergy if it appeareth upon record before the same justices, that he had his clergy before.

CCCCIV. THE MAYOR OF LYNNS CASE.

Indictments.

The Mayor of Lynn was indicted, for that he had received twenty four shillings of one A. for giving of judgment in an action of debt, depending before him against one B. and he was indicted thereof as of extortion, in contemptum dictæ Dominæ Reginæ, & contra formam statuti. Coke, the indictment is insufficient, for there is not any statute to punish any Judge for such a matter: for the statute of West. 1. cap. 26. is made against sheriffs, cap. 27. Clerks of justices, cap. 30. The marshal and his servants, statute 23 H. 6. against sheriffs, and other statutes against Ordinaries: but no action lies against a Judge, for that which a Judge receives is bribery and not extortion, et satis pœnæ est, judici quod deum habeat ultorem, and therefore he said the party indicted ought to be discharged. Gawdy Justice, If in the indictment there be words of extortion or bribery, although such an offence in a Judge be not materially extortion, if these words, contra pacem, &c. had been in the indictment, it had been good, quod Clench concessit: and afterwards the party was discharged.

CCCCV. CRISP AND GOLDINGS CASE.

Assumpsit.

In an action upon the case by Crisp against Golding, the case was, that a feme sole was tenant for life, and made a lease to the plaintiff for five years, to begin after the death of tenant for life, a[illegible] afterwards the 18. of October made another lease to the same plaintiff for 21 yea[illegible], to begin at Michaelmas next before; and declaring upon all the said matter, he [illegible]id, virtute cujus dimissionis, i.e. the later lease, the plaintiff entred and was poss[illegible]sed Crast. Fest. S. Mich. which was before the lease made; and further declared, [illegible]at in consideration that the plaintiff had assigned to the defendant these two lease[illegible]he defendant promised, &c. and upon non assumpsit it was found for the plaintiff, a[illegible]l damages taxed 600l. Coke argued for the plaintiff against the Solicitor-General, [illegible]ho had taken divers exceptions to the declaration, i. where two or many consider[illegible]ions are put in the declaration, although that some be void, yet if one be good the action well lieth, and damages shall be taxed accordingly; and here the consideration that the plaintiff should assign totum statum, titulum, & interesse suum quod habet in terra prædict'. 2. Exception, that the lease in possession was made after Michaelmas, i. 18 October, and the declaration is, virtute cujus dimissionis, the defendant entred Crastino Mich. and then he was a disseisor, and could not assign his interest and right, which was suspended in the tortious disseisin, and so it appeared to the Judges; and he said there was not here any disseisin, although that the lessee had entred before that the lease was made; for there was an agreement and communication before of such purposed and intended lease, although it was not as yet effected, and if there were any assent or agreement that the lessee should enter, it cannot be any disseisin, and here it appeareth that the lease had his commencement before the making of the lease, and before the entry: but put case it be a disseisin, yet he assigned all the interest quod ipse tunc habuit, according to the words of the consideration, and he delivered both the indentures of the said demises, and quacunque via data, be the assignment good or void it is not material as to the action, for the consideration is good enough. Egerton solicitor contrary. In every action upon the case, upon assumpsit, there ought to be a consideration, promise, and breach of promise, and here in our case the consideration is the assignment of a lease, which is to begin after the death of the lessor, who was but tenant for life, which is meerly void, and that appeareth upon the record; and as to the second part of the consideration, and the assignment of the second lease, it appeareth, that the plaintiff at the time had but a right; for by his untimely entry before the making of the lease, he was not to be said lessee, but was a wrong-doer, &c. in 19 Eliz. in the Kings Bench this difference was taken by the justices there, and delivered openly by the Lord Chief Justice, i. when in an action upon the case, upon assumpsit, two considerations or more are laid in the declaration, but they are not collateral, but pursuant, as A. is indebted to B. in 100l. and A. promiseth to B. that in consideration that he oweth him 100l. and in consideration that B. shall give to A. 2s. that he will pay to him the said 100l. at such a day, if B. bring an action upon the case upon this assumpsit, and declares upon these two promises, although the consideration of the 2s. be not performed, yet the action doth well lye: but if they be collateral considerations, which are not pursuant, as if I in consideration that you are of my counsel, and shall ride with me to York, promise to give to you 20l. in this case all the considerations ought to be proved, otherwise the action [297] cannot be maintained: so in our case, the considerations are collateral, and therefore they ought to be proved; and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

tion. It was objected, that here is no sufficient consideration appearing in the declaration upon which a promise might be grounded; but it was the opinion of the whole Court, that the consideration set forth in the declaration was good and sufficient; and by Anderson, It is usual and frequent in the Kings Bench: if I deliver to you an obligation to rebail unto me, I shall have an action upon the case without an express assumpsit; and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Devise. Conditions.

In trespass, the case was this, William Ruddall Serjeant at Law, 18 H. 8. made a feoffment in fee to divers persons to the use of himself and his heirs, and 21 H. 8. declared his will, by which he devised his lands to Charles his younger son, and to the heirs males of his body, the remainder to John his eldest son in fee, upon condition, that if Charles or any of his issue should discontinue or alien, but only for to make a joynture for their wives for the term of their lives, that then, &c. and died; the statute of 27 H. 8. came, Charles made a lease to the defendants for their lives, according to the statute of 33 H. 8. And levied a fine with proclamation, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. to the use of himself and his wife, and the heirs males of their two bodies begotten, the remainder to himself and the heirs males of his body, the remainder to the right heirs of the devisor. John the eldest son entred for the condition broken upon the defendants, who re-entred, upon which re-entry the action was brought. Gawdy, Fleetwood, and Shuttleworth Serjeants for the plaintiffs: This condition to restrain unlawful discontinuance is good, as a condition to restrain wast, or felony. See 10 H. 7. 11. 13 H. 7. 23. And before the Statute of Quia Emptores terrarum: if A. had enfeoffed B. upon condition, that B. nor his heirs should alien, the same was a good condition by Fleetwood (which was granted per Curiam). And this condition was annexed to good purpose, for the serjeant well knew, that cestuy que use might have levied a fine, or suffered a recovery by the statutes of 1 R. 3. 4 H. 7. And this condition annexed or tied to the use by the will is now knit to the possession, which is transferred to the use by the said statute: although it may be objected, that the condition was annexed to the use, and now the use is extinct in the possession, and by consequence the condition annexed unto it, as where a seignory is granted upon condition, and afterwards the tenancy escheats, now the seignory is extinct, and so the condition annexed to it: but as to that it may be answered, that our case cannot be resembled to the cases at common law, but rests upon the statute of 27 H. 8. scil. cestuy que use shall stand and be seised, deemed and adjudged in lawful seisin, estate and possession of and in such lands to all intents, constructions and purposes in law, of and in such like estates as he had in the use, and that the estate, right, title, and possession that was in the feoffee shall be clearly deemed and adjudged to be in cestuy que use, after such quality, manner, form and condition as he had in the use: and therefore in the common assurance by bargain and sale by deed enrolled, if such assurance be made upon condition: as in case of mortgage, the possession is not raised by the bargainee; but by the bargain an use is raised to the bargainee, and the possession executed to it by the statute, and the condition which was annexed to the use only is now conjoyned to the possession, and so it hath been adjudged. So if the feoffees to use before the statute had made a lease for life, the lessee commits wast, the statute comes, now cestuy que use which was, shall have an action of wast, as it was adjudged in Justice Southcotes case: so a title of cessavit in the feoffees shall be executed by the statute. So if the King grants to the feoffees in use, a fair, market, or warren, these things shall be executed by the statute, as it was holden in the case of Clarentius. As to the condition, they conceived, that it is broken; for where the devisor had allowed to the devisee to discontinue for life, to make a [299] joynture to his wife, now he hath exceeded his allowance, for he might have made a joynture to his wife indefeisable by fine upon a grant upon a render for life, &c. But this fine with the proclamations is a bar to the former entail which was created by the devise, and hath created a new entail, and the former tail was barred by the fine against the intent of the devisor: also by this fine he hath created a new remainder, so as his issue inheritable to this new entail might alien and be unpunished, which was against the meaning of the devisor: and as to the lease for lives to the defendants, the same is not any breach of the condition, for that is warranted by the statute of 32 H. 8. which enables tenant in tail to make such a lease, so as it cannot be said a discontinuance, which Anderson and Periam granted: but the fine levied after is a breach of the condition, and then the re-entry upon the lessees, who have their estates under the condition is lawful: as where the wife of the feoffee upon condition is endowed, and afterwards the condition is broken, now by the re-entry of the feoffor the dower is defeated. And Shutleworth put this case, a feoffment is made upon condition, that the feoffee shall lease the lands to A. for life, and afterwards grant the reversion to B. in fee, the feoffor may re-enter, for by this conveyance he in the reversion is immediate tenant to the lord, where, by the intended assurance, the particular tenant ought to be. Puckering, Fenner, and Walmesley contrary: and by Walmesley, By this devise the use only passeth, and not the land it self, for the statute of 1 R. 3. extends only to acts executed in the life of cestuy que use, and not to devises which are not executed till after the death of the devisor, which see 4 Ma. Dyer 143. Trivilians case. See also 6 E. 6. Dyer 74. The Lord Bourchiers case; but 10 H. 7. cestuy que use deviseth, that his executors shall sell the land, now by the sale of the land in possession, for the same is in a manner an act in his life, for the vendee is in by cestuy que use, and here is a condition, and not a limitation, for the nature of a condition is to draw back the estate to the feoffor, donor, or lessor; but a limitation carrieth the estate further. And he conceived, that the condition is not broken by this act, for the intent of the devisor is pursued, for his meaning was, that the wife should have a joynture indefeisable against the issue in tail, and that the inheritance should be preserved; that both should be observed: and he said, that this fine being levied by him in the reversion upon an estate for life is not any discontinuance, but yet shall bar the estate tail. And the justices were clear of opinion, that the condition is broken, and also that the intent of the condition is broken; for it might be that Charles had issue by a former wife, which by this fine would be disinherited, and a new entail set on foot against the meaning of the devisor, &c. and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

See 32 H. 8. Br. Issue 90. In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant did promise to deliver four woollen-cloaths; the defendant pleaded, that he did promise to deliver four linnen-cloaths, absque hoc, that he promised, &c. the jury found, that the defendant did promise to deliver two woollen-cloaths, and the plaintiff did recover damages for the two. So in wast, the wast is assigned in succidendo 20 oaks, upon which they are at issue, the jury find but ten oaks, the plaintiff shall have judgment for so much, and shall be amerced for the residue. Gawdy Justice, Here are several assumpsits in law, as Br. 5 Ma. Action sur le case 108. a man in consideration of a marriage assumes to pay 20l. per annum for four years, two years incur, the party brings an action upon the case for the arrearages of the two years. Wray, In an action upon the case, the plaintiff ought not to vary from his case, as if a promise be grounded upon two considerations, and in an action upon it, the plaintiff declares upon one only, he shall never have judgment, and here the jury have not found the same promise. Clench, If promise be made to deliver a horse and a cow, and the horse is delivered, but not the cow; the party shall have an action for the cow, but he shall declare upon the whole matter and afterwards judgment was given, quod querens nihil capiat per billam.

Tanfield, The trial is good, for the issue ought not to have been tried by both visnes, S. and Esthall, for two things are in issue. If it be holden, or not. 2. If it be holden of the manor of Esthall, for which cause the visne ought to be from both places; and the opinion of the Court was, that for the manner of it, it was not good, as if an issue be joyned upon common for cause of vicinage, it shall be tried by both towns, see 39 H. 6. 31. by Littleton and Danby, and the case in 21 E. 3. 12. was cited in a per quæ servitia, the mannor was in one county, and the lands holden in another county, the tenant pleaded, that he did not hold of the conusor, and that he was tried by a jury of the county where the land was, see 2 H. 4. Gawdy denied the book cited of 21 E. 3. to be law, and the reason wherefore the visne shall come from both places, is because it is most likely, that both the visnes may better know the truth of the matter, than the one only. Another exception was taken, because the conusans (as it seems) is made according to the statute of 21 H. 8. 19. and yet the party doth not pursue the said statute through the whole conusans: for by the statute in avowry or conusans, the party needs not to name any person certain to be tenant to the land, &c. nor to make avowry or conusans upon any person certain; and now in this conusans he hath not made conusance upon any person certain, but yet he hath named a person certain to be tenant, &c. and in as much as this conusans is not made, either according to the common-law, or according to the statute, it cannot be good. But that exception was disallowed by the Court, for if the statute remedieth two things, it remedieth one, and the conusance made in form as above, was well enough by the opinion of the whole Court.

CCCCXIX. WIGOT AND CLARKS CASE.

Writ of Right.

In a writ of right by Wigot against Clark for the manor of D. in the county of Glocester, the four knights gladiis cincti did appear, and took their corporal oath, that they would choose 12, &c. ad faciendum magnam assisam, and by direction of the Court they withdrew themselves into the Exchequer Chamber, and there did return in parchment the names of the recognitors, and also their own names, and at the day of the return of the pannel by them made, the 4 knights and 12 others were sworn to try the issue, and it was ordered by the Court, that both the parties, scil. the demandant and the tenant, or their attornies, attend the said 4 knights in the Exchequer Chamber, and to be present at the making of the pannel, so as each of them might have their challenges, for after the return of the pannel, no challenge lieth, and thereupon the said 4 knights went from the Bar, and within a short time after, sitting the Court, they returned the pannel written in parchment, in this form, Nomina recognitorum, &c. inter A. petentem, & B. tenentem, and so set down their names, six other knights, ten esquires, and four gentlemen, and the justices did commend them for their good and sufficient pannel, and thereupon a venire facias was awarded against the said parties.

In debt upon a bond for performance of covenants, the case was, I. S. by indenture covenanted with I. D. that such a woman, viz. R. S. at all times at the request and charges of I. D. should make, execute, and suffer such reasonable assurances of such lands to the said I. D. or his heirs as the said I. D. or his heirs should reasonably devise or require. I. D. devised a fine to be levied by the said woman, and required her to come before the justices of assise to acknowledge it, and the woman came before the said justices to that intent, and because the said woman at that time was not compos mentis the said justices did refuse to take the conusans of the said fine, and this was averred in the pleading in an action brought upon the said bond for performance of covenants, where the breach was assigned in not acknowledging of the said fine, and upon the special matter the party did demur in law, and the opinion of the whole Court was, that the condition was not broken, for the words are general to make such reasonable assurances which, &c. but if the words had been special to acknowledge a fine, there if the justice doth refuse to take such acknowledgment, the bond is forfeited, for the party hath taken upon him that it should be done.

CCCCXXV. FABIAN AND WINDSORS CASE.

Leases. Demand of Rent. Conditions taken strictly.

In trespass for entring into his house or inn at Uxbridge, it was found by special verdict, that the plaintiff leased to the defendant the said house for seven years, rendring rent at the Feasts of the Annunciation of our Lady and Saint Michael, &c. with condition, that if the said rent shall be behind by the space of ten days, &c. that it shall be lawful to the lessor to re-enter: and afterward at the Feast of the Annunciation, 31 Eliz. the rent was behind, and the tenth day after the lessor came to the said house a quarter of an hour before the sun setting and demanded the rent in these words, I demand three pound ten shillings for a half years rent of this house now due, and there continued till the sun was set, but no rent was paid: but note, that the issue was, if he came to the house half an hour before sun set, and there continued demanding the half years rent of the premises due at the Feast of the Annunciation of our Lady then last past. It was moved by Fenner, that upon this verdict the issue is not found for the plaintiff, i. the issue was upon the half hour, and the quarter part of the hour was found, 2. the issue was, if the demand were of the rent due at the Feast of the Annunciation passed, and the verdict is for rent due at the time of the demand; &c. And it was the opinion of Anderson, Periam, and Walmesley, that as to the first point the verdict was good enough for the plaintiff: Windham contrary. But it was agreed by them all, that if in demand of rent (ut supra) the lessor, or any on his part doth demand one penny more or less than is due, or in his demand doth not shew the certainty of the rent, and the day of payment of it, and when it was due, the demand is not good, for a condition which goes in defeazance of an estate is odious in law, and no re-entry in such case shall be given, unless the demand be precisely and strictly followed.

CCCCXXVII. CARTER AND CLAYCOLES CASE.

Leases. Special Statutes ought to be pleaded.

In ejectione firmæ by Carter against Claycole, the plaintiff declared upon a lease made by the wardens and fellows of All-souls Colledge, 1. July, 10 Eliz. And it was found by special verdict, that Overden warden of the said colledge, and the fellows, &c. leased unto the plaintiff, to have and to hold from the Feast of the Annunciation next following, to the end of twenty years, and made a letter of attorney to one to enter into the said manor, and to seal and deliver the deed of the said lease in their names to the plaintiff, who by force thereof entred into part of the demised premises, and there did seal and deliver the same, &c. But it was not found that any rent was reserved thereupon; and if this lease were good, then the jury found for the plaintiff;

but if not, then for the defendant: Cooper Serjeant, It hath been objected, that this lease being but for twenty years, is not warranted by the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 10. for the words of the statute are, Other than for the term of 21 years; as to that, it was not the intent of the statute, but only to abridge the great and long leases heretofore made by colledges, and to limit such leases to a certain measure of time, ut supra, for twenty-one years or three lives, & non ultra, but on this side as much as they would, which was granted by the whole Court: another matter was because it is not found, that the due rent was reserved upon the said lease (accustomed yearly rent or more) and yet the same is good enough, for if the other party will take advantage of such defect he ought to shew the same, otherwise it shall be intended, because it is found that such lease was made, that it was made according to the statute: for if a man is to make title to himself by a conditional lease, he is not to plead the condition, but only the lease; and if the other party will defeat the lease by the condition, he shall shew the same. And in this case, the defendant also ought to have shewed the statute: by which such defective leases are made void: also it hath been objected, that by the statute of 18 Eliz. the third part of the rent ought to be reserved in corn, and here is not found any corn; as to that, it is to be considered, that the said statute is not a general law, whereof the Judges are bounden to take notice, but it ought to be pleaded, for it extends but to four places, viz. Cambridge, Oxford, Winchester, and Eaton, and therefore such a statute ought to be pleaded, or given in evidence, and found by verdict: as where a man pleads a general pardon, in which divers persons are excepted, he ought to plead it specially, and shew, that he is not any of the persons excepted, 8 E. 4. 7. 28 H. 7. So special customs ought to be pleaded, gavelkind, borough-English, 21 E. 4. 55. 36. The King grants to the citizens of Norwich, &c. And afterwards by Act of Parliament, all their liberties, &c. are confirmed by a general confirmation to all cities and boroughs, this is a special Act, and ought to be pleaded; by Brian, 59, 13 E. 4. 8. The Lord Saies case, an Act of Parliament, that all corporations made by the King H. 6. shall be void, is a special Act, and ought to be pleaded: and see 28 H. 8. 27. & 28. Dyer. If the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 13. of lands taken to ferm by ecclesiastical persons be a special law: Yelverton contrary; The statute of 13 Eliz. is a special law and ought to be pleaded, but the statute of 13 Eliz. is now a general law, which see Hollands case, 39 Eliz. and Damports case, 45 Eliz. and this Act of 13 Eliz. is general in respect of time, for it extendeth to all time after (from henceforth) and to all persons to whom such leases shall be made, the words the statute are, scil. To any person or [307] persons, in respect of persons who shall lease, all spiritual persons: general in respect of the end, which is the maintenance of learning, which extends to the common profit, &c. Drew Serjeant, That this act of 13 Eliz. is general in respect of restraint only, and extends only to spiritual persons, and therefore ought to be pleaded, for otherwise the Court shall not take notice of it; as the statute of 23 H. 6. of Sheriffs ought to be pleaded, which see in the case of Dive and Manningham, Plowden, 64, 65. And although the statute ought to be pleaded, yet this lease is not void against the warden who made it, but against his successor, although no rent be reserved upon it, notwithstanding that the perclose of the statute be (utterly void and of none effect, to all intents, constructions, and purposes) so upon the statute of 1 Eliz. concerning leases made by bishops, the law had been so taken in the case of the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfeild upon a grant of the next avoidance, that although it doth not bind the successors, yet it shall bind the grantor himself. So here this lease being made by the present warden and fellows of the colledge aforesaid, although it be not sufficient to bind the successor, yet it shall bind the warden who made the lease. Puckering contrary: And as to the case of 13 E. 4. 8. the reason there is, because there is an exception in the said statute of divers grants made by King H. 6. and therefore the said Act ought to be specially pleaded: and see 34 H. 6. 34. by Prisoit: but in this Act of 13 Eliz. there is not any exception, and although it be a general Act with a restraint, yet such an act ought not to be pleaded, and therefore 27 H. 8. 23. in an action upon the statute of 21 H. 8. for taking of lands to ferm by spiritual persons, he need not make mention of the statute: and afterwards, the justices did advise upon this point, whether the lease be so void, that it be void against a stranger: so as the defendant who doth not claim under the colledge, and who hath no title to the land may avoid it. And Periam Justice denied the case put by Puckering: A. mortgages lands to B. upon a usurious contract for one hundred pounds, and before the day of payment B. is ousted by C. against whom B. brings an action, C. cannot plead the Statute of Usury, for he hath no title: for the estate is void against the mortgagor. Another exception was taken to the declaration, because the plaintiff had declared, upon a lease by the warden and fellows, without naming any name of the warden, 13 E. 4. 8. 18 E. 4. 8. in trespass the defendant doth justifie, because that the free-hold was in the dean and chapter, and he as servant, and by their commandment entred; and exception was taken to that plea, because he hath not shewed the name of the dean, scil. the proper name: so if a lease be made by dean and chapter in these words, Nos decan. & capituli, the same lease is void, which was granted by the Court: and 12 H. 4. 251. a provost granted an annuity by the name of provost of such a colledge, without any name of baptism, and afterwards the grantee brought a writ of annuity against the successor of the said provost; and by Hull, The writ is well enough, but the Christian name ought to be set down in the writ: so here, because that the name of baptism of the warden is not in the declaration, the same is not good: but the opinion of the whole Court was, that the declaration is good enough, and they did rely especially upon the book of 21 E. 4. 15. 16. where debt is brought by the dean and chapter without any Christian name, and the writ holden good: Anderson: It stands with reason, that for as much as the colledge was incorporated by the name of warden and fellows, and not by any Christian name that they may purchase and lease by such name without any Christian name, and may be impleaded, and implead others by such name, and as the fellows in such case need not to be named by their Christian names, no more ought the warden: but of a parson, vicar, chauntry priest, it is otherwise, for in such case the name of baptism ought to be ad-[308]-ded: it was also objected, that because the letter of attorney was to enter in the manor, and all the lands and tenements of the colledge in such a town, and to seal the indenture of lease in the name of the lessors, and to deliver it to the plaintiff as their deed; now the attorney in executing of this warrant hath not pursued it, for he hath only entred into the lands, but it is not found that he entred into the manor, and so the lease is void. And it was said by Puckering, That if I lease two acres in two several counties, rendring for the one acre 10s. and for the other acre 10s. and make a letter of attorney to make livery in both; if the attorney entreth into one acre and makes livery, the same is void, for the attorney hath not pursued his authority, for peradventure I would not have leased the acre whereof livery is made for such rent of 10s. being perhaps of greater value, but with the other acre which was of lesser value, and so the mis-executing of my warrant shall prejudice me. Windham, Perhaps if one entire rent had been reserved out of both acres, it may be that by the livery in one acre all is void: but by Puckering, One entire rent cannot be reserved upon such a lease of two acres in several counties. Walmesley denied the case put by Puckering, for the authority is executed well enough, for it doth not appear upon the verdict, but that the colledge was in possession at the time of the lease made, and then there needed not any such entry, but the bare sealing and delivery of the attorney is good enough. And also it doth not appear by verdict, that the colledge hath any manor, and therefore it shall be so intended; and then the case is no other but that, a man leaseth a manor, and certain lands in D. and makes a letter of attorney to make livery of them, where he hath nothing in the manor, and the attorney makes livery of the land without medling with the manor, the same is a good livery, and the authority duly executed: but if it had been expresly found, that the colledge had such a manor there, then the entry in the land only, without medling with the manor, and the livery made accordingly, should not be good: but yet afterwards he seemed to be of other opinion. And as to that which hath been objected, that the lease is void to all intents and purposes, according to the words of the statute (for by some it cannot be resembled to the case cited before, of the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfeild, that such a grant should bind him and not his successors;) for if this grant in our case shall not be void presently, it shall never be void; for the colledge never dieth no more than dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty. To that it was answered by Drew, that although there be some difference betwixt such corporations, and that the words of the statute are general (void to all intents, constructions, and purposes,) yet they shall be construed according to the meaning of the makers of the Act, whose scope was to provide for the successors, and not for the present incumbent, and to the utter impoverishing of all successors, without any respect to the party himself, as it appeareth by the preamble of the said statute; where it is observed, that by long and unreasonable leases, the decay of spiritual livings is procured; for the remedying and preventing of which long leases this Act was made, and that the successors should not be bound thereby. And these leases are not void, simpliciter sed secundum quid, i.e. as to the successors: as upon the statute of 11 H. 7. cap. 20. Discontinuances made by women, &c. shall be void and of none effect; yet such a discontinuance made is good against the woman her self: so upon the statute of 1 Eliz. concerning bishops. See now Coke, Lincoln Colledge case, 37 Eliz. in the three reports 60. a lease made by dean and chapter not warranted by the said statute, shall not be void until after the death of the dean, who was party to the lease. So upon the Statute of 13 Eliz. of Fraudulent Conveyances, such fraudulent conveyance is [309] not void against the grantor, but against those who are provided for by the said statute, and that the lease in the principal case is not void, but voidable, all the justices agreed to be avoided by the colledge, or any other who claim by it; and by Anderson, If such a lease should be void, then great mischief would fall to the colledge, for whose benefit this statute was made, for if such lease be made rendring a small rent, then if before the defect be found or espied the rent was arrear, the colledge could not have remedy for the said rent. Also by Periam, Such a lessee might have an action of trespass against a stranger, who entreth upon the land, which proves that the lease is not void, but voidable; and afterwards notwithstanding all the objections, judgment was given for the plaintiff, and the chief authority which moved Periam Justice to be of such opinion was Lemans case, cited before 28 H. 8. Dyer 27. where a lease was made to a spiritual person against the statute of 21 H. 8. and a bond or obligation for performance of covenants, and thereupon an action was brought, and the plaintiff therein had judgment and recovered, which could not have been if the lease were utterly void against the lessor and lessee, as the very words of the statute are; and although it is not alledged in the book, that that was any cause of the judgment, yet in his opinion it was the greatest cause of the judgment in that case.

In an action upon the case, it was agreed by the whole Court, that where judgment is given, that the plaintiff shall recover, and because it is not known what damages, therefore a writ issueth to enquire of the damages, that the same is not a perfect judgment before the damages returned and adjudged, and therefore they also agreed, that after such award, and before the damages adjudged, that any matter might be shewed in Court in arrest of the judgment; and by Periam Justice, the difference is, where damages are the principal thing to be recovered, and where not; for if damages be the principal, then the full judgment is not given until they be returned; but in debt where a certain sum is demanded it is otherwise.

CCCCXXIX. Maidwell and Andrews Case.

Covenant. Traverse.

Maidwell brought an action of covenant against Andrews, and the case was this, That R. was seised of lands, and leased the same for life, rendring rent; and afterwards devised the reversion to his wife for life, and died. Andrews the defendant took to wife the wife of the devisor, the devisee of the reversion; afterwards Andrews bargained and sold the said reversion to one Marland and his heirs during his own life, and afterwards granted the rent to the plaintiff, and covenanted that the plaintiff should enjoy the said rent during his term, absque aliquo legitimo impedimento of the said Andrews, his heirs or assigns, or any other person, claiming from the said Marland. Marland died seised, and the same descended to B. his heir, and the breach of the covenant was assigned, in this, i. in the heir of Marland, who hath the rent by reason of the grant of the reversion to Marland, ut supra, the defendant pleaded the grant of the reversion to Marland, per scriptum (without saying, sigillo suo sigillat. & hic in Curia prolat.) absque hoc, that the said reversion and rent descended to B. and thereupon the plaintiff did demur in law, and the causes of the demurrer was assigned by Yelverton Serjeant. 1. The grant of [310] the reversion is pleaded per scriptum, and he doth not say (sigillat.) for a reversion cannot pass without deed, although it be granted but for years; and a bare writing is not a deed without sealing of it, and therefore the pleading ought to be per scriptum suum sigillat. or per factum suum; for factum suum implies the ensealing and delivery. 2. It ought to be pleaded hic in Cur. prolat. for the Court is to see such deed, to the end they may know if it be a lawful deed, without razure, interlining, or other defects. 3. The defendant hath traversed the descent, where he ought to have traversed the dying seised; for of every thing descendable the dying seised is the substance, and the descent is but the effect: and although the grant of the reversion was but for the life of the grantor, yet the estate granted is descendable, as 27 E. 3. 31. tenant by the courtesie leaseth his estate to one and his heirs, the grantor dieth, his heir entreth, and a good bar against him in the reversion; and see 14 E. 3. Action 56. Annuity granted to one and his heirs for the term of another mans life, the grantor dieth, living cestuy que vie, the heir of the grantor brings a writ of annuity, and it was holden maintainable; and he said, that where the dying seised is confessed and avoided by the other side, there the descent is traversable, and not the dying seised, and that was the case betwixt Vernon and Gray. In an avowry Vernon conveyed the lands from the Lord Powes to him, as next heir to him, because the Lord Powes died seised in his demesn as of fee without issue, and the plaintiff conveyed from the said Lord Powes by devise, and traversed the descent to the avowant, for the dying seised was confessed and avoided by the devise, 22 Eliz. Dyer 366. See 21 H. 7. 31. In trespass the defendant saith, that T. was seised, and died seised, and that the lands descended to him as son and heir, and that he entred; the plaintiff said, that T. was seised, and took to wife K. and they had issue the plaintiff, and died seised, and the land descended to him, and traversed the descent to the defendant; and see Sir William Merings case, 14 H. 8. 22, 23. But if the parties do not claim by one and the same person, or the dying seised be not confessed and avoided, there the dying seised shall be traversed, and not the descent. Glanvil Serjeant, be the bar insufficient or not, if the declaration be not sufficient, the plaintiff shall not have judgment, and here is not any breach of covenant, viz. that the plaintiff shall enjoy it without any lawful impediment of the defendant, his heirs or assigns, or any claiming by Marland, and then if the heir of Marland cannot make any lawful claim, then there is not any breach of covenant assigned; and he said, because it is not shewed that the land is not holden in socage, the devise is not good, for it may be that the land is holden in capite: but admit the devise good, that when Andrews bargains and sells unto Marland, and the tenant never attorns, then nothing passeth, and then the heir of Marland cannot make any lawful claim or lawful impediment. Periam Justice, Here Marland was assignee of Andrews, and if he or his heirs make claim, although that the assignment be not sufficient in law, yet because he hath colour by this assignment his claim is lawful, and so there is a breach of the covenant; and although it is not alledged, that the land devised is holden in socage, yet the devise is good for two parts of the land. Anderson Justice, If it be good but for two parts, then is the reversion apportioned, and the rent destroyed, and so Marland hath not any rent by his purchase of the reversion, and so he can't lawfully disturb the plaintiff. The law doth create his apportionment, which grows by the devise, and therefore the rent shall not be destroyed; but if it had been done by the act of the party, it had been otherwise; and I would willingly hear, if the heir of Marland be assignee of Andrews, for otherwise he is not within the words of the covenant, for Marland hath an estate to him and his heirs for the life of another: [311] now after the death of Marland, his heir is a special occupant, and vide H. 26 Eliz. Rot. 560. in the Common Pleas, such an heir shall not have his age.

Administration.

Katharine Gillam, administratrix of John Gillam, brought ejectione firmæ against Leonard Lovelace, and upon not guilty pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved for the defendant in arrest of judgment, that the declaration was not good, because the granting of letters of administration is set forth in this manner, viz. Administratio commissa fuit querenti per Willielmum Lewen vicarium generalem in spiritualibus Epi. Roff. without averring, that at the time of the granting of the letters of administration, the bishop was in remotis agendis, for a bishop present in England cannot have vicarium: but as to that, it was said by the whole Court, that the vicar general in spiritualibus, amounts to a chancellor, for in truth the chancellor is vicar general to the bishop. Another exception was, because the declaration is not Epi. Roff. loci illius Ordinarii; but that was not allowed, for all the presidents and course of the Court is, that by way of declaration such allegation needs not, but by way of bar it is necessary. Another exception was taken, because the plaintiff hath declared of an ejectment, and also quod bona & catalla ibidem invent. cepit, &c. And here, in the verdict the damages, as well for the ejectment as for the goods and chattels, are entirely taxed. It was adjorned.

CCCCXXXVI. GREEVES CASE.

Replevin. Devises.

In a replevin, the defendant made conusans as bayliff to one Greeves and Rockwood, &c. and said, that A. was seised of the lands, and 6 Eliz. enfeoffed certain persons in fee to the use of his last will, by which he willed, that his feoffees should stand seised of the said lands, until the said Greeves had levied of the profits of the said lands the sum of one hundred pounds. It was objected against this conusans, that here is no devise, for A. at the time of the devise had not any feoffees; but the exception was disallowed by the Court: and they cited the case of 15 Eliz. Dyer 323. Lingens case, A. made a feoffment in fee to his use, and afterwards devised that his feoffees should be seised to the use of his daughter, that the same was a good devise of the land. CCCCXXXVIII. LEIGH AND OKELEY AND CHRISTMASS CASE.

Custom.

Oliphe Leigh fermor of the Queen of a wood called Meerherst Wood in Warplesden in the county of Surrey, brought an action of trespass against Henry Okeley and Robert Christmass for breaking of the said wood, and therein entring and cutting down of two hundred loads of wood, and carrying away the same, &c. The defendants pleaded, that before the time in which the trespass was supposed, &c. that King H. 8. was seised of the manor of Warplesden, whereof the said wood was parcel, of which manor a close called Withybod containing eleven acres, eidem bosco adjacent. was parcel, and that the said wood is, and time out of mind, &c. was closed and separated with hedges and ditches from the said eleven acres, which said hedges and ditches, per totum tempus prædict. fuerunt & adhuc sunt prædict. bosco spectant. & pertinent. And that the said eleven acres are, and time out of mind were customary lands, parcel of the manor aforesaid, and demised and demisable in fee-simple: and that the said King H. 8. at a court holden 38 H. 8. by his steward demised the said eleven acres by copy, to John Goring and his heirs, and that within the said manor there is this custom, that every copyholder, tenant of the said eleven acres, &c. hath used and accustomed, per se vel servientes suos per eorum præcept. succidere, capere, & asportare subboscum in prædict. bosco in quo, &c. pro reparatione prædictarum sepium & defensionum inter prædict. boscum in quo, &c. and the said eleven acres, &c. quandocunque eædem sepes & defensiones in decasu extiterint; and shewed further, that at the time of the trespass, &c. the said [314] hedges and fences were in decay, and so justified: upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. It was argued by Godfrey, that the prescription is not good; for it appeareth, that this customary land is contigue adjacens to the said wood, i. where the trespass was done: and of common right, the making of the hedge doth appertain to the owner of the wood: and the prescription is no more, but to take wood in the lands of another adjoyning to my land, to make the hedges of the same land in which the wood groweth, which cannot be a good prescription, for it sounds in charge, and not to the profit of him who prescribes: which see 22 E. 3. Prescription 40. Trespass against an abbot, because where the plaintiff was farmor of the King of his hundred of D. and by reason thereof he might make attachment, and distrain for the debts of the King within the said hundred, and where for a certain debt of the King he distrained the beasts of one A. and the abbot made rescous; to which the abbot said, that he was lord of the manor of D. within which manor there was this custom, &c. That if any distress be taken within the said manor, that the same should be put into the pound of the said abbot of the same manor, and not driven out of the manor, and there ought the distress to remain three days, so that if the party would agree within the three days, that then he should have his beasts; and he said, that the plaintiff would have driven the said beasts out of the said manor, and that he would not suffer him, upon which there was a demurrer, because it is not any profit to the abbot, but a charge to keep the beasts of another. Also he said, that the King shall not be bound by such a custom as another person shall, whereupon judgment was given for the plaintiff: so here in the principal case, there shall be no damage to the defendant if the wood be not fenced; for if his cattel escape into the wood he may justifie it, because it is in default of the plaintiffs inclosure: and if the beasts of the plaintiff escape into the lands of the defendant, he may take them damage feasant for the cause aforesaid, 21 H. 7. 20. A custom is pleaded, that if any tenants of the manor shall take the cattel of any one damage feasant, and shall therefore distrain them, that then the tenant so distraining them ought to bring them to the lords pound, which if he shall not do, at the next court he shall be amerced in a certain sum to the lord of a manor to be paid, and that was holden no good custom, because it is against common right, and the common law; for by the common law and common reason, every one finding cattel in his own land damage feasant may impound them in his own land, and the lord is not damnified thereby: so it is of a by-law, that every one who holdeth so many acres of lands in such a town, shall yearly pay a certain sum of mony to the church of the same town, and shall forfeit for every default of payment thereof twenty pounds, such by-law, although it hath continued time out of mind, yet it is not of any validity, because for not payment of the said sum to the church, the lord of the manor is not damnified, and therefore he shall not have any gain; contrary if the penalty had been limited to the church-wardens, because they are bound to repair the church. Another exception was taken to the form of the prescription (quandocunque eædem sepes & defensiones in decasu extiterint) and that is too general, for so they might be in decay by his own default, as if he himself wrongfully pull up the hedges, in which case there is no reason but that he should repair them at his own costs and charges, and therefore he ought to have pleaded cum in de casu extiterint in the default of the tenant of the wood. Another exception was taken, because that here this custom is pleaded particularly, and appropriated to the eleven acres only, and is not extended to the whole manor; and to that purpose the case of 40 E. 3. 27. was cited, where a custom is applied to [315] one part of a town, as to say that such a house within such a town is of the nature of gavelkind, and the rest of the town is guildable. See 21 Eliz. Dyer 363. It was adjorned, &c.

CCCCXXXIX. Hare and Okelies Case.

Trespass. Exposition of words.

Michael Hare, and others, brought an action of trespass against Okelie for breaking of their close, and carrying away their corn; and upon not guilty, it was found by special verdict, that the said Michael Hare was sole seised of the said close, where, &c. and so seised, exposuit ad culturam, Anglice, did put forth to tillage the said land to the other plaintiffs in form following, viz. That the said Michael should find one half of the corn sowed, and the other plaintiffs the other half, and that the said land should be ploughed and tilled, and the corn thereof coming should be reaped and cut at the charges of the other plaintiffs, and so cut should be divided by the shock, and the said Michael to have the one half, and the other plaintiffs the other half, &c. And it was the opinion of the whole Court, that notwithstanding these words (exposuit ad culturam) that no estate in the soil passed to the other plaintiffs, but the said Michael did remain sole seised as before; but by Anderson, upon the severance of the corn, peradventure a property in the said corn might be in all the plaintiffs: but because it appeareth, that Michael was sole seised, and the other plaintiffs had not any thing in the land: therefore it was adjudged, that they could not joyn in the action of trespass for breaking of the close; and therefore it was awarded by the Court, that the plaintiffs nihil cap. per breve.

CCCCXLII. UNDERHILL AND SAVAGES CASE.

Pluralities. Prohibition. Archdeaconry.

Savage was presented to a benefice, and afterwards was presented to another, and then purchased a dispensation (which was too late) and then was qualified, and afterwards accepted the Archdeaconry of Gloucester: and Underhill who had the archdeaconry libelled in the Spiritual Court against the said Savage, where it is holden that all ecclesiastical promotions in such cases are void, and now Savage sued a prohibition. It was argued by Atkinson, that the prohibition did lye, for the patron hath his remedy by our law, by a writ of right of advowson. See 29 E. 3. 44. If avoidance be by cession or deprivation, and the next presentment come in question, it shall be determined by the Kings Court; and here when he accepteth of another benefice, it is cession by the common law, but there ought to be a sentence; but now there needs not any sentence, for by the statute of 21 H. 8. 13. the church is ipso facto void. But it was objected, an archdeaconry is not within the statute, for it is not any cure with souls: also an archdeaconry is a late promotion, and therefore it cannot be void by the statute. Lewknor contra. The patronage here doth not come in debate; but if the defendant in the Spiritual Court will plead, that the plaintiff is not patron, but such an one, then a prohibition lieth: withal the justices granted, and it was said by Wray, that a doctor of the civil law had been with him, and affirmed to him that their law is, that if one having a benefice with cure of souls accepts an archdeaconry, the archdeaconry is void; but he said, that he conceived that upon the statute of 21 H. 8. the law is qualified by reason of a proviso there, scil. provided that no deanry, archdeaconry, &c. be taken or comprehended under the name of a benefice, having cure of souls, in any article above specified.

CCCCXLV. Pigot and Harringtons Case.

Error. Attaint. Fine upon an Infant reversed.

Pigot brought a writ of error upon a fine levied by him within age, the case was, that the husband and wife were tenants for life, the remainder to the infant in fee, and they three levied a fine, and the infant only brought the writ of error. It was objected by Tanfield, that they all three ought to joyn in this writ, and the husband and wife ought to be summoned and severed. Atkinson contrary, for here the husband and wife have not any cause of action, but the infant only is grieved by the fine, 35 H. 6. 19, 20, 21, &c. In conspiracy against many, it was found for the plaintiff, and one of the defendants brought attaint, and assigned the false oath in omnibus quæ dixerunt, but afterwards abridged the assignment of the false oath, as to the damages, and so the attaint well lies. Two women are joynt-tenants, they take husbands, the husbands and their wives make a feoffment in fee, the husbands dye, the wives shall have several cui in vita's, for the coverture of the one was not the coverture of the other, 7 H. 4. 112. In appeal against four, they were outlawed, and two of them brought error upon it, and good, 29 E. 3. 14. In assize against three coparceners, they plead by bailiff, nul tenent de franktenement, &c. and found that two of them were disseisors and tenants, and that the third had nothing, and afterwards the three coparceners brought attaint, and after appearance, the third sister, who was acquit, was nonsuit, and afterwards by award the writ did abate. Tanfield, Although that the cause be several, yet the erronious act was joynt, and the receiving of the fine, and that record being entire, ought to be pursued accordingly, and then the husband and wife shall be summoned and severed, and it is not like to the case of 29 E. 3. cited before, for there the third coparcener had not any cause of attaint, for no verdict passed against her. Wray, As the error is here assigned, the writ is well brought, for the error is not assigned in the record, but without it in the person of the infant, and that is the cause of the action by him and for no other. Two infants levy a fine, although they joyn in error, yet they ought to assign errors severally, and they may sue several writs of error; and afterwards it was holden by the Court that the writ was good, and the fine reversed as to the infant only.

CCCCXLVI. SCOVELL AND CAVELS CASE.

Leases.

In ejectione firmæ by Scovell against Cavel, the declaration was general upon a lease made by William Pain, and it was found by special verdict, that William Leversedge was seised of the lands, &c. and leased the same to Stephen Cavel, John Cavel, and William Pain, habend. to them for their lives and for the life of the survivor of them; provided always, and it was covenanted, granted and agreed betwixt the parties, that the said John Cavel, and William Pain, should not take any benefit, profit or commodity of the land, during the life of Stephen Cavel, and further that the said William Pain should not take any benefit, &c. during the life of John Cavel, &c. Stephen Cavel, died, John Cavel entred, and afterwards William Pain entred, and made the lease to the plaintiff, upon whom the defendant entred; and if the entry of William Pain were lawful was the question. [318] Gawdy Serjant, His entry is not lawful. It will be agreed, that if a man lease to three for their lives, they are joynt-tenants, but if by the habendum the estate be limited to them by way of remainder, the joynt estate in the premises is gone, and the land demised shall go in remainder; and I agree that in deeds-poll, the words shall be taken strong against the grantor, contrary in the case of indentures, the words there shall be taken according to the intent of the parties, for there the words are the words of both: see Browning and Beestons case. 2 and 3. Ma. Plowd. 132. where by indenture the lessee covenanted to render and pay for the land leased such a rent, the same is a good reservation, although it be not by apt words; and here in our case, this proviso and covenant, grant and agreement doth amount to such a limitation by way of remainder, especially when such a clause followeth immediately after the habendum. Coke contrary: The office of the habendum is to limit and explain the estate contained in the premises, and here the habendum hath done its office, and made it a joynt estate, and therefore the clause afterward comes too late, and in truth is repugnant and utterly void, as to such purpose; but perhaps an action of covenant lies upon it. Wray, It hath been by me adjudged, if a lease be made to three habendum successive, the same is a void word, and the lessees are joynt-tenants; contrary of copyhold by reason of custom; and here the proviso and the clause following, is contrary to the habendum, and repugnant, and so void, as to the dividing of the estate by way of remainder, which Gawdy Justice granted. Heale Serjeant, This case hath been adjudged, 16 Eliz. A lease to three habendum to the use of the first for life, and after to the use of the second for life, and after to the use of the third for life, the same is good. Clench Justice, This proviso follows the habendum, and is a sentence to explain the sentence. Wray, & Shute, It is another sentence, although it immediately follows the habendum. Clench, If the words had been provided, that although it be limited, (ut supra) in the habendum, scil. the first named shall have the lands to himself for life, &c. it had been good by way of remainder. Wray, Our case at bar, is not that any person shall take the remainder, but that any of them shall not take the profits during the life of the other. Tanfield took exception to the verdict, because the life of Pain is not found in the verdict. Coke, This is a verdict and no pleading, and the opinion of the Court was, that the verdict was good, notwithstanding the said exception, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Appeal of Maheim. Damages.

Robert Hudson brought an appeal of mayhem against Robert Leigh for maiming his right hand, and for cutting of his veins and sinews, which by that means are become dry, so as thereby he hath lost the use of his fingers. To which the defendant pleaded, that heretofore the plaintiff had brought against him an action of assault and battery, and wounding, and therein had judgment to recover, and execution was sued forth by scire facias, and satisfaction acknowledged upon record, of 200 marks assisted by the jury for the damages, and 11l. 10s. de incremento by the Court, with averment of all identities. Cooper Serjeant, The same is a good bar, and although that an appeal, and an action of trespass are diverse actions in nature, and in many circumstances, yet as to the recovery of damages, the one shall bind the other, see 38 E. 3. 17. a good case. In trespass for breaking of his close and battery, the defendant pleaded, that before that the plaintiff by bill in the marshalsey hath recovered his damages for the [319] same trespass, &c. and vouched the record, and the record was sent, the which was varying from the record pleaded; for the record vouched, was only of battery without any thing of breaking of the close: and also the battery is taxed at another day, &c. and with averment; yet as to the battery it was holden good enough with averment, and as to the breaking of the close the plaintiff had judgment, see 41 E. 3. brev. 548. 12 R. 2. Coronæ 110. and the case betwixt Rider plaintiff and Cobham defendant, Pasch. 19 Eliz. Rot. 74. it was clearly holden and adjudged, that after a recovery in trespass an appeal of maheim doth not lie; and the book which deceives the plaintiff is 22 E. 3. 82. where it is said by Thorp, that notwithstanding recovery in appeal of maheim, yet he may after recover in trespass, but non dicit e contra. Popham contrary, The plea in bar is not good, for the averment is, that the stroke and the wounding supposed in the writ of trespass, and in his appeal of maheim are all one, but it is not averred that any damages were given for the maheim, or that the maheim was given in evidence; for it might be, that there was not any maheim when the trespass was brought, but that after by the drying of the wound it became a maheim, and then the action did rise; as if a man upon a contract promiseth to pay me 10l. at Michaelmas, and other 10l. at Christmas, if he doth not pay the 10l. at Michaelmas, I may have an action upon the promise for the not payment of that 10l. and afterwards I may have another action and recover damages for the not payment of the 10l. at Christmas, but if I do not begin any action before Christmas, I cannot recover damages but once, for the whole promise, and damages shall be given in evidence; and if I be disseised, I may recover damages for the first entry, and notwithstanding that I shall have an assise, and if I do re-enter, I shall have trespass and recover damages for the mean profits, and the damages recovered for the first entry shall be recouped; and the book cited before Fitz. Coronæ 110, doth not make for the defendant, but rather for the plaintiff, for there it is averred, that the maheim was given in evidence, in the action of trespass, which it is not in our case. Egerton Solicitor, We have shewed, that succisio venarum, in this appeal specified is eadem succisio & vulneratio mentioned in the trespass. Coke, Although the identity of the wounding and cutting of the veins are averred, yet it is not averred, that the damages recovered in the trespass were given for this maheim. Wray Chief Justice, The jurors are to take consideration of the wound in an action of trespass, and to give damages according to the hurt, and we ought to think that they have done accordingly, and if they have not so done, the party may pray that the Court by inspection would adjudge upon it, and so increase the damages: but now when the jury hath given great damages, scil. 200 marks, with which the party hath been contented, it should be hard to give the plaintiff another action, and if there be any such special matter, that it was not become a maheim at the time of the action of trespass brought, but it is become a maheim of later time by drying, the plaintiff ought to have shewed the same to the Court, and so have helped himself, for otherwise it shall not be so intended, but that the averment made by the defendant, is good enough to oust the plaintiff of this action ; and the judgment cited 19 Eliz. before, was given by me, after I was constituted Chief Justice, and this bar as I conceive was drawn out of the pleading in 19 Eliz. and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

Wray, It is no severance, for the chief office is an office of dignity, which may remain in the King, but this under office is an office of necessity, and the King himself cannot execute it, by which of necessity he ought to grant it. Another matter was moved, if the grant of the King unto the Earl of Shrewsbury were good, because in it the grant to Verney of the said under office, is not recited according to the statute of 6 H. 8. 9. CCCCLII. Michill and Hores Case.

Attachment of Goods by Custom of Exeter. Error.

Michil did affirm a plaint in the Court of the city of Exeter against Hore for twenty pounds, and upon nihil returned, it was surmised; that Trosse had certain monies in his hands due to Hore, and according to the custom of Exeter the said monies were attached in the hands of Trosse, who appeared upon the attachment, and pleaded, that he owed nothing to Hore, upon which there was a demurrer, and judgment given against Trosse because that Trosse ought to have pleaded, not only that he owed him nothing, but further that he had not any goods of Hores in his hands: and thereupon Trosse brought a writ of error, and assigned the error in the principal matter, upon which it was demurred, and judgment given against the plaintiff, because that the plea of Trosse (that he owed him nothing) is good enough, for if there be not a debt, it is not attachable upon such attachment: and it is a good plea to a common intent, and altogether in use in London, where such custom is: another error was assigned, for that Michill had recovered costs against Trosse, where it ought not to be; and also judgment is not given, that Trosse should be discharged against Hore; and afterwards the judgment given in Exeter was reversed.

CCCCLIII. DENNIS AND SAINT JOHNS CASE.

Debt. Non est factum.

In debt upon an obligation, against Oliver Saint John, and Alice his wife, as heir of her father: the defendants pleaded, non est factum of the father: and it was found by special verdict, that the obligation was made by the father of the wife to the plaintiff and another, where as in truth, the plaintiff hath declared upon an obligation made to himself only without speaking of any other joynt obligee, and that the plaintiff as survivor hath brought the action, and if upon the matter it shall be said the deed of the defendant in manner as the plaintiff hath declared, the jury refer unto the Court: and the case, 14 E. 4. 1. b. If three enfeoff me, and I plead, that two did enfeoff me and the same be traversed, it shall be found against me, for the feoffment is a joynt act by them all: but if a man enfeoffeth me and two others, and they dye, so as I have all by survivor, in pleading I may shew the feoffment was made to me alone: so 46 E. 3. 17. a. Three joynt-tenants in fee make a lease for life, and afterwards two of the joynt-tenants release to the third, who brings an action of wast against the lessee, and the writ was, that he held of his lease only, and the writ was awarded good. Walmesley, This plea, non est factum, upon this matter is no good plea, for he hath not pleaded it respective as to the obligation, but generally, non est factum suum, which refers to the obligor only, and the issue is not whether he made the deed to the plaintiff or not, but generally whether he made it at all: for there is a difference, nihil debet, for that refers to the plaintiff, and where he pleads non est factum: which Shuttleworth granted: see 1 Eliz. Dyer, 167. Tawes case, this plea non est factum, hath not any respect to the obligee, for if the obligee be a monk, and there is another who bears the name of the obligee, yet in those cases, the obligor cannot safely plead non est factum; but where one is sued who bears the name of the obligor, there non est factum is a good plea: and see 10 Eliz. Dyer, 279. W. S. was bound in an obligation to one H. by the name of I. S. and upon that obligation an action was brought against him by the name of W. S. and he pleaded non est factum, and the special matter was found, and it was ruled, that upon that verdict the plaintiff should not recover, but the best way for the plaintiff was, to sue the defendant by the name by which he is bound, and then if he appear and plead (ut supra) he shall be concluded by the obligation: and the Court was clear of opinion, that the plaintiff ought to have declared upon the special matter.

CCCCLIV. WILLIS AND WHITEWOODS CASE.

Leases. Surrenders.

The case was, That A. was seised of certain lands holden in socage, and leased the same to I. S. for many years, and dyed, his heir within the age of fourteen years, the wife of A. being guardian in socage leased the same land by indenture to the same I. S. for years, if the first lease was surrendred, or determined was the question: Anderson, Surrendred it cannot be, for the guardian hath not any reversion capable of a surrender, but only an authority given to her by the law to take the profits to the use of the heir: but yet perhaps it is determined by consequence and operation of law: as if A. lease to B. for one hundred years, and afterwards granteth [323] the reversion to C. for two years, who leaseth to B. for two years, who accepts the lease, the same is not any surrender, for a term of one hundred years cannot be drowned in a reversion for two years, yet the first lease is determined, which Periam granted: and by Windham, If a lease be made to begin at Michaelmas, and before that time, the lessor makes a new lease to the same lessee to begin presently, the same is not any surrender, and yet thereby the first lease is determined, and so in the principal case, which Anderson granted, but Periam doubted of it; and he said, guardian in socage hath such an estate in the reversion that he may enter for a condition broken: Anderson, The same is not in respect of any estate that he hath, but in the name and right of the heir, and not by reason of any reversion.

CCCCLV. NORWOOD AND DENNIS CASE.

Quare Impedit.

In a quare impedit by Norwood against Dennis, the issue was, if the advowson was appendant to the manor of D. or in gross, and the jury found that it was appendant, and further found, that the Queen had right, and title to present, for she had presented at the two last avoidances. Anderson and Periam Justices, If it appeareth unto the Court upon the pleading, that the King hath title to present. The Court shall award a writ to the bishop for the King, but here appeareth no title for the Queen upon the pleading, but only upon the verdict, so as the one part or the other may answer to it: and because the jury have found for the plaintiff, the title found for the Queen shall not be respected, but as a meer nugation and surplusage, for the same was out of their issue, and their charge, and it is no more then if one comes into the Court, and informs us of any title for the Queen, there the Court ought not to regard it.

CCCCLVI. GREEN AND THE HUNDRED OF BUCCLE-CHURCHES CASE.

Action upon the Statute of Huy and Cry.

In an action upon the Statute of Huy and Cry, the case was, that Green did deliver a certain sum of money to a carryer, who put the same (amongst other things) in his cart, and sent a boy of the age of twelve years with the cart before, and he himself stayed a short time in the inn, and afterwards went his way, and before he could get to the cart, the cart was robbed and the money carryed away: the boy made huy and cry, and came unto a justice of peace, and prayed he would examine him, but he would not, but the carryer himself would not go to be examined, wherefore Green himself went to a justice of peace to be examined, and so was, and afterwards brought this action: and it was holden by the Court; that here the plaintiff had failed of his action for want of sufficient examination, for the servant who was robbed ought to be examined, and the examination of the master or owner of the goods who was not present at the robbery is not at any purpose to enable the plaintiff to this action, for the party robbed ought to be examined: and it was said by some, that where an action doth not lye upon the new statute of 27 Eliz. the party may have an action upon the old statute, but others were against it, for the statute of 27 Eliz. is in the negative, so as if the action doth not lye upon it, no action lyeth at all: and it was moved by Periam and Anderson, that the plaintiff might have an action upon his case framed upon the said statute of 27 Eliz. against the justice of peace who refused to examine the boy: [324] but Windham doubted of it, because the justice of peace is a Judge of Record, and for such thing as he doth as judge, no action lieth: to which it was answered by Periam and Anderson, that the examination in such case is not made by him as judge or justice of peace, but as a minister appointed for the examination by the statute, &c.

CCCCLVII. STEVINSON CASE.

Debt.

In debt upon a bond, the condition was, that whereas the plaintiff had covenanted with the defendant, that it should be lawful for the defendant to cut down wood for fire-boot and hedge-boot without making any wast, or cutting more than necessary: and the plaintiff assigned the breach in that covenant (which is in truth the covenant of the plaintiff) that the defendant had committed wast in felling wood, &c. And the condition was to perform all covenants and agreements: and exception was taken because that the condition ought to extend but unto covenants to be performed on the part of the lessee; but the exception was not allowed, for it is the agreement of the lessee, although it be the covenant of the lessor, the plaintiff.

CCCCLVIII. FOSTER AND WILSON AGAINST MAPES.

Covenant.

Foster and Wilson brought an action of covenant against Mapes, and declared, that by certain indentures of articles, it was agreed betwixt the plaintiffs and the defendant, whereof one part was sealed with the seal of the defendant, and the other with the seals of the plaintiffs, that whereas the defendant had leased to the plaintiffs the parsonage of B., he covenanted, that he would keep the plaintiffs harmless concerning the same against one N. B.: and declared further, that the said N. B. had entred upon them; and that at the time of the making of the indentures, he was parson of B. The defendant had pleaded non est factum, and it was found by special verdict, that the defendant sealed one part of the indentures, and that one of the plaintiffs only sealed the other part: exception was taken to the declaration because there is not set forth in it any sufficient breach, for when the defendant covenants to save the plaintiffs harmless against B. the same is to be intended of a lawful eviction: as in Puttenhams case, 13 Eliz. Dyer, 306. But if the covenant had been, that the lessee should peaceably enjoy the term, sine ejectione & interruptione alicujus personæ, upon an unlawful entry of a wrong doer, an action lieth: see 16 Eliz. Dyer, 328. And here the finding of N. B. to be parson at the time is to no purpose: and there is not layed any express title in N. B. but only by implication, for it might be that the parson had leased to the defendant rendring rent with clause of re-entry, and the parson had entred for the condition broken, and the plaintiffs ought to have shewed, and not generally, that he had entred, and that he was parson: also it is layed, that N. B. was parson at the time of the entry, but it is not shewed, what entry, which may be taken, that he was parson at the time the plaintiffs entred by virtue of their lease, and not when the said N. B. entred upon the plaintiffs: also the plaintiffs have not declared, that they had entred by force of the lease [325] aforesaid, and if not, then they cannot be ejected, &c. and then no breach of covenant. Pudsey contrary, We have declared, that the parsonage was demised to us, and that N. B. being parson hath entred; and the record was read. i. That where the defendant had demised to the plaintiffs the parsonage of B. it was agreed, that the defendant always should keep harmless the plaintiffs and the premisses against N. B. for and concerning omnibus pertinentiis, &c. Tanfield, The breach is well laid, and the words of the covenants amount to as much, as if he had said, that he would keep them from all interruption; and the difference is, when the covenant is general, i. keep harmless, &c. the same doth not extend but to a lawful interruption; but when it is special against such an one, there it extends to any interruption whatsoever. Gawdy Justice conceived, that the breach of covenant is well laid, i. that N. B. hath entred upon them, and removed them, and be it by wrong or by right, the same is a breach, for he hath not kept harmless the plaintiffs for the premisses and profits of them, against N. B. 2 E. 4. 15.

A bond was endorsed upon condition, that the obligor should defend to the obligee for such a time, such land whereof he had before enfeoffed him; it was holden, that if a stranger ousteth the obligee, without any title, the bond is forfeited by reason of the word (defend,) and although the plaintiffs have not laid in their declaration, that they have entred, the same is not material; for it is not the point of the action. Fenner Justice conceived, that the difference put at the Bar betwixt general covenant and special, is good law, and that in case of such a special covenant interruption without title gives an action: but he conceived, that because it is not alledged that the plaintiffs had entred, that there was no breach of covenant. See 9 Eliz. Dyer 257. Wray, The words of the covenant do amount to peaceable enjoying during the term, and so to an interruption without title. Fenner, 18 E. 4. 27. A. is bound to B. to save B. harmless from an obligation made by the plaintiff to one R. if R. affirm a plaint of debt against the said plaintiff upon the said bond, the bond of A. is forfeit; but here the plaintiffs cannot be harmed, for they have not entred. Gawdy, The conclusion of the declaration is, that N. B. entred upon the profits and removed them, so as they could not take the profits thereof; so it is implied, that the plaintiffs had entred, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCCLIX. Marshes Case.

Error by Executors to reverse an Attainder of the Testator.

Marsh, executor of one Nicholson, brought a writ of error to reverse an outlawry in felony had against his testator; the error assigned was plain; but it was moved, that this writ of error would not lye. Gawdy, The action will well lye, for by this suit the plaintiff intends to reverse, and so undo the outlawry, for which cause this matter ought not to be objected against him, for the executor may have this action as well as the heir. Fenner Justice, Where the principal reverseth the attainder, the same shall extend to the accessory. In assise against tenant and disseisor, each of them may have a writ of error, and the reversal by the one shall make void the record as to both, and he needs not any garnishment, for by intendment the King is to have all his goods, and the King is always presumed present in this Court, quod tota curia concessit; and therefore there needs not any garnishment by scire facias; but Wray said, We use in such cases to call the Attorney General of the King to know if he can say any thing wherefore the outlawry should not be reversed. [326] The error assigned was, that the exigent issued forth into London, and the sheriff returned, that he had proclaimed the party de com. in com. quousque, &c. where he ought say, de Hustingo in Hustingum, and that was holden by the Court clearly to be error; and afterwards at another day it was moved by Coke, that a man attainted of felony could not make executors, for he is dead in law, and as Bracton saith, solus Deus facit hæredes & homo nominat executores, and therefore the heir only shall have a writ of error: also an executor cannot have a writ of error, but only upon a judgment given in a personal action; but this attainder is a thing of a higher nature: as where a woman poysoneth her husband, the heir shall not have an appeal, for murder is changed into treason, and that offence is a thing of a higher nature; so this attainder is of a higher nature than in the personalty. Also it may be mischievous to the heir, for the executor may forthwith bring and pursue his writ of error, by which the judgment shall be affirmed, and so the right of the heir shall be bound; also when error is brought to reverse an outlawry of felony, a scire facias ought to be sued against the lords mediate and immediate, which cannot be here at the suit of the executors: also it was found by enquest of the coroner, that the testator fugam fecit, so that thereby if he had been acquitted, he shall lose his goods, and then the executors have not any reason to bring this writ of error; but see 11 H. 4. Error 51. that executors shall have a writ of error of an outlawry pronounced against their testator, and if it be reversed they shall have restitution of the goods of the testator; but it doth not appear there that it was upon an indictment of felony. Altham, As well the executor as the heir is a person able for to sue a writ of error in such case, as 13 E. 4. where a false oath is given against one in assise and dieth, the heir shall have an attaint for the land, and the executor in respect of the damages. Popham Attorney-General, This outlawry is a real judgment, therefore the executor cannot have error upon it. Wray, It is good that this case be considered, for it may be mischievous, for thereby the executor shall avoid the attainder against the King and the lords. Fenner, That cannot be without a scire facias. Gawdy, The executors shall have this action; and as to that which hath been objected, that the party attainted cannot make executors, the same is no reason, for the executors do pretend that their testator was not lawfully outlawed, and so by this suit they do endeavour to take away that disability, and therefore it ought not to be objected against the executor; and if the case here be, that the testator had not lands, but only goods, there is no reason but that the executors should have a writ of error, otherwise the goods of the testator should be lost; and it was clearly holden by Wray Chief Justice, that the executor might have and pursue this writ of error, the outlawry of the testator notwithstanding; and afterwards the outlawry was reversed accordingly.

CCCCLX. TRUSSELS CASE.

Habeas corpus. Executions.

Trussel was removed out of the counter of London by habeas corpus into the Kings Bench. Egerton, the Queens solicitor moved the Court, that Trussel was a person attainted of felony, and so had not any lands or goods to satisfie, &c. and also his life was not his own; and upon the return of the habeas corpus it appeared, that Trussel was detained in prison for an execution, and for divers actions; and it was the opinion of the Court, that as to the execution he ought not to be discharged, for then the party should lose his debt for ever; but as to [327] the other actions, it was the opinion of all the justices, that Trussel ought to be discharged of them; for a man so attainted ought not to be put to answer, nor taken in execution, and so are all our books; and they said that they had conferred with the justices of the Common Pleas, and with the Barons of the Exchequer; which were of a contrary opinion in this case upon the very matter, and not upon the manner of the pleading; but yet we will discharge our consciences as we have done, for there is not any book against us, Egerton stetit super semitas antiquas, and at last it was awarded, that Trussel should be discharged of all actions brought against him.

the reversion, and not to the lessee for years, for he who is disseised shall be restored, and then the lessee may re-enter.

False Imprisonment.

In an action of false imprisonment, the defendant justified because the plaintiff brought a child of the age of six years, and not above, into the parish church of W. & eundem ibidem relinquere voluisset, & intendisset, without keeping or nourishment, to the danger and destruction of the child, & contra pacem, for which the defendant being constable of the said parish arrested the plaintiff, and put him in prison until he did agree and promise to carry the child from whence it came, upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. It was moved, that the justification was good, for every subject might do it, à fortiori a constable; and if in this case the child, being so exposed, should be famished for want of nourishment it had been murder, as it was holden at Winchester before the Lord Chief Baron, 20 Eliz. Another exception was taken to the plea, because he saith (quendam infantem) without naming him, and he ought to say quendam infantem ignotum; but that exception was not allowed. Another exception (ibidem relinquere intendisset) but he doth not say, that he did depart from it, and then his meaning is not traversable, or issuable, or to be tried by jurors. See 22 E. 4. 45. Gawdy Justice, It was a great offence in the plaintiff, but the same ought to be punished according to law; but the constable cannot imprison a subject at his pleasure, but according to law, i. to stay him and bring him before a justice of the peace to be there examined. Wray, If the defendant had pleaded, that he stayed the plaintiff upon that matter, to have brought him before a justice of peace, it had been a good plea. Fennor, The justification had been good, if [328] the defendant had pleaded, that the plaintiff refused to carry away the child, so all the justices were of opinion against the plea; but they would not give judgment by reason of the ill example, but they left the parties to compound the matter.

CCCCLXIII. Cole and Walles Case.

Ejectione Custodiæ lieth not upon a Copyhold Estate.

In an ejectione custodiæ the plaintiff declared, that A. was seised of the manor of D. within which manor are diverse copyholds of inheritance; and that the custom of the manor is, that if any copyholder of inheritance of the said manor dieth, his heir within the age of 14 years, that then the lord of the manor might grant the custody of his body and lands to whom he pleased; and shewed, that one Clevertie a copyholder of inheritance of the said manor died, his son and heir within the age of 14 years, upon which the lord of the manor committed the custody of his body and lands to the plaintiff, and the defendant did eject him, and upon not guilty it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that this action would not lye upon a copyhold estate, quod tota curia concessit; and yet it was said, that an ejectione firmæ lieth upon a demise of copyhold land, by lease of a copyholder himself, but not upon a demise by the lord of the copyhold, quod fuit concessum; and afterwards the case was moved on the plaintiffs side, and it was said, that this was but an action upon the case, in the nature of an ejectione firmæ, and this interest is not granted by copy, but entred only into the court roll: so it is not an interest by copy, but by the common law, for the words are, Quod dominus commisit custodiam, &c. and doth not say in curia ; and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCCLXIV. BOND AND BAILES CASE.

Judgment upon a Bond where satisfied before a Statute. Conny and Barhams Case.

Bond brought a scire facias against Bailes, administrator of one T. B. upon a recovery had against the intestate in action of debt. The defendant pleaded, that before the said judgment given, the testator did acknowledge a statute staple to one C. and that the son was not paid in the life of the testator nor after, and that they have not in their hands any goods of the intestate beyond what will satisfie the said statute ; upon which there was a demurrer in law. And Coke argued, that the bar is not good, for here is not pleaded any execution upon the statute, and then the judgment, the statute being of things of as high nature ; that of which execution is sued shall be first served : and if this action had been brought upon a bond the plea had not been good : for although that Brian saith, 21 E. 4. that recognizances shall be paid by executors before bonds, yet that it is to be intended when a scire facias is to be sued upon it, otherwise not : and 4 H. 6. 8. in a scire facias upon a judgment fully administred at the day of the writ brought is a good plea ; by which it appeareth, that if the executors had paid the debt upon the obligation before the writ brought, it had been good. See 12 E. 3. Executors 73. in a scire facias upon a judgment in debt given against the testator, enquiry shall be what goods the executors had the day of the scire facias : and he said, it was moved by Anderson, 20 Eliz. in this Court. In debt [329] upon a bond against executors ; the defendant pleaded, that the testator was indebted by judgment to A. and that they had not more than to satisfie the same, and it was holden no plea, if not that he pleaded further, that a scire facias was sued upon it. Wray said, The same is not law, and there is a difference when the judgment is given against the testator himself, and where against the executors ; for where judgments are given against executors, the judgment which was given before shall be first executed ; but if two judgments be given against the testator, he who first sues execution against the executors shall be first satisfied, because they are things of equal nature, and before suit it is in the election of the executor which of them he will pay. See 9 E. 4. 12. As if two men have tallies out of the Exchequer, he which first offers his tally to the officer shall be first paid ; but before that, it is in the choice of the officer which of them shall be first satisfied ; and therefore 19 H. 6. if the lease enrolled be lost, the enrolment is not of any effect, and Pasch. 20 Eliz. our very case was moved in the Common Pleas, in a scire facias upon a judgment given against the testator ; the executor pleaded, that the testator had acknowledged a statute before not satisfied, ultra quæ, &c. and it was holden no plea, for a statute is but a private and pocket record, as they called it ; and 32 Eliz. betwixt Conny and Barham the same plea was pleaded, and holden no plea. Also if this plea should be allowed, great mischiefs would follow : for then no debts should be satisfied by the executors, for it might be that the statute was made for performance of covenants, which covenants perhaps shall never be broken : and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCCLXVI. Wade and Presthalls Case.

Debt. Plea in disability of himself not allowed. Execution against a person attainted. Burchets Case. Regula. Abatement of writ. Cases where a man shall take advantage of his own wrong. Marbery and Worrals Case.

William Wade brought an action of debt against Presthall; the defendant pleaded, that he was attainted of treason, not restored, nor pardoned, and demanded judgment if he should be put to answer, upon which the plaintiff did demur. It was argued for the plaintiff, that the plea is not good, for the defendant shall not take benefit of his own wrong: a person attainted gives his goods, he shall not avoid it; a woman takes a husband, thereby she hath abated her own writ. It is true, that a person attainted is a dead man, it is so as to himself, but not as to others, 33 H. 6. a person attainted is murdered, his wife shall have an appeal, so as to all respects he is [330] not dead, and although as yet the plaintiff cannot have any execution against the defendant, yet here is a possibility to have execution, if the defendant get his pardon: as a man shall have warrantia chartæ although he be not impleaded, and yet cannot have execution, but there is a possibility to have execution, 22 E. 3. 19. A rent granted to one in fee upon condition, that if the grantee die, his heir within age, that the rent shall cease during the nonage, the grantee dieth, his heir within age, his wife brought dower presently and recovered, and yet she cannot have execution, but yet there is a possibility to have execution, viz. upon the full age of the heir. Coke contr. By his attainder he hath lost his goods, lands, life, degree, for he is now become terræ filius, and he cannot draw blood from his father, nor afford blood to his son or his posterity, so as he hath neither ancestor nor heir; and as to the possibility the same is very remote, for the law doth not intend that he shall be pardoned; and see 6 H. 4. 64. A man committed a felony, and afterwards committed another felony, and after is attainted of one of them, he shall not be put to answer to the other; but if he obtain his charter of pardon, he shall answer to the other. See also 10 H. 4. 227. tit. Coronæ. Popham Attorney General; the defendant ought to answer, for none shall have advantage of his own wrong: the plaintiff is made a knight pendant the writ, it shall abate because his own act; but here treasons are so heinous, that none shall have ease, benefit, or discharge thereby: and if the defendant shall not be put to answer until he hath his pardon, then the action is now suspended, and an action personal once suspended is gone for ever; and he cited 29 E. 3. 61. in the Book of Assizes, where it is said by Sharp, Execution upon a statute may be sued against a man attainted; and he said, that if the enemy of the King comes into England, and becomes bounden to a subject in twenty pounds he shall be put to answer, notwithstanding that interest that the king hath in him. Harris Serjeant to the same intent, he conceived by 33 H. 6. 1. that traitors are to answer; for if traitors break the goal, the goaler shall answer for their escape, for the goaler hath remedy against them, contrary of the Kings enemies; and he cited the case of one Burchet, who being attainted of treason struck another in the Tower, for which notwithstanding his attainder he was put to answer. Egerton Solicitor General: And he said, that the action is not suspended; but in as much as every action is used to recover a thing detained, or to satisfie a wrong, if it can appear that the party cannot be satisfied according to his case he shall not proceed: and in this case the plaintiff, if he should obtain judgment could not have execution by the common law, for he hath no goods, nor by the statute of Westm. 2. by elegit, for he hath no lands, nor by the statute of 25 E. 3. by his body, for it is at the Kings pleasure, and then to what purpose shall the plaintiff sue; and it is a general rule, that in all actions where the thing demanded cannot be had, or the person against whom the thing is demanded cannot yield the thing, that the writ shall abate: as in a writ of annuity by grantee of an annuity for years the term expireth, the writ shall abate; tenant in special tail brings wast, and pendant the writ his issue dieth, the writ shall abate, &c. 2 E. 4. 1. A man outlawed of felony pleaded in dis-affirmance of the outlawry, and yet he was not put to answer until he had his pardon, and then he shall answer: and as to the case of 33 H. 6. 1. it doth not appear that the traitors were attainted, and then there is good remedy enough: and Burchets case cannot be resembled to our case, for although that by the attainder the body of the party might be at the Kings pleasure, yet his body may be punished for another offence, for the example of others. And as to Tressels case, who in such case was put to answer, I grant it, for he concluded judgment if action, and so admitted him [331] a person able to answer, and then it could not be a good plea in bar. And in Ognels case, the return of the sheriff shall bind them, for upon process against a person attainted they returned cepi, where they ought to have returned the special matter without a cepi; but now this general return shall bind them, and by that he shall be concluded to say, that the party was not in execution: and this plea is not any disabling of the defendant; but he informs the judges, that he is not a person able to answer to the plaintiff. As in a præcipe quod reddat the party pleads non-tenure, the same is no disabling of his person, but a shewing to the Court that he cannot yield to the party his demand: a man shall not take advantage of his own wrong, i. in the same thing in which the wrong is supposed, or against him against whom the wrong is supposed to be done; but in other cases he shall take advantage of his own wrong, as Littleton, If a lease for life be made, the remainder over in fee, and he in the remainder entreth upon tenant for life, and disseiseth him, the same is a good seisin, upon which he may have a writ of right, Littleton 112. 35 E. 3. Droit 30. And yet this seisin was by wrong. And there was a case betwixt Marbery and Worral in the Exchequer, the lessor entred upon his lessee for life, made a feoffment in fee with clause of re-entry, the lessee re-entred, the lessor at the day came upon the land and demanded the rent which was not paid; it was holden the same is a good demand of the rent, and yet he is a trespassor to the lessee. And in another case, a man shall take advantage of his own wrong, Fitz. N. B. 35. N. An infant hath an advowson by descent, the church becomes void, he who hath right paramount usurps, and presents to the church, and the 6 months pass; now by this tortious usurpation he is remitted, and the infant out of possession, and without remedy: and he cited the case 16 H. 7. 10. A scire facias out of a fine was brought against an abbot, by which fine the predecessor of the abbot granted to find a priest to sing mass in such a chappel, &c. and the abbot pleaded, that the said chappel was become ruinous and decayed, so as no priest could sing mass there; and it was prayed on the part of the plaintiff, that forasmuch as the covenant is confessed, that judgment be given, but that execution should cease until the chappel be rebuilt; but it was not allowed, for this is a good bar for the time, and no judgment shall be given, for it shall be in vain, for it cannot be executed because there is no chappel, and it may be the chappel shall never be built again: and so in the principal case, &c. It was adjorned.

CCCCLXVII. Knightley and Spencers Case.

Prohibition. Unity of possession a discharge of Tithes. A Rent in esse to some purposes, and suspended to other.

In a prohibition betwixt Knightley and Spencer, the case was, that Ph. Abbot of Evesham, and all his predecessors time out of mind, &c. were seised as well of the rectory impropriate of B. in the county of N. and also of the manor of B. in the same parish, &c. until the dissolution of his house; and that by reason thereof the said abbot and all the predecessors had holden the said manor discharged of payment of tithes until the dissolution, &c. and shewed the branch of the statute of 31 H. 8. and that the said abbot did surrender the possessions of the said house to the King, and that the King held the same discharged of the payment of tithes; and that afterwards the King granted unto the ancestor of Knightley the said manor, and to the ancestor of Spencer the said rectory, and although the plaintiff ought de jure to hold the said manor discharged of tithes, yet the defendant sued him in the Spiritual Court, &c. To which the defendant [332] confessing the impropriation, pleaded, that the said abbot was seised, ut supra; but that before the making of the said statute of 31 H. 8. the said abbot demised decimas rectoriæ prædict. to one Spencer for 70 years, who made the defendant his executor, and died, and that at the time of the said demise, and dissolution of the said Abby, one Goodman and others were possessed of the said manor until the year 1585, which was the year before the suit began in the Spiritual Court, and that at the time of the dissolution he paid tithes for it, and now the plaintiff refuseth to pay, &c. absque hoc, that the abbot and his predecessors held the said manor quit of the payment of tithes time out of mind, &c. upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. Coke, for the plaintiff, that this unity of possession is a discharge within the statute of 31 H. 8. the words of which are, that the King and his assigns shall have and enjoy the lands discharged and acquitted of tithes, as freely as the said abbot held the same at the day of the dissolution: and see before, whereas divers abbots were acquitted and discharged of, and for the payment of tithes; for the statute doth not intend a real discharge, as by composition or such manner, which is not here, but only a suspension, which is not any discharge in law; and yet in speaking of discharge ordinarily, an actual discharge is understood, as if I be bound by obligation to discharge one of such a bond, it is not enough to pay the mony, but I ought to procure an actual discharge where it is put generally, but where it is put secundum quid, as it is here referred to the dissolution, a suspension is a discharge intended in the said statute; but where the statute is indefinite there an actual discharge is understood, but restrained to a time a suspension sufficeth, and truly it is a discharge within the intent of the statute; for if the statute shall be intended of an absolute discharge, and a discharge in law only, the statute had been superfluous, for the law said so much before; for without such provision the King and his assigns held discharged from payment of tithes. But the makers of the statute knew well enough, that the abbot might have such discharge by divers means, and it should be infinite for the party interessed to enquire of them all; and therefore they did enact briefly, that if at the time of the dissolution they were in any manner freed of payment of tithes the same should be sufficient, and so here is not any wrong unto any, for the parson had all as he had before, and the same is like to the case betwixt Wharton and Morley, 7 Eliz. in the Exchequer, the report of which Mr. Plowden communicated unto me, and it was upon the Statute of 1 E. 6. cap. 14. of Monasteries, that all grants made to the King by any provost, governour, &c. of any manor, &c. shall be good, &c. and the case was, that a prebend of the church of York surrendred to the King, but the surrender was never enrolled, and yet adjudged good upon the statute; for if it was a lawful surrender the same had been good of it self, without any aid of the statute, which was made to supply insufficient assurances, and so in our case for the cause aforesaid, and it should be injurious to drive the jury to enquire of the manner of the discharge, if it were by composition upon the foundation, or by dispensation of the Pope, as cisterc. templarii: and here the plaintiff hath declared of an impropriation before time of memory; and so before the council of Lateran, which was within those 400 years; and 25 Eliz. there was a Sussex case, where the plaintiff declared as here, but they would not proceed; and see Dyer 10 Eliz. 277, 278. The prior of St. John hath priviledge from Rome, that he shall not pay tithes for any land quas propriis manibus aut sumptibus excolant, but their farmers have paid tithes; and it was holden, that in the hands of the farmers tithes should be paid, but after the term ended the patentee should hold discharged, so as the statute hath a favourable construction upon this point. Now it is to see [333] if the lease of the rectory by which the defendants claim be good or not, and then admitting that tithes are due in this case, yet if his lease be void he shall not have a consultation, especially if it appeareth upon his own shewing, as it was holden in a Hampshire case betwixt Sutton and Dowze, which see Mich. 25 & 26 Eliz. and in that case the lease is void, for it was made within a year after the statute of 31 H. 8. the January before, and the statute in April after, for he hath not averred, that the usual rent is reserved, nor that the land was usually let to farm, for which leases otherwise made within the year are absolutely void by the said statute: but it will be objected, that this matter shall come in of our part, and it is sufficient for them to plead the case; but it is not so, as it was lately agreed in Heydons case in the Exchequer, where the case was, that the warden and canons of the colledge of Otery leased certain lands to Heydon for years, and he in pleading of his lease did not shew that the ancient rent was reserved, and therefore naught; and so was the opinion of the justices of the Common Pleas, in the case betwixt the Lord Cromwel and All-Souls Colledge, upon the statute of 18 Eliz. cap. 6. upon a branch of it, by which it was provided, that the third part of the rent reserved upon any lease should be paid in corn, &c. and the leases made to the contrary should be void; and in an ejectione firmæ brought upon such lease, because it was not shewed in the declaration, that the corn was reserved according to the statute, judgment was arrested, and we need not to plead the statute; for although the statute be particular, yet because the King hath interest in it, it shall be holden in law a general Act, and the Judges shall take notice of it, although it be not alledged by the party, as it was ruled in the Lord Barcklays case, 4 Eliz. Plow. 231. but if such rent was reserved, yet the lease cannot be good, for the King cannot have his rent, because it is not incident to the reversion, nor passeth by the grant of the reversion; for it is not a rent, but rather a sum due by reason of contract, which see 30 Ass. 6. A man leaseth a hundred, rendring rent, or grants a rent out of a hundred, the same is not a good rent, but merely void; for a hundred is not manorable, nor can be put in view, nor any assize lieth of such rent. See 9 Ass. 24. and in 20 Eliz. in the case betwixt Corbet and Cleer, the Dean and Chapter of Norwich leased a parsonage and common of pasture, rendring rent, 1 E. 6. they surrendred their possessions to the King, and afterwards the King granted the parsonage without speaking of the common of pasture. It was holden, that the patentee of the parsonage should have all the rent, and no apportionment should be in respect of the common; for all the rent issueth out of the parsonage, and nothing out of the common: so here, for tithes are not an hereditament, which cannot support a rent within this statute, for which cause the lease is void: also he said, that the traverse of the defendant was not well taken, for the plaintiff hath said, that time out of mind, &c. the abbot and his predecessors were seised of the rectory and manor aforesaid, simul & semel, and ratione inde, was discharged, &c. at the time of the dissolution; the defendant traverseth absque hoc, that the abbot and his predecessors held discharged of tithes time out of mind, &c. which is not good, for he hath traversed our conclusion; for our plea is an argument, wheresoever is unity time out of mind, &c. there is a discharge of tithes, but in the abbot was such an unity, ergo he held discharged of tithes, as 21 E. 3. 22. In a præcipe quod reddat, the tenant saith, that the land in demand is parcel of the manor of D. which is ancient demesn, and, &c. to which the plaintiff saith. That it is frank-fee, and the same was not good, for he denies the conclusion; but he ought to plead to the nature of the manor, that it is not ancient demesn, or that the land in demand is not parcel of it. Another matter was, because it is pleaded fuit in [334] tenura & occupatione of Goodman and others; but he did not shew by what title, disseisin or lease, or other title, &c. Buckley contrary, And he said, this unity of possession is not any discharge of tithes by the said statute; and as to the case cited before, of 3 H. 7. 12. where tenant in tail of a rent entreth upon the tenant of the land, now is the rent suspended, and then after when he makes a feoffment in fee, by that feoffment the rent is extinguished, which was but suspended at the time of the feoffment; and therefore some have holden, that if after such entry he makes a lease for life of the land, that his rent or seigniory is utterly gone in perpetuum, for by the livery all passeth out of him, which he said cannot be law; and so it seemed to Gawdy Justice, then upon such feoffment with warranty he could not vouch as of land discharged of the rent generally, but as of land discharged at the time of the feoffment, which proves that the suspension is not a discharge, for it was suspended before the feoffment, and discharged by the feoffment, and so suspension is not a discharge, à fortiori in the case of tithes, for in the case of common, and rent, although they are suspended so as they cannot be actually taken, yet they are to some intent in esse: as where lands holden of other lords are in the hands of the King for primer seisin by reason of prerogative, and during such seisin of the King the lord gets seisin, the same is a good seisin notwithstanding that it was suspended so as he could not distrain: and also in assize of land, damages as to the rent out of the land shall be recouped, therefore the rent in some sort is in esse, and à multo fortiori, this tithe (which is a thing of common right) shall be in esse, but goes with the land, and therefore by unity of possession shall not be suspended, 35 H. 6. he who hath liberty of warren in the lands of another entreth into the land, the warren is not suspended, nor by feoffment of the land is extinct; and in this case upon the matter, during the unity of possession the tithes were paid, although not in specie: also the abbot had the tithes as parson of B. and the land as abbot, and therefore no suspension, for the tithes were always in esse, although not taken in the manner, as tithes commonly are, but by way of retainer, 22 E. 4. 44. A writ of annuity is brought against a prior, and it appeared, that the prior and his successors have used to pay the annuity as parson of D. and not as priors, which parsonage was appointed to the said priory time out of mind, and in the writ the defendant was named prior only, and not parson, and therefore the writ was abated. See 14 E. 4. 4. 10 H. 7. 5. In an action of wast: so Bracebridges case, 14 Eliz. Plowd. 420. The case put by Catiline, if the parson, patron and ordinary make a lease for years, and afterwards the lessee becomes there incumbent, the term is not extinct, for he hath the term in his own right, and the inheritance in the right of his church, which see 30 H. 8. Dyer 43. A parson purchaseth, and after leaseth his parsonage, he himself shall pay tithes notwithstanding this unity; and as to the reason of the other side, that if such discharge of tithes be not intended by the statute, but only a discharge in law, the statute should be in vain, the same is not so; for if the abbot had been discharged by way of release or composition, for the monastery being dissolved the appropriation had been good, if it had not been supported by the statute, and then the release and composition of no force, and the King should not take advantage of it but by this statute; and as to Whartons case before cited, the same cannot be law, for it hath been holden upon the statute of 18 Eliz. of Confirmations, that if an infant maketh a lease to the King, the same is not made good by the statute, for the said statute extends to imperfections in circumstances, and not in substance. And although the lease be not good, yet because the matter of the surmise is naught, although our bar be naught, a consultation ought to [335] be granted, also our lease is well pleaded, and if such defect be in it, as hath been objected, the same ought to come in by plea on the other side; and it is not like Heydons case, for there it was found by special verdict, nor to Cromwells case, where such defect was in the declaration, and so no ground of action; as to the traverse it is good enough, as if special bastardy be pleaded against one born before the marriage, and so bastard, the other party shall traverse generally the bastardy, and not the special matter, but for the principal matter, i. this unity of possession, divers rules have been. 5 Eliz. in the Common Pleas, the case was, an abbot had a manor within the parish of D. and a composition was made betwixt the parson of D. and the said abbot, that the parson should have yearly certain loads of wood, out of thirty acres of the said manor, for, and in recompence of all the tithes of wood there, afterwards the parsonage was appropriated to the said abbot, and afterwards the house was dissolved, and the manor granted to one, and the rectory to another, and it was holden, that the portion of the tithes was removed, for he had them, scil. the manor and the tithes in several rights. And Manwood Chief Baron, and Periam Justice, to whom a case depending in the Chancery was referred concerning the discharge of tithes by unity of possession, delivered their opinions, that such an unity is not any discharge within the said statute. It was adjorned.

CCCCLXVIII. HOSKINS AND STUPERS CASE.

Assumpsit. Exposition of Words.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas the plaintiff had sold to the defendant 1000 couple of Newland fishes to the use of the defendant, and in consideration that he should ship, and should bring and carry the adventure of them from Bristol, in portum of Saint Lucar and should carry back again the value of the said fish to London or Bristoll secundum usum mercatorum, the defendant did promise, that upon the arrival of the said fish, in portum of St. Lucar, he would give to the plaintiff 112l. and said that he arrived with the said fish, ad portum of St. Lucar, and that afterwards he arrived with goods of the value of the said fish, ad portum of London, secundum usum mercatorum. It was holden by all the Judges, that in portum, and ad portum is all one, as the Statute of Wast is, quod vicecomes accedat ad locum vastatum, yet he ought to enter into the land; so the writ of accedas ad curiam, & in plena curia recordari facias, &c. Another exception was, because he declared, that he returned with goods to the value, and doth not say, whose goods they were; but the exception was not allowed, for these words secundum usum mercatorum imply that they were the goods of the defendant, quod fuit concessum per curiam, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCCLXIX. WALGRAVE AND AGURS CASE.

Action for scandalous Words. Savage and Cooks Case. Kinseys Case.

Sir William Walgrave brought an action upon the case against Agur upon these words spoken by the defendant to a servant of the plaintiff, It is well known that I am a true subject, but thou (innuendo the said servant) servest no true subject, and thine own conscience may accuse thee thereof. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that these words are not actionable, for no slander comes to the plaintiff thereby, for perhaps the party served no man, but the Queen, and if [336] the words may receive such sense, which is no pregnant proof of infamy, they are not actionable, as in the case betwixt Savage and Cook, these words: Thou art not the Queens friend, are not actionable, for it might be they were spoken in respect of some ordinary misdemeanours, as in not payment of subsidies, or the like: also it is not averred, that the party to whom the words were spoken, was the plaintiffs servant. Coke, Where a man is touched in the duty of his office, or in the course of life, an action lieth, although that otherwise the words are not actionable, and here is set forth in the declaration, that the plaintiff at the time of the speaking of the said words, was a justice of peace, and Sheriff of Suffolk, and captain of a troop of 120 horse to attend the preservation of the Queens person: so in respect of place and dignity in the commonwealth, as 2 H. 8. the Bishop of Winchester brought an action upon the Statute of Scandal. Magnatum, upon these words, My Lord of Winchester sent for me, and imprisoned me, until I made a release to J. S. and in respect of his place and dignity the words were holden actionable: and 9 Eliz. Dyer, in an action upon the case by the Lord Aburgaveney against Wheeler, my Lord of Aburgaveney sent for us, and put some of us into the coal-house, and some into the stocks, and me into a place in his house called Little Ease, and the words were holden actionable: so in our case, Lewes said, it was the case of one Kinsey; one said to a bailiff of a franchise, thou didst execute false warrants, without saying, they were falsified by him, adjudged an action did not lie. Wray Chief Justice, These words in themselves are not actionable, for the plaintiff might be untrue in small things, which gave no discredit, but the quality of the person of whom they were spoken, may add weight to them, as to call one bankrupt generally, no action lieth upon it, but to call a merchant so is actionable. So to call one Papist, no action lieth for it; but if one call the Archbishop of Canterbury so, an action will lie, for he is governour of the church. Thou art an untrue man to the Queen, gives not an action to an ordinary subject, but such words spoken of one of the Privy Council, are actionable. Corrupt man, in themselves are not actionable, but being spoken of a Judge, an action lieth. It was Birchleys case, an attorney of this Court, thou art a corrupt man, and dealest corruptly, and it was adjudged per curiam, that the words were actionable, for that refers to his calling. Gawdy was of opinion, that the words were actionable of themselves, without respect had to the quality of the person of whom they were spoken, for the words are particular enough; and to touch him in the duty of a subject, which is to be faithful to his natural prince, is a great reproach and slander. Fenner conceived, that the words were not actionable. Wray, as before, Of themselves they are not actionable, for they are in general, for if he be indicted of trespass, he is not a good subject.

Leases.

The case was, that a lease was made unto two, habendum to them, and to two others for four lives, and the longer liver of them; it was resolved by the whole Court, that the two named in the habendum did not take any thing; and that if the first two in the premisses of the deed die, that there shall be no occupancy; for the lives of the two in the habendum was intended an estate to them, and not a limitation of the estate of the first two: and so it was resolved, 28 Eliz. in the King's Bench, Rot. 509. in Hubbart and Windsmore's case.

II. THATCHER AND DAMPORT'S CASE.

Error. Judgement against the Bail.

Thatcher recovered against Damport as administrator of one Zouch, the defendant put in bail, and afterwards judgment was given against the defendant in this manner: ideo videtur justiciariis, quod querens recuperet debitum suum versus, &c. and thereupon a scire facias was sued against the bail, and a good and lawfull judgment given against them; and they brought a writ of error to reverse the judgment given against them, and assigned error, because judgment was entred against them before a good and lawfull judgment was given against the defendant himself; for videtur justiciariis quod querens recuperet, &c. is not any judgment; and the Court held, that the judg-[2]-ment given against the bail, ought to be reversed, but that the other judgment should stand such as it is, neither affirmed nor disaffirmed, but the bail should not cause the same judgment for their discharge to be entred, and afterwards came Thatcher and surmised the nullity of the said judgment, and prayed that judgment might be entred for him in forma juris, & habuit: and now upon this new judgment Damport brought a writ of error, and assigned for error the entry of that new judgment, for before a judgment was entred, tiel queb. and Thatcher proceeded upon it, and had a scire facias against the bail, and judgment thereupon given against the bail: also the record was removed by writ of error, and this second judgment is merely erronious, for then there should be two judgments; and they should give judgment upon a record, which was not before them.

Gawdy Justice, The writ of error is to remove the record, si Judicium inde redditum sit, by which if judgment be not given, the record doth remain unremoved, and then they may well enough give judgment; for the former pretended judgment was no judgment at all, and the record is not removed, as 4 Eliz. Dyer 206. a certiorari to remove a record, capt. in curia nostra, whereas it was in curia of the predecessor, the record is not removed. The former writ of error was to remove the record of the scire facias against the bail which might be removed, although the other record did remain, for they are two distinct judgments. And such was the opinion of the other justices; and afterwards upon advice of the whole Court, the judgment against the defendant himself was affirmed, but that which was given against the bail was reversed, because given before judgment given against the defendant himself.

III. Werdman and Yate's Case.

Partition. Error. Diminution. Entry of Records. Estoppell.

Werdman brought a writ of partition against Yates and others, who all appeared and confessed the action, and afterwards brought error, which was entred, Pasch. 27 Eliz. Rot. 43. and they assigned errors, and the opinion of the Court was against them, and they seeing it, did discontinue their writ of error, and now they sued a new writ of error out of the Chancery, directed to the Lord Anderson, being dated 19 Nov. 31 Eliz. containing, that whereas a writ had been directed to him to remove such a record, that all the record is not yet removed; wherefore this was to remove the residue of the said record; upon which writ was sent hither a small parcell of the record, upon which the plaintiffs sued a new writ of error out of the Chancery, coram vobis resident, and that was Hil. 31 Eliz. and it was entred upon a new roll of the same term, and not upon the ancient roll, and thereupon new errors were assign'd in the judicial proces out of the body of the record.

1. That the plea was discontinued for pone was awarded against three of the defendants, and idem dies not given to the other two, nor any thing spoken of them.

2. Because there were not fifteen days betwixt the date of the pone, and the return of it, (scil.) the first day of the return, i. the first day of essoins, as ought to be by law.

3. Judgment was given that the defendant should be amerced, where they appear upon the first proces, and thereupon the plaintiff sued a new writ of diminution, one to the Lord Anderson, and the other to the custos brevium, and now came and pleaded all the matter aforesaid, viz. the former writ of error, the proceeding in it, and the [3] discontinuance of it, and demanded judgment if the plaintiff should have a new writ of diminution, upon which the plaintiff did demurr: Coke, This second writ of error is not maintainable: for the first writ sent to the Lord Anderson, could not be sued out of the Chancery, for it is not a writ of error, but a writ of diminution: for in the register there are but two writs of error, the first to remove record, the second quod coram vobis resident, 2 H. 7. 19. and in the writ there is not any mention of error, and therefore it cannot be a writ of error, and if there be not any such writ in the register, then it is a good argument to say there is no writ at all, as the Lord Dyer argued in the Lady Hale's case, 5 Eliz. 262. in Plowden in the case of the writ of escheat: also it is against all the precedents, that a writ of error, quod coram vobis resident, should be otherwise entred than upon the first record, and not upon a new record, and the writ of diminution is not an original writ, and ought always issue out of the Court where the writ of error is depending: and also the party cannot now alledge diminution, i. after a scire facias ad audiendum errores, which see 22 E. 4. 45. by Hussey: for by the scire facias ad audiendum errores, he affirms the record to be full: so 7 E. 4. 25. After the defendant in the writ of error hath pleaded in nullo est erratum he shall not alledge diminution, for the parties are agreed upon the record, 28 H. 6. 10. after a scire facias, the plaintiff shall never assign errors in fact, &c. Tanfield contrary, he agreed, that a writ of diminution cannot be sued out of the Chancery, but that will not hurt us, for it is idle and utterly void: and when the record is removed, it is not material how it comes in, so as it be here, for they are both the King's Court, as it is in the common case of indictments: and then the writ of error is to examine the record, quod coram vobis residet, and although the same be in divers rolls, the same is no matter of exception; but if the roll be entred in a wrong office it is not good, but if all be in one office, the misfiling of the roll will be no hurt: so here, it is not so formal as it ought; yet it is not any prejudice to us. But the great matter is, if the plaintiff may assign new errors and have a new writ of diminution, two of the errors assigned in the mesne proces, but the third is in the record it self; i. the judgment. And there is no doubt but that a man may have divers writs of error, but he shall have but one supersedeas, and so divers errors, but one delay: also it is not a writ of diminution which we have sued, for I do not say that it is a thing below, which is not here, but I say that is not a thing below which ought to be, viz. there is not any discontinuance; but the Court awarded that writ for their satisfaction, for the non esse of the thing shall come on the other side, and 9 E. 4. the Court awarded a certiorare to enform themselves. And he said that after a scire facias, the plaintiff may assign new errors, Trin. 20 H. 7. Rot. 84. betwixt Edge-Court and London, a writ of error was brought against two, and after errors assigned, one of the defendants died, before a new writ of error could be assigned; but here the first record is discontinued and determined, for which there is not now any record which may be objected against us, nor any thing in it: as 20 H. 7. A man avows for a rent due at such a day, and is nonsuit; now he may avow for the same rent, and suppose the same to be due at another day, for he shall not be estopped by the record upon which he was nonsuit: and so here upon the whole matter the writ out of the Chancery is not material, and the roll is not misplaced, but is in the right office: also this is not a writ of diminution, but a writ to inform the justices, wherefore upon the whole matter the writ of error will well lie. It was adjourned.

IV. SAVACRES CASE. ROT. 7.

Error.

A writ of error was brought by Savacre and the Bishop of Glocester upon a judgment given in a quare impedit for the Queen, and errors assigned. 1. Attachment was awarded against the defendants in the quare impedit, retornable Quind. Pasc. at which day Savacre appeared, and cast an essoyn; and notwithstanding that, a distress was awarded against them both, retornable Crastin. Trinit. and this awarding of the distress was erroneous, for the essoyn was, as appeareth, to save, &c. and therefore against him no distress ought to have been awarded: and upon alledging of diminution the record of the essoyn was certified, but the same doth not appear upon the plea roll. 2. This record is, ideo ipsi in misericordia, and so both the defendants are amerced for their default of appearance 15 Pasch. whereas Savacre was then essoyned, and so no cause to amerce him.

Coke, The original writ was sued Mich. 26 Eliz. retorned 15 Hilarii, and then both the defendants made default, for which an attachment was awarded, retornable 15 Pasc. and then Savacre appeared, and judgment given, quod ipsi sint in misericordia, in which point the error is apparent: but I conceive that it is not error, for upon the attachment the parties ought to put in sureties for their appearance; and the said sureties took upon them, that the defendants and each of them should appear; and if they or any of them make default, they shall be amerced: and so here, this judgment, ideo ipsi in misericodia, doth refer to the sureties, not to the parties, for the defendants shall not be amerced until the end of the suit, and but once onely in an action: which see Book of Entries 464 where there was but one defendant: and therefore if the amercements shall be referred to the defendant, then it shall be ideo ipse, not ipsi, &c. And that is the reason wherefore the Queen, nor an infant, shall not find pledges, for no amercement shall be upon their default, therefore it were in vain for them to find pledges, &c. If the sureties be amerced where they ought not to be amerced by the law, yet the defendant shall not have a writ of error thereupon, for he is not the party grieved by the amercement: and upon that reason it is, if in a scire facias against the bail erroneous judgment be given, the defendant in the action shall not have a writ of error. The awarding of the distress upon the roll against both, where one of them only made default, is not error, especially as this case is: for although one of them was essoyned until the day aforesaid; yet at that day they make default, and so the distress well awarded against them: and although the writ was not well awarded, yet when they appear Crastin. Trinit. at the day of the retorn of the distress, all mesn defaults in the process are saved, and so the misawarding of the distress by appearance after is supplyed: as 39 E. 3. 7. The law requires, that in an action founded upon the Statute of Præmunire, &c. 27 E. 3. the defendant gave garnishment by two months, yet if the defendant, not having warning appear, now the process is good enough: So 9 E. 4. 18. where upon any process the defendant doth appear, although the day of appearance be not lawful, yet he shall be put to answer, and see many cases there to that purpose. And so was the opinion of the Court in the principal case.

As to the second error, that this judgment, ideo ipsi in misericordia, shall be reserved to the sureties onely, and not the party, and that the defendant shall be but once amerced in one action; true it is, he [5] shall be amerced but once for one default; but if there be many defaults, the defendant shall be amerced severally for the several defaults for every offence; and it should be unreasonable that the sureties should be amerced, and that the defendant, who is the principal, should be freed: which see in the Book of Entries 193. ipsique & plegii sui in misericordia, &c.

Covenant.

In an action of covenant the plaintiff declared, that where it was covenanted betwixt the plaintiff and the defendant, that each of them upon request should be accountable to the other for all the corn growing upon such a place, and that upon such account the one of them should deliver to the other the moiety of the corn, or the profit of it: and whereas the defendant had taken all the said corn, scil. twenty loads of wheat, forty loads of barley, and thirty loads of pease, growing upon the said lands, and had been required to render account of the said corn, which he refused to do: the defendant traversed the request, upon which they were at issue, and it was hereupon demurred: and it was moved, that the traverse was not good, but the defendant ought to say, that the plaintiff did not require him modo & forma; but the exception was not allowed, but the traverse was holden good by the whole Court and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

VI. ELIZABETH DORMER'S CASE.

Elizabeth Dormer was indicted upon the statute of 23 Eliz. of recusancy; and exception was taken to the indictment, because that these words of the statute were omitted out of the indictment, viz. [non habens aliquam rationabilem causam]. But the exception was not allowed; for Wray, Chief Justice, said, that upon conference betwixt himself and all his companions, it was resolved by them, that those words need not be put into the indictment, but are to come on the other side. Another exception was taken to the indictment, that she being of the age sixteen years refused to come to any church (contra formam statut. 1 Eliz. & in malum exemplum, &c. & contra formam statuti in hujusmodi casu editi & provisi) and the statute of 1 Eliz. doth not speak of sixteen years, but the same is mentioned in the statute of 23 Eliz. 16 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

VII. CRANMER'S CASE.

The case was, That Thomas Cranmer, late Archbishop of Canterbury, made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, without impeachment of waste, and after his decease to the use of his executors for twenty years, and after the twenty years to the use of his son and heir in tail. And afterward Thomas Cranmer was attainted of treason, and dyed, so as he could not make executors, but dyed [6] intestate without any assignment. (Note, the limitation was to his executors and assigns.) Queen Mary claimed the term limited as aforesaid, and granted the same over, the heir in tail entred, and leased the same for years, the patentee entred, and the lessee of the heir of the tenant in tail brought ejectione firmæ.

Manwood. All the doubt of this case is, if the said term was in Tho. Cranmer so as he might forfeit it; and he conceived, that the said term was in Tho. Cranmer, and that he had not power onely to dispose of it, but also had possession of it: 11 H. 4. 186. Scire facias 67. And Br. Annuity 17. Such a grant is good and effectual, and if he do not grant it his executors shall have it, and yet the term was not limited to him, but he shall have it by implication of law. 39 E. 3. A lease was made to one, his heirs and assigns during his life, and one year after, the executors shall have the said term after the death of the lessee, yet the said term was not limited to him: 7 E. 3. A lease made for term of live and a year after, in that case the term is conjoyned unto the estate for life by the act of the grantor himself; and there is a difference when the remainder is joyned to the particular estate by the act of the grantor, and by any purchase, grant, or any act after: for in the first case the remainder shall be executed, but in the latter not. A lease for life, the remainder in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of tenant for life; he in the remainder in tail dyeth without issue in the life of tenant for life, now the fee is executed to the freehold, &c. and the heir shall not have a scire facias where such conveyance is made by fine. See 17 E. 3. 29. In a cui in vita, A. executor of B. came and said, that the land in demand was leased to the said B. for the term of his life, the remainder for the term of eight years to his executors, and prayed to be received, and they were received. See 19 E. 3. A lease was made for life to A. the remainder to his executors for twelve years; the lessee for life died, the executors died, there it is agreed, that the executors of the executors should have an action of covenant, if they be ousted. And see 20 E. 3. Quid juris clamat 31. A lease is made to A. for life, and if A. dieth within twenty years, that his executors shall have the term until the end of such term: and in a quid juris clamat against A. he saved his term by protestation, which proves, that the term was quodam modo in him. 49 E. 3. A lease for life unto A. the remainder to his heirs and executors for twelve years, and afterwards the lessor confirms the estate of the lessee for life, to have and to hold the land to him for life, and thirteen years over to his executors; the lessee deviseth the term, and the devise holden good, which proves, that the term was in him.

Harper, Justice, contrary: Many cases put before may be answered; for in the said case the term is limited to begin immediately, and not by way of remainder, or after the death of the lessee, and then the executors in the life of the testator are not known, nor able to seek any thing by the name of executors, and therefore that term shall take its beginning in the life of the testator: but in the case at bar the term is limited to the executors after the death of the testator, and the executor takes the term as a purchasor, and he hath it not as a chattel of the testator, but as his own chattel. And in the case of receipt before cited, the executor shall be received as executor, for the term was limited to him as executor. And here the statute of 27 H. 8. is to be considered, for it extends as well to chattels as to freehold, and the statute doth execute the possession to the use limited for years, as for life, or in fee: and here the use is limited to the executors, and not to the testator, and therefore it shall not be otherwise transferred. And therefore if a man seised in the right of his wife discontinueth, and afterwards the discontinuee makes a [7] feoffment in fee unto the use of the said husband and wife for their lives, in that case the wife shall not be remitted; for the statute doth transfer according to the use, and the use was limited for their lives, therefore they shall not be in of another estate.

Dyer, Chief Justice, to the same intent: The feoffer, i. Thomas Cranmer, limits all the uses, and therefore he shall not have that which he hath limited; and it is in the nature of a reservation, which shall be taken strictly and very strong against him who made the reservation; and he relied much upon the last reason urged by Harper upon the statute of 27 H. 8. that this was limited to the executors, and not to him who limited it, and therefore the possession shall be executed to the executors, to whom the use was limited; and this term shall not be assets in the hands of the executors: and he said, that he had seen a record, 2 H. 8. setting forth, that A. having feoffees to his use, devised, that his feoffees should sell his lands, who did accordingly; now the money coming by the sale shall be assets, &c. but it is not so limited in our case, therefore it shall not be assets. A lease is made to A. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of B. B. purchaseth the estate of A. the estate in remainder is not executed, for it is not conveyed by the grant of the first grantor, but by the act of another person after the grant. A lease for life to A. the remainder to a feme sole for years, they entermarry, waste is committed, the lessor brings an action of waste, he shall recover as well the estate for years as for life. A. leaseth unto B. for life, the remainder unto the executors of A. for years, the remainder over in fee to a stranger, the remainder for years is good, for the lessor cannot limit such an estate to himself, and the executors shall take the estate as purchasors, and the term shall be in abeyance untill the death of A.

There was a case before the Lord Brook in the time of Queen Mary, viz. a lease was made for life, proviso, that if the lessee dieth within the term of sixty years, that the executors shall have the lands, as in the right and title of the lessee, pro termino totidem annorum, which do amount to the number of sixty years, to be accounted from the said indenture. The opinion of the Justices of the Common Pleas upon the case was, that the term was not in the lessee for life. So this future term in the principal case was not in Tho. Cranmer. But see that case cited by Dyer, reported by himself 4 Ma. 150. and there the opinion of the Court was, that the same was not a lease, but a covenant.

And afterwards in the principal case judgment was given for the plaintiff, that the future term was not forfeited by the attainder of Cranmer.

D. puts in his cattle into his own close, who for want of enclosure escape into the close of J. S. and before that they be levant and couchant, J. S. distrains them for his rent: it was said by Manwood, Justice, that the distress was not well taken; for there is a difference when the cattel come upon the lands of another in the default of the owner of the cattel, as by escape or stray, and where in the default of another: for in the first case the lord may distrain them before they be levant and couchant; but in the latter case not: also a rent reserved upon a lease for years, is a new rent, and not like unto an ancient rent, due upon an ancient tenure betwixt the lord and the tenant: for, for a rent [8] reserved upon a lease for years, or for a rent charge a man cannot distrain the cattel, before they be levant and couchant upon the lands, although they come upon the lands by escape, estray, &c. Dyer, The lord cannot distrain the cattel which escape into the land of his tenant for want of enclosure of his tenant before they be levant and couchant: and yet the seignory is favoured for the antiquity of it: but here is new rent, not in respect of any seignory, but of reservation upon a lease for years, and therefore no distress before the cattel be levant and couchant upon the lands, quod Harper & Mounson concesserunt, and judgment was given accordingly.

The case was, in a writ of entry in the per, against A. and B. A. pleaded several tenancy: it was holden by Dyer, Chief Justice, that it is not any plea. Harper Justice: In assise it is no plea; for here the land is not in demand; but here it is a good plea, and the demandant ought to maintain his writ; Manwood, In no action founded upon disseisin is this good; for although the demandant by policy will bring his writ against the tenant of the land, and another who he will name in the writ, upon trust and confidence, and that he will not agree with the tenant of the lord in dilatories, for the tenant of the lands shall not be received to plead dilatories; yet in that case several tenancy is no plea for the tenant, but in a formedon, or other such like action, which is not grounded upon disseisin, if the writ be brought in such manner as above, the tenant by policy, that he may have the view, and other reasonable delay, may plead several tenancy, and so enforce the demandant to maintain his writ, but contrary in the case at bar, and so it was adjudged per curiam.

X. Creswell and Cokes Case.

Debt. Custome. Heriot.

Creswell brought debt against Coke, and demanded 200 marks upon the statute of 13 Eliz. of fraudulent deeds, gifts, &c. upon the second clause of the statute, viz. that all parties, or privies to such fraudulent deed, willingly putting in ure, avowing, &c. as true, simple, and given bona fide, shall forfeit, &c. And shewed that one A. held of the plaintiff 12 acres of customary lands, and died seised, and that by the custome of the manor, the lord was to have for a heriot, the best beast whereof his tenant died possessed, and farther shewed, that the said A. in his life time, and a little before his death, being possessed of 30 horses, of the value of 2000 marks, gave the said horses to the defendant, with intent to defraud the plaintiff, and other lords of their heriots, and that he went to the defendant's house to seise his heriot, and the defendant then strained the said horses, by reason of the gift aforesaid, for which the action is brought, to which the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff had seised one of the horses nomine herioti: and as to the rest he did demurr in law. Mounson Justice, was of opinion, that the plaintiff should recover the whole 200 marks, although he was defrauded but of one heriot onely: as if a man be indebted to me in 20l. and he makes such a fraudulent deed of his goods, of the value of 2000l.

although I be defrauded but of the 20l. yet he shall forfeit the whole value of the goods so conveyed. Manwood Justice, was of opinion, that the plaintiff should recover the value of one of the horses; and the gift by the first branch is void, as to the plaintiff but [9] for one of the horses onely, and not for all the horses contained in the gift, for no more than one horse was fraudulently given: and as by the first branch the gift is void but for one horse, so by the second branch the penalty extends but unto one horse, for the fraud extends but to one horse, and no farther. And this action is not a popular action, but extends onely to the party grieved. And of the same opinion was Dyer Chief Justice, and he confessed the case put by Mounson Justice, where the debtor of 20l. makes a fraudulent deed of his goods of 3000l. &c. for the person of the debtor is chargeable, and peradventure, goods of the value of 2000l. may be put in execution for 100l. but here the person is not charged for the heriot. Barham Serjeant, The fraud goes to the whole (scil.) to all the horses: for although the plaintiff is to have but one horse, yet he is to have the choice of all the horses, which of them he will have for the best beast, and because the choice goes to all the thirty horses; and by this fraudulent gift, he is defrauded of his election, which of the horses he would have, therefore he shall have the value of the whole thirty horses. But Dyer and Mounson said to the serjeant, set a price upon any of the thirty horses, as the best horse in your election, and demand the value of that horse as forfeit by the statute, and then your election is saved to you.

Assise. Receipt of the Wife.

In the assise against Arthur Gregory and his wife at Warwick, before Dyer and Barham, Justices of Assise, the husband made default, and the assise was awarded by default: and the wife came and prayed to be received, and the opinion of the said justices was, that receipt lay in that case; as in other cases of præcipe quod reddat; and therefore the wife was received. And now Dyer in Banco, demanded of his companions, the other justices if the receipt was well granted: and by Manwood and Mounson, Justices, clearly the receipt lies: for although that the statute doth not give receipt, but where the lands in demand are to be lost by such default of the husband, and in an assise the land shall not be lost by the default of the husband, but the assise shall be taken by default, yet because the husband and wife lose their challenges to the jury, because the assise is taken by default, it seemed to the justices, and also to the Preignothories, that receipt did well lie in this case.

No Costs upon Nonsuit in an Action upon Escape.

In an action upon escape, the plaintiff is nonsuit: It was holden, that the defendant should not have costs, by the statute of 23 H. 8. Note the words of the statute, i. (upon any action upon the statute) for any offence or personal wrong, supposed to be done immediately to the plaintiff, notwithstanding this action, is quodam modo, an action upon the statute, i. by the equity of the statute of West. 2. which gives expresly against the warden of the Fleet; yet properly it is not an action upon the statute: for in the declaration in such actions, no mention is made of the statute, which see in the Book of Entries, 169, 171. And here is not supposed any immediate personal wrong or offence to the plaintiff: and an action upon the case it is not: for then the writ ought to make mention of the escape, and that it doth not here; and yet at the common law, before the statute of West. 2. an action upon the case did lie for an escape: and so Dyer, Manwood, and Mounson, costs are not given in this case. And by Manwood, upon the [10] nonsuit, in an action upon the statute of 8 H. 6. the defendant shall not have costs, for that is not a personal wrong, for the writ is dissesivit, which is a real wrong.

Prescription. Rectory quid.

In trespass for breaking of his close, the defendant justified, to have a way by prescription over the land in which the trespass is supposed, for carrying of such tithes usque ad rectoriam de D. from such a place: and it was holden by Wray, and the whole Court, that the plea was not good; for in pleading such a way, there ought to be set forth, terminus a quo, & terminus ad quem, and this word rectory, which ought to be terminus ad quem, is incertain; for a rectory is a thing which consists of divers things, as glebe, tithes, &c. But he ought to have said, the parsonage house, or other place certain: and afterwards it was shewed to the Court, that the said rectory did consist onely of tithes, and so there is not any place certain, as parsonage house, barn, &c. to which the tithes have used to be carried, for the tithes have used to be let to farm to divers persons, who have carried such tithes to their own houses, and the defendant is one of the farmers of the tithes. Wray, If your case be such, you are to plead in this manner; that J. S. is seised in fee of the rectory of D. and that time out of mind, he, and all those, &c. have used for them and theirs formerly to have a way to carry their tithes from such a place over the land where, &c. unto such a high way, and name a way, which is the next to the place where the trespass was done; the which cause the defendant pleaded so according to the direction of the Court.

In debt by the plaintiff against the defendant as heir, he pleaded that he had nothing by descent but the third part of the manor of D. The plaintiff replied, assets; and shewed for assets, that the defendant had the whole manor of Dale by descent, upon which they were at issue: and it was given in evidence to the jury, that the manor was holden by knight's-service; and that the said Sir John, the ancestor of the defendant, by his will in writing devised the whole manor to his wife, until the defendant, his son and heir, should come to the age of 24 years; and that at the age of his said son of 24 years, the wife should have the third part of the said manor for term of her life, and her son should have the residue: and that if his said son do die before he come to his age of 24 years, without heir of his body, that the land should remain to J. S. the remainder over to another: the devisor died, the son came to the age of 24 years; and the question was, if the son hath an estate-tayl, for then for two parts he is not in by descent: and by Dyer and Manwood, Justices, here is not any estate tayl, for no tayl was to rise before his said age, and therefore the tayl shall never take effect; and the fee-simple doth descend, and remain in the son, unless he dieth within the age of 24 years, and then the entail vests with the remainders over. But now having attained his said age, he hath a fee-simple, and that by descent of the whole manor, and a general judgment shall be given against him, as of his own debt: and an elegit shall issue forth of the moyety of all his lands, as well those which he hath by descent from the same ancestor, as any else; and a capias lieth against him. But Manwood conceived, that if general judgment be given against the heir by default, in such a case a capias doth not lie, although in case of false plea it lieth. Dyer contrary; and the writ against the heir is in the debet & detinet, which proves, that in law it is his own debt: and he said, that he could shew a precedent where such an action was maintainable against the executors of the heir.

And also if no such person was, then the first lease was void, and then the second lease shall begin presently, which Manwood and Mounson granted, and by Manwood, the defendant shall be estopped by the recital of the first lease, to say, that there was no such Duffam: and although the common ground is, that a recital is not an estoppel, yet where the recital is material, as it is here, it is otherwise, for here the second lease is to begin upon the expiration of the recited lease; and therefore in this case it shall be an estoppel.

In an action upon the statute of 5 Eliz. for a perjury by three, the plaintiffs declared, that the defendant being examined upon his oath before commissioners, if a surrender was made at such a court of a copyhold to the use of A. and B. two of the defendants: the defendant swore there was no such surrender made, &c. Exception was taken to the declaration, because that the certainty of the copyhold did not appear upon the declaration: for the statute requires that in such case the party grieved shall have remedy, so as it ought to appear in what thing he is grieved; quod fuit concessum per totam curiam. Another exception was taken, because the action is given in this case to the party grieved, and it appeareth upon the declaration, that the surrender, in the negative deposing of which the perjury is assigned, was made to the use of two of the plaintiffs onely, and then the third person is not a party grieved, for he claims nothing by the surrender: and therefore forasmuch as the two persons grieved have joined with the party not grieved, the writ shall abate against them all, which Wray and Southcote granted.

In an action upon the statute of Winchester 13 E. 1. against the men of the hundred of A. Barham, Serjeant, took exception to the declaration, because it appeareth upon it, that the half year after the robbery is not yet come; for by the said statute it is ordained, that the countrey have no longer time than half a year after the robbery done, within which time facent-gree of the robbery, or respondent the body of the misfeasors. And here the action is brought within the half year: and for this cause the declaration was holden to be insufficent by the whole Court. And the Lord Dyer spake much in commendation of that statute being made for the publick benefit of the whole commonwealth: for the law intends when a robbery is done, that if the countrey will not pursue the malefactors, that some of them are receivors or abettors of the felons.

Manwood, Justice, said, when I was a servant to Sir James Hales, one of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, one of his servants was robbed at Gadds Hill, within the hundred of Gravesend in Kent, and he sued the men of the hundred upon this statute; and it seemed hard to the inhabitants there, that they should answer for the robberies done at Gadds Hill, because robberies are there so frequent, that if they should answer for all of them, that they should be utterly undone. And Harris, Serjeant, was of councill with the inhabitants of Gravesend, and pleaded for them, that time out of mind, &c. felons had used to rob at Gadds Hill, and so prescribed, and afterwards by award they were charged: and note, that the case was, that three men were robbed, and they three joined in the action against the inhabitants.

XX. COLSHIL AND HASTINGS CASE.

Execution executed.

An extent was sued forth upon a statute-merchant by Colshil against Hastings, for lands in his possession in the county of Southampton: the sheriff put the plaintiff the conusee in possession of [13] parcel of a house and of lands, and suffered Hastings to continue in the rest of the house, by reason whereof Hastings kept the possession of the whole, and held the conusee out; the conusee, to the intent that he might have full and perfect possession of the whole, caused the sheriff, that he did not retorn the writ of extent, upon which it is entred on the roll, quod vice-comes nihil inde fecit, nec misit breve. Whereupon issued an alias extendi facias, upon which the new sheriff did retorn, that in the time of the old sheriff, a writ of extent issued forth, &c. and that the said sheriff had extended the lands, by reason whereof the now sheriff could not extend them upon the new writ. It was moved for the conusee, that the retorn was not good; for although that the lands be extended by the first writ, yet because it is not retorned, it is not any execution in law, nor could the conusee have an assise, which Manwood, Justice, denied: Loare Preignothory, Our course is, when no retorn of such writ is made, to grant an alias, at the prayers of the party, and to enter upon the roll, that the sheriff upon the first writ, nihil inde fecit, nec misit breve. And that was taken by the Court to be a good and lawful course in such case; for upon such surmise, that no execution hath been done, and that upon such entry on the roll, an alias breve might be well awarded. And afterwards, this second writ of extent was not filed by order of the Court: and note, that the new sheriff was examined upon his oath by the Court of the action, and he said, that he made the retorn by the advice of Master Plowden, who told him, that he might safely retorn, that the land was formerly extended, and although that the said extent was not retorned; yet it is an execution for the party. Manwood, Certainly this is an insufficient retorn: but, perhaps Master Plowden did not know of this entry in the roll, as aforesaid, for now it appeareth upon record, that no execution was done. If this entry had not been, I should well agree with Master Plowden, that the same is an execution for the party, although it be not retorned.

XXI. Steward's Case.

The case was, A. seised of certain lands in fee, granted a rent-charge out of the same to another, and afterwards aliened the lands to a stranger. The grantee in a replevin did avow for the rent, and the other party pleaded, that nothing passed by the deed: it was holden by the whole Court to be no plea, nor can any issue be joined upon it, but the plaintiff ought to have said, that he did not grant by the deed: for the same is a rent newly created, and which had not his essence before the grant, and it cannot properly be said, that nothing passed by the deed, but not of a thing that is in esse, but of things not in esse, that he did not grant, is the most natural issue, for a thing not in esse, non potest transire.

Trover and Conversion.

In an action upon the case upon a trover and conversion to his own use per venditionem quibusdam hominibus ignotis, the defendant pleaded, that the goods were bailed to him, to bail over to J. S. to whom he had delivered them, absque hoc, that he did convert them to his own use, per venditionem hominibus ignotis. It was moved by Egerton, that that matter is not traversable, quod Wray concessit, for [14] the conversion to his own use, is the cause and ground of the action, and not the selling of the goods, &c.

Outlawry.

A man was outlawed in the Court of Hustings of London; and the Hustings in which the judgment of outlawry was given, was holden two weeks next after the last Hustings; so as there was but two weeks betwixt the two Hustings, whereas commonly the Hustings is holden but every three weeks, and now the Sheriffs of London were in doubt, if they might safely retorn the outlawry, without danger of an action upon the case brought against them by the party outlawed; it was holden by Dyer and the whole Court, that they ought and might safely retorn the said outlawry: for the Lord Dyer said, that there is a record in the time of R. 2. whereby it appeareth, that in London they might hold their Hustings every week, if they pleased, and afterwards he commanded Mosley and Christopher, secondaries, to retorn the outlawry, which was done accordingly.

XXIV. LOVELESSE'S CASE.

Debt upon Recognizance.

Lovelesse, Serjeant, brought a scire facias upon a recognizance, and had judgment upon default, quod habeat executionem, and afterwards he brought an action of debt upon the said judgment, and exception was taken to the action: for that he ought to proceed upon the judgment given upon the scire facias, and ought to sue execution according to the said judgment by elegit, or scire facias, but not by capias; but the exception was not allowed; for the recognizance is a judgment in it self, and an action of debt will lie upon it; without any judgment in the scire facias; and debt lieth as well upon the judgment, as upon the recognizance it self; and so was the opinion of the whole Court.

XXV. ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

See Bacon's Reading upon this Stat.

The case was, that Robert Brent being seised of lands in fee, made a feoffment thereof unto the use of himself and Dorothy his wife, for their lives; and if he do survive his said wife, then to the use of him the said Robert and such a woman as he should after marry, for the jointure of such wife; the remainder over to a stranger in fee: and afterward (with the privity and assent of the feoffor) he in the remainder and the feoffees join in a feoffment to divers persons, (note, both feoffments were after the Statute of 27 H. 8.) and afterwards Robert Brent, the husband, levyed a fine to the same uses, and took a second wife, and died: the second wife, by the assent and commandment of the first feoffees, after the five years past after the fine, entered to raise the uses mentioned in the first feoffment limited to the second wife.

This case was argued by all the justices of the Court of Common-Pleas: and Mounson, Justice, conceived that the entry of the wife was lawfull, and that without the assent or commandment of the feoffees. An use may be limited to one who is in esse, or in posse; and the second wife here was in esse when the use was limited, and she was also in posse; [15] for by possibility the first wife might die, and also by possibility the feoffor might take to wife this woman. A gift to one who is not in esse or in posse, is void. A gift to J. S. & primogenito filio suo, if he have a son alive at the time of the gift, he shall take jointly with his father; but if not, yet after his death he shall take by way of remainder. A use is nothing else but a trust and confidence, and was not any inheritance by the course of the common law; for no mention is made of uses in our ancient books, when the common law greatly flourished, as in the time of E. 1. and E. 3. and also uses are not subject to the grounds of law: and although divers statutes have been made for the avoiding of divers policies for the gaining of lands in mortmain, yet the makers of the said statutes could not find out any such conveyances to uses. See the Statute of Religiosis, 7 E. 1. and see 29 H. 8. tr. Mortmain 39. There is a glance at uses 44 E. 3. 25. b. the words are, En foy demist, &c. and the feoffees sued livery. And the first mention of uses in our books is 30 H. 6. Br. Title to Uses 49. and the same case Devise Fitz. 22. In the time of E. 4. uses were more frequent; for 5 E. 4. 8. divers cases concerning uses are there put, &c. and afterwards 1 R. 3. a new statute was made for the benefit of cestuy que use; and afterwards the statute of 4 H. 7. for the wardship of cestuy que use: and afterwards the statute of 27 H. 8. which made an end of uses. These uses at the first were of no value, but afterwards by continuance communis error fecit jus, so as they were taken and esteemed as inheritances: and they cannot be more fitly resembled to any thing, as to copyholds, which at beginning were but tenures at will, and were not known at the common law, but now they are in the same reputation in law as inheritances; and they are not guided by the rules of the common law, but by the intent of the parties: which appeareth in this case at bar to be, that she who should be the second wife of Robert Brent, the feoffor, should have the lands ut supra: and therefore this use shall rise, and the statute of 27 H. 8. shall draw the possession after it.

Manwood, Justice; As to the commencement of use, it hath been as long as mankind hath been guided by reason: and although no mention is made of uses in our ancient books, yet that is no argument that uses have been but of late times. Uses were not common, therefore were not at all, is a non sequitur. As long as wills have been, trust and confidence hath been; and also as long as marriage hath been. See the writ of causa matrimonii prolocuti: and see the Statute of Marlbridg, cap. 6. there is mention of falsa feoffamenta; and note, by other words of the said statute there was a trust, but it was a false trust to deceive another; and therefore such a mis-shapen trust is not called a trust by the said statute, but a collusion. And Mr. Littleton saith, that cestuy que use shall be sworn upon enquests, which was not enacted by any statute, but practised and put in ure by reason of common law. And I have seen divers ancient deeds of uses: and in ancient time, you shall not find that any would purchase lands to himself alone, but had two or three joint feoffees with him; and he who was first named in the charter of feoffment, was cestuy que use, although that no use was declared unto him upon the livery, and so it was known by the occupation of the lands. And the reason why no mention is made in our ancient Books of Uses, is, because men were then of better consciences than now they are, so as the feoffees did not give occasion to their feoffors to bring subpœna's to compell them to perform the trusts reposed in them.

As to that which hath been said, that uses have taken their beginning after the statute of West. 3. For before the said statute, if a man had made a feoffment in fee without declaring any use, it should be to the use of the feoffee, because there is a sufficient consideration betwixt [16] the feoffor and feoffee to raise the use, i. the seignory created by the law betwixt them; but now by the said statute such consideration is taken away; and then upon such feoffment, without consideration or declaration of use, it is to the use of the feoffor himself; the same is no reason against them: for although that an use implied was not before the said statute of West. 3. yet a use expressed was; and if before the said statute the feoffor had declared an use; the same had been good: as at this day, a gift in tail, or a lease for life, is made to another use, yet notwithstanding that the law doth create a tenure upon the lease or gift, yet the use expressed shall be good. And although uses are of such antiquity, yet they are not directed by the rules of the common law, but by the will of the owner of the lands: for the use is in his hands as clay is in the hands of the potter which he in whose hands it is may put into what form he pleaseth: and notwithstanding that now the possession be executed to the use, yet the property and quality, as abstracted from the possession, shall not be drowned in the possession: and so for as much as uses were by permission of law guided at the wills of the parties, so also shall be the possessions: and so because, that an use, as abstracted from the possession, might have been well limited to the wife which should be, notwithstanding that at the time of such limitation such a one was not in esse, in the same manner it shall be now, when the possession is presently executed to the use: and so in this case, the second wife shall be capable of this use, according to the will and direction of the owner. If a feoffment in fee be made to the use of B. for life, and if A. before such a day shall pay 10l. to the feoffor, then to the use of the said A. for life, the same is a good use to begin upon the said condition; and yet if it had been limited in possession, it had been otherwise: and that an use may begin upon a contingency, see the case 27 H. 8. 5. A covenant is made by indenture betwixt A. and B. that the son of A. shall marry the daughter of B. upon which B. pays 100l. to A. and the said A. doth covenant, that if the said marriage doth not take effect, that then the feoffees of the said A. shall suffer the said B. his executors and assigns, to have the issues and profits of certain lands, until B. his executors and assigns, shall be contented and satisfied of the sum aforesaid by the said A. his executors or assigns, there, if the marriage doth not take effect, upon such contingent, the use shall rise to B. And see 30 H. 8. Br. Feoffs to Uses 50. A. covenants with B. that then B. shall enfeoff A. of the manor of D. then B. and his heirs shall be seised of the manor of D. to the use of the said A. and his heirs: now if A. enfeoffeth B. ut supra, then, &c. vide librum. And here in our case, the second wife doth not hold joyntly with her husband, for their estates do not begin together, for the husband is in of his ancient estate which he had during the first marriage, notwithstanding the words of limitation to the said husband and his second wife, but she shall take by way of remainder.

Harper, Justice, Uses began about 18 E. 2. after which time there was such a general liking of them, that they were anew used, but they did not come into common practice before the time of King Henry the sixth, when the great contention fell out betwixt the two great houses of York and Lancaster, at which time uses were in great estimation for the safety of inheritances. Afterwards, uses by practices became mischievous, and prejudicial to the publick justice of the realm, and to many particular persons; for some timentes implacitari, conveyed their lands secretly to uses, so as he who had right knew not against whom to bring his action: and for that, divers statutes have been made to enable the subject to implead the pernor of the profits, 4 H. 4. 7. 11 H. 6. 4. 1 H. 7. And as to the making of the statute of 27 H. 8. the truth is, that the King was displeased for the loss of wardships, and other injuries done to him; for which cause he [17] complained to the Judges of the defect of the law in that case who therefore shewed unto the King the causes of those injuries and losses to the King; and farther shewed to the King, that if the possession might be joyned to the use, all would go well, and all the injuries, wrong, and loss, which came to the King by reason of such uses, wills, and secret feoffments, would be avoided: for which the King commanded his council to frame a bill to that purpose, and present it to the House of Commons in the 24 year of his reign, but it was then rejected; and the King at that time would have been contented, that the fourth part of the land onely should descend: and from that time the King stayed farther proceedings in the said cause until 27 H. 8. at which time it took effect: and their cure was to pen the statute so precisely, that nothing should be left in the feoffees, but that the whole estate should be executed by the statute, so as the said statute did utterly take out all from the feoffees. Whereas it hath been said, that a use hath been as long as any marriage hath been, and so conceived upon the writ causa matrimonii prolocuti, the same is not any reason; for in that case there is not any confidence or trust: for if the marriage doth not take effect, the woman shall have her writ de causa matrimonii prolocuti. In conveyances we are to respect two things, the form, and the effect of it; and in all cases where the form and the effect cannot stand together, the form shall be rejected, and the effect shall stand. A lease for life is made to a feme sole, she takes husband, the lessor confirms to both of them; the husband cannot take any estate presently according to the words of the confirmation; but because the will of the lessor is, that an estate shall accrue to the husband, he shall have it as the law will, by way of remainder. So lands are given to an abbat and a secular man, the form of the words purport a joynt estate, but that by law cannot be; and therefore they shall take as the law will, rather than not at all. In our case here, the limitation of the use cannot be pursued precisely according to the words, which are, viz. If the husband over-live his said first wife, then to the use of the said husband and his wife which shall be; which in words is a joynt estate: and therefore the words shall be construed, After the death of the first wife, unto the use of the husband until he marrieth, and afterwards to the use of him and his second wife, in which case they shall take joyntly.

Dyer, Chief Justice, As to the beginning of uses, he conceived that the same was immediately after the Statute of Mortmain, at which time all their shifts then in practice were found out: which see, the Statute of Mortmain, 7 E. 1. Stat. de Religiosis: for which cause they were after driven to find out other shifts not provided for by the statute, which were espyed by the making of the statute of 15 R. 2. cap. 5. and in that statute these words, behoof and use are used: which is the first place those words have been used in our law, and yet long time before that statute uses had been in practice, as appeareth in the Exchequer, 34 E. 3. the which in the time of Queen Mary, when the said record was shewed in the Exchequer to the justices, the effect of which record was, that Walter de Chirton, who was customer of the King, became indebted to the King in the sum of 18000l. and with that the King's money had purchased in the name of his friends, to defraud the King, many lands, and took the profits of them; those lands so purchased were extended to the use, and for the King, in payment of his debt, as well as if Walter de Chirton himself had been seised of them, and that by the advice of the Chancellor and the Chief Justices. Now uses by tract of time have grown in credit, so as cestuy que use have been sworn in inquests, and by the law they might justifie the maintaining of their feoffees when they had been impleaded, which they could not have done if they had not more interest in the lands than strangers: [18] and they (uses) have been in such reckoning and account since, that an use hath obtained the name of an inheritance, and is now reputed amongst the estates of lands in our law; and therefore we say in speeches, and in penning of statutes, estates in possession, and estates in use: and a use cannot be limited to parishioners, no more than the land it self; so as there is a great affinity betwixt the words, lands and use. It is to be granted, that the statute of 27 H. 8. doth devest all out of the feoffees, yet it doth not devest it before that the use be vested in cestuy que use; for the words of the statute are, that the possession shall be executed in such manner, quality, and degree, as was the use; therefore the vesting of the use ought to precede the execution of the possession to it. And he was of opinion, that this future use in the principal case limited to the second wife did remain in the feoffees at the first, but that they had destroyed it by their feoffment; for the second wife at the time of the feoffment was not known, and therefore it shall now accrue: and he was also of opinion, that this limitation to the second wife was void at the beginning; for the second wife was not a person able to take, when the estate and use limited to the first wife was determined, and therefore she shall not take at all: and if such an estate had been limited in possession, it should not have vested, no more than now.

Mounson, Justice; When the feoffor and the feoffees joyn in a fine of that land, within which the use in future is wrapped, he conceived, that the use being in abeyance and consideration of the law, could not be touched by the fine. It is to be confessed, that an use may be discontinued: see 4 H. 7. 18. A feoffment made to the use of A. for life, and after to the use of B. in tail, &c. A. makes a feoffment in fee, and dieth, the same is a discontinuance of the other uses: and see 27 H. 8. 29. And in our case, the use might arise without any entry of the feoffees; for the use is not discontinued, but the feoffees are barred by the fine: and he was also of opinion, that this use might take effect without any entry, and take effect according to the limitation.

Manwood, This estate which is limited in use to the second wife, because it cannot vest in her because not known, the feoffees are yet content with it, and this use is to grow out of their estates at the seasonable time: then when they joyn in a feoffment, their estate which was the root of the conveyance, and the uses which are the branches, spring not till she dieth; and therefore if the estate of the feoffees, which is the root of the uses, be destroyed by alienation of the land before the uses have their being, as in our case it is, because that then the second was not known, no use can afterwards rise, for by the feoffment they are destroyed, and also every possibility of them. But if the uses had been in esse, so as the persons to whom they are limited are known, then the statute shall execute the possession to such uses. And as to that which hath been objected by my brother Mounson, that the law shall keep and preserve the use, and that notwithstanding any thing done by the feoffees at its due time it shall rise: that cannot be; for the statute of 27 H. 8. doth not speak of such uses as this in our case, but of such uses onely, of which one may say, such a use is limited to such a person and such to such a person, &c. and such uses are onely executed by the statute. It may be demanded, what estate the feoffees have in the lands until such uses be executed? It may be answered, a fee-simple determinable, as the lord hath when he entereth upon his villein donee in tail: and I conceive, that this use was not in custodia legis; quia de minimis non curat lex: and the use was such a thing of which the law took no knowledge; and in case of an estate in possession, such an use in abeyance should be bound: as a lease for life unto A. the remainder to the right heirs of B. [19] A. suffers a common recovery in the life of B. who afterwards dieth, and afterwards A. dyeth, the heir of B. is bound, for he had not right at the time of the recovery. This fine levied by the manner shall not destroy the uses limited to the second wife; for as to the feoffees, they have nothing to doe with the lands to transfer any estate against the former limitation; for the statute leaves nothing in the feoffees, but vests all in cesty que use, and that which cannot vest in him to whom it is limited, shall return to the feoffor: as if I make a feoffment in fee to the use of my self for life, and after to the use of my second wife, all the fee is now in me, and when I take a second wife, then the feoffees shall be seised to the use of such wife in remainder for her life: but in the case at Bar, the feoffees at the time when this second wife was in esse, had not any thing in the lands, for they had departed with all their interest before by their feoffment and fine.

Note, that by the first feoffment the use was limited to D. the first wife of the feoffor, for term of her life, the remainder in tail to A. Brent, the remainder in fee to one Broughton, and all these uses were executed by the statute; but these persons were not parties to the livery, but onely the feoffees, which had not any thing: then when they make their letter of attorney to make livery of seisin (not being seised of the land) the attorney onely is a disseisor, and so nothing passed from the feoffees, if any right had been in them: and for another reason nothing passed by this last conveyance out of the feoffees, for the parties to the latter conveyance had notice of the use, and so it appeareth by the second indenture, the which makes mention of the first uses, &c.

Dyer, Here in our case, the founders of these uses, i. the feoffor and the feoffees, have an intent to overthrow these uses, for at the common law the feoffees might doe it of themselves; as if the feoffees had made a feoffment in fee in consideration of money to others who had not notice of the uses, now the uses are gone, and the second feoffees in such cases were seised to their own uses. I well know, that by this feoffment all is devested out of the feoffees, which might vest in the person to whom the use is limited; but here this use which was limited to the second wife, could not upon the limitation of it vest in any person; and therefore it shall remain in the feoffees who are put in trust with it, and therefore have interest in the lands until all the trusts be performed: and therefore the second wife was advised by her council to make her entry in name of the surviving feoffee, and the interest which the feoffees have in the interim, untill the execution of all the uses, is a fee-simple determinable; for the whole interest is not devested or driven out of the feoffees untill the whole trust be accomplished, i. untill all the uses limited upon the feoffment are executed, and have their full perfection.

And whereas it hath been alledged on the other side, that upon the second feoffment nothing passed out of the feoffees, for which it shall not be said in law their livery, but that the attorney shall be said the sole disseisor; as to that I conceive, that whatsoever was lost in the feoffees passed by that livery. If he in reversion upon an estate for life makes a charter of a feoffment, and a letter of attorney to make livery of seisin without words ad expellendas omnes, &c. if livery be made by force thereof, the fee-simple shall pass: and he cited a case which was argued before all the justices of England, reported by himself 2 and 3 Ma. 131. Divers leases for years were made of the demeans of an abby, after which the reversion was granted to the Countess of Richmond for life, after which King Edw. 6. granted the reversion in fee to the Earl of Warwick, who made a feoffment of [20] all to certain persons, to the use of his eldest son and his wife for her jointure, with a letter of attorney to make livery and seisin; the attorney made livery accordingly, and by that feoffment and livery it was adjudged, that the fee-simple did pass: so in our case, upon this second feoffment, a disseisin is done to D. the first wife, and yet the right of the feoffees doth pass thereby; and although it shall not be taken in law their livery, yet it shall be adjudged their confirmation, because they have joined in the deed, and that shall bind their right to establish the same in the new feoffees, as if the disseisee join in a feoffee by deed with the heir of the disseisor: and as to that which hath been objected, that because at the time of the feoffment, the feoffees had not any thing, &c. and therefore nothing shall pass: and they have likened to the case, where the father is disseised, and the son and heir doth release to the disseisor, the same shall not bind the heir after the death of his father: the same is not like our case; for there is a great difference betwixt a release and a feoffment; for if the son disseise the father, and maketh a feoffment in fee in the life of his father, notwithstanding that he had not any right at the time of the feoffment, yet he is bound.

TRIN. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH. ROT. 342.

XXVI. THURKETTELL AND TEY'S CASE.

In debt by John Thurkettell against Edw. Tey, and Mary his wife, executrix of Robert Thurkettell, the case was, that Agnes Thurkettell, mother of Robert, the testator, devised certain lands to Robert, and afterwards devised 40l. to the plaintiff, John, upon condition, that the said John, cum requisitus esset acquietaret, & retaxaret prædict. Roberto omnes actiones reales & personales, querelas, &c. prædict. 40l. per dict. voluntat. legatis tantummodo exceptis; Agnes died, Robert made two bonds to John, the first was endorsed to pay 20l. parcell of the said legacy, within a year after the death of the said Agnes, so as the plaintiff release according to the will of the said Agnes. The second obligation was with the same condition, to pay 20l. residue of the said legacy, within two years after the death of the said Agnes, upon condition to release, ut supra, and all this matter was pleaded in barr; and farther, that Robert required the said John to make the release, &c. which he refused, and they were at issue upon the request, and it was found for the plaintiff; i. quod dict. Robert. non requisivit, &c. upon which verdict judgment was given for the plaintiff; upon which the defendants brought error, because it appeareth upon the record here, quod billa prædict. prosecuta fuit infra duos annos post mortem dict. Agnet. & sic ante diem solutionis: for the second bond, see 46 E. 3. 28. by Finchden and Persay, and see there, by Persay, that if my writ be brought before the day of payment, and doth depend in suit till after the day of payment, that my writ is made good; for at all times the defendant was my debtor. XXVII. LIGHTFOOT AND BUTLER'S CASE.

It was said in this case by the Solicitor General, that if one holdeth of the Queen, as of her manor, he shall not have the privilege of the Exchequer for that cause; but if the King grants tithes, and thereupon reserveth a rent, nomine decimæ, and a tenure of him, there he shall have the privilege: the principal case was, that one of the parties claimed the lands in question as his freehold, but holden of the Queen, as of such a manor; and the other claimed it as copyhold, holden of the same manor; and the freeholder did suggest in the Exchequer, that the demands of the manor are not indifferent. Clark, Baron, If it be so, this Court shall have jurisdiction. Manwood, If the matter pass against you wrongfully, wherefore may you not have an assise? And the case of Beaumorris was cited (but I remember not to what purpose) i. the Mayor and Commonalty of Beaumorris were patrons of a chantry; and they and the chantry priest made a lease for years by indenture, in the end of which was this clause, In cujus rei testimonium, tam the priest, quam the mayor and commonalty have put their common seal, and it was moved that there was not any seal for the priest, for he could not have a common seal with the mayor and commonalty. Clark, Twenty men may seal with one seal, and they may also seal with one seal upon one piece of wax onely, and that shall serve for them all, if they all lay their hands upon the seal together. Manwood, They may all seal with one seal, but upon several pieces of wax. Gent, When many are parties to a deed, the words are sigilla omnia; which cannot be aptly said in this case, where all seal upon one piece of wax.

XXVIII. Barns and Smith's Case.

Emanuel Barns, executor of Barns, late Bishop of London, brought debt for arrerages of rent, reserved upon a lease for years, of certain mines demised to Smith, i. mines called Argil, and mines called Greenbourn; and it was against the executors of Smith. The defendant pleaded, as to parcel non detinet, and as to the other parcel of the arrerages, that in the indenture of lease, there is a covenant, that if it shall happen that the said lessee be hindred, quo minus mineriis, præd. gaudere possit; that then so much rent should be deducted anno, to the value of the mine, that he could not enjoy, &c. And he said, that he was hindred, quo minus gaudere potuit mineriis præd. &c. and issue was joined, that the lessee could not enjoy, &c. and it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved by Coke, in arrest of judgment, that here is not any place shewed where these mines were, so as it doth not appear from what place the visne should come; as if in an action (as here) the plaintiff declares of a lease made of lands, called R. in such a county, the same is not good. The issue here is, non potuit fodere in præd. minera de Greenbourn, for the space of seven years and a half, from whence shall the visne come for trial of it? Not from Durham where the lease was made; for no affinity or nearness is betwixt the place where the lease was made and this issue. But if the issue had been, that the lessor had not any thing in the mines at the time of the lease, that might be tried where the lease was made: another [22] exception was, because that the plea is; quod non potuit fodere, in 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. dimidio, 10, & 11. and that appears to be seven years and a half, and the jury find that he could not digg, per spatium septem annorum tantum, without speaking of the half year, and so they have not given a full verdict: and as to the first exception, it was said, if a thing be alledged in pleading which is issuable, and there is not laid down any place of it, although that no issue be joined upon it, yet because he hath prevented the other of his plea to it, judgment given in such case shall be reversed: and so it was rated, betwixt Matthew and Stansham: so upon the Statute of Usury, the informer charged the defendant, that by way of corrupt bargain he hath received so much, and doth not shew the place, although no issue was joined upon it, but they were at issue upon another point, yet if judgment in such case be given, it shall be reversed. And in all actions upon the case, where request is necessary, and the plaintiff ought to alledge it; the place of the request must be shewed: and he said, that such issue was to be tried where the mines leased are; and here no place is alledged, where the mines are, but onely in the county of Durham; and yet a visne of the City of Durham hath tried the issue, which ought not to have been, but the visne ought to have come, de corpore comitatus. Clark, Baron, If the issue be joined upon taking of the profits, it shall be tried where the land is, but non debet or detinet, where the lease is made. Coke, The issue is, non potuit fodere, and that is local; therefore it shall be tried where the mines are. Manwood, Non potuit fodere, non potuit gaudere, are not local; but non fodit, non gavisus fuit, is local, and shall be tried where the mines are: and here it is not shewed how he was hindred to dig, &c. and the issue is to be de postatia, non de actu. Tanfield, As to that which Coke hath said, that the visne in this case shall come, de corpore comitatus, the same is not so, for such a visne shall never be, but where the issue is upon nul tiel vill hamlet, or place known: in another case the trial shall be, de corpore comitatus, as in a false imprisonment the defendant justifies, that the common voice and fame was, that the plaintiff committed such a felony, &c. The plaintiff traverseth the common voice and fame, there the visne shall be, de corpore comitatus, 11 E. 4. 4, and 5. and see also 25 Eliz. the case of Gynne and Constantine reported now in Coke, 6. part Dowdale's case, 48. As to the defect in the verdict for the half year, the record is not so; for the record is, dimidio anni decimi, & undecimi, and so two half years make a whole year, and so there is but seven years in which the disturbance is supposed to be done. See as to the visne, de corpore comitatus, 22 E. 4. 4. Visne 27. Another exception was taken, because that the declaration is, that the lease was made at Durham, in comitatu Dunelm. and doth not say also in Selberg, for such is the name of the County Palatine; but to that it was said, that every writ of execution which goes into the County Palatine, is directed Episcopo Dunelmensi, & cancellario suo, quod det in mandatis vice-com. suo, &c. And Durham was called Selberg in ancient times, and the name of the County Palatine there, is commonly Dunelm. & Selberg. and their pleas there entred; placita coram justiciariis de Dunelm. & Selberg. but the same is amongst themselves onely, and all directions from hence to them are Episcop. Dunelm. without mention of Selberg, and a precedent was shewed to the Court to that purpose and intent. Manwood, Levied by distress, and issint rein arere shall be tried where the lease was made: Clark, That is true, for by the (issint) the plea before is waved: and see 8 H. 5. 10. Where an issue is to be tried in Lincoln, or such a town, which is a franchise, the ven. fac. shall be of Lincoln, &c. and not de vicineto de Lincoln; for then the jury shall be as well of the county adjacent, as of Lincoln itself, which the Sheriff of Lincoln cannot doe: but a venire facias de suburbiis of Bristow was awarded good: [23] and if in the case at bar, the defendant had pleaded, that the defendant had entred into part of the mines, and so suspended his rent, upon which they are at issue; that, by Manwood, shall be tried by a jury, de corpore comitatus. The issue here is, if the defendant might enjoy those mines, secundum veram intentionem dimissionis prædict. and that is referred to the devise which was made at Durham, and there it is well triable. And afterwards, at another day it was holden, that all the issues are jeofailes; but as to the want of place, the same was holden to be a material exception. See the case of Mynes, Plowd. 337. Exception was taken to the information, because it is not laid down there in what town or hamlet Newlands lay; and it was holden, the same had been a material exception, if the defendant had demurred upon the information, in which case there is no trial by jury, &c. and he said, misnosmer shall be tried where the writ is brought, &c. So ne unque administer as executor, &c. Manwood, Here the lease is said to be made at Durham, in a place certain; if now there be not any other local thing said which might draw the trial elsewhere, it shall be tried at Durham where the lease is made: an infant makes a lease for years, rendring rent, and afterwards re-enters, and avoids his lease by reason of his nonage, and title is made against him by the lease, upon which he pretended nonage, it shall be tried where the lease was made, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

XXIX. ROSS AND MORRICE'S CASE.

Edward Ross was plaintiff in a replevin against Edward Morrice, and George Manly defendants, who made conusance, as bailiffs to Jerom Weston. The plaintiff declares, of the taking of two geldings, 20 Decemb. 29 Eliz. at Nayland, in the county of Suffolk, in a certain place called Nayland-Court-Meadow. And the conusance is that the place where was a freehold of the said Jer. Weston, &c. The plaintiff in bar of the conusance shewed, that long time before, Sir Christopher Danby was seised of 30 acres of meadow in Nayland, whereof the place where, &c. and leased the same by indenture to Thomas Calton, 19 Maii, 31 H. 8. Habendum from the Feast of the Annunciation, 1553. for the term of 45 years; who, 1 E. 6. assigned his interest to Edw. Ross, the plaintiff's father, who, 1 Maii, the said 1553. entred, and 11 Eliz.

granted his interest to Bamford and Mascal, who entred and were possessed. Sir Christopher Danby died seised of the reversion, 13 Eliz. and the same descended to Thomas Danby his son and heir: 14 Eliz. Mascal died, Bamford, 15 Eliz. granted to the plaintiff, habendum from the 17 of March 1583. for three years, which expired 26 Eliz. Bamford entred, and afterwards Thomas Danby granted the reversion to Edw. Rockwood in fee, to which the said Bamford attorned; and the plaintiff by force of the said lease, put in his cattel, &c. The plaintiff replicando said; that long time before that Danby had any thing, Jeofry, Lord Scroop, had issue of his body, Henry, Lord Scroop, and died; and that one John Guntwarby was seised of the said manor of Nayland, whereof, &c. in fee, by his charter, 25 E. 3. gave to the said Henry, Lord Scroop, the same, et hæredibus corpore suo exeuntibus, who had issue Stephen, who entred, and died seised, having issue John, who entred, and died seised, having issue Thomas, who entred, and 3 H. 7. suffered a common recovery to the use of himself and his heirs, the recoveries enfeoffed, Thomas seised also of many other lands, and had issue, Ralph, Jeofry, Alice, Elizabeth and Margery, and afterwards died seised. Ralph Lord Scroop entred, and thereof did enfeoffee divers persons [24] unto the use of himself, and Eleanor his wife, for their lives, and the heirs males of the said Ralph; and afterwards, the said Ralph being possessed of the said charter of entail made, ut supra, by Guntwardy, 7 H. 8. devised that the feoffees should be seised of the said manor of Nayland to the use of himself, and Eleanor his wife, for their lives; and if they died without issue of the body of the said Ralph, the said Jeofry then living, that then the feoffees should be seised to the use of the said Jeofry, (being his uncle) for his life, and after his decease, ad usum rectorum hæredum in perpetuum secundum antiquam evidentiam inde ante factam; with an averment, that the said Ralph, at the time of the said devise, and of his death, was possessed of the charter of entail made by the said Guntwardy: and that the said charter was the most ancient evidence of the said, concerning the said manor. Ralph died without issue possessed of the said charter by which the feoffees were seised of the said manor of Nayland to his use for life, and after to the use of the said Jeofry for life, and after his decease, of the right heirs of the body of Henry, Lord Scroop, lawfully begotten, by reason of the said devise, and the said charter, and of the residue of the manors, to the use of the said Jeofry and his heirs; Eleanor died, after whose decease, the feoffees were seised of the said manor of Nayland, to the use of the said Jeoffry, right heir of the said Henry, Lord Scroop, of his body begotten, and of the other lands to the use of the said Jeofry in fee: Jeofry died without issue, by which the feoffees were seised to the use of the said Alice, Elizabeth and Margery, cosins and heirs of the body of the said Henry Scroop, &c. And of the heirs of the bodies of the said Alice, Elizabeth and Margery, lawfully begotten, by reason of the said devise and charter, as to the said manor of Nayland, and of the other manors to their use in fee: and afterwards the said Alice took to husband, James Strangways, who had issue, Thomas: Elizabeth took to husband, Fitz Randolph, who had issue, Elizabeth, Dorothy, Agnes, Alice: Margery took to husband, Danby, who had issue, Sir Christopher Danby, named in the bar, and afterwards all the said husbands and their wives died, by force of which the said feoffees were seised of one part of the said manor of Nayland in three parts to be divided, to the use of the said Thomas Strangways; and of another part, to the use of the four daughters of the said Elizabeth, and her husband Fitz Randolph, and of another such part to the use of the said Christopher Danby, and of their heirs in tail; and of the other lands to the use of them in fee, in degree of coparcinary; Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Fitz Randolph, took to husband Shirley; Dorothy her sister took to husband, Eshe: Agnes took to husband, Maynel, and Alice took to husband Draufield. Thomas Strangways had issue, James and died. And afterwards partition was made, by which, to James Strangways were allotted lands in Kent, and agreed that the feoffees should be seised of the said lands to the use of the said James and his heirs, and to no other use. To Sherley, and Elizabeth his wife, lands in Essex were allotted and agreed upon the partition, that the feoffees should be seised to the use of them, &c. in fee &c. And to Danby the said manor of Nayland, in tail, by reason of the devise and charter, aforesaid, as to the said manor of Nayland, and of other lands in fee. And afterwards, 23 E. 8. notice was given to the feoffees of the said partition, and averred that the partition was equal, &c. and that the feoffees were seised to the use of the said partition, untill 27 H. 8. and confessed the lease made by Danby to Calton, and all the assignments set forth in the bar to the avowry, and farther shewed, that Thomas Danby entred upon Ross the plaintiff, and enfeoffed Rockwood, who enfeoffed Weston.

Coke, for the plaintiff, The case is no more; but where a man hath issue, a son and a daughter by several women, and deviseth his lands to his son, and the heirs of the body of the father lawfully begotten, in [25] which case, if the son dieth without issue, tail is extinct, and the daughter shall never have the land, for she doth not take by way of reversion or remainder, and she doth not take in possession, because the possession was in Jeofry who was the heir of Henry, &c. And these cases were vouched; 1 Roberge's case, 2 E. 3. 1. to tail: John Mandevile took to wife Roberge, and Mandevile gave land to Roberge, & hæredibus ipsius Johannis quos ipse de corpore prædict. Robergiæ procreaverit; there the book is, that the formedon was, Quæ M. dedit Robergiæ & hæredibus dict. Johannis quos ipsæ de corpore dictæ Robergiæ procreaverit; et quæ post mortem præfat. Robergiæ, & R. filii & hæredis dict. Johannis Mandevile, & hæredis ipsius Johannis de corpore dicto Robergiæ per dict. Johannem procreat. &c. and the same writ awarded good, which Coke denyed to be law. And he cited the case of Dyer, 4 and 5 P. and Ma. 156. A. gives lands to one for life, the remainder thereof rectis hæredibus masculis de corpore dict. A. legitime procreat. remanere inde rectis hæredibus dict. A. who hath issue two sons, and dieth; A. dieth, the eldest son hath issue a daughter, and dieth without issue male: and he conceived first, that in this case the limitation of the remainder in tail to the right heirs of the body of the donor is void, for the donor cannot make his own right heir a purchasor, without departing with the fee-simple of his person: but admitting the limitation is good, he said we are to consider, if this entail to the son, once vested and commenced in the possession of the son, when he dieth without issue male, the estate be spent, or that the same shall go to the younger son? and he said, that it was the opinion of Dyer in that case, that the younger son was inheritable to the said estate tail: as in the case of Littleton 82. where the condition is, that the feoffee shall give the lands to the son and heir of the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the father and mother lawfully begotten: and the husband and wife before any such gift die, having issue, and afterwards the feoffee gives the land to the son and heir of the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the father and mother begotten, the condition is well performed: and if the eldest son, to whom the gift is made, dieth without issue, the youngest son shall inherit: and in a formedon in the reverter, upon such a gift the writ shall be, et quæ post mortem of the eldest son, ad ipsum reverti debet; because the husband and wife obierunt sine hærede de corpor. suis inter eos exeunt. And such was also the opinion of Saunders. But Brook, Brown and Catlin were clear contrary; and he said, that Bendloes Serjeant, who reporteth that case, doth affirm, that judgment was given in that case, that the estate-tail was spent, and that the daughter should have the lands, and not the second son: and so he said, that in the case at the bar, the estate-tail was spent: but he said, that he conceived that in the principal case at bar there is not any estate-tail at all, because the words (upon which the estate-tail is conceived) are incertain and too general, viz. [secundum antiquam evidentiam], for there might be many ancient evidences, for the words may extend to evidences which cut off the estate tail, as well as to the entail of Guntwardy. He also argued, that the partition was void; and then the lessee had a good interest for certain parts of the lands, for partition cannot be made of an use: and he said, that he agreed, that partition betwixt husband and wives of lands, if it be equal, should bind the makers, because they are compellable to make partition of them; but contrary of an use, for that they are not compellable to do: also, in the principal case, the land entailed is allotted to one of the coparcenors, which is not good but during the coverture, and afterwards void; and then the lease is void but in part, and so the conusance is not good.

[26] Atkinson contrary; and he said, I conceive, that by words of relation a fee may pass without the word heirs. See 39 Ass. 12. The father seised of lands in fee, doth enfeoff his younger son in fee, and the father continues the possession of the lands, claiming to hold them at the will of the son; and the son coming into the town where the lands do lie, in the hearing of his neighbours saith to his father, You have given to me these lands, naming them; as fully as you have given them to me, I give them back to you again: and the same was holden to be a good gift to the father: 43 E. 3. 22. The King seised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant by escheat or conveyance, gives the said manor as entirely as such a one held the said manor before the escheat or conveyance, the advowson shall pass without special mentioning of it: and so here in our case at bar; this will hath reference to the ancient evidence, and it shall be as strong as if he had set down the special words of entail; and to ancient evidence before the entail it cannot extend, for then a fee should pass, and then the devise should be void, because to his heir; and the word antiqua evidentia shall have reference to the charter which was made by Guntwardy, for that was an ancient evidence made two hundred years past: and he cited the case of 40 E. 3. 8. the Provost of Beverley's case, and conceived that the estate was not spent, for that the estate-tail was in Jeofry, as the fee was in him. Lands are given to the father for life, the remainder to the son in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of the father; the father dieth, the tail and the fee are in the son; but yet after the death of the son without issue, the lands shall be in the brother's son by descent, and not as purchasor. And in our case, Jeofry was in in the tail, as right heir of Henry; and if Jeofry dieth without issue, his brother of the half bloud shall have the lands, as in the case before cited of 40 E. 3. but that shall be in tail by force of the devise. And he said, that in this case here, the partition was made good enough, although it were of lands in use, for a man might contract for an use without deed: 11 H. 4. Partition 156. Partition of an advowson without deed: and that is by reason of the privity betwixt them, and because they are compellable to make partition: and in our case they are compellable by subpœna in Chancery to make partition; and notwithstanding that the lands entailed be allotted to one coparcenor onely, and the fee to the other three, yet thereby the partition is not void, but voidable: as an exchange by tenant in tail is not void, but if the issue in tail accept of it, it shall bind him during his life: so here; and also by the death of the husbands the partition is not void, but voidable onely.

Clench, Justice; How shall the heir be said seised of the lands entailed, which was allotted to his father and mother after acceptance and agreement?

Atkinson, Of certain part as issue in tail, and of other parts by force of the partition and acceptance, quære of that: for if it be not of the whole as issue in tail, then the lease is not void, but for so much whereof he was seised in tail, and then the lessee is tenant in common with Weston, and then the conusance is not good.

Cooper, Serjeant elect; Here wants certainty, for the words of reference are too general, and therefore void, ad usum rectorum hæredum, without shewing of the donor or of the donee; and they are not helped by the subsequent words, secundum antiquam evidentiam ante hac factam, for that also is incertain; for it appeareth upon the record, that there are divers evidences of the said lands, as the charter of gift, the recovery, and the conveyances made 4 H. 7. and which of them is intended by the devise, non constat: and the said defect is not helped by any of the averments; i. that the devisor was possessed of [27] the said charter of entail at the time of his death; and it is also not to the purpose, for it may also be, that he was possessed of other evidences as ancient as the said charter of entail: it is said, that there is no other ancient evidence of the Lord Scroop, but it is not averred that there was not other ancient evidences of the said lands. But admit that the limitation be good by that reference, yet there was not any estate-tail, for every estate-tail ought to be limited in certainty, which see in the statute of West. 2. secundum formam in charta doni manifesto expressam, &c. and here it doth not appear upon the words of the charter, if the estate-tail be limited to the heirs of the donor, or unto the heirs of the donee? and he said, Admit that the same is an estate-tail, then the question is, if Jeofry be a purchasor? and if he be, then by his death without issue the estate-tail is spent: and he said that the estate for life in Jeofry is drowned by the estate-tail limited to him, for they are united together.

Egerton, Solicitor-General; Reasonable and favourable construction ought to be made of this devise according to the intent of the devisor: as 35 Ass. 14. lands are given to B. and his heirs, if he hath issue of his body; and if he die without issue of his body, that the lands shall revert to the donor and his heirs, the same is a good entail; and upon the death of the donee without issue, the donor shall re-enter: and so here, although that [rectorum hæredum] be incertain words, yet the same is supplied by the subsequent words, viz. secundum antiquam evidentiam. As, where the King grants to a mayor and commonalty such liberties as London hath, the same is a good grant: 2 H. 7. 13. And he conceived, that this estate-tail shall be said to begin in Henry, although he was dead before, and that all his issues should inherit it, and that it should not be determined by the death of Jeofry without issue; and in proof thereof he vouched the case before cited, Littl. 81, 82. for in that case the condition could not be holden to be performed, if the heir to whom the gift was made in facto should be in by purchase, and so the estate-tail spent by his death without issue: and also he vouched the case of one Shelley, that although the heir took that which was not ever in his ancestors, yet he did not take it as a purchasor, but as in course of a descent; and he also cited Robridge's case. And afterwards, the same term, by award of the Court, judgment was entred for the plaintiff, for the incertainty of these words [secundum antiquam evidentiam] to what evidence it should refer; and also [rectorum hæredum] without shewing whose heirs, i. of the donor, or of the donee. And Wray, Chief Justice, said, It shall be intended upon this will, that the meaning of the testator was, that the lands should go unto his heirs according to the law, according to all his evidences which he had of his lands, and that is a fee simple; and it shall not be intended, that the testator had such a special remembrance of one deed made two hundred years before, viz. 25 E. 3.

XXX. PERRY AND SOME'S CASE.

Some, parson of the church of Sherring in Essex, libelled in the Spiritual Court against Perry, for the tithes of green tares, eaten before they were ripe, and for the tithes of the herbage of dry cattel, and for tithes of sheep bought and sold, and for churchings and burials; Perry prayed a prohibition, and in his surmise; as to the green tares, he said, that they had used, time out of mind, &c. in the same parish, in consideration that they had not sufficient meadow and pasture for their milch kine, and draught cattel to pay for [28] the tithes of the ripe tares, the tenth shock; but for their green tares which are eaten up before they are ripe, in consideration that they gave them to their cattel, they had used to be discharged of any tithes thereof; and the truth was, that 400 acres of lands within the said town had used to be plowed and sowed every year by the labour of draught cattel, and industry of the inhabitants, in consideration of which, and that in the said parish there was not sufficient meadow nor pasture for their draught cattel, they had used to be discharged of the tithes of green tares eaten before they were ripe: it was holden by the Court, that the same was a good custome and consideration, for the parson hath benefit thereby, for otherwise the said 400 acres could not be plowed; for without such shift to eat with their draught cattel the green tares, they could not maintain their plough cattel, and so the parson should lose his tithes thereof; and for the tithes of the green tares, he hath the tithes of 400 acres. There was a case lately betwixt the Lord Howard and Nichols, where the suit in the Spiritual Court was for the tithes of rakings, and a surmise to have a prohibition was made, that the inhabitants had used to till and sowe their lands, &c. and they had used to be discharged of their tithes of rakings after that the shocks were carried away. And Coke, who was of council with the parson, durst not demurr upon it, but traversed the prescription. Wray, Chief Justice, The want of meadow and pasture in the parish, is the great matter here, and there is not any mischief here, as if they had surmised, that for want of meadow and pasture, they had eaten their meadows with their cattel; and it was held by the whole Court, that it was a good prescription.

XXXI. THE QUEEN AND PARTRIDGE'S CASE.

In a quo warranto, brought against Partridge, it was holden by all the justices; that a man might prescribe to hold a leet oftner than twice in a year, and at other days than are set forth in the Statute of Magna Charta, cap. 35. because the said statute is in the affirmative: but Popham, Attorney General said, that one cannot prescribe against a statute. And it was moved by him; If a general pardon be granted with general exception in it, he which will have advantage of it, ought to plead it, and shew that he is not any person excepted, for otherwise the Judges cannot allow him the benefit of it, because they do not know if he be a person excepted or not; but if there be special persons excepted by name, and no others excepted, but so many persons, there he need not to plead it; for the Court may discern J. D. from J. S. 8 E. 4. 7. vide 26 H. 8. 7. If a man commits felony, and also treason, and afterwards comes a general pardon for felony, but treason is excepted, and the party is arraigned for felony: by Coke he shall have the benefit of the pardon; Popham, contrary, for he is disabled by the treason: see Coke's case, 18 Eliz. Plowd. 401. he pleaded to the felony, the general pardon by Act of Parliament, and added, that neither himself, nor the said offence was excepted: and it was agreed by the whole Court, that in a quo warranto, it is not sufficient for the defendant to say, that such a subject hath lawful interest to hold leets without making title to himself; for the writ is, quo warranto he claims them. And afterwards judgment was given for the Queen.

XXXII. WOODWARD AND BUGG'S CASE.

Woodward libelled in the Spiritual Court against Bugg and Nelson for tithes of certain lands, called Christian-Hill; the defendant sued a prohibition, and surmised, that one Prettiman was seised of the said land, and in consideration of 5l. by him paid to the said parson, it was agreed betwixt them, that the said Prettiman and his assigns should be discharged of the tithes of the said lands during his life, and afterwards the said Prettiman leased the same to the defendants, upon which a prohibition was granted; and it was holden that the party need not to make proof thereof within six months, for it is not within the statute, because a composition with the parson: but now a consultation was granted in the same cause, because the agreement is shewed, but no need of it, the which cannot be any discharge; but if it had been for a time, i. unica vice, it had been good, but contrary, being for life: also there is not any express grant of tithes, but onely a covenant, and agreement that he should be discharged, upon which he may have an action, but no prohibition: it was said on the other side, that although without deed tithes cannot pass in point of interest, yet by way of discharge they well may. Coke, It was holden betwixt Pendleton and Green, that upon such words of covenant and agreement, the party should hold the lands discharged of tithes, which was denied: for if the grantee of a rent-charge will grant it to the lands without deed, it is not good; and there was of late a case betwixt Westbed and Pepper, where it was agreed betwixt the parson and one of his parish, that for twenty shillings rent per ann. the parishioner should be discharged of tithes for twenty years, if he lived so long; and it was holden that no prohibition did lie thereupon, a fortiori where the estate is for life: Gawdy, In a case of grant of tithes for life, a deed is requisite, but here it is but a covenant for money: see 21 H. 6. 43. Wray, If it had been for years, it had been good, but here it is not any contract, but onely a discharge for life, which cannot be during his life, without deed; and afterwards the record was read, which was concordatum & agreatum fuit between the two parties, pro omnibus decimis, during the time that one should be parson, and the other occupier of the said lands, that in consideration of 5l. the said Prettiman and his assigns should hold the said lands discharged of tithes; Wray, The same is not a contract, but promise; for he doth not grant any tithes, &c.

XXXIII. DEVERED AND RATCLIFF'S CASE.

In debt, the plaintiff declared, that he himself had brought an action in London against one A. and had judgment to recover, and a capias was awarded and issued forth, to take the said A. in execution upon which, non est inventus was returned; upon which one of the sureties of A. being in prison in London, under the custody of the defendant, upon a plaint against him, was detained in prison for the said debt so recovered against A. Secundum consuetudinem civitatis prædict. prout per record. ejusdem curiæ apparet, and after the defendant suffered the surety to escape; upon which there was a demurr; the matter was, if the said surety was a prisoner in law for the [30] said debt, as surety of A. for in the declaration it is not expresly laid, that there was such a custom in London, ut supra, but onely, secundum consuetudinem, &c. And secondly, there were two sureties of A. and the one of them onely is detained in execution: also the custome, as it is here laid, is not reasonable; for a scire facias ought to issue out against the sureties, and they ought not to be taken or detained in execution presently; for the condition of the recognizance of sureties is, that they bring in the defendant, if he be condemned, or to pay the debt; and now by this custome, the party who is surety being taken, cannot plead the release of the plaintiff, or the death of the defendant in his discharge, as he might upon a scire facias, which was agreed per curiam; and adjudged accordingly.

XXXIV. CLARK AND GREEN'S CASE.

An action upon the case was brought for these words: He liveth by charming, sorcery and witchcraft; it was moved, that the words were not actionable; for the words might be construed, as if the life of the party were preserved by that means. And it was holden, 30 Eliz. in the case betwixt Smith and Morrice, that the word witch is not actionable; and therefore, if a man be sued in the Spiritual Court for defamation, for calling one witch, a prohibition doth not lie. It hath been holden, that upon these words, He went to destroy a child in a woman's belly, were actionable, and yet it is not felony, but a great discredit; and these words, Thou usest witchcraft, are not actionable. And afterwards, in the principal case, judgment was given, quod nihil capiat per billam. And by Gawdy, It might be that the plaintiff had the forfeiture of those who are convicted of offences, and so liveth thereby.

XXXV. HARFORD AND GARDINER'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant in consideration that the father of the plaintiff had imployed his service about the business of the testator of the defendant, to the great profit of the testator; and in consideration of love and affection that the testator bore to the plaintiff, promised to give unto him 100l. Curia, Love is not a consideration, upon which an action can be grounded; the like of friendship: Wray, If the plaintiff declares, that the defendant in consideration that he was indebted unto the plaintiff in divers summs of money, and promised to pay him 100l. it is not good for the incertainty: also the consideration here, was past and executed before the promise made, and nothing is done by the son. And afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

XXXVI. CLARK'S CASE.

Bridget Clark was indebted to Archdell by obligation, and afterwards she delivered to one Andrews certain hogsheads of wine to satisfie the said Archdell de debito prædicto: afterwards the obligation of [31] Clark was assigned to the Queen for the debt of Archdel: and if the property of the said hogsheads of wine were altered by the delivery of them to Andrews before the assignment: was the question.

Egerton, Solicitor General; The property is not altred; for the bailor might have an action of account against Andrews before he hath delivered them over according to the bailment; but if he hath delivered them over, the same is a good bar in account: but if one be accountable to me upon a bailment, and afterwards I require him to bail the goods over to A. the same is not in bar of the account, but is a good plea in discharge of account before auditors, for that is matter after the bailment, not upon the bailment. If goods be bailed to bail over upon a consideration precedent on the part of him to whom they ought to be bailed, the bailor cannot countermand it, otherwise it is where it is voluntary and without consideration, but where it is in consideration of a debt not countermandable; contrary, if to satisfie the debt of another.

Manwood, Chief Baron: Where the debtor of the King is sufficient, there a debt due to him ought not to be assigned to the King, but onely where the debt is doubtfull, and that was the ancient course: but now at this day many seem and are accounted to be rich who are not, and therefore omnis ratio tentanda est to recover the debts of the King. But as to the case before us, Briget is executrix to her husband, who was indebted to Archdel, and she delivered the goods to Andrews to satisfie Archdel, and all that before the assignment. And I conceive that the property of the said goods is altered; for, as the case is here, Andrews was surety for Clark, and had a counter-bond of Clark to save him harmless. If I borrow money, and deliver plate for the security of it, the general property is in me, yet the bailee hath a special interest in it, till the money is paid. If goods be delivered to A. to pay to B. A. may sell them. An executor hath goods of the testator, and he with his own monies pays the debts of the testator, he shall retain the goods, and the property is altered. And here in our case, Andrews might by virtue of the bailment sell the goods, and with the money pay the said Archdel. And afterwards judgment was given, that the property of the goods was altered.

XXXVII. NORRIS CASE.

In an information upon intrusion against Norris and others concerning Folly John Park, the defendants pleaded in bar a descent: it was holden clearly by the Court, that against the Queen a descent is no plea, nor any title against the Queen, because nullum tempus occurrit regi: neither shall lachess be imputed to her: for the possessions of the Queen are large, and it is not reason that she should be bound or tyed to look to her affairs concerning her possessions, or to incur any damage in default thereof; for she is to intend and manage the publick affairs of the kingdom and State. It was also held by the Court, that in pleading of a lease for life, or feoffment, the party needs not to shew the place where the lease or feoffment was made.

Popham, the Queens Attorny, took exception to the bar to the information, that whereas in the information title is made to the Queen, and concludes, prout patet per plurima recorda & memoranda Scaccarii; the defendants have not traversed it by saying, absque hoc quod habetur aliquod tale recordum, to which it was said by Harris and Savil, Serjeants, that if a special record had been alledged in cer-[32]-tainty, then we ought to have taken such traverse; but here it being in the generalty, we ought not to traverse at all. Manwood, Because the information is general, i. ut patet per plurima recorda, so the traverse ought to be also.

Another exception was taken to the bar, because in the information the title of the Queen is set forth: and the defendants plead, that long before the intrusion A. was seised in fee, and enfeoffed B. who died seised, &c. where it might be that the title of A. was mean betwixt the title of the Queen and the intrusion: whereas by Manwood and Popham they ought to have said, diu antequam the Queen was seised, A. was seised, &c. Savil and Harris, If he should so plead, we should confess that the Queen once had a title, and that is not true, which Manwood denied, for by such plea nothing is confessed. And it was said by some, that where in the bar the title of the Queen is confessed and avoided, there the defendant shall say, diu antequam the Queen had anything, &c. otherwise not. And it was holden by all, that in such case, a feoffment might be an induction unto a traverse, but not a descent. And by Manwood, it is a general rule, as well in the case of a subject, as in the case of the Queen, that nothing can be an inducement to a traverse, but such a thing as is traversable; and here the descent induceth the traverse, being not traversable in this case. Also it was holden, that the place where the party dieth seised needs not to be shewed in pleading a descent. And afterwards Manwood at another day, mutata opinione, conceived, that as to plurima recorda, there needed no traverse, although there were many presidents to the contrary: diu ante transgressionem fieri sup. is a good plea in trespass in case of a common person, not in the King's case, diu ante intrusionem, &c.

XXXVIII. Robinson and Robinson's Case.

In the case betwixt Robinson and Robinson in the Exchequer Chamber by English bill concerning the manor of Draiton Basset; the defendant pleaded in bar a special plea, to which the plaintiff replyed; and afterwards the defendant, when he should have rejoyned, would have relinquished his special plea, and pleaded the general issue.

Manwood, in the Common Pleas, and King's Bench, and in the Court of Common Pleas in the Exchequer, before the issue joyned, the defendant might relinquish his special plea, and plead the general issue, for the pleadings there are in paper until issue be joyned, and therefore at any time before issue joyned, the plea might be withdrawn: but in the Chancery, Court of Requests, and here, all pleas put in are in parchment, and filed; and therefore it cannot be so done: and therefore here, if the plea be once ingrossed into parchment and filed, the defendant cannot relinquish his plea, and plead the general issue; contrary, where the plea is yet in paper.

Gent, Baron, That if upon the plea in paper an issue be offered with an absque hoc, &c. the other party cannot relinquish it, although it be but in paper. But afterwards the Barons asked the clarks, what was their course in such cases: who answered, that if the plea be in parchment, and upon the file, it shall never afterwards be taken from off the file, but with the consent of the parties, and order of the Court. And afterwards Manwood, with the assent of the rest of the Barons, gave a rule, that the defendant should rejoyn to the replication, or otherwise a nihil dicit to be entred.

XXXIX. The Lord Cromwel's Case.

In the case of the Lord Cromwel upon the statute of 33 H. 8. for levying of the King's debts: a debt came to the Queen by attainder of the creditor, upon which an extent issued against one of the ter-tenants liable to the debt, and not against all: it was moved, that upon a branch of the said statute, all the ter-tenants ought to be charged: but it was the opinion of divers, that such a debt which cometh to the King by attainder, is not within the said statute; for although the attainder is by a judgment, yet debt by judgment it cannot properly be said, but where a debt is recovered by judgment. And that was the case of the Lord Norris, for a debt due to Heron by the Lord Williams, which Heron was attainted.

XL. MACHEL AND DUNTON'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ the case was, that one Machel, alderman of London, was seised and leased for years, with clause of re-entry for non payment of rent; and in the indenture of lease there were divers covenants on the parts of the lessee: and afterwards the said Machel by his will willed, that the lessee should retain the land demised for thirty one years, reckoning the years of the first term not expired as parcel of the said term of thirty one years, yielding like rent, and under such covenants as the lessee held the former lease; and by the same will devised the inheritance over to a stranger. It was first moved, if here the lessee for years had a new interest accrued to him by the will? If it shall vest in him as an interest by itself, or that both estates, as well the former lease, as the estate for years devised by the will, should be united by way of surrender? Another matter was because that the devise is yielding such rent, and under such covenants, &c. Now because the meaning of the devisor was, that the devisee should hold over the land for the term encreased as he held before; if here the law shall give construction to this devise as near the intention of the devisor as it may be? and so construe the words of the will to amount to a condition. But by the opinion of the whole Court, the words of the devise cannot make a condition; for a condition is a thing odious in law, which shall not be created without sufficient words. Another matter was moved, if the fee-simple should pass by this devise in point of reversion, or remainder? And by the better opinion of the Court, it shall pass in point of reversion; for if it should be a remainder, then the rent which is reserved upon the lease by the will, shall not be incident to such remainder, and therefore the law shall qualifie it into a fee-simple. Another matter was moved; admitting that the words of the devise, ut supra, are condition, if here in this case there be a grantee of the reversion intended within the statute of 32 H. 8. As A. seised of lands in fee, deviseth them to B. for years, rendering rent, with clause of re-entry; and by the same will deviseth the reversion to another: if because that it was never in the devisor a reversion or a condition? If [34] the devisee be within the said statute to take advantage of it? And the opinion of the whole Court was, that the devisee of the fee-simple should take advantage of this condition.

XLI. TRIN. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS. POSTEA 210.

A justicies issued forth to the Sheriff of H. for the debt of 40l. and the same plea was held and determined before the under-sheriff in the absence of the sheriff: it was moved by Puckering, Serjeant, if a writ of error or a false judgment lieth in this case? And it was resolved by the justices, that the sheriff himself in his person ought to hold plea of a justicies; and if he make a precept or deputation to another, it is meerly void: 34 H. 6. 48. See the case there abridged, Fitz. Bar. 161. And a justicies is not an original writ, but a commission to the sheriff to hold plea above 40s. And upon a judgment given upon a justicies, a writ of false judgment lieth, and not a writ of error. See 7 E. 4, 23. And it was the opinion of the Lord Anderson, that the judgment given in the principal case was utterly void, & coram non judice.

XLII. THE QUEEN AND JORDAN'S CASE.

An information was exhibited in the Exchequer for the Queen against the executors of William Jordan, surveyor of the ordinance, &c. and the executors of John Bowland, deputy of Ambrose Earl of Warwick, master of the ordinance, &c. in which was set forth for the Queen, that certain powder, pellets, and other furniture of war, came unto the hands of the said Jordan and Bowland, in respect of their said offices, to the value of £400,000, and shewed how much came to each of them, and the special charge incertain, per quod onerabiles & computabiles dominæ Reginæ devenerunt, nec tamen computum unquam inde reddiderunt, nec reddere voluerant, sed bona & catalla prædicta ad uses suos proprios converterunt, in deceptionem dictæ dominæ Reginæ, &c. The defendants pleaded not guilty, upon which the Queen's attorny did demur in law, because the defendants have answered onely to the conversion: in which case although they have not converted, yet if the said goods have come to the hands of their testator, it is sufficient for the Queen, and the defendants are chargeable to the Queen for the same: and the opinion of all the Barons was clear, that the defendants ought to answer to the charge, &c.

That the plaintiff did mis-behave himself, tam factis quam verbis, against the wardens of such a mystery in the said [35] town, &c. And when the bailiffs, super querimoniam eis inde factam, sent for the plaintiff, he would not come to them, but mis-behaved himself against them, tam dictis quam factis; for which they did commit him to prison, &c. upon which there was a demurrer. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff, because their prescription is not good; for it is too large to imprison subjects at their discretion: also they have set forth the offence of the plaintiff generally; i. misbehaviour, tam factis quam dictis, without alledging any special misdemeanor in certain.

XLIV. PASCH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS. 3 LEN. 79.

And if one lying sick in extremis, having an intent to devise his land, by word makes such a devise, but doth not command the same to be put in writing, but another without his knowledge or command puts the same in writing in the life of the devisor, it is a good devise, for it is sufficient if the devise be reduced in writing during the life of the devisor.

XLV. SALWAY AND LUSON'S CASE.

Matthew Salway brought a writ of right against Luson, and the writ was, messuagium, & 200 acr. jampnor. & brueræ, and exception was taken to the writ because that jampnor. & brueræ, were coupled together where they ought to be distinctly severed; and so many acr. jampnor. and so many acr. brueræ: although it was objected on the part of the demandant in maintenance of the writ, that in the Register, fol. 2. the writ of right is, redditu unius libræ Mac. & Obed. i. mace and cloves together without distinction or severance. And it was said in a writ of right, we ought to follow the register, and therefore a writ of right was abated, because the word pomarium was put in the writ, for in the register, there is no such writ, and the word gardinum comprehends it, but in other writs as writs of entry, &c. it is otherwise: see the case of the Lord Zouch, 11 Eliz. 353. In a writ of entry, sur disseisin mille acr. jampnor. & brueræ. But the exception was not allowed; for it may be, that jampnorum & brueræ lie so promiscuously, that they cannot be divided: and see 16 H. 7. 8. and 9. The respect which the justices there had to the register, so as they changed their opinions, conformable to the register; another exception was taken to the writ, because the demandant demands duas partes custodiæ de hay in the forest of C. and the opinion of the whole Court was, that the writ ought to be officium custodiæ duarum partium de hay, and not duas partes custodiæ, as advocatio duarum partium ecclesiæ. not duas partes advocationis: another exception was, because the writ was, duas partes, &c. in three to be divided, whereas it should be divisus, & non dividend. for dividendum is not in any writ but a writ of partition. And by Windham, the parts of this office are divided in right, quod curia concessit, another exception was taken, because in the writ, it is not set down in what town the forest of C. is, so as the Court doth not know from whence the visne should come; for no venire shall be de vicineto forestæ as de vicineto hundredii & manerii; and that was holden to be a material exception: another exception was taken, because a writ of right doth not lie of an office; for at the common law, an office did not lie of it, but now it doth by the statute of West. 2. For it was not liberum tenementum, but the party grieved was put to his quod permittat. And of this opinion was the whole Court.

XLVIII. JOHNSON AND BELLAMY'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ, it was found by special verdict, that Mr. Graunt was seised of the lands, &c. and by his will devised the same to Joan his wife, for life; and farther he willed, that when Richard his brother shall come to the age of 25 years, he should have the lands to him and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten. Mr. Graunt died, having issue of his body, who is his heir, Richard, before he had attained the age of 25 years, levied a fine of the said lands, with proclamations in the life, and during the seisin of Joan, to A. Sic ut partes ad finem nihil habuerunt: and if this fine should bind the estate-tail was the question; and the justices cited the case of the Lord Zouch, which was adjudged, M. 29 and 30 Eliz. Tenant in tail discontinues to E. and af-[37]-terwards levieth a fine to B. although the partes ad finem nihil habuerunt, yet the fine shall bind the entail: but the serjeants at Bar argued, that there is a great difference betwixt the case cited, and the case at Bar; for in that case, the said fine was pleaded in bar, but here the fine is not pleaded, but found by special verdict; to which it was said by the Court, that the same was not any difference; for the fine by the statute is not any matter of estoppel, or conclusion; but by the statute doth bind and extinguish the estate-tail, and the right of it: and fines are as effectual to bind the right of the entail when they are found by especial verdict, as when they are pleaded in bar: and by Periam, collateral warranty found by verdict, is of as great force, as if it were pleaded in bar, and afterwards judgment was given, that the estate-tail by the fine, was utterly destroyed and extinct.

The younger son entred, and he leased the same land for years before his age of 30 years, upon which the eldest son did re-enter, and the opinion of the Court was, that here is a limitation, and not a condition: and here the re-entry of the eldest son was holden unlawfull; for this proviso did not extend but to the immediate estate devised, expressly to them, and not to any new estate, which did arise upon the limitation; and when the younger son enters upon the eldest son by the said limitation, he shall hold his estate, discharged of the proviso, or any limitation contained in it.

LII. MARTIN VAN HENBECK'S CASE.

An information was exhibited in the Exchequer, against Martin Van Henbeck, merchant-stranger, upon the statute of 18 H. 6. cap. 17. concerning the gaging of vessels of wine, and shewed, that the defendant had sold to such a one, so many pipes of wine, and that none of them did contain as they ought, 126. gallons; and although they were so defective, yet the defendant had not defalked the price, &c. according to the want of measure, for which he had forfeited to the Queen, all the value of all the wine so defective. Exception was taken to the information, because there is not set down how much in every pipe was wanting, as one or two gallons, &c. so as a ratable defalcation might be made according to the proportion of the want of measure; but if the informer had set forth in his information, that no defalcation was at all, such general allegation of want of measure, without other certainty, had been good. And the case was cited, 32 E. 4. 40. Lysle's case, where the plea wants certainty; or where he pleads that he was ready to shew to the council of the plaintiff his discharge of an annuity, &c. and doth not shew what manner of discharge, as release, &c. So 2 H. 7. 6. in dower, against the heir, who pleads in bar, detainment of charters, without shewing what charters in certain: also there is time enough of defalcation, when the time of payment comes, and not upon the contract; and it is not shewed, that the vendee had paid for the wine. Egerton, Solicitor, contrary, When the thing demanded is to be recorded, there it ought to be certainly shewed, but contrary, where it goeth onely to the point of conveyance of the office; and here, the thing to be abated is not in question; for be it more or less, the defendant is to lose the value of all the wine, and that which is to be defalked, is but [39] an induction, or conveyance tending to the payment of the forfeiture: as in Partridge's case, 7 E. 6. Plow. 85. Whereupon the statute of 32 H. 8. maintenance, the plaintiff charges the defendant with a lease for years, made to a stranger, without shewing for what term certain, and yet it was there holden well enough, notwithstanding that the lease was not to be forfeited, but was a conveyance to the point of forfeiture; i. the value of the lands 38 Ass. 12. A steward of a leet was presented, for that he had suffered many brewers and bakers to bake and brew, contrary to the assise, pro redemptione inde capiend. without shewing in certain, what bakers, or of whom he had taken redemption; but notwithstanding that, the defendant took issue upon the matter, &c. And it is impossible for the informer, to know the quantity of the full measure of every pipe of wine, which doth not belong to him but to another, and if the law should compel him to this impossibility, the statute should be of none effect. 3 E. 3. 363. In nusance for drowning of his lands, exception was taken, because it was not set forth what quantity of land, but it was not allowed; for it is impossible to know, to what depth the land was drowned, and how much of the land was drowned: so here the informer cannot know every spoonfull, &c. And he said, that the defalcation ought to be at the time of the contract, or within convenient time after. Coke, contrary, Here is a great incertainty, which is not tolerable in an information, for the quantity of the want is uncertain, and so likewise the quantity of the defalcation, for the want must be fourty, twenty, ten, five, or one gallon, pottle, quart, or pint, and in such information upon penal laws, the matter of it ought to be certainly shewed. Oportet ut res certa deducatur in judicium, so as the Court may judge thereof: as where an information is exhibited upon the Statute of Usury, that statute is, that if any take above 10l. for the loan of 100l. for one year, he shall forfeit the whole value of the principal, here there ought to be an usurious contract for above 10l. in the hundred; and also there ought to be a taking; and it is impossible to discover the subtilty of an usurer: but if information be exhibited here against an usurer, and chargeth that he took more then 10l. in the hundred, without shewing how much, such information is utterly insufficient; for the informer ought to set forth the quantity of the interest received, and yet the same is not to be recovered: also if the informer setteth for an usurious contract, cum quodam homine ignoto, it is insufficient, 5 H. 7. 17, 18. If an information be exhibited upon the Statute of Liveries, as well the giver as the taker, ought to be certainly shewed, &c. Another exception was taken, because the words of the information are, quæ quidem dolia, vel eorum aliquod, &c. did lack, &c. But by Manwood, the same is well enough, wherefore Coke did not speak to it; and he said, that the time of the defalcation of the price is upon the payment, and not before. If J. S. lend to one 100l. for a year, and upon the loan, contract with me, to give me 20l. for the loan of the same for one year, if now when I pay him he taketh but 10l. he shall not be punished for the contract, but perhaps the bond shall be void. And upon the statute of 5 E. 6. of ingressors, if the information be, that the defendant hath bought corn, &c. it is not sufficient; for the words of the statute are, get into his hands, &c. Owen Serjeant to the same purpose: He hath not alledged, quantum, vel in quanto defecit, if there had been but a pint, it had been sufficient; the information goes farther, non defalcavit tantum de pretio, quantum defecit, and so tantum, & quantum, is incertainly laid; 22 H. 6. If A. be bound to B. to make him a sufficient estate in such lands, in an action brought upon such an obligation, it is no plea to say, that he hath made unto him a sufficient estate, &c. but he ought to shew what estate, so 7 E. 4. If one be bound to repair such a house, it is not sufficient to say, that he hath repaired it, but [40] he ought to shew, in hoc, vel inillo: Egerton, The abatement shall be upon the contract. And afterwards judgment was given against the informer, because it is not shewed in the information in how many vessels there was want; but if he had alledged but the want of one pint, it had been good for the value of all the wine: and by Manwood that might have been well enough known by the gauging how much every vessel wanted.

LIII. GREEN AND EVERARD'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ against Everard by Green, the parties were at issue, and the said Green challenged one of the jurors, and assigned for cause, because the said juror held land under the same title as the defendant did: to prove which one Lancelot Chandler was produced as a witness for the said Green, who deposed upon the said challenge the same, for which the juror challenged was drawn, and so there was no inquest: and so the plaintiff was delayed of his trial: whereupon he sued the said Lancelot, tam pro domina Regina quam pro seipso: and it was found for the plaintiff. And now exception in arrest of judgment was put into the Court engrossed in parchment; viz. Ad judicium pro domina Regina, & præsat. querente, curia procedere non debet, quia manifeste apparet, per informat. dict. querent. quod ipse non fuit pars gravata, quod per calumniam in dicta informatione specificat. ac per jurament. dict. Lancelot super inde fact. dictus querens, non fuit damnificat. sed in calumnia prædict. & jurament. prædict. super inde factum tendebat in commodum ipsius Everardi, propter quod ipse idem Everardus tempore calumniæ prædict. existens tenens tenementorum prædictor. per dict. declarat. specificator. eadem tenementa ratione calumniæ prædict. ac prædict. jurament. tenebat & proficua inde provenientia diutius quam aliter si præsens triatio habita fuisset sine aliqua calumnia tenere potuisset. LIV. GEORGE AP RICE'S CASE.

George ap Rice, tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, assigned his estate to one A. against whom he in the reversion brought a quid juris clamat, and it was adjudged that he should attorn; for although tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, himself is not compellable to attorn, yet his assignee shall attorn; for the privilege is knit to the person who is in truth tenant in tail after possibility of issue, which cannot be the assignee, for by the assignment the privity and the privilege are destroyed. And where the defendant, in a quid juris clamat, is adjudged to attorn, distress infinite shall issue forth against him, to compell him to attorn; and if he, when he appears, doth refuse to attorn, he shall be imprisoned until he doth attorn: and this judgment, that the assignee of tenant in tail after possibility should attorn, being given in a court in Wales, was afterwards affirmed in a writ of error brought upon it in the King's Bench.

LV. LUCAS AND PICROFT'S CASE.

The case was, that an assise of novel disseisin was brought in the county of Northumberland of two acres of land; and as to one acre, the defendant pleaded a plea tryable in a foreign county, upon which the issue was adjourned into the Common Pleas, and from thence into the foreign county, where by nisi prius it was found for the plaintiff: and now Snag, Serjeant, prayed judgment for the plaintiff, and cited the book of 16 H. 7. 12. where assise is adjourned in bank for difficulty of the verdict, they there may give judgment but the whole Court is of contrary opinion; for here is another acre, the title of which is to be tryed before the justices of the assise, before the tryal of which no judgment shall be given for the acre for which the title is found: and the assise is properly depending before the justices of the assise, before whom the plaintiff may discontinue his assise: and it is not like unto the case of 6 Ass. 4. 8 Ass. 15. where in an assise, a release dated in a foreign county is pleaded, which was denyed, for which cause the assise was adjourned in bank, and there found by inquest not the deed of the plaintiff: now the plaintiff, if he will release his damages, shall have judgment of the freehold presently: but in our case, parcel of the lands put in view doth remain not tryed, which the plaintiff cannot release as he may the damages: and therefore the Court awarded that the verdict should be sent back to the justices of the assise.

LVI. POVYE'S CASE.

Povy, an Attorny of the King's Bench, brought an action of trespass there against the Warden of the Fleet, who came into the Common Pleas and demanded the advice of the Court, because he is an officer of this Court, and therefore ought not to be impleaded elsewhere: but it was said by the Court, that because that the plaintiff hath also his privilege in the King's Bench, as well as the defendant hath here, this equality of privilege shall render the parties at liberty; and he shall have the benefit of the privilege who first begins suit: and so the Warden of the Fleet was advised to answer.

HILL. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

LVII. INCHLEY AND ROBINSON'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, it was found by special verdict, that King E. 6. was seised of the manor and hundred of Fremmington, and by his letters patents granted the same to Barnard in fee, rendering 130l. per annum, and also to hold by homage and fealty; and afterwards Queen Mary reciting the said grant by E. 6. and the reservation upon it granted to Gartrude, Marchioness of Exeter, the manor of Fremmington, and the said rents and services; and also the manor of Camfield, and other lands and tenements, to be holden by the twentieth part of a knight's fee: Gertrude so seised, devised to [42] the Lord Montjoy the manor of Fremmington, the manor of Camfield, &c. and also bequeathed divers sums of money to be levied of the premisses: and they farther found, that the said rent of 230l. was the full third part of the yearly value of all the lands and tenements of the devisor. The question was, if by those words of the devise, of the manor of Fremmington, the rent and services of the manor did pass? i. the rent and the homage and the fealty reserved, the grant of King E. 6. of the manor and hundred of Fremmington? and if the said rent and services are issuing out of the manor? for if the rent doth not pass, then the same is descended to the heir of the marchioness; and then being found the full and third part of the value, the King and the heir is fully answered and satisfied, and then the inheritance of the residue discharged, and settled in the devisee: and if the rent doth not pass, then is the heir of the marchioness entitled by the statutes to a third part of the whole.

Shuttleworth, Serjeant, If the marquess had devised by express words the said rent and services, they could not have passed: for as to the services, they are entire things, as homage and fealty, and they cannot pass by devise in case where partition is to follow, for such things cannot receive any partition or division, therefore they are not divisible; for the statute doth enable the proprietor or owner to devise two parts of his inheritances, in three parts to be divided; i. as catalla felonum cannot be devised for the reason aforesaid; which was granted by the whole Court. And as to the devise, he argued much upon the grounds of devises, and put a ground put by Fineax, 15 H. 7. 12. where every will ought to be construed and taken according as the words do import, or as it may be intended or implyed by the words, what the meaning of the testator was out of the words of the will. See thereof a good case 19 H. 8. 8. and 9. and he relied much upon the case of Bret and Rigden, Plow. 342. So he said in this case, because the intent of the devisor doth not appear upon the words of the will, that this rent should pass; it shall not pass, for there is not any mention made of any rent in all the will.

Fenner contrary, and he argued much upon the favorable construction which the law gives to wills, 14 H. 3. Reversion for remainder, & è contr. 17 E. 3. 8. A man may make a feoffment of a manor by the name of a knights fee, à fortiori in case of the devise: and in our case the marquiss conceived, that the rent and services reserved out of the manor of Fremmington was the manor of Fremmington; and the law shall give strength to that intention.

Walmsly conceived, that the rent did not pass by the name of manor, &c. for this rent, nec in rei veritate, nor in reputation, was ever taken for a manor: also the words, Of the manor and hundred of Fremmington, are put amongst others which are manors in truth; by which it seemeth, that the devisor did not intend to pass but one manor, and no other hereditaments, by that manor of Fremmington. It is a rule in law, that in the construction of a will a thing implyed shall not controul a thing expressed: but here, if by implication the rent shall pass, then the manor of Camfield shall not pass, which it was the intent of the devisor to pass, and that by express words, see 16 Elizab. Dyer 330. Clatche's case: and see 16 Eliz. Dyer 333. Chapman's case. But in our case here, there are not any sufficient words to warrant any implication; for neither in truth nor in reputation was it taken to be a manor: 22 H. 6. 2. Green Acre might pass by the name of a manor, although it were but one acre of land, because known by the name of a manor. See accordingly 22 H. 6 39. And see, where, before the Statute of Uses, a man had recoverors to his use, and he wills by his will, that his trustees should sell his lands, they may sell. And he said, that if a man seised of a [43] manor parcell in demesne, and parcell in service, and he grants the demesnes to one and his heirs, and afterwards deviseth his manor, peradventure the services shall pass; but this rent hath no resemblance to a manor.

Gawdy, This rent shall pass by the name aforesaid. Favourable construction is to be always given to wills, according to the intent of the devisor, and no part of a will shall be holden void, if by any means it may take effect; then here it appeareth, that his meaning was, that upon these words every thing should pass to the devisee concerning the said manor of Fremmington; for otherwise, the words of the manor of Fremmington should be void and frivolous, which shall not be in a will, if any reasonable construction can be; for it is found expresly by the jury, that neither at the time of the will made, nor at the time of the death of the devisor, the said devisor had any thing in the said manor of Fremmington, but onely the said rent of one hundred and thirty pounds. And it may well be taken that the devisor being ignorant what thing a manor is, thought that the rent was a manor, because that he had rents and services out of the manor. For in construction of wills, the words shall serve the intent of the party; and therefore if a man deviseth, that his lands shall be sold for the payment of his debts, his executors shall sell them, for the intent of the testator naming the vendors, is sufficient: and see Plowden, 20 Eliz. 5. 24. L. after the statute of 27 H. 8. deviseth that his executors shall be seised to the use of A. and his heirs in fee, whereas then there was no feoffees to his use; the same was holden a good devise of the lands of A. and the Judges conceived, that the devisor was ignorant of the operation of the statute in such case, and therefore his ignorance was supplied: see Br. Devises, 44. 29 H. 8. A. had feoffees to his use, and afterwards, after the statute of 27 H. 8. willed that his feoffees should make an estate to B. and his heirs, it was holden by Baldwin, Shelley and Mountague, Justices, that it was a good devise: see 26 H. 6. Feoff. 12. A carve of lands may pass by the name of a manor, ergo, à multo fortiori, rent, for rents and services have more nearness, and do more resemble a manor than a carve of lands; and it cannot be intended, that the meaning of the testator was to grant the manor it self, in which she had nothing, especially by her will; for covin, collusion, or indirect dealing, shall not be presumed in a will: also the marchioness, for four years together before her death, had the rent and services of the said manor, and she well knew, that she had not any other thing in the said manor, but the said rent and services; and therefore it shall be intended, that that was her manor of Fremmington, A. seised of a capital messuage, and great demesnes lying to it, leaseth the same for years, rendring rent, and afterward deviseth to another all his farm, lying in such a place, it was ruled in that case, that by that devise, the rent and the reversion should pass: see the case betwixt Worselie and Adams, Plowd. 1 Eliz. 195. by Anthony Brown and Dyer. Periam, Justice, was of opinion, that this rent might be divided well enough; but by Anderson, It is but rent-seck; but Periam said, it was a rent distrainable of common right, but all of them agreed, that the rent might be divided, but there should not be two tenures. And the Lord Montjoy being advised that this rent did not pass by the grant, but descended to the heir, being the full part of the whole, entred into all the residue of the lands, and made a lease of the manor of Camfield unto the plaintiff, upon which entry, the ejectione firmæ was brought, and afterwards the plaintiff seeing the opinion of the Court to be against him, and for the devisee of the rent by the name aforesaid, did afterward discontinue his suit, &c.

[44] TRIN. 30 ELIZ. INTRAT. T. 28 ELIZ. ROT. 507. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

LVIII. COSTARD AND WINGFIELD'S CASE.

In a replevin, the defendant did avow for damage-feasant, by the commandment of his master, the L. Cromwel; the plaintiff by way of replication did justifie the putting in of his cattel into the land, where, &c. by reason that the town of N. is an ancient town, and that it had been used time out of mind, &c. that every inhabitant of the said town, had had common for all manner of cattel levant and couchant within the said town, and so justified. The defendant said, that the house in which the plaintiff did inhabit in the said town, and by reason of residency in which house he claimed common, was a new house erected within 30 years; and that before that time, there had not been any house there, upon which the plaintiff did demurr: Shuttleworth, Serjeant, argued for the plaintiff, that he should have common there by reason of resiancy in the said new house; and he said, that the resiancy is the cause, and not the land, nor the person thereof; and thereupon he put the case of 15 E. 4. 29. And he agreed the case, that if the lord doth improve part of the common, that he shall not have common in the residue of the land, for the lands improved, because, that he cannot prescribe for that which is improved, as the book is, in 5 Ass. But here in the principal case he doth not prescribe in any person certain, or in, or for any new thing; but he sets forth that the use of the town hath always been, that the inhabitants should have common there, and this common is not common appendent, or appertinent, but common in gross, see Needham, 37 H. 6. 34. b. And he said, that if the house of a freeholder, which hath used to have such common, doth fall down, and he erecteth a new house in another place of the land, that he shall have common to that new erected house as he had before? And he took a difference betwixt the case of estovers, where a new chimney is erected, and this case, and he stood much upon the manner of the prescription. Gawdy, Serjeant, contrary, And he took exception to the prescription; for he said, that it is said therein; that it is antiqua villa, but he doth not say, that it hath been so time out of mind, &c. and so it ought to be said, as the book is in 15 E. 4. 29. a. And then, if it be not an ancient town time out of mind, the parties cannot prescribe as inhabitants of the said town, to have common time out of mind, &c. And he said, that if such a prescription as is said in this case be good in law, viz. that every one who erected a new house within the said town, should have common to his said new house, the same should be prejudicial to the ancient town, and to the utter overthrow and manifest impairing of the common there; and it might so happen, that one who had but little lands in the said town, might erect twenty new houses there, and so an infinite number of houses might be newly erected there; and there should be common allowed to every inhabitant within the said new erected houses, which should be inconvenient and unreasonable. Anderson, Chief Justice, He who erects a new house, cannot prescribe in the common, for then a prescription might begin at this day, which cannot be; and he insisted much upon the general loss which should happen to the ancient tenants, if such a prescription for new erections should be good. Periam, If it should be law, that he should have common in this case, that all the benefit which the statute gives to the lord for improvement, should be taken away by such new edifications and erection of new houses, which were not reasonable; and such was the opinion of the other justices, and [45] therefore they all agreed, that in the principal case, the plaintiff should not have common to this new erected house; but the entry of the judgment was respited until the Court had seen the record, and after they had seen and considered upon the record, Anderson and Periam were of opinion as before: but Windham did encline to the contrary; but they all agreed, that he who set up again a new chimney where an old one was before, should have estovers to the said new chimney; and so if he build a new house upon the foundation of an old house, that he should have common to his said house new erected: so if a house falleth down, and the tenant or inhabitant sets up a new house in the same place: also if a man hath a mill, and a watercourse to it time out of mind, which he hath used time out of mind to cleanse, if the mill falleth, and he erecteth a new mill there, he shall have the watercourse, and liberty to cleanse it, as it had before, and afterwards the same term, judgment was given for the defendant to which Windham, Justice, agreed.

HILL. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH.

LIX. ROUS AND ARTOIS CASE.

The case was large, but the points in this case were but two: the first was, if tenant per auter vye, after the death of cestuy que vye holdeth over. If he be a disseisor or not: the second point was, if tenant at will, or at sufferance, be such a tenant of the manor as he may grant copyhold estates to copyholders: for the first point; it was agreed by Godfrey, and he held, that the principal case was, that if tenant pur auter vye holdeth over the life of cestuy que vye, that he thereby gaineth the fee; but he granted the cases, that where a man holdeth at the will of another, that after the estate determined, if he holdeth over, he hath not thereby gained fee, for he is tenant at sufferance; and as Littleton saith in his chapter of Releases, 108. Tenant at sufferance, is where a man of his own head occupieth the lands and tenements at the will of him who hath the freehold; and such an occupier claims nothing but at will; but he said, that in the principal case, he otherwise claimed than at the will of the lessor; for that it appeareth, that he hath granted copy: and he said, that this difference doth give answer to the case which is, t. H. 8. br. t. per Copy 18. where it is said for law, that none is tenant at sufferance, but he who first enters by authority of law: as if a man makes a lease for years, or for the life of another, and he holdeth the lands after his term expired, or after the death of cestuy que vye; if he claim nothing but at the will of him who hath the freehold; he is a tenant at sufferance. But if he holdeth in the lands against the will of his lessor, then he is a disseisor; and so if he do act after such continuance of possession, contrary to the will of his lessor, he is a disseisor, 10 E. 4. If an infant maketh a lease at will, and the lessor dieth, and the lessee continueth in possession, and claims fee, the heir shall have mort-dancester, 18 E. 4. If cestuy que vye dieth, and the tenant hold in, and was impleaded, the lessor shall not be received, and he conceived the reason of the case to be, because that the reversion was not in him; but that the fee was gained and rested in the other, 22 E. 4. 39. g. by Hussey. If a termor holdeth over his term, there an estate in fee is confessed to be in him, because he holdeth the possession of the lands by wrong; but there is a quære made of it, if he be a disseisor or not, but I conceive that he is, for trespass doth not lie against him, before the lessor hath made his entry; and therefore, if the lessee doth continue in the possession of the lands by reason of the first entry; that is the [46] reason, as I conceive, that the writ of entre ad terminum qui præteriit, lieth against such a termor, who holds so over his term; and that writ is a præcipe quod reddat, which doth not lie but against a tenant of the freehold. And such is the opinion of Tilney, 7 H. 4. 43. That if the guardian holds in the lands at the full age of the heir; or if the tenant for years after the term expired, holdeth over the lands, their estates shall be adjudged a fee. And in our case here, he doth not claim to hold in at the will of the lessor; for he hath done an act contrary to the will of the lessor; for he being lord of the manor, in manner as aforesaid, hath granted estates by copy; and it is holden, 12 E. 4. 12. by all the justices, that if tenant at will, or tenant at sufferance at will, makes a lease for years, that the same is a disseisin to the lessor, and the tenant at will thereby gains the freehold: and the reason of the book seems to be, because he claims to hold a greater estate than of right belongs unto him. The second point was, if tenant at sufferance might grant copies, and he said, that he might, and such grant should be good, because he is in by lawfull means, and an assise doth not lie against him, as in the book of 22 E. 4. 38. before, and he is dominus pro tempore. And this case is not like to the cases, where copies are made by abators or disseisors; for the law doth adjudge, that copies made or granted by them are void, and his act here as a tenant at sufferance of making and granting of the copies stands with the custome of the manor which warrants them; as in the case of Grisbrook and Fox, if an administrator made by the ordinary sells the goods of the intestate; and with the money thereof arising, payeth the debts of the intestate, and afterwards he who was made executor proves the will, he shall not avoid such sale of the goods, because he hath made it according to law, and hath done no more than an executor is compelled to doe: so 12 H. 7. 25. b. If a baily cut down trees to repair an ancient pail, the same is good: so 4 H. 7. 14. b. If he payeth a quit rent, it is good. And note, 4 Mariæ Br. Tenant by Copy, 27. That the lessee of a manor, in which there are copyholds, after the death of the copyholder, may admit the heir of the copyholder to the land; and so he may doe, who hath but an estate in the manor durante bene placito: and yet it seems by the book, that such a tenant of the manor, cannot reserve and lessen rent, but he ought to reserve the ancient rent, or more. Coke contrary; And first he said, that he who holdeth over the life of the cestuy que use, doth not gain any fee where he comes in first by right, for that he is but tenant at sufferance, 35 H. 8. Dyer 57. in the case of the Lord Zouch, cestuy que use for life, the remainder over in tail makes lease for life of the lessee, he dieth, the lessee continueth his estate, and the opinion of the Justices of the Common-Pleas, and of others was, that he is but a tenant at sufferance, for the lease was not any discontinuance of the remainder, because he had authority by the statute of Rich. 3. to make a lease, and that is intended of such estate which he might lawfully doe; and this is our case, and so it is adjudged already. As to the second point, I grant, that tenant for years, or at will, or at sufferance is dominus pro tempore, but there is a difference as unto granting of copies by them: for it was adjudged 25 Eliz. that they might grant copies which are to be granted upon surrenders, made by copyholders: as if a copyholder doth surrender to the use of another, they may accept of such a surrender, and grant the lands by copy to him to whose use the surrender is made; but if a copyholder dieth, they cannot grant voluntary copies de novo. And he said that Popham, who argued the said case in 25 Eliz. that this difference was agreed, and so adjudged in one Sleer's case. And so 17 El. in the case of one Stowley, where the case was, that a manor was devised to one, and the devisee entred and granted copies, and afterwards it was found that the devise was void, and it was there holden [47] that copies made by such devisee upon surrenders, were good, and were not to be avoided; but contrary of copies made after the death of tenants upon voluntary grants. I grant, that when cestuy que use dieth, the estate for life is utterly void and gone; and therefore he is in by wrong, but he cannot thereby gain so great an estate as a disseisor, because he came in at the first by right. Atkinson put a difference betwixt tenant at will, and tenant at sufferance; for tenant at will shall have aid, but contrary, of tenant at sufferance, as the book is, 11 H. 4. a release to tenant at will is good, contrary to tenant at sufferance; when after the death of cestuy que use he holdeth over, he hath some interest, scil. to this purpose, that he shall not be a wrong doer, for he is neither abator nor disseisor, therefore not a wrong doer, and then if he be in by a right, or rightfully, he is then dominus pro tempore, and then the grants made by him by copy are good. 7 H. 7. 3. Tenant at sufferance, was to justifie the distraining the cattel of another damage feasant. Coke, True, it is, the beasts of a stranger, but not of the tenant of the freehold: Gawdy Justice, The lessor cannot have trespass against him before entry; not because he is not a wrong doer, but because it is his folly that he doth not enter: all the justices did hold with the plaintiff against the copy granted: and that he which granted it was but tenant at sufferance, and not a disseisor, nor had gained the fee, because he came in first by right: and therefore they awarded, that if the defendant did not shew better cause, that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff.

LX. TRIN. 29 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

In the Exchequer Chamber, there was this case: An indenture tripartite, was betwixt three, A. was one of them, and he covenanted with them, et quolibet eorum. And the covenant was, that the land which he had aliened to one of them, was discharged of all incumbrances; and he to whom the limitation of the lands was, a writ of covenant sole. Buckley argued, that it was well brought, and cited the case of 6 E. 2. Br. Covenant 49. where one covenanted with twenty, to repair the sea-banks, and he did not repair against two of them, and they two brought a writ of covenant solement, and the writ holden maintainable, because they onely were damnified, and so he said in this case: but notwithstanding this, it was afterwards, viz. M. 30 Eliz. adjudged by the whole Court, that the covenant did not lie by one of them onely, but ought to be brought by them both.

LXI. CARTER'S CASE.

A. being seised of the manor of Staple in Odiham, and of divers other lands in Odiham, suffered a common recovery of the whole, and by indenture expressed the uses in this manner, viz. of all his lands and tenements, in Odiham, to the use of his wife for life, the remainder over, &c. And of the manor of Staple, to the use of his youngest son in tail; but by the clear opinion of the whole Court, although the manor of Staple was in Odiham, yet the wife shall have nothing therein; for the intent of the party was, that the son should have the same, and his wife the residue; and accordingly judgment was given.

LXIII. TAYLOR AND BROUNSAL'S CASE.

In an information upon the statute of 32 H. 8. by Taylor against Brounsal, the case was, that John Brounsal was seised, and gave the lands to T. B. and the heirs of his body, &c. the remainder to R. B. and the heirs male of his body, the remainder to the right heirs of J. B. T. B. died, having issue a daughter; and R. B. made a lease for years of the lands: and it was holden by the Court to be no maintenance within the said statute, for he in the remainder might make a lease for years: then it was given in evidence, that a common recovery was had against the husband and wife with a single voucher, and so the remainder limited to R. B. destroyed, and that after that recovery R. B. made the lease: to which it was said by the other side, that the said recovery was never executed, and no discontinuance of the remainder, and then the lease made by R. B. was good: and the truth of the case was that such a recovery was bad, and an habere facias seisinam awarded and returned, but no execution was in truth had upon it, nor the recoveror never entred: and if R. B. who is a stranger to the said recovery shall be admitted against the recovery to say, that no execution was thereof, was the question? and therefore all the matter was found by special verdict. It was also given in evidence, that the land was given to T. B. and the heirs males of his body; and then when the daughter, which is not in truth inheritable, entereth, if that entry, she being privy in bloud to R. her uncle, shall be a disseisin, or abatement, &c. as in the case of Littleton, where the youngest brother entreth after the death of the father; for in such case, the youngest son doth not get any freehold, but is but a tenant at sufferance. Anderson, When the daughter enters, and takes a husband, who leaseth for years, and the lessee entreth, the same is a disseisin. Periam doubted it, for he said, when the younger son entred, the freehold was in him, which Anderson doubted.

LXIV. Maunsel and Vernon's Case.

In debt by Maunsel against Hen. Vernon Esquire, who came in by capias, i. compulsary process, and pleaded, that he was Hen. Vernon Lord Powis, and so a Baron of the Parliament, and demanded judg-[49]-ment of the writ. (Note, some said, that if the defendant had come in by issue joyned, or gratis, and not by compulsary process, he could not have pleaded this plea, or any other misnomer.) The plaintiff replyed, that the defendant is an esquire, absque hoc, that he is Lord Powis, and a Baron of the Parliament; and as the jury was ready at the Bar to try this issue, this matter was objected. And Anderson conceived, that this plea to the writ was not good, for the name of the lord is not any degree, as knight, duke, earl; nor is it parcel of the name nor parcel of addition; and therefore it is no plea in abatement of a writ; and all the writs of Parliament, directed to Barons to summon them to Parliament, shall have their names, sirnames and additions; as if they be knights, knights, and if esquires, they shall be named esquires; and if a bond be made by J. S. Lord R. the writ shall not be so, for the King by his writ doth not name any one lord; but otherwise it is of duke, earl, &c. for these are offices of dignity, and parcel of their names, and not onely additions. Windham and Periam contrary; and they conceived that there was no difference in this point betwixt a lord and an earl; for which cause the Court being in doubt, although that the exception was entered of record, would have saved the same to the party, and taken the jury de bene esse: but afterwards, because it appeared it was joyned in the prejudice of Sir Edward Herbert, who was a stranger thereunto, and whose title was concerned therein, and there was none on his part to inform the jury; the jury was at last dismissed by the Court.

LXV. Penruddock and Newman's Case.

In an ejectione firmæ by Penruddock against Newman, the plaintiff declared of a lease made by the Lord Morley, and upon not-guilty pleaded, the jury found this special matter, (scil.) that W. Lord Mounteagle seised of the manor of D. whereof, &c. became bound in a statute in such a sum of money to A. who died; the executors of A. sued execution against the said lord, (scil.) extendi facias, a liberate issued, upon which the said manor was delivered to the executors, but the said liberate was not retorned: and it was farther found, that the executors being so possessed of the manor, the lord commanded a court baron to be holden there, which was done by sufferance and permission of the executors, and in their presence: at which time the executors said to the lord the conusor, We have nothing to do with this manor. And upon this verdict several matters were moved.

and as to that, divers books were cited, 21 H. 6. 8. 18 E. 3. 25. And there is a difference betwixt a liberate, and a capias ad satisfaciend. and fieri facias, these writs are conditional, ita quod habeas corpus, &c. Ita quod habeas denarios hic in curia, 32 H. 8. ca. 28. 16 H. 7. 14. but contrary in a writ of habere facias seisinam, or in a liberate, for in these writs there are not such words; and therefore although they be not retorned, execution done by virtue of them is good enough: see 11 H. 4. 212. If the sheriff by force of an elegit doth deliver the moyety of the land, and doth not retorn the writ; if the plaintiff will plead a new action of debt, the defendant may plead in bar the execution aforesaid, although the writ be not retorned, nor doth remain upon record: and it is not like unto the case of partition made by the sheriff, for that must be retorned, because that after the retorn of it, a secondary judgment is to be given, (scil.) quod partitio prædict. firma & stabilis remaneat in perpetuum, firma & stabilis in [50] perpetuum tenetur, says the Book of Entries 114. And Egerton, the Solicitor-General, cited a case to be lately adjudged betwixt the Earl of Leicester and the Lady Tanfield, that such an execution was well enough, although the liberate was not retorned.

The second point was, admitting that it be a good execution, if the executors being in possession of the manor, and suffering the conusor to hold a Court there, and saying the words aforesaid in the presence of the lord who is conusor; if the same do amount unto a surrender, or not? and it was the opinion of Wray Chief Justice; that it was not a surrender, for that here the words are not addressed to the conusor, who was capable of a surrender, but to other persons: and it is not like unto the case of 40 E. 3. 23, 24. Chamberlains Assise, where tenant for life saith to him in the reversion, that his will is, that he enter upon the land; the same is a good surrender, because here is a person certain who may take the land: but in our case, it is but a general speech, and therefore it shall not be a surrender.

LXVI. BASKERVILE AND BISHOP OF HEREFORD'S CASE.

In a quare impedit brought by Walter Baskervile against the Bishop of Hereford, and others; the plaintiff counted, that Sir Nicholas Arnold, knight, was seised of the advowson in gross, and granted the same to the said Baskervile and others, to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of Richard Arnold his son in tail: proviso, that if the said Nicholas died, his heir being within the age of twenty three years, that then the grantees and their heirs should be seised to themselves and their heirs, until the said Richard had accomplished the said age. Sir Nicholas died, Richard being but of the age of fourteen years; by force whereof the grantees were possessed of the said advowson, &c. and afterwards the church became void, and so it appertained to them to present.

Exception was taken to the count by Serjeant Gawdy, because the plaintiff had not averred the life of Richard, upon whose life the interest of the plaintiff did depend: and he compared the same to the case of the parson, which had been adjudged, where the lessee of a parson brought an ejectione firmæ, and it was found for him; and in arrest of judgment exception was taken to the declaration, because the life of the parson was not averred; and for that cause the judgment was stayed.

Anderson, Upon the dying of Sir Nicholas, Richard being but of the age of fourteen years, an absolute interest for nine years vested in the grantees, not determinable upon the death of Richard; or rather, they are seised of a fee determinable upon the coming of Richard to the age of 23 years.

Rhodes and Windham Justices, contrary; and that here is an interest in the grantees determinable upon the death of Richard within the term; for if Richard dieth without issue within the term, the remainder is limited over to a stranger.

And as to the exception to the count, it was argued by Puckering Serjeant, that the count was good enough; for although the life of Richard be not expresly added, yet such an averment is strongly implied, and so supplyed: for the count is, quod dictus Nich. obiit, dicto Richardo being of the age of fourteen years, & non amplius, by force of which the plaintiff was possessed of the said advowson, quo quidem Nich. sic possessionato existente, the church voided: and possessed he could [51] not be, if not that the said Richard had then been alive; and that is as strong as an averment: see 10 E. 4. 18. In trespass for breaking of his close, the defendant pleaded, that A. was seised and did enfeoff him, to which the plaintiff said, that long time before A. had anything, B. was seised, and leased to the said A. at will, who enfeoffed the defendant, upon whom B. re-entred, and leased to the plaintiff at will, by force whereof he was possessed untill the defendant did the trespass; and that was allowed to be a good replication without averring the life of B. who leased to the plaintiff at will, for that is supplied by the words, scil. virtute cujus, the plaintiff was possessed untill the defendant did the trespass: see also, 10 H. 7. 12. In an assise of common, the defendant made title, that he was seised of a house and a carve of land, to which he and all those whose estate he hath, &c. had common appendant, and doth not say, that he is now seised of the house; but the exception was disallowed; for seisin shall be intended to continue untill the contrary be shewed.

LXVII. MORGAN AND CHANDLER'S CASE.

In debt for arrerages of rent, by Morgan against Chandler, it was found by special verdict, that the land out of which, &c. was assured by an Act of Parliament to the Marchioness of Northampton for the term of her life, the remainder to the Lady Bourcher, her daughter, and the heirs males of her body, the remainder to King H. 8. in fee; and it was ordained by the same Act, quod omnes concessiones & dimissiones, anglice, grants and leases, factæ vel in posterum fiendæ, by the said marchioness, of the lands aforesaid, per script. indentat. dict. marchio. bonæ & validæ in lege erunt, durante termino, &c. The marchioness made a lease for 21 years to Kenelm Throgmorton rendring 10l. rent, who assigned the same to the defendant. The Lady Bourcher died without issue, the marchioness died; and if the lease should now bind the Queen, was the question: and it was moved by Clark of Lincoln's-Inn, that it should, for the King was party to the Act of Parliament; and those estates for life in tail, and in fee, are all as one estate, and derived out of one estate, and the estate of the King is bound with the lease; and it was moved by Broughton, that the lease should not bind the Queen, and so by consequence not her patentee; and he cited a case, adjudged upon a like Act, scil. the statute of 35 H. 8. by which it was enacted, that the Lady Katharine, wife of the said king, should be as a feme sole, and that she might make leases, &c. In that case, the leases should not bind the King or his successours; for the said Act did not extend to make the leases good, but onely against coverture. And it was observed by Clench, Justice, that in the Act of Parliament now in question, it is expresly provided, that the rent reserved by the marchioness, should go to the Lady Bourcher, but no provision made, that it should go to the King, and therefore it is not reason that the King should be bounden: but another matter arising upon the pleading, the point did not fall in judgment.

But afterwards it was clearly agreed, that not onely the costs assessed by the jury, but that which was also de incremento adjudged, should be trebled, and so were all the presidents, as it was affirmed by all the prothonotaries; and so are many books, scil. 19 H. 6. 32. 14 H. 6. 13. 22 H. 6. 57. 12 E. 4, 1. For this action is not conceived upon any such matter which is comprised within the statute: and also the statute upon which this action is conceived, was made after the said statute of 23 H. 8. which gives costs, and therefore the statute of 23 H. 8. and the remedy thereof cannot extend to any action given by 1 and 2 Phil. & Ma. set forth in the consideration, that the plaintiff, ad requisitionem dict. Davidis repararet; and the plaintiff declared, quod reparavit, generally, without saying, ad requisitionem dict. Davidis reparavit, and that is not the reparation intended in the declaration, scil. reparatio ad requisitionem, but a reparation of his own head, and at his pleasure, and for that case judgment was reversed.

LXXVI. SMALMAN AND LANE'S CASE.

The case was, a capias upon an original process, was delivered to the new Sheriff of Warwick against Lane, at the suit of Smalman. And the sheriff informed the Court, that before that the process was directed to him, that the said Lane was taken in execution by the old sheriff, upon a judgment given against him in the King's Bench; and that the said old sheriff had imprisoned the said Lane, by force of the execution in his own house, and there he remained, and prayed the advice of the Court, what return he should make upon that matter, because the said Lane was never in his possession; for all the other prisoners which were in the gaol, and in the ordinary prisons, were delivered to him, and the old sheriff would not bring Lane to the place where the other prisoners were delivered. And it was the opinion of all the justices, that by the law, the old sheriff ought to deliver the body of him who is in his custody by view, to the new sheriff; and such prisoners ought to be brought unto him to view, and from that time, the law shall adjudge such prisoners to be in the possession of the new sheriff, and not before; for he is not bound to go to them, not being in the ordinary prison of the county. Anderson, The new sheriff may return, that the said Lane is in execution in custodia sua, and so charge himself; for although the office of the old sheriff be determined, yet it is not an escape, so long as the party be in custodia and not at large. Manwood, All the reason that hath been made for the second lease, is, because the first lease is but a possibility; for F. by possibility may survive all the said three, and so it shall never take effect: but notwithstanding, be it a possibility or otherwise, it is such a thing which may be granted or forfeited, and that during the life of F. And note the words of the statute; If any abbat, &c. within one year next before the first day of this present Parliament, hath made, or hereafter shall make, any lease or grant for years, life or lives, of any manors, &c. whereof and in which any estate or interest for life or years, at the time of the making of any such lease or grant, then had his being or continuance, and hereafter shall have his being or continuance, and then was not determined, &c. shall be void, &c. LXXX. GODDARD'S CASE.

It was moved in the case of Goddard concerning the manor of Staple in Hampshire, if the tenant of the King of lands holden in capite be disseised, and the disseisor aliens the lands, and afterwards the disseisee doth re-enter? Manwood said, that the land shall not be charged with a fine for alienation without licence, because the title of the alienee grew under the wrong of the disseisor; but the person of the disseisor shall be charged with such fine. Tenant of the King in capite makes a lease for life, the lessee for life makes a feoffment in fee without licence, the lessor re-entreth, neither his person nor the land shall be charged: but if my feoffee upon condition maketh a feoffment without [56] license, and I re-enter for the condition broken, now my land shall be charged with the fine upon alienation, for the feoffee was in by me by good and lawfull title, because he had power to make a feoffment over, although subject to the condition. So if tenant in tail, or the husband seised in the right of his wife, make a feoffment in fee, and afterwards the land is recontinued, the fine accruing for alienation without licence shall bind the land: and if tenant for life loseth issues, and dieth, the lands shall be charged with the same.

LXXXI. THE LORD OF NORTHAMPTON AND LORD ST. JOHN'S CASE.

The Lord of Northampton had by ancient letters patents bona & catalla felonum & fugitivorum within the Isle of Ely; and one dwelling within the island was attainted of felony, to whom another was indebted by obligation, and the money by the condition of the bond was to be paid at a manor of the Lord St. John's, who within his manor had also bona & catalla felonum & fugitivorum; and at the payment the Lord St. John claimed the money: but all the Barons of the Exchequer were clear of opinion, that the Lord St. John could not have the money, for the place of payment nihil operatur, but the obligation is the substance which came to the Lord of Northampton within the Isle of Ely. Popham, the Queens Attorny, claimed the money for the Queen, for the Lord of Northampton cannot have it; for by the general words of bona & catalla felonum things in action do not pass, but by express words they well pass, otherwise not: and therefore day was given to the Lord of Northampton to shew his letters patents.

LXXXII. ARDS AND SMITH'S CASE.

Edward Ards brought a replevin against Smith and Reading; the defendants made conusance as bailiffs to Robert Chamberlain, and shewed, that one A. was seised of the manor of Keney in fee, whereof the place where is parcel, and so seised, gave the said manor to Richard Chamberlain and Sibil Fowler, and to the heirs males of the said Richard: Richard and Sibil intermarry, and have issue Edward; Richard dieth, Sibil dyeth, Edward hath issue Leonard, and dieth; Leonard hath issue Francis, and dieth; Francis hath issue Robert, in whose right the conusance is made, and dieth; Robert entreth: the plaintiff in bar of the conusance sheweth, that one B. was thereof seised, and thereof enfeoffed one Cottesford, then master of Lincoln

College, and the fellows thereof: after which the said Leonard, son and heir male of the said Edward, 25 H. 8. did release to the said master and fellows with warranty, the said Robert, in whose right the said conusance is made, being heir male of the said Robert, and demanded judgment, if against that warranty, &c. The defendants confess the gift before to the said Richard and Sibil, and that they had issue the said Edward; but farther shewed, that after the death of the said Richard, Sibil and Edward her son leased the said manor for years to one Mascal, who entred, and was possessed: Edward suffered a common recovery unto the use of the recoverers, who entred and ousted the lessee and enfeoffed the said B. who [57] enfeoffed the said master and fellows; the lessee re-entred, Sibil died, Leonard, son and heir apparent of Edward, released to the said master and fellows with warranty; Edward died, Leonard died, and thereupon a demurrer was by the parties: and the matter was, if this recovery being suffered by him in the remainder in tail upon an estate for life, the recoverors entring upon the lessee for years of the lessee for life, and putting him out, and afterwards the lessee for years re-entring: if now any estate did remain in the college, after the re-entry, which might work a release?

Snag, Serjeant, argued, that a sufficient estate did remain in the college, upon which a release might enure; i.e. an estate to begin after the death of Sibil, and the expiration of the term for years: and although rei veritate, Edward was not tenant of the freehold at the time of the recovery, yet such an exception doth not lie for the issue; and to that purpose he cited the opinion of Fairfax, 12 E. 4. 14.

Shuttleworth, Serjeant, contrary; This recovery works nothing but by way of estoppel and conclusion, and therefore the issue in tail may well disclose the matter, and avoid such recovery; and the better opinion in the case cited before, 12 E. 4. is that such a recovery against such a person is utterly void, which see there by Littleton, Choke and Brian. 14 E. 4. 2. and also 28 Ass. 17. and Dyer 8 Eliz. 252, 253. Land conveyed to the husband for life, the remainder to the wife in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband and wife; the husband and wife suffer a common recovery, the husband hath issue and dieth, and afterwards the wife dieth, the issue shall avoid the lease and recovery. See also the case betwixt Hare and Snow, Plow. 20 Eliz. 514. where a common recovery was had against tenant in tail, and his wife, whereas in truth the wife had nothing in the land whereof the recovery was suffered: it was holden, that the issue in tail, or any other person, might shew the truth of the matter; for he shall not be bound by any estoppel which his father hath admitted, by joyning in voucher with his wife, for he is not subject to the estoppel; and therefore it was holden, that if the wife in such case might sue execution to have in value, yet the son in tail might oust him of it. So 8 H. 4. 122. a præcipe is brought against tenant in tail, who prays in aid of a stranger as tenant for life, who enters into the aid, and bars the demandant, and afterwards the tenant in tail dieth; his issue is at large to claim the estate-tail, although the mouth of his father was estopped as to it. So tenant in tail brought a quod ei deforceat, and counted upon an especial tail, whereas in truth it was a general tail, and recovereth, and dieth; the said recovery shall not conclude the issue. See 33 H. 6. 18. And in our case, when the recoverors enter by force of the recovery, the same is a wrong to the lessee for years, and also to the tenant for life; for the one is ejected, and the other disseised; and therefore the re-entry of the lessee doth defeat all the estate which was in the college under that recovery: and here the entry of the lessee for years shall avoid all the estate which was conveyed to the college by the recoverors. See 44 E. 3. 30, 31. Bassingborn's Assise: Land is given to A. for life, the remainder to B. for life, the remainder to C. in fee: A. aliens in fee, the ancestor collateral of him who hath the fee doth release to the alienee with warranty: B. enters, here the whole warranty is lost, and all the first estate is recontinued: so in our case, by this entry of the lessee, the whole estate of the college under the recovery is defeated, so as nothing remains in the college, upon which the release can enure, and then there is no warranty in the case: and as the case is here, Edward, who suffered the recovery, dieth before the descent of the warranty by the death of Leonard, by whom the release with warranty was [58] made; by the death of which Edward the interest which the college had in the said manor by the said recovery, and the estoppel of it, was determined and utterly gone, and then the warranty descending afterwards cannot attach upon the possession which was at the time of the warranty made, which was by the conclusion, which by the death of Edward is determined and removed by an eign title, i. the entail. As if tenant in tail doth discontinue, the discontinue is disseised, tenant in tail releaseth with warranty to the disseisor, the disseisee entereth in the life of tenant in tail, who afterwards dieth; the warranty works nothing for the cause aforesaid. And also he put this case, Tenant in tail of land grants a rent-charge in fee, and an ancestor collateral releaseth to the grantee with warranty, and dieth, the tenant in tail dieth, now the issue is bound: but if tenant in tail dieth before him who maketh the release, now the rent is determined by the death of tenant in tail, and then the warranty cannot attach upon it. At another day the case was moved, and conceived in these words, (scil.) tenant for life, the remainder in tail, tenant for life leaseth for years, a recovery is had against him in the remainder in tail, living tenant for life, the recoverors enter, and oust the lessee for years, the son and heir of him in the remainder in tail releaseth with warranty to him to whom the recoverors have assured the lands, the lessee enters, he against whom the recovery was had dieth, the releasor dieth, &c. It was holden, that the entry of the lessee, before that the warranty had attached upon the possession which passed, had avoided the warranty. And the Lord Anderson conceived, that the recovery should not prejudice the issue in tail, but that the issue shall fauxifie the same: and if tenant in tail be disseised, and so disseised suffereth a common recovery, his issue shall not be barred, quod fuit concessum per omnes: and afterwards another matter was moved, (scil.) that the release is pleaded to be made to Lincoln College by the name of Custodi Sociis & Scholaribus Lincolniensis Collegii in Oxonia, where the true name of the college, as is confessed by the record in the plea pleaded is, Custos sive Rector, Socii & Scholares Lincolniensis Collegii in Oxonia, &c. It was adjourned. See this case reported, (3 part, Lincoln College case.)

LXXXIII. HALL AND THE BISHOP OF BATH'S CASE.

Hall brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Bath, and others; the incumbent pleaded, quod ipse nihil habet, nec habere clamat, &c. nisi de præsentatione Georgii Sidenham militis, not named in the writ, and demanded judgment of the writ, upon which the plaintiff did demur in law: and it was argued by Drew, serjeant for the plaintiff, that the writ was well brought without naming the patron: for if a quare impedit be brought against the patron and incumbent, and the patron dieth, pendant the writ, the writ shall not abate: 9 H. 6. 30. It might be, that the plaintiff did not know, nor could tell, who presented the said incumbent, but he findeth the incumbent a disturber by his incumbency: and if of necessity such patron ought to be named, then if such a usurper should die before the writ brought, he which hath cause of action should be remediless. And by Anderson and Periam, the writ is good enough for the reason aforesaid: and Anderson put this case; If A. wrongfully by usurpation doth present, and his clark is received; and afterwards A. having gained the patronage, grants it over to B. against whom shall the quare impedit be brought? Walmsley, against B. which Anderson doubted.

LXXXIV. HUGHE'S CASE.

In a formedon, the writ was, that A. Dedit Aliciæ filiæ suæ, and to J. S. and to the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and it was shewed in abatement of the writ, that the name of the wife is put before the name of the husband, to which it was said by the Court, that if such a writ be brought against the husband and wife, and the name of the wife be put before the name of the husband, the writ shall abate; and if in the case at bar it had appeared, that the donees at the time of the gift, were husband and wife, upon such a matter disclosed the writ should abate; but that doth not appear plainly to the Court.

LXXXV. MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Note, it was holden by the Court, that if a writ of dower be brought against an infant, who loseth by default at the Grand Cape; that he may reverse the same by a writ of error; but where an infant appeareth by guardian, and afterwards loseth by default, there he shall never avoid it: for if any default be in the guardian, the infant shall recover against him in a writ of deceit. And afterwards, the judgment in the first case was reversed.

LXXXVI. MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Note, in the Exchequer Chamber, before the Lord Chancellour, the two Chief Justices, and the Chief Baron; a writ of error was cast upon a judgment given in the Court of Exchequer; and it was agreed, quod propter absentiam dom. Thesaurarii Angliæ, they ought not, nor could receive the said writ; and the statute of 31 Eliz. doth not help the matter, for that extends but to discontinuances, which before the statute many times hapned for the not coming of the Chancellour or Treasurer, and not to give conusance in a writ of error in the absence of the Treasurer, &c.

In a replevin by Lacy against Fisher, the defendant pleaded, that the place where, &c. is called Spicold, and holden of the manor of Easthall by certain rent, and made conusance as bailiff of the lord of the said manor; and issue being joined hereupon, it was tried by the jury of the visne of Spicold, and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the issue was mis-tried; for the visne ought to have been of Spicold and Easthall also: and a case was cited to have been adjudged accordingly betwixt Webb and Richmond. LXXXVIII. CORBET'S CASE.

The case was, that an action of debt was brought by original writ against an administrator in another county than where the administrator was dwelling, and before notice of that suit, he paid divers other debts of the intestate, due by specialties; so as he had not assets to pay the debt in demand, having assets, at the day of the teste of the original, and now the defendant appearing, pleads the same special matter, and concluded, and so nothing remained in his hands. And it was holden per curiam to be a good plea: see 2 H. 4. 21, 22.

PASCH. 31 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

LXXXIX. SIR WILLIAM PELHAM'S CASE.

The case, short put, was this: A. tenant for life of a messuage, &c. the remainder in tail to B. with divers remainders over: A. by deed indented and enrolled, bargained and sold the messuage, &c. so conveyed to Sir William Pelham in fee, who afterwards suffered a common recovery thereof, in which A. is vouched; and so a common recovery is had and executed, and all this was before the statute of 14 Eliz. And if the said recovery should bind B. who was in the remainder in tail; or if it be a forfeiture, was the question. Altham of Gray's-Inn argued, that here is a forfeiture: first, it is to see, if a common recovery suffered by tenant for life (who is also bargainor in this case) be a forfeiture or not by the common law, if no execution be sued upon the same recovery. Secondly, if the recovery be executed, if he in the remainder may enter for the forfeiture. When tenant for life bargaineth and selleth the messuage, &c. although upon it an estate in fee be limited, yet nothing passeth from him, but that which he may lawfully pass, and that was the estate for the life of the bargainor, for such estate onely might lawfully pass; and here the bargainee is but tenant for the life of another, and when with his own consent he suffers a common recovery and that without right, the same is a forfeiture. By matter in fact, a particular tenant may commit a forfeiture, as well as by matter of record: by matter in fact he cannot commit a forfeiture, if the reversion be not thereby pulled out of him in the reversion: as if lessee for ten years maketh a lease for 1000 years, the same is no forfeiture, for by that the reversion is not touched; but if he in matter of record doe any thing which sounds to the disinheriting of him in the reversion, although in truth it doth not touch the inheritance, yet it is a forfeiture; which see 39 E. 3. 16. If tenant for life plead any thing against the right of him in the reversion, it is a forfeiture. And by Finchden and Belknap, he cannot plead to the right. 5 Ass. 3. Tenant for life is impleaded in a præcipe by a stranger, and confesseth the action upon which the demandant hath judgment; the lessor enters, against whom the demandant sueth execution, and the lessor brought an issue, and had judgment to recover, for it is a forfeiture, because the tenant for life hath admitted the reversion in another, because it is an alienation to the disinheritance of the plaintiff, i. the lessor. 19 E. 3. t. Receit 14. where tenant for life pleads in chief, or doth not gainsay the action of the demandant, or makes default by covin, he shall forfeit his estate; but if a rent be demanded against [61] tenant for life, and he render the same, it is no forfeiture: 22 Ass. 31. Tenant for life is impleaded by covin betwixt him and the demandant, and pleads in chief without aid prayer, upon which judgment is given, he in the reversion may enter: in a quid juris clamat, against tenant for life, who pleaded faulty, traversing the point of the action, he in the reversion shall not be received, for inasmuch as the tenant hath traversed the action, he is not within the statute of West. 2. of default, reddition; but he in the reversion may enter by the common law: 22 E. 3. 2. In a scire facias, to execute a fine against tenant for life, who pleaded to the enquest, whereas in truth, the land in demand was not comprised within the fine, and judgment is given for the demandant in the scire facias, that he in the reversion may enter: in the principal case here, there is apparent and manifest covin; for the tenant for life is vouched without cause, and this recovery is by assent, and is to the use of the bargainee, who is tenant for the life of another, and therefore by the common law, he in the reversion may enter before the execution be sued. And it is well known, that these common recoveries are used to dock a remainder in tail; and that was the scope of this recovery: and as to the case of 5 E. 4. 2. tenant for life is impleaded in a præcipe quod reddat, who voucheth a stranger, the demandant counterpleads the vouchee, and it is found for him; he in the reversion hath no remedy, but a writ of right, and if such vouchee enters into the warranty, and loseth by action tried, or by default, &c. that book is to be intended of a recovery executed; for there in such a case, he in the reversion may not enter, but is put to his writ of entry by the common law, vide Br. Tit. Forfeit 87. 24 H. 8. Tenant for life is impleaded and prayes in aid of a stranger, he in the reversion may enter, but if he doth not enter untill the other hath recovered, then he cannot enter, but he is put to his writ of entry, ad terminum qui præteriit, vel de ingress. ad com. legem, and therein shall falsifie the recovery. And there by Brook, Voucher of a stranger is not a cause of forfeiture; for he doth not disaffirm the reversion to be in the lessor. And he vouched, 24 E. 3. 68. where tenant for life pleaded in the right without aid prayer; and so he argued, that before execution, he in the remainder might enter, but after execution, he is put to his action; but in our case, although execution, be sued, yet he in the remainder may enter, for it is found by verdict, that at the time of the recovery he was within age, and then no laches of entry shall be imputed unto him, and then he shall not be driven to his action: as if tenant by the curtesie maketh a feoffment with warranty, and dieth, and the same descendeth to his heir within age, yet he shall enter, although that he had not avoided the warranty in the life of his ancestor; and he also conceived that the statute of 23 H. 8. cap. 31. did extend to this case: for Sir William Pelham, the bargainee, was but tenant for life, and although that he be but tenant for the life of another, yet he is tenant for life as fully as if he were tenant for his own life: the words of the statute are, or otherwise for the term of life or lives quo ad non. As upon the statute of 20. E. 1. which gives receit, i. de defensione juris; the words are, Cum quis aliquod breve dom. Regis impetret versus renentem per legem Angliæ, vel feodum talliatum, vel sub nomine dotis, vel alio modo ad terminum vitæ, &c. Also, although that he who entreth at the time of the recovery was not next in the remainder to the particular estate, yet he is within the statute of 32 H. 8. for he was in the remainder at the time of the recovery, and at the time of the entry, he in the immediate remainder was dead, and then he next in remainder: see 15 E. 4. 9. by Littleton, If I grant my services to one for life, and he in a præcipe brought against him, plead in the right; or granteth unto another the said services in fee, the same is not any forfeiture, because it is not any discontinuance. It will be objected, that [62] the words of the statute of 32 H. 8. are, that such recoveries shall be utterly void; and if so, then he in the reversion cannot be damnified, and then no cause of forfeiture; to that it was easily to be answered, that where tenant for life doth any thing which sounds to the disinheriting of him in the reversion by matter of record, although it doth not devest or otherwise prejudice the inheritance, yet it is a forfeiture. Coke contrary; Here in our case there is not any covin: Sir William Pelham, the bargainee, he was deceived by the bargainor, for he did not know but that the bargainor was seised in tail at the time of the bargain, and it was lawfull for him to doe other act in the farther assurance of his bargain; and it was also lawfull for him to vouch his bargainor; and although the bargainor vouched a stranger, yet it is not a forfeiture, 39 E. 3. 16. Aid prayer of a stranger is a forfeiture, and the reason thereof is, because he acknowledgeth the reversion to be in a stranger, and that is the cause of the forfeiture. See Book of Entries 254. Where upon aid prayer, the party to have aid sheweth special matter; but in our case, Sir William Pelham hath vouched his bargainor, and that not without cause, for he hath a warranty from him; and the demandant could not counterplead it, for he had seisin, by force whereof he might make a feoffment: as unto the case of 14 E. 3. Tit. Receit 135. Lessee for life in a præcipe against him without aid prayer pleaded to the enquest at the first day, in that case it is said, that he in the reverson may enter. It is true, that he may enter in the receit, but not into the land for forfeiture, for then Fitz. would have abridged the case in title of entry congeable, and not in the title of receit: and the book of 5 E. 3. is good law, for there the tenant doth confess the reversion to be in another; but in our case the tenant voucheth, which is a lawfull act done, and according to the covenants of his purchase: and although the recovery be by agreement, yet it is not therefore a forfeiture; for if the tenant for life voucheth truly, it is no forfeiture. Before the statute of West. 2 cap. 3. which gave receit to the wife, and to those in the reversion where the particular tenant is impleaded, and maketh default, vel reddere noluerit, there was no remedy in such cases, but by writ of right, but no entry, and that was for the reason of the credit which the law gave to recoveries, for if they might enter; wherefore is receit given? but that was in two cases onely: but afterwards, because it was found, that many particular tenants being impleaded would plead faintly, the statute of 13 R. 2. gave receit in such cases. And upon what reasons were these acts and statutes made, if in such cases the entry was congeable?

but after these two statutes, another practice was devised, for such particular tenants would suffer recoveries secretly, in such sort, that those in the reversion could not have notice thereof, so as they could not before judgment pray to be received, to remedy which mischief, the statute of 32 H. 8. was made, by which all recoveries had against tenant by the curtesie, or otherwise for life or lives, by agreement of the parties of any lands whereof such particular tenant is seised shall be void, as tenant by the curtesie, &c. should be void against him in the reversion; and yet there was an evasion to creep out of that statute; for such particular tenants, would make a feoffment with warranty, and then the feoffee should be impleaded in a writ of entry, and he vouch the tenant for life, who would aver, and such recovery was holden to be out of the statute of 32 H. 8. for the recovery was not against such particular tenants, &c. for the remedy of which mischief, the statute of 14 Eliz. was made, by which it is provided, that such recoveries had where such particular tenants are vouched shall be void, if such recovery be by covin betwixt them: and he conceived, that the forfeiture is not in respect of the recovery it self, but of the plea pleaded by the tenant: and here in our case, there is not any covin [63] found, or that Sir William Pelham knew that he was but tenant for life; but it is found, that this recovery was with their assent, and that was lawfull as the case is; for they might agree to have such a recovery for farther assurance: and so Sir William Pelham hath not vouched any but his bargainor, and that accordiug to their covenants; and this bargainor was not a bare tenant for life, but he had also a remainder in tail, although not immediately depending upon the estate for life, which he had cut off; there it was not meerly a feigned recovery: see 5 E. 4. 2. and 24 H. 8. br. Forfeit. 87. where tenant for life being impleaded in a præcipe, voucheth a stranger, the same is no forfeiture, for the same doth not disaffirm the reversion: but contrary of aid prayer, for a stranger may release with warranty to tenant for life, upon which he may vouch: and he reported in his argument, that Bromley, Chancellor of England, sent him to both the Chief Justices, to know their opinions upon this point; and they were of opinion that the voucher of a stranger was not any forfeiture, and also that after the recovery was executed, he in the remainder could not enter; but they conceived, that the right of him in the remainder was not bound: and he said, that after the recovery was executed, that he in the remainder could not enter: see 24 H. 8. Br. Forfeit 87. for if entry in such cases should be lawfull, infinite suits would follow thereupon, which would be much to the discredit of common recoveries, which are now the common assurances of the land. As to the objection of the enfancy, the same will not help the matter. Br. Sav. Default 50. 6 H. 8. A recovery had against an infant, in which he voucheth and loseth, is not erroneous; contrary of a recovery upon a default: and if an infant, tenant in tail, suffer a common recovery, the same is a discontinuance, for in such recoveries infancy is not respected: and in a scire facias upon a judgment had against the father, the heir shall not have his age: and he cited a case out of Bendloe's Reports, 5 Eliz. Tenant for life, the remainder over to a stranger in fee, tenant for life is disseised by covin; in a præcipe quod reddat against the disseisor, he voucheth the tenant for life, who enters into warranty generally, and voucheth over the common vouchee: it was adjudged, that the recovery was out of the statute of 32 H. 8. for the recovery was not had against the particular tenant, for he was but tenant in law, because vouchee; and also that the recovery was a good bar to him in the remainder, notwithstanding that he was within age at the time of the recovery.

And afterwards at another day the case was argued by the barons; and Clark Baron conceived, that the entry of him in the remainder was congeable: it hath been said, that Sir William Pelham did not know that the bargainor had an estate but for his life, or that any other person had any remainder therein; the same is not to any purpose to excuse him: for 42 E. 3. every purchasor ought at his own peril take notice of the estates and charges which are upon the lands of which he is purchasor; and the law presumes that none will purchase lands without advice of councel, and without knowing the titles to the lands. And although divers statutes have been made to provide against the practices of particular tenants, yet it is no argument, that no other remedy was before. And by Littleton, If tenant for life joyneth the mise upon the mere right, it is a forfeiture. And he held strongly, that the judgment did not take away the entry, cause of forfeiture being given before the judgment: see

5 Ass. 3. and 22 Ass. 31. to that purpose: for where tenant for life is impleaded, he ought to attend upon him in the reversion, and to expect instructions from him in defence of his title, &c. And therefore if he maketh default, or confesseth action, the same is a forfeiture: and as to the supposed recompence, the same shall not help this case, for this is a common [64] recovery, and nothing else but an assurance: and recoverors they are but assignees, and they shall take advantage of conditions by 32 H. 8. and a recovery shall be seised to the use of him who suffereth the recovery, if no other use be expressed. And he also held, that when tenant for life bargains, and sells his lands by deed enrolled, although no fee passeth, yet it is a forfeiture, and that by reason of the enrolment, which is matter of record. And he said that if an infant, tenant for life, be disseised, and the disseisor dieth, and afterwards the infant dieth, that he in the remainder might enter.

Gent, Baron, argued to the same intent; and he said, that if tenant for life suffereth a recovery, the same is not simply a forfeiture, for he may have a warranty upon a release or confirmation made to him. Attornment doth not give a right, but is onely a consent, yet if he who hath not any thing in the reversion will levy a fine thereof unto another, and afterwards the conusee brings a quod juris clamat against the tenant of the land, and he attorn, it is a forfeiture.

Manwood, Baron, to the same intent; This is a new case, and I have not seen nor read the case in any book, nor seen any presidents; and it is a great case, and a general case, and worthy to be argued; and I conceive clearly, that here is a direct and express forfeiture: the dignity of judgments in reputation of law hath been urged, which ought to stand in force until they be reversed by error or attaint: and also Littleton 481. hath been urged, where upon the statute of West. 3. he saith, that before the statute aforesaid, if a lease had been made to one for life, the remainder to a stranger, and afterwards a stranger by faint action hath recovered against tenant for life by default, and afterwards the tenant for life died, he in the remainder had not any remedy: but there Littleton doth not report the same as his own opinion, but as an opinion conceived by a reader upon the said statute; and in truth it is but a meer conceit. And as to the main point, he took this difference; such recoveries in which the title of the demandant stands indifferent to the Court, and non constat, if it be good, or not being suffered by tenant for life by default or confession, without aid-prayer of him in the reversion, do not make any forfeiture, although that the tenant for life hath not dealt with him in the reversion, not having prayed in aid of him: and in such case, if a lease be made for life, the remainder over in fee, upon such recovery he in the remainder shall have a formedon in the remainder, or a writ of right, and shall not put out him who recovered, without any action, and that by the common law. Then came the statute of West. 2. c. 3. which gave unto the wife a cui in vita, upon a recovery had against the husband by default, where before she had not any remedy, but onely writ of right: and notwithstanding, si ulterius quæratur, si necesse habet ostendere jus suum, secundum formam brevis quod prius impetraverat: and if his right be not better than the right of him in the reversion, he shall lose it, notwithstanding the judgment given before for him: and that statute gave receipt, or writ of entry, ad terminum qui præteriit; and that statute is to be intended of such recoveries where a good title or indifferent is, so as non constat Curiæ, if it be good, or not: after that tenant for life was driven unto a new shift, and would not make default, or lose for not pleading, but he would plead, but that faintly; for the remedy of which mischief, the statute of 13 R. 2. which gave receipt in such case; the particular tenant being restrained by this statute, he jugled yet, and practised to suffer a recovery secretly, without notice of him in the reversion: for the remedying of which mischief, the statute of 32 H. 8. was made, and that makes such recovery had against such a particular tenant void against him the reversion.

[65] It hath been objected, that the said statute of 32 H. 8. did not give any forfeiture in this case, but makes the recovery void; and therefore he in the reversion ought to stay until after the death of the particular tenant: to that I shall speak after. But here our case is of a common recovery, and it doth appear to the Court, that the demandant hath not right, for the tenant might have barred him: also this recovery is not to the use of the recoveror, but to the use of him who was tenant in it; and in truth it is nothing else but an assurance: and in these feigned recoveries the recoveror comes in under the title of the tenant to it, and not paramount, as in case of a recovery upon a good title. A lease for years made by him who after suffers a recovery is good, and shall not be defeated by the recovery; otherwise it is where the recovery is upon a good title. See statute of Glocest. cap. 11. where upon default of the tenant, receipt is given for lessee for years; yet if the tenant vouch, upon default of the vouchee the lessee for years shall be received: and now receipt of lessee for years is out of the book, for by the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 15. he may falsifie the recovery: but no receipt lieth in the case of a common recovery, for that he who recovers cannot put out the termor. As to that which my brother Clark hath said, that the bargain and sale in this case is not any forfeiture, but when the bargain and sale is enrolled, then it is a forfeiture; I am not of such opinion: for although that the enrolment be of record, yet the deed is not of record; for against a deed enrolled, a man may plead infancy, although none can plead non est factum. Also he held, that although by the bargain and sale, and the enrolment of it, the bargainee had not a fee, for by such act the reversion is not removed; yet by the recovery, and the execution of it, the bargainee hath gained a fee out of the lessor, for the recovery is to the use of the bargainee, against whom it was had. It hath been objected, that here is onely a voucher, which paradventure was lawfull in this case, by reason of a warranty paramount; or of a release or confirmation with warranty: and two cases have been vouched to that purpose, viz. 5 E. 4. 2. Tenant for life being impleaded in a præcipe, voucheth a stranger, the demandant counterpleads the voucher, which is found for him, he in the reversion hath no remedy but a writ of right; so if the vouchee had entred into the warranty, and lost, &c. As to that book, we ought not to conceive, that every case reported in our books is law; but let us observe, of what authority that case is; truly it is the conceit of the reporter himself, for he puts the case, and resolves the case, but no judge or serjeant is named in the case, &c. The other case is 5 E. 4. 2. b. Note by Heydon clearly. If my tenant for life voucheth a stranger, who entreth into the warranty generally, and doth not know how to bar the demandant, the tenant shall recover in value, and the reversion of that which he hath in value shall be in me in lieu of my former reversion; as a release to the tenant for term of life shall enure to him in the reversion: but that is but the opinion of one serjeant, &c. But I answer to these books, if the demandant in such recovery hath a good title, so as the tenant or the vouchee, as Heydon saith, do not know how to bar the demandant, there such voucher of a stranger is no forfeiture, nor such recovery suffered upon it, for against his will, volens nolens, he suffered it: but if the tenant hath good matter to bar the demandant, and no good cause of voucher, nor any warranty, as the matter is in the case of a common recovery, there the voucher of a stranger, or suffering of a recovery, is a forfeiture of his estate. And here in our case if the demandant hath not any title, the tenant or vouchee hath not any warranty; but the tenant might have barred the demandant if he would: and he said, that the voucher onely doth not make the forfeiture, but rather the recovery; for when judgment [66] is given, and execution is had, then the fee is plucked out of the reversioner: vide 6. R. 2. If tenant for life claimeth a fee, the same is a forfeiture: but here Sir William Pelham hath done more, for he hath gained fee by the judgment, therefore à fortiori it shall be a forfeiture. But let us see a little what meddlings or attempts by the particular tenants are causes of forfeiture, and what not: 5 Assis. 3. A. brought a writ of entry against tenant for life by collusion to oust B. of his reversion, supposing that the tenant for life held of his lease; the tenant confessed the action, upon which judgment is given, B. enters, and his entry adjudged lawfull, for this recovery is adjudged in law but an alienation to the disinheritance of him in the reversion: and there it appeareth, that such recovery by covin is but an alienation, and without any strength of a recovery. And he cited many other cases cited before by Altham: 14 E. 3. Recept 135. where tenant for life pleads in chief, and prays in aid of a stranger, where he might bar the demandant, and would not, the same is a forfeiture: also 22 E. 3. 2. and 27 E. 3. where tenant for life, in a quid juris clamat, attorned to the conusee upon a fine levyed by him that had not any thing in the land, the same was a forfeiture; and yet the attornment doth not devest the reversion out of the lessor: 50 E. 3. 7. and 8. Land was given by fine in tail, the remainder over to a stranger in fee, the donee took a wife and died without issue, the wife accepted dower assigned by a stranger, he in the remainder brought a scire facias against the wife; she is tenant in dower of the assignment of a stranger, and pleads to the title; the demandant recovereth, she hath lost her dower, for she hath not pleaded as she ought, being a particular tenant, &c. H. 4. Tenant for life loseth his land in a recovery against him against his will, and thereupon brings quod ei deforceat, and declares upon an estate-tail, and recovers, the same is a forfeiture, because he hath challenged a higher estate than he had, 5 H. 5. Tenant for life joyns the wife upon the meer right: 2 H. 6. Lessee for years being ousted, brings an assise, and recovers: 1 H. 7. Accepts a fine of a stranger upon condition, come ceo, &c. all these are forfeitures. In the principal case here, the tenant who suffers his recovery doth not plead at all to defend the right: but whereas he might have barred the demandant, he giveth strength to his pretended title, and makes it a perfect title; and by suffering this recovery and judgment to pass upon it, he hath taken the reversion out of the lessor to whom he owed fealty, and therefore he shall forfeit his estate. And without any doubt it is apparent to the Court, that the demandant in this recovery hath not any title, but the recoverors in such cases are but as assignees or purchasors, which appears by the statute of 7 H. 8. ca. 2. which gives distress and avowry to recoverors, &c. As to the inventing of recoveries, it was a necessary device, for it was to take away estate-tails, which were the causes of great mischiefs and inconveniencies in this realm: and there was great reason for it; for tenant in tail might by the common law alien his lands post prolem suscitatam, and now he hath an inheritance, and may do waste, but he was so restrained by the statute of West. 2. that all the realm, and the subjects in it, were inveigled thereby; joyntures of wives, leases of fermors, mortgages to creditors, statutes, and other assurances, were defeated by the deaths of tenants in tail, which was both against the common law, and also against all conscience. These matters coming to the knowledge of the justices, and the mischiefs thereupon following being very frequent, and it appearing that the tenant in tail was a dangerous fellow, and that there was no safe dealing with him, they took consideration of them: and considering also with themselves, that lineal warranty and assets, and collateral warranty without assets, did bar the [67] entail, upon this consideration they grounded the practice and usage of common recoveries. So as by that means tenant in tail, hath postestatem alienandi, as he hath at the common law; and by this means, right was done to the common law because its authority was restored; and thereby injury was done to no man: but as for tenant for life, he never had potestatem alienandi. And as to that which hath been said, that the recovery shall stand in force untill after the death of tenant for life; and in our case here, tenant in tail is alive; truly, if the law should be such, great mischiefs would follow: for then great jointresses, the widows of great persons, having assurances to them of great and stately houses, and of lands furnished with timber, of great yearly value, might suffer such recoveries; and so having plucked the fee out of the heirs, might commit waste, and the same should be dispunishable, which would be an intolerable mischief; and so he concluded, that the suffering of a recovery was a forfeiture, and judgment, Trin. 21 Eliz. was given, and entred accordingly.

XC. Noon's Case.

Debt was brought in London, against one as executor, and upon fully administred pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff, who assigned the same to the Queen, whereupon a scire facias issued out of the Exchequer against the defendant, into the county of Dorset. The sheriff retorned nulla bona, &c. which scire facias was upon a constat of goods in another county; it was agreed by all the Barons, that the debt was well assigned to the Queen: and also that the scire facias might issue forth of another Court, than where the record of the judgment remained; and that upon a constat of goods, in another county than where the writ is brought, or where the party is dwelling, he may well have a scire facias in another county. But the retorn was challenged, because contrary to the verdict: as in a replevin, no such beast, is not a good retorn, but averia elongata; or nullus venit ex parte querentis ad monstrand. averia: and here the sheriff might have retorned, devastavit, which well stands with the verdict, 5 H. 7. 27. But as to that, it was said by the Barons, that it is true, that the sheriff of the county where the writ was brought, is concluded by the verdict, to make any retorn contrary to it; but the sheriff of another county shall not so be; but the sheriff of the county where the writ is brought ought to retorn devastavit, &c. and thereupon the plaintiff shall have process into another county; but the question farther was: If a scire facias upon testatum shall issue into another county, before that the sheriff of the county where the writ is brought, had retorned a devastavit? for some conceived, that a devastavit where the writ was brought, ought first to be retorned, and then upon a testatum, process should issue forth into any county within England; but others were of opinion, that without a devastavit retorned upon a testatum, process might be sued forth immediately into any other county. Williams said, If I recover goods by action brought in Midd. I may upon a testatum, have a capias into any foreign county.

XCI. WESTERN AND WEILD'S CASE.

In a writ of accompt brought in London, the defendant pleaded, never his receiver, &c., which was found for the plaintiff, and judgment given, that the defendant should accompt; afterwards the defendant brought his writ of privilege: and if the same should be allowed after judgment? was the question: Coke, It shall be allowed, for the defendant hath not surceased his time. This judgment to accompt is not properly a judgment, for no writ of error lieth upon it before the accompt be ended: Manwood, Regularly, after judgment, no privilege shall be allowed, but that is to be intended of a judgment ended; but here, notwithstanding this judgment, the action is depending, and therefore he conceived that the privilege should be allowed in this case. It was objected, that then the plaintiff should be at great mischief, for he should lose the advantage of his trial; for he must begin again, and plead again, and have a new trial. Clark, The plaintiff shall have benefit of his former trial by way of evidence.

TRIN. 27 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS. ROT. 1353.

XCII. BRIAN AND CAWSEN'S CASE.

In an action of trespass by Brian and his wife, and others, against Cawsen; that William Gardiner was seised in fee, according to the custome of the manor of C. of certain lands, and surrendred them to the use of his last will; by which he devised them in this manner; i. I bequeath to John Th. my house and land in M. called Larks and Sone: to Step. Th. my house and land, called Stokes and Newmans, and to Roger Th. my house and lands, called Lakins and Brox. Moreover, if the said John, Stephen or Roger, live till they be of lawfull age, and have issue of their bodies, lawfully begotten, then I give the said lands and houses to them and their heirs in manner aforesaid, to give and sell at their pleasure; but if it fortune one of them to die without issue of his body, lawfully begotten, then I will that the other brothers, or brother, have all the said houses and lands in manner aforesaid: and if it fortune the three to die without issue, in like manner, then I will, that all the said houses and lands be sold by my executor, or his assigns, and the money to be given to the poor: the devisor dieth; John, Stephen and Roger are admitted according to the intent of the will, Roger dieth within age, without issue, John and Stephen are admitted to his part, John comes of full age, and hath issue, J. and surrenders all his part of the whole, and his estate therein, to the use of Stephen and his heirs, who is admitted accordingly; Stephen comes of full age, John the father dieth, Stephen dieth without issue, John the son, as cosin and heir of Stephen is admitted, according to the will, and afterwards dieth without issue, the wives of the plaintiffs are heirs to him, and are admitted to the said lands, called Larks and Sone, and to the moyety of the lands, called Lakins and Brox, parcell of lands where, &c. by force whereof they enter into all the lands where the trespass is done, and it was found, that A. sole executor, died intestate, and that Cawsen the defendant is cosin and heir of the devisor, and that he as heir, entred, and did the trespass. First, it was agreed by all, that by the first words of the will, the three devisees had but for their lives. But [69] Fenner and Walmesley, who argued for the plaintiffs conceived, that by force of the latter words (scil.) if the said John, Stephen and Roger, live till they be of lawfull age, and have issue of their body, lawfully begotten, then I give the said lands and houses to them and their heirs, in manner aforesaid, &c. that they have fee; and the words (in manner aforesaid) are to be referred, not to the estate which was given by the first words, which was but for life, but to make them to hold in severalty, as the first devise would, and not jointly, as the words of the second devise do purport: and Fenner said, It had been resolved by good opinion, that where a fine was levied to the use of the conusee and his wife, and of the heirs of the body of the conusor, with divers remainders over, proviso, that it should be lawfull to the survivor of them, to make leases of the said lands in such manner as tenant in tail might make by the statute of 32 H. 8. Although those lands were never devised before the fine, yet the wife survivor, might demise them by force of the proviso, notwithstanding the words in manner, &c. So if lands be given to A. for life, upon condition, the remainder to B. in manner aforesaid; these words, in manner aforesaid, shall refer unto the estate for life limited to A. and not to the condition, nor to any other collateral matter. The words, If they live untill they be of full age, and have issue, are words of condition, and shall not be construed to such purpose, to give to them by implication an estate tail; for the words subsequent are, that they shall have to them and their heirs, to give and sell at their pleasures, by which it appeareth, that his intent was not to make an estate tail; for tenant in tail cannot alien or dispose of his estate, &c. And as to the latter words, And if it fortune they three to die without issue, &c. these words cannot make an estate tail, and the express limitation of fee in the former part of the will, shall not be controlled by implication, out of the subsequent words: as if lessee for fourty years deviseth his term to his wife for twenty years, and if she die, the remainder of the term to another, although she survive the twenty years, she shall not hold over. And here, the second sale appointed to be made by the executor, shall not take away the power of the first sale allowed unto the devisees after issue. Snagg and Shuttleworth, Serjeants, to the contrary: and they said, that the defendant hath right to two parts, for no inheritance vesteth in the devisees until full age and issue; and because two of the devisees died without issue, they never had an inheritance in their two parts, and so those two parts do descend to the defendant, as heir to the devisor, no sale being made by the executor; these words, If John, Stephen and Roger, are to be taken distributive, viz. If John live, &c. are to be taken distributive (scil.) if John live untill, &c. he shall have inheritance in his part, et sic de reliquis: as if I have right unto lands which A. B. and C. hold in common, and I by deed release unto them all, the same shall inure to them severally, 19 H. 6. And here, these latter words, If they three die without issue, it seems to be but an estate tail: see to that purpose, 35 Ass. 14. 37 Ass. 15. For a man cannot declare his intent at once, but in several parts; all which make but one inheritance, and so it is said by Persay, 37 Ass. 15. we ought to adjudge upon all the deed, and not upon parcell. And see Clatche's case, 16 Eliz. Dyer 330, 331. And it was said, that if I give lands to one and his heirs, as long as J. S. hath heirs of his body, the same is a fee-simple determinable, and not an estate tail, quære of that. Then here the fee-simple is determined by the death of the devisees without issue, and therefore the lands shall revert to the heir of the devisor, especially there being no person in rerum natura, who may sell, for the executor before any sale by him made, died intestate; and if he had made executors, yet the executor of the executor could not sell, which see, 19 H. 8. 9. 10. And afterwards, the justices resolved, that no estate tail is created by the will, but that the fee-simple is settled in them [70] when they came to their lawfull age, and have issue; so as the residue of the devise is void: and judgment was given for the plaintiffs.

XCIII. Hil. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was this, (viz.) by the civil law the parson ought to have his tythe by the tenth ridg: and in a great field there was corn upon the arable land, and grass upon the head lands; and in a suit for tythe hay, and rakings of the corn, the defendant did prescribe, to pay the tenth shock of corn for all the corn, hay and rakings of the corn; and the prescription was challenged not to be good, for it is upon the matter a prescription of non decimando, for the tenth shock is due of common right, and so nothing is for the hay and rakings: it was holden by all the justices, that for tying of horses upon the head lands, and eating of the grass and corn together, that the prescription was good: but the doubt was, when the grass is made into hay, which is upon the head lands, if it be a good prescription then, and discharge for the hay, because it is another thing than what is growing upon the land? But in the end all the justices agreed, that by the civil law (ut supra) the tenth ridg is due for tythe corn; therefore for the reaping, binding and shocking, it is a reasonable prescription, that the party shall have the hay upon the head lands in recompence of the said other things, and the hay upon the head lands is but of little value.

XCIV. 29 Eliz. Challoners and Bowyer's Case.

In assise of novel disseisin by Challoner against Bowyer, it was given in evidence at the assise, that William Bowyer was seised, and having issue two sons, and two daughters, devised his lands to his younger son in tail, and for want of such issue, to the heirs of the body of his eldest son; and if he die without issue, that then the land shall remain to his two daughters in fee: William Bowyer dieth, the younger son dieth without issue, living the eldest son, having issue him who is tenant in the assise: it was moved, that notwithstanding that by way of grant, the son, living his father, cannot take as heir, i. by limitation, as heir to his father, because that none can be said or held heir to his father as long as the father be alive; yet by way of devise the law shall favour the intention of the party, and the intent of the devisor shall prevail. But all the Court was strongly against it, and held, that as well in case of devise, as of grant, all is one. Whereupon the tenant produced witnesses, who affirmed upon their oaths, that the devisor declared his meaning concerning the said will, that as long as his eldest son had issue of his body, that the daughters should not have the land: but the Court utterly rejected the matter; and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

XCV. The Countess of Linnox Case.

In this case it was said by Manwood Chief Baron, that whereas the Cistercians, &c. had a privilege, that they should not pay tithes for their lands, quas propriis manibus excolant, but their fermors should pay tithes: and now by the statute of 31 H. 8. they are dissolved, that the Queen and her fermors should be discharged of such tithes as the spiritual persons were: for the Queen cannot excolere; ergo, her fermors shall be discharged: and so long as the Queen hath the freehold, her fermors shall have such privilege, although she leaseth for years, or at will: but if the Queen granteth over the reversion, then the fermors shall pay tithes.

XCVI. GOLDING'S CASE.

In an action upon the case against Gloding, the case was; a feme sole, being tenant for life by devise of lands, leased the same for years, to begin after her death; and afterwards made another lease, 18 Octob. for twenty one years to the same lessee, to begin at Michaelmas before; and the pleading was, virtute cujus quidem dimissionis: and the lessee entred Crast. Sanct. Mich. which was before the making of the lease: and upon the grant of these two leases, the consideration of assumpsit was grounded in an action of the case thereupon, and six hundred pounds damages given: and now this was moved in arrest of judgment.

Coke for the plaintiff; Where two considerations are laid down in the declaration, although that the one be void, yet if the other be sufficient, the action upon the assumpsit lieth, and damages shall be taken accordingly. And the grant upon the assumpsit was, that both the leases should be assigned to the defendant; and the plaintiff hath declared accordingly, although that one of the leases be void; and the agreement was, that the plaintiff should assign totum statum, titulum, & interesse suum quæ habet in, &c. It appears here in the pleading, that the lease was made the eighteenth of October, and the lessee did enter, and was thereof possessed, Crast. Mich. which was before, and so the lessee then entering was a disseisor, but by Coke, the same is not a disseisin, although that the lessee entreth before the lease made; for there was a communication of a lease, although the lease was not made before the eighteenth of October; and peradventure it was by assent of the lessor, in which case it cannot be a disseisin: but be it a disseisin, yet in as much as he hath assigned all his interest, quod ipse tunc habuit, the consideration is answered; and he hath also delivered both the indentures of demise, and hath granted all that which he might grant; be such grant void or good, it is good consideration enough as to us.

Egerton, solicitor, contrary; In every action upon the case upon a promise, there are three things considerable, consideration, promise and breach of promise; as to the consideration in our case, the grant of the lease, which is to begin after the death of the lessor, is merely void: and as to the second consideration, it appeareth, that the lessor at the time of the making of the [72] lease had but a right, for he was disseised; for he who was afterwards the lessee entred before he had any lease made unto him; and so here is not any consideration to ground the assumpsit upon: but admit that there be a consideration, yet the action doth not lie: for 19 Eliz. a difference was taken by the justices, (scil.) when in the declaration in an action upon the case, two or more considerations are laid, and are not collateral, but pursuant: as if I owe you an hundred pounds, and I say, that in consideration that I owe you 100l. and in consideration that you shall give me 10l. I promise to pay unto you the said hundred pounds which I owe you: if you bring an action upon the case against me for the hundred pounds, and lay in your declaration both considerations, although you do not pay me the ten pounds, yet the action lieth: but where the considerations are not pursuant, but meerly collateral, and do not depend the one upon the other, as in consideration that you are of my councel, and you shall ride with me to York, I promise to give to you an hundred pounds; there both considerations ought to be performed, or otherwise the action doth not lie: and so here in the principal case; the considerations being collateral, they both ought to be performed. Afterwards, upon consideration had of the case by the Court, judgment was given for the plaintiff: and it was said by Coke, that there was not any disseisin in the case, but he who entred was tenant at sufferance, by reason of the precedent communication.

XCVII. CURTISE AND COTTEL'S CASE.

The case was this, that one Bonham was seised of a manor, within which there were divers customary lands demisable by copy for three lives: the lord of the manor did demise some of those lands to three sisters, habendum to them for their lives successive, for the fine of 100l. by them paid; and they being seised accordingly, the eldest sister, who was tenant in possession, took to husband one Chapman; after which the said lord by indenture leased the same land to the eldest sister, the remainder to the husband, the remainder to the second sister, and no agreement was made thereunto by the second sister by deed, before or after the making of the indenture; but four days after the lease made she agreed to it in the country, and then took to husband Curtise, and they entred, claiming the said land, upon which entry the action was brought: the point was, that when the lease by indenture was made to the eldest sister, at which time no agreement was made by the second sister who was in remainder; yet when after she agreed, if by that agreement her right to the copihold were extinct, or not? so as the interest of the eldest sister being gone by the acceptance of the estate by the indenture, the second sister might come and claim her customary interest, as it were paramount the interest of the eldest sister, which she claimed by the indenture.

Glanvil, The customary interest of the eldest sister is extinct upon this matter, by reason of her agreement to it afterwards. Where an estate is given to one by a lawfull act, it shall be adjudged in the party before agreement, until it be disagreed unto; and if the party do once agree, he cannot afterwards disagree unto it. If an estate be lawfully made to a copyholder but for years, his whole interest in the copyhold is determined: and that a freehold cannot be waived in pais, but onely [73] by matter of record: see 13 R. 2. Joynt-tenants 13. A charter of feoffment was made to four, and seisin was delivered to three of them in the name of them all; and afterwards the fourth feoffee came and saw the deed, and said, that she would not have any thing in the lands, but altogether disagree unto it; and it was held, that that disagreement by word in pais did not devest the freehold out of her: but when the party doth disagree in a court of record, there the freehold is out of the party ab initio; and if he once agree, he shall not disagree afterwards. See Littl. Sect. 648. Tenant in tail enfeoffeth his son and heir apparent, and another, and livery and seisin is made to the other, according to the charter of feoffment, in the name of the son also, the son not knowing of it, nor disagreeing to the feoffment; the other feoffee dieth, the son neither occupies the lands nor takes the profits of them during the life of his father; the father dieth, the same is a remitter to the son, because the freehold is cast upon him, and there is no default in him, and therefore he is remitted: but upon an illegal act is otherwise; for if A. disseise B. to the use of C. in such case nothing is in C. before an express agreement, for the disseisin was an unlawfull act. And in this case at bar, it doth not appear that the eldest sister is dead, and therefore the right of the second sister cannot now come in question.

Shute, Justice, If the second sister, at the time of the making of the said indenture, had agreed unto it, then it had been a full extinguishment, but by an agreement afterwards it is not good.

Gawdy, Justice, The remainder is in consideration of the law; and the estate of the first sister is not so determined, that any can take advantage of it; for the lord, against this lease by deed indented, cannot enter, or claim any thing: and the second sister, although she hath not agreed, yet she cannot enter during the life of her elder sister, for her remainder takes effect in possession after the death of her said sister. But if any should take advantage of it, it should be the lord, if his deed indented did not stand against him. And afterwards judgment was given against the younger sister.

Clench, Justice, was of another opinion, viz. that the entry of the younger sister, notwithstanding that her elder sister was alive, was lawfull: quære of that.

XCVIII. LAWSON AND HARE'S CASE.

A replevin by Lawson against Hare, who avowed for a leet fee; and shewed how that he, and all those whose estate he hath in the hundred of C. have used to hold a leet, once every year; and that at each time, when such leet hath been holden, the inhabitants within the said leet have used to pay to the lord of the leet 16d. for a leet fee; and that the lords of the said leet have used to distrain for the same: and sheweth farther, that 5 Julii 26 Eliz. he held there a leet, &c. The plaintiff replied, absque hoc, that they had used to distrain; and issue being joyned, it was found for the defendant. It was moved in arrest of judgment, because, that the defendant had entitled himself to a leet, by an estate in the hundred, and did not shew a deed of it, which was said, he ought to have done; as is 11 H. 4. 48. And of such opinion was Anderson and Windham, Justices. Periam and Rhodes Justices, contrary, as this case is, and that the avowant need not shew a deed, but if the hundred it self had been in question, then a deed ought to have been shewed; but here the avowant entitles himself to one thing, (scil.) a leet, and a leet fee, by reason of the hundred, and it is sufficient for him to say, that he is seised of the hundred, &c. although it be by disseisin: for if he hath possession of the hundred, be it jure, vel injuria, he shall have also all things incident thereunto, for the possession of the hundred draws to him the leet, and the leet, the leet fee. But admit in this case a deed ought to be shewed, we are to see if the same be helped by the Statute of Jeofailes, which extends to defaults in form in writs, original or judicial counts, declarations, plaints, bills, &c. 18 Eliz. cap. 14. and such defects are thereby helped. And by Anderson, Although that the avowant be quasi an actor, yet in rei veritate, he is defendant; for although that he is to have retorn of the cattel, if it be found for him, yet he who sueth the replevin is the plaintiff, and if the defendant will justifie the distress, and not avow, he is meerly defendant, and not a plaintiff, or actor, no more than in a præcipe quod reddat, the tenant voucheth and recovereth in value, he cannot be said plaintiff, or defendant, and the avowant cannot be nonsuit, as the plaintiff. But Windham and Periam were of a contrary opinion; for avowry is in lieu of a declaration, and the plea of the plaintiff to the avowry, is not called a replication, but a bar to the avowry. But admit the avowry be within the statute, then if the Statute of Jeofailes there extend to help it; and Anderson conceived that it did: but the plaintiff might have demurred upon the avowry for the not shewing the deed, and judgment should have been given for him; but when he hath traversed, and the issue found against him, now it shall be intended, that avowant hath a deed, although he hath not shewed the same. Another exception was taken, because it is said in the avowry, that the said leet was holden, 5 Julii, and then it was void: for the Statute of Magna Charta, cap. 35. requires, that leets be holden within one month after Michaelmas and Easter; but that exception was not allowed: for by Anderson, Windham and Rhodes, by force of the prescription, the lord might hold his leet what day he pleased, and that his liberty is not restrained by the statute; and such is the common experience: for the same statute provides for it, (scil.) quod quilibet habeat libertates suas quas habuit, & habere consuevit tempore regis H. avi nostri, vel quas postea perquisiret: and by Rhodes, the said statute doth not extend but to the sheriffs towns, and not to other leets, which see Br. Leets, 23. [75] upon the case of 8 H. 7. 1. which was affirmed by him to be good law; contrary by Periam, but he granted, that if a leet hath used to be holden at one day certain, other than that which is limited by the said statute, the same may so continue, notwithstanding the statute, for such liberty is saved by the statute. And by Anderson and Rhodes; If the King grant to one a leet to hold semel quolibet anno, and doth not say, ad libitum of the grantee, yet the grant is good, and the grantee may hold it at what day he will.

13 Eliz. In the Exchequer Chamber. Error.

C. Goore and others against Dawbeny.

A writ of error was brought in the Exchequer Chamber by Goore and Goore, Swinnerton and Tedcastel, against Dawbeny, of a judgement given against them in the Court of Exchequer, in an action upon the case, in the nature of a conspiracy brought by Dawbeny, &c. who declared, that Goore and Goore, were joint merchants of a stock of many wares, in moyeties transported in Barbary, and Swinnerton and Tedcastel were their factors, and Dawbeny and the Goores were also joint merchants intire of merchandizes transported, &c. And the said Swinnerton and Tedcastel were their factors therein; and that was to merchandize for two years; and shewed farther, that the said plaintiffs did conspire against the said Dawbeny (see the declaration in the number roll, for I could not take it in brief.) Coke of councill with the plaintiff assigned the errors; because Dawbeny in his declaration hath declared, that they were joint merchants (scil.) the now plaintiffs, and have conspired against him, and hath not shewed the place where they were joint merchants, or where they were made joint merchants, and that is issuable, although it be not the principal thing in the declaration; for that is the fraud: as where debt is brought for rent reserved upon a lease for years the principal matter is the debt, and the principal issue is nihil debet; yet the demise is issuable, and non dimisit is a good plea: and here the defendant by the plea of not guilty, hath not lost the advantage of exception aforesaid. And he cited a great case lately adjudged betwixt Stansam and Matthew, in an action upon the case, conceived upon the trover of a bond and the conversion of it to his use; the defendant pleaded, not guilty, and it was found against him; and because in the declaration there was not any place of the conversion, judgment was stayed. Here in the declaration are two things, first, the conspiracy, secondly, the execution of it, for the one without the other will not maintain the action, but here the conspiracy is not pursued, nor executed according to that which is laid to be conspired. The conspiracy is laid, that the factor upon his account demanded 4000l. of Barbary money, per nomen bona & denariorum summas, and the execution is laid, that he demanded in allowance of wares delivered to Isaac Abess; and he took a general rule, that a commander shall never be charged, but where his commandment is strictly and precisely pursued. Barbary money is included in this word bona, for it is not current in England: see as to the pursuing of the commandment; Sanders and Archer's case, Plow. 18 Eliz. 437. And in our case, he not onely puts the thing, but also the person, for the conspiracy is that he demanded allowance for goods delivered to Isaac, and his four sons, for Isaac. In the one case it is pretended, that Isaac and four sons are debtors; and in the other case Isaac onely: also here Dawbeny hath allowed and accepted the accompt of the factors, against which he cannot have this action; for it is [76] ignorantia crassa, idque facti, quæ non excusat: also upon such incertain demand as is laid in the declaration, Dawbeny was not holden to make allowance: i. for so much wares upon a certain bargain made with Isaac; and that was not a lawfull demand, and upon such uncertain demand, he was not bound to make allowance; et hoc modo est ignorantia juris quæ non excusat omnino. Also here Swinnerton onely accompts and demands allowances, and Swinnerton onely was not factor, but also Tedcastle, and therefore Dawbeny was not bounden to allow that accompt to Swinnerton, no more than to a mere stranger: and also Dawbeny alone was not to make allowance, for the two factors were accomptable to him, and to Goores also. And so allowance by one of them to whom they are accomptable, is not good. One executor (where the power is committed to two) sells the land, the sale is void, and two joint attorneys, &c. one onely can doe nothing: and here in this declaration, it is many times alledged, that they were conjunctim mercatores, conjunctim factores; but I confess, that one joint factor, with the express consent of his companion, may accompt alone; and so of the other, one may by express consent take an accompt onely. One factor is no factor where there are many joint factors; and in our case, the two Goores and Dawbeny saw the accompt, but Dawbeny onely allowed of it, and that is not good: as if two arbitrators are, and one onely makes the award, although both hear the matter. 14 E. 3. Fitz. Acc. 72. That the one accomptant cannot accompt without his companion; but there Parn saith, that it had been adjudged, 6 E. 3. that the one might accompt without the other: see 41 E. 3. 3. & 9. Tamworth's case. Tanfield contrary: As to the first error, it is but conveyance and matter of inducement to the fraud and conspiracy, which is the principal point of the action; and therefore needeth not to be so precisely alledged: and also by the general issue, they have passed the advantage of it, and all the special matter of the count is contained in the general issue; for not guilty, goes to all, and includes the whole. Also upon the matter, the jury hath found that they were joint merchants; and although they were joint factors, and the one onely hath accompted, yet the same accompt is good enough, for it was made with the consent of the other, as appeareth by the declaration. Conspiraverunt, & agreaverunt, that Swinnerton in his accompt, peteret allowance, &c. so there was consent to take the accompt, &c. and 6. E. 3. it is adjudged ut supra. And that the one joint factor may accompt without his companion, is the law of merchants; for factors are oftentimes dispersed, so as they cannot be both present at their accompts, and so it hath been heretofore allowed in the King's Bench: and as to that that Dawbeny onely hath given allowance to this accompt, the same is good enough: if I promise to two to doe any act, the one of them may discharge me from it, and that by word, for it is but a personal thing: two joint-tenants of a manor grant the stewardship thereof to one, and 20l. per ann. for the exercise of it; if the one discharge him, it is a good discharge as to the service, but yet he shall have his fee: if the lord of the manor grant the stewardship thereof to another, taking 10l. per ann. of the issues and profits of his court there for his fee: and afterwards the lord dischargeth the steward, the same is void; for it is a disadvantage to the steward, for he cannot have his fee, if no courts be holden; but if the fee be limited to issue out of lands, there such discharge is good; for there the steward shall have his fee although that no courts be holden there, see 18 E. 4. 8. to that purpose. Egerton, solicitor, to the contrary, although (as hath been objected) the matter of joint merchant be but matter of inducement, it is nothwithstanding material, and without it the action will not lie: in debt, upon arbitrament, the plaintiff in his declaration, ought to shew the submission; and although the defendant pleadeth, nihil debet, yet if the [77] place of the submission be not shewed in the declaration, all is naught; for although that it be but inducement, yet it is a material inducement; for if no submission, no award, and if no award, no debt, and then no cause of action. The case of 14 E. 3. cited before, there the accomptants by their deed, or jointly, or severally accomptable at the pleasure of him to whom, &c. Also, because it is set forth in the declaration, that they were joint merchants of wares, adventured into Barbary, for the space of two years; the factor in praying of allowance, ought to shew what wares were adventured into Barbary within the said two years. Conspiracy is a thing odious, and ought to be directly proved; and it is not reason, that that which he himself hath once allowed, he himself shall after defeat it, as here he attempts. And he relied much upon the variance between the conspiracy and the execution of it moved before by Coke, where by the conspiracy, Isaac is made the debtor, with his four sons; and in the execution, Isaac is made the onely debtor, and to that point, he vouched the case, 3 & 4 Ph. & Ma. betwixt Brown and Nevil, that an award was to be performed (scil.) an award made between Joh. Brown, for, and in the behalf of John Moore on the one part, and R. Nevil on the other part; and did not shew that Moore made the submission, and for that cause it was holden naught: for Moore was a principal person in the award, and Brown but a servant, &c. So in our case for Isaac. Popham, Attorney General, in an action upon the case, The plaintiff declares, quod cum the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in 20l. he promised to pay to the plaintiff 20l. Here it needs not, that the plaintiff shew in his declaration, the place or time in which the defendant became his debtor, for the promise is the principal matter, and the other matter is but inducement: so if A. in consideration that I at his request have married his daughter, promised to pay to me 100l. In an action upon the case brought by me upon this promise, it is not necessary that I shew the place where I married his daughter. In all personal things, where two are chargeable to two, the one may satisfie it, and one may accept of satisfaction, and bind his companion, and yet the one cannot have an action without his companion, nor both onely against one, 18 E. 4. 3. Two joint-tenants of a manor have one bailiff of it, the one of them assigns auditors to the bailiff, who accompts, and is found in arrearages, the same is a good accompt, and it is holden there, that both, &c. may have debt upon the arrearages of the accompt taken by the manner. And if one may assign auditors, he may also take accompt, and discharge the accomptant against his companion. And he conceived, that this allowance of the accompt by Dawbeny, did not exclude him of his actions, but rather gave him cause of action, nam læsus non esset, nisi credidisset; and the bailiff of my husbandry, who bargains and sells for me, if upon his accompt to me, he alledgeth and surmiseth, that he hath sold my cattel to one who is decayed, and upon that surmise I allow his accompt; afterwards, re comperta, I shall have an action of deceit: and in this very case at the bar, it was holden in the King's Bench, that Dawbeny, notwithstanding his allowance of this false accompt, should have his action, &c. Note that afterwards, viz. Trin. 32 Eliz. the judgment given for Dawbeny was reversed.

CI. Sir William Waller's Case.

In this case it was moved by Winter, that if one hath judgment in debt, and upon that, within the year and day, sues a capias ad satisfaciendum, although that he doth not prosecute the same by the space [78] of two or three years, yet when he pleaseth he may proceed thereupon, and he shall not be put to a scire facias; for a writ of execution once sued forth, shall be a continual claim, and the party shall never be put to a scire facias; and of such opinion was Philips.

Manwood, I grant, that if one hath sued forth a writ of execution, and that be continued by vicecomes non misit breve, for two or three years, yet the plaintiff may proceed thereupon, and shall not be put to a scire facias: but if such writ be sued forth, and not continued, but discontinued by a year and a day, he shall be put to a scire facias, for it is negligence of the plaintiff of not continuing of it, which within the year and day he might without order of the Court, but after the year not by any order of the Court, &c.

CII. Griffin's Case.

It was holden in this case, that if lessee for years of a messuage grants totum messuagium suum, the grantee hath but at will, but if he grant all his interest and estate in such a messuage, then the whole lease passeth: and so it was said to have been lately adjudged in the case of one Winnibank in the King's Bench.

CIII. SECKFORD AND WOLVERSTON'S CASE.

The plaintiff being bailiff of the liberty of Esheld, in the county of Suffolk, the sheriff of the said county directed a warrant unto him to arrest the defendant upon a latitat retornable in the King's Bench; by force of which the defendant being arrested, became bound in the obligation upon which the action is brought; the condition of which is, that if the defendant personally appear in the King's Bench at Westminster, and there to answer, &c. It was moved, that the obligation was void by the statute of 23 H. 6. For the form which the said statute prescribes for obligations to be taken by the sheriff, is according to these words, Appear at the day contained in the bill, writ or warrant, and in such place, &c. and that all bonds taken in other form shall be void. As to the words of surplusage [personally] the justices were of opinion, that the obligation was well enough, notwithstanding that because, as the case is, the appearance of the defendant ought to be in person upon a latitat, for the defendant is supposed to be in custodia mariscal. And so it hath been adjudged in the Common Pleas, where the appearance of the party arrested is de jure personal, &c. contrary where personal appearance is not requisite. As to the other matter [and there to answer] Wray put a difference, where the words are [there to answer] that the bond is well enough, for it is no more in effect, but that he shall appear eo animo ut respondeat. But if the words had been [appear and answer] the same is a void condition, for it may be that the plaintiff will never declare against him: but Gawdy and Ayliff, Justices, were of a contrary opinion, and that the bond was void by reason of the words aforesaid: but the Court would not give judgment against the plaintiff, but ex gratia curiæ suffered the plaintiff to discontinue his action.

CIV. PARTRIDG AND POOL'S CASE.

In an action of trespass by Partridg against Pool, the plaintiff did suppose the battery at D. in the county of Midd. The defendant justified, by reason of an assault at S. in the county of Glocester, absque hoc that he beat the plaintiff at D. in the county of Midd. upon which traverse the plaintiff did demur in law. It was argued by Popham, Attorny-General, that the traverse of the county is good; and he put the case 21 H. 6. 8, and 9. In trespass of battery at D. in the county of York, the defendant doth justifie by an assault at London, in such a place in such a parish, and the hurt which, &c. absque hoc. that he was guilty de aliqua transgressione in com. ebor. upon which issued a venire facias into Yorkshire, and as the book is, the traverse to the county was taken with great deliberation, &c. prout, &c. See also 22 E. 4. 39. And the traverse de jure ought to be allowed, for the jury of Midd. are not bounden to find the assault in the county of Glocester: see 2 Ma. Br. Jurors 50. In actions upon transitory matters, although they be laid in foreign counties, yet the jurors, if they will, may give their verdict, but they are not bounden to it.

Egerton, Solicitor, contrary; and he put a difference, where the justification is local, and where transitory: as in false imprisonment the defendant justifies, as sheriff, the taking of the plaintiff by virtue of a capias directed to him at D. within the county of G. where the plaintiff declares of an imprisonment in another county, there the traverse of the county is good; for the defendant could not take the plaintiff by force of the said process in any other county, than where he himself is sheriff, and so the justification is local: 11 H. 4. 157. But in our case the matter of the justification is merely transitory. And at last, after many motions, it was adjudged, that in the principal case the county was not traversable; and so judgment was given for the plaintiff; Gawdy, Justice, being of a contrary opinion: but by Wray clearly, the jurors are bounden, upon pain of attaint, to take notice of such a transitory thing done in another county: which see 2 Ma. Br. Attaint 134. 9 H. 6. 63.

CV. DAW'S AND MOLLINS'S CASE.

In an attachment upon a prohibition by Daws against Mollins, for that the defendant traxit querent. in curiam Christian. for tithes of great trees, sub nomine sylvæ ceduæ: the defendant pleaded, that the loppings for the tithes of which he sued, were the loppings of trees, called asp, beech and oak, de stipitibus prius succisis crescentes: and also for hornbeams, maples, hazels, &c. The plaintiff, as to the asp, oak, and beech, did demur in law; and as to the residue, he pleaded, that with part he mended the hedges, and the rest being de minimo valore, were bound up with the boughs of the oak, &c. into faggots; upon which the defendant did demur in law. It was argued by Egerton, Solicitor, on the part of the plaintiff; and he held, that a wood of common right ought not to pay tithes, not because the soil in which it groweth yields other tithes of the herbage, but because non renovantur in annum; and therefore at this day no consultation shall be granted for quarry, stone and coals: but after [80] came the Statute of Sarum (vide F. N. B. 51. h.) by which it was agreed, coram concilio Regis in Parliamento apud Sarum, quod consultationes fieri debeant de sylva cedua, eo non obstante quod non renovantur per annum: and see to that purpose the Register 49. Et ulterius, super hoc facta fuit quædam consultatio pro abbate de Notley de sylva cedua: which statute was afterwards expounded by the statute of 45 E. 3. cap. 3. not to extend to great wood of the growth viginti annorum, vel amplius, but onely to such wood which is called sylva cedua. And at last, after many motions, it was ruled, that because the defendant had not shewed, that the trees, (scil.) oak, ash, and beech, were not before cut within twenty years before the last succision, of which the tithes are now demanded, tithes shall not thereof now be paid. And as to the other point, that the hornbeams sallows, &c. did grow sparsim amongst the oaks, and the owner felled the whole wood, and caused them to be promiscuously cut into faggots, and bound up in faggots together, and the most part of every faggot was oak, and the residue was of little value, so as the severance of the sallows, &c. from the oak, &c. would not quit the charge; in such case tithe shall not be paid: but of the other part, if the most part of the wood be sallows, &c. and here and there sparsim groweth an oak, &c. and the owner cuts down all the wood, and makes faggots as before, tithes in such case shall be paid of them.

CVI. THE QUEEN AND LORD LUMLEY'S CASE.

Sand's Case.

Betwixt the Queen and the Lord Lumley, it was moved in the Exchequer; Queen Mary seised of the rectory of D. granted advocationem Ecclesiæ de D. If now by this grant the advowson passeth as now disappendant, or the rectory it self passeth as appropriate; or nothing at all passeth? was the question. And by Manwood, Chief Baron, the advowson doth not pass, but doth remain appropriate; as it was before; for the church, as it was appropriate by a judicial act, so without such an act it cannot be disappropriate: and he said, that by the grant of the advowson, the rectory did not pass; for by the appropriation the advowson is gone, and is not in esse, and so by consequence cannot be granted; and it is not within the statute of 4 and 5 Ph. and Ma. of confirmation of grants of the King; for the said statute doth onely help misrecital, misnaming, mistaking, &c. but here there is no such thing in rerum natura, as the patentee pretendeth to be passed by the patent: and if it were in the case of a subject, nothing would pass; as it was adjudged in one Sand's case, 11 Eliz. And he said, that at this day a parsonage may be disappropriated, but that ought to be by a judicial act, as by presentment, and not by any other private act of the proprietor: and so he said, a church was disappropriated by the Lord Dyer, by presentment, which of late he made unto it.

A replevin was brought by Herring against Badlock, who avowed for damage-feasant, and shewed, that the Lady Jerningham was seised of such a manor, whereof the place where, &c. and leased the same to the defendant for years, &c. The plaintiff said, that long [81] time before King Henry the Eighth was seised of the said manor, and that the place where, &c. is parcel of the said manor demised and demiseable by copy, &c. And that the said King, by such a one his steward, demised and granted the said parcel unto the ancestor of the plaintiff, whose heir he is, by copy in fee, &c. and upon that there was a demurrer, because that by that bar to the avowry the lease set forth in the avowry is not answered, for the plaintiff in the bar unto the avowry ought to have concluded; and so was he seised by the custome, until the avowant prætextu of the said term for years entred: and so it was adjudged.

CVIII. MOOR AND SIR JOHN SAVAGE'S CASE.

In an action upon the case by Moor against Sir John Savage and his wife, for that the said lady had reported, that Moor was a lying knave, and a perjured knave; the defendant justified, that where an estate for life absolute was devised to the said lady by her former husband, the plaintiff had deposed, that the said land was devised to the said lady, if she kept her self sole: to which the plaintiff replicando said, of his own wrong without such cause: Egerton, Solicitor, did demur upon it; for he said, The plea goeth to all the justification before; for where part of a plea, (scil.) the justification is matter of fact, and part is matter of record, there, of his own wrong, &c. is no good plea, but there ought to be a special traverse, absque hoc, that he so deposed, or absque hoc, that the devise was absolute: and this plea here, of his own wrong, &c. goes to matters in fact onely, and such which lie in the notice of the jury: see 5 H. 7. 6. Although that divers matters are alledged in the Bar, yet this plea, of his own wrong without such cause, &c. extends to all, where no matter of record is alledged in the plea: as in false imprisonment, a capias is directed to the sheriff, being defendant, to arrest the plaintiff, in such case such general plea is not good; but there he may plead nul tiel record: see also 13 H. 7. 3. 21. H. 6. 5. And here a principal matter in the justification is matter of record, and therefore such a plea here is not good. Altham contrary, If the principal matter in such justification be matter of record, then such a plea is not sufficient; but if the matter of record be but inducement, then the plea is good enough: and he vouched 45 E. 3. 7. In trespass the defendant saith, that he is forester of the said forest of B. and at a swanmoot it was presented by the foresters, verderors, regardors, and agistors, that the plaintiff had taken deer in the said forest, upon which the defendant came to the plaintiff, and prayed him to find pledges to answer before justices in eyre, &c. and he refused so to do, for which cause he kept the plaintiff until he made agreement, and demanded judgment, if any wrong, &c. and the plaintiff replicando said, of his own wrong, &c. and the issue was accepted of by the Court; yet he said the presentment in the swanmoot was not matter of record, but onely inducement, and the request to find sureties, which he would not, for which cause he took and imprisoned him, the same was the principal matter, and but matter in fact; and therefore he said, that the plea was good; and he said, that in this case the oath is not on record. And Coke said, that in the cases put by Altham, of his own wrong without such cause, is a good plea, with an absque hoc unto the matter of record: see the Book of Entries 320. see 30 H. 8. Action upon the Case 104. without that, that he swore modo & forma: it was adjourned.

CIX. FIRRELL AND THE HUNDRED OF B.'S CASE.

In an action upon the Statute of Hue and Cry by Firrell against the hundred of B. the defendants pleaded, not guilty, and in evidence, the plaintiff, to prove that he was robbed, as he had declared, offered to the jury his oath, in making good his declaration, which Anderson and Periam Justices, utterly refused. But Windham affirmed, that such an oath had been accepted in the case of one Harrinton, where the plaintiff could not have other evidence to prove his cause, in respect of secrecy; for those who have occasion to travel about their business, will not acquaint others what money, or other things they have with them in their journies: and we see, that in some causes, the law doth admit the oath of the party in his own cause; as in debt, the defendant shall wage his law: Periam, That's an ancient law, but we will not make new presidents, for if such oath be accepted in this case, by the same reason in all cases where is secrecy, and no external proof, upon which would follow great inconveniences: and although such an oath hath been before accepted of, and allowed here, yet the same doth not move us; and we see no reason to multiply such presidents. The declaration is, that the plaintiff was robbed of 10l. de denariis ipsius querentis; and upon the evidence it appeareth, that the plaintiff was the receiver of the Lady Rich, and had received the said money for the use of the said lady, and exception was taken to it by Shuttleworth, but it was not allowed; for the plaintiff is accomptable to the Lady Rich the said money. And it was agreed, that if he who was robbed, after he hath made hue and cry, doth not farther follow the thieves, yet his action doth remain.

CX. LARGE'S CASE.

The case was, A. seised of lands in fee, devised the lands to his wife, until William his son should come to the age of 22 years, and then the remainder of part of the lands, to his two sons, A. and John, the remainder of other part of his lands, to two others of his said sons, upon condition, that if any of his said sons before William should come to the age of 22 years, shall go about to make any sale of any part, &c. he shall for ever lose the lands, and the same shall remain over, &c. And before his said son William came to the age of 22 years, one of the other sons leased that which to him belonged, for 60 years, and so from 60 years to 60 years, until 240 years ended, &c. Bois, A. and J. are joynt-tenants of the remainder, and he said, that the opinion of Audley, Lord Chancellor of England, is not law, (scil.) where a man deviseth lands to two, and to their heirs, they are not joynt-tenants, as to the survivor, but if one of them dieth, the survivor shall not have the whole, but the heir of his that dieth shall have the moyety: see 30 H. 8. Br. Devise 29. And he said, that this lease, although it be for so many years; is not a sale intended within the will, and so is not a joynture. 46 E. 3. One was bounden, that he should not alien certain lands, and the obligor did thereof enfeoff his son and heir apparent, the same was held, to be no alienation within the condition of the obligation: of the other side it was argued, the remainder doth [83] not vest presently; for it is incertain, if it shall vest at all; for if William dieth before he cometh to the age of 22 years, it was conceived by him, that the remainder shall never vest, for the words of the will are, then the lands shall remain, &c. 34 E. 3. Formedon 36. Land is devised to A. for life, and if he be disturbed by the heir of the devisor, that then the land shall remain to D. Here D. hath not any remainder, before that A. be disturbed; it was farther argued, that here is a good condition, and that the devisee is not utterly restrained from sale, but onely untill a certain time, (scil.) to the age of William of 22 years. And it was said, that this lease is a covenous lease, being made for 240 years, without any rent reserved: as such a lease made for 100 years, or 200 years, is mortmain, as well as if it had been an express feoffment, or alienation. But it was said by some, that here is not any sale at all, nor any lease; for the lessor himself hath not any thing in the land demised: as if a man disseiseth a feme sole, and leaseth the lands, and afterwards marrieth the disseisie, he shall avoid his own lease, 5 E. 3. One was bound that he should not alien such a manor, the obligor alieneth one acre, parcell of it, the obligation is forfeit, see 29 H. 8. Br. Mortgage 39. A. leaseth to a religious house for 100 years, and so from 100 years to 100 years, untill 800 hundred years be encurred, the same is mortmain, vide stat. 7 E. 1. colore termini emere, vel vendere. And in the principal case, if the devisee had entred into a statute to the value of the land leased, by the intent of the will, the same had been a sale; and such was the opinion of the whole Court: and by the Court, the word in perpetuum, shall not be referred to the words precedent, but unto the words following; (scil.) in perpetuum perdat the lands. And if a custome be in the case that the infant of the age of 15 years may sell his lands; if he make a lease, the same is not warranted by the custome: and afterwards it was adjudged by the whole Court, that the lease made as before, was a sale within the intent of the will of the devisor.

CXI. Brooke's Case.

Sir Thomas Holcroft's Case.

Appeal of burglary was brought against Brooke, who was found guilty; and before judgment given, the plaintiff died, and now Egerton moved that judgment should be given for the Queen upon that verdict, or at least that the declaration in the appeal should be in lieu of an indictment, and that the appealee be thereupon arraigned and put to answer the same. For if the appellant had been nonsuit, or released, the defendant should be arraigned at the suit of the Queen. Coke, God hath now by the death of the party, delivered the defendant: and it is not like, where the plaintiff releaseth, for there it is the default of the act of the party, but here it is the act of God; and he held it for a rule, that where auterfoits acquit is a good plea, there also auterfoits convict shall be a good plea: and it was holden in Sir Tho. Holcroft's case, that where the party is convicted at the suit of the Queen, there the appeal doth not afterwards lie. Wray, If the appellant dieth before verdict, the defendant shall be arraigned at the suit of the King; but if his life hath been once in jeopardy by verdict, he conceived, that it shall not again be drawn into danger; and some were of opinion that the defendant should be arraigned at the suit of the Queen upon the whole record, and plead auterfoits acquit, and that they said was the surest way.

CXII. Ognel and Paston's Case.

Clement Paston was defendant in an action of debt brought against him by George Ognel, upon an escape; and the case was this: Francis Woodhouse was bound in a recognizance to the said Ognel; whereupon Ognel sued forth a scire facias, and upon two nihils retorned, had judgment, and upon that a levari facias, and then a capias ad satisfaciendum, upon which Paston the defendant, as Sheriff of Norfolk, to whom the capias was directed, took the party, and afterwards suffered him to escape. The defendant pleaded, that before the said capias, the said Francis Woodhouse was committed to him, and in his ward continued for felony; and after the capias was endicted thereof, and arraigned, and found guilty, after which he escaped; and all this was found by special verdict: first it was argued, if upon a recognizance acknowledged in the Chancery an action lieth; and it was said by Bois, that it doth not lie in the mouth of the sheriff to say, that this capias doth not lie in the case: as if a justice of peace maketh a warrant to a constable, which warrant is not good in law, yet the constable is not to examine that, or to dispute the validity of it, 5 H. 7. And a capias hath lain in such case, and so it hath been the course for the space of 200 years: and he said, that although Francis Woodhouse was convict of felony, yet the same is not any discharge of the execution, as 35 H. 6. 8. although the husband be attainted of felony, yet he is not so dead in law, but if the King pardon him afterwards, he shall be restored, and his wife shall have dower; and if he be killed, his wife shall have an appeal: 12 H. 4. My villain is attainted, the same is no discharge of his villainage as to me; but if the King pardon him after, he shall be my villain, 6 E. 4. 4. One is in execution pro fine Regis, and afterwards is outlawed for felony, and hath his charter of pardon for the felony yet he remains in execution for the interest of the party, for there the execution is not extinct, but onely suspended. Godfrey contrary, Capias doth not lie upon a recognizance; but if debt be brought upon a recognizance, and the plaintiff recovereth, then a capias lieth; which see 14 Eliz. Dyer 306. Puttenham's case. 2 H. 4. 6. In dower the demandant recovereth her dower, and damages, and prayeth a capias ad satisfaciendum for the damages, but he could not have it; for no capias lieth upon the original; and to the same purpose, see 8 R. 2. Fitz. Execution, 164. 15 H. 7. 15. Capias pro fine lieth for the King, where no capias lieth in the original; but no capias ad satisfaciendum for the party; no capias in debt before the statute of 25 E. 3. and see the stat. of West. 2. cap. 18. cum debitum fuerit recognit. si in electione sequent. execut. habere per fiere facias, or elegit, therefore no other manner of execution; for the statute hath provided ut supra. And he said, that debt doth not lie upon a statute merchant, or staple: see 15 H. 7. 16. Another reason why a capias doth not lie in such case, is upon the words of the recognizance, et nisi fecerit, tunc concedit, quod summa prædict, levetur de bonis & catallis, terris & tenementis; ergo, not of the body. And when Woodhouse was convict of felony, the Queen had an interest in his body, and upon the pardon, the execution which was suspended during the conviction, is now revived: and he confessed the case of villainage; that during the attainder, the lord cannot meddle with the villain in the presence of the King, see 27 Ass. 49. and see 2 H. 4. 65. A. was condemned to B. in certain damages upon an action of trespass brought by B. against A. and A. was committed to Newgate, in execution upon a capias ad satisfaciend. and afterwards was arraigned of felony, and thereof attainted, [85] and committed to the ordinary, as clark, attaint. And the justices commanded the ordinary, that after that the prisoner had made his purgation, that he should not let him go at large, but should conduct him to the prison of Newgate again: and there is a quære made by the reporter, if after purgation the ordinary might suffer him to escape; and if he at whose suit he was condemned in trespass shall have debt against the ordinary for such escape. At another day the matter was argued by Coke for the plaintiff, at the common law, no land was subject to execution, i. no lands of the debtor himself; but yet the lands of the debtor being descended to his heir, should be chargeable to the obligee of the debtor, in which he and his heirs were bound, and that seemed to be very strange; and he conceived, that in that point, custome and usage had encroached upon the common law: the statute of West. 2. c. 13. gave elegit of the moyety of the lands; but yet there was no capias in debt before, 25 E. 3. cap. 17. before which statute, it was a general rule, that no capias lay at the common law, but where the King was to have a fine, see 35 H. 6. 6. At the common law capias did not lie but where the action is vi & armis, or that the King is to have a fine; for there was outlawry at the common law in such case. It will be objected, that the statute of 25 E. 3. which gave capias in debt, doth not extend to a scire facias upon recovery; that such process shall be made in a writ of debt, as is used in a writ of accompt; and here is no writ of debt, but a scire facias onely: if my debtor upon an obligation cometh without a writ, and confesseth the debt, I shall have a capias against him, and yet the same is not in a writ of debt: ergo, so in case of recognizance. Where a statute speaks precisely of a writ original; yet oftentimes by equity it shall extend to a scire facias, and other judicial process: as upon the statute of 25 E. 3. cap. 7. which enables the incumbent to plead in a quare impedit. It shall extend to a scire facias upon a recovery in a quare impedit, 46 E. 3. 13. And in our case a capias doth not lie by the letter, yet it lieth by equity: and he said, That statute which helps the subjects to get their debts and rights, are to be, and have been taken beneficially and liberally expounded, in advantage of the creditors. And see 48 E. 3. 14. where a scire facias is sued upon a recognizance, a capias doth not lie, but there it is holden, that in a scire facias, upon a recovery in debt, a capias lieth. And as to this capias, the sheriff is but the minister to the Court, and he is not to controll the Court, but to accept of the same, as the same is directed to him. It is a common learning in our law, that although the Court doth proceed inverso ordine, yet it shall not be utterly void, 36 H. 6. 34. Judgment given at the common law of lands within the five ports; for the five ports in times past, were parcel of the Crown: but of lands in Wales it was otherwise before the statute of 27 H. 8. by which Wales is united to the Crown. And although that the capias erronice emanavit, the same is but erroneous, and so voidable, and not void; for error may be as well assigned in the executione judicii, as in redditione judicii, 16 H. 7. 6. Outlawry without an original writ, is not void, but voidable, 2 R. 2. and the reason thereof is given, 11 H. 7. in Collins's case, but they are Judges of the cause, although that their proceedings be not according to law. But the sheriff, or any other stranger, shall not take advantage thereof, see 8 E. 4. 21 E. 4. and he cited to this purpose, 13 E. 3. Barre 253. The jailor shall not take advantage of undue proceedings of the auditors against an accomptant; and he insisted much upon the usage and precedents, and customs of Courts which are laws in such cases. And although that by strict and precise rule of law, a capias doth not lie naturally nor properly upon a recognizance, where the suit begins by scire facias, yet because the usual practice, and common experience hath allowed of it, and ad-[86]-mitted thereof from time to time: it is safer to suffer a mischief to one, than an inconvenience to many. And although the proverb, Exempla illustrant, non docent aut probant, may hold place in some arts and sciences, yet in our law, examples are good arguments, 11 E. 4. 3. In the King's Bench, a man in custodia marischalli, shall be put to answer a bill, but in the Common Bench, a man who is in the custody of the guardian of the Fleet, shall not be put to answer to a bill, and that is by reason of the several usages and customs in the said several Courts; so as custome and usage makes a law in such case. 39 H. 6. 30. in a writ of mesne, the Judges were clear of opinion, that the plaintiff ought not onely to shew the tenure betwixt him and the tenant peravail, but also betwixt the mesne and the lord paramount; yet when they had conferred with the prothonotaries, and saw the precedents of former times in such cases, they would not change the former courses, notwithstanding that their opinions were to the contrary: so 2 H. 7. 8. the venire facias is, 12 liberos & legales homines, and the sheriff retorned 24, and holden good, by reason of the usual course of the Court in such cases; and yet in our law, the number of persons is not material, which see in the Earl of Leicester's case, 15 H. 8. but custome dispenseth with the same.

Atkinson argued the contrary; At the common law for execution in debt within the year, a levari facias, and a fieri facias lay; after the year the party was put to a new original; and there was no capias at the common law, but in cases of contempt, force, or other notable misdemeanour, untill the statute of 25 E. 3. cap. 17. which gave it in debt, detinue, &c. And the statute of West. 2. cap. 18. gave fieri facias and elegit, but no capias was given upon a recognizance by any statute, and he relied much upon the book of 48 E. 3. before cited, the rule of which book is, that in a scire facias upon an original in which a capias lieth, the scire facias shall follow the nature of the original upon which it is founded; but where a capias ad respondendum doth not lie, there not a capias ad satisfaciendum, 34 H. 6. 451. In debt against executors, they appear and plead fully administred, and it is found against them, and judgment is given for the plaintiff, who after the year sueth a scire facias against the executors, and execution awarded by default, and thereupon a capias and exigent: and that matter being shewed to the Court, a supersedeas was granted, because the capias improvide & erronice emanavit: for no capias lieth against executors where they plead, &c. although it be found against them, ergo, neither a scire facias grounded thereupon. And although the stat. of 25 E. 3. gives a capias in debt, yet if debt be recovered in a justicies, a capias doth not lie by the equity of the said statute: and he relied very strongly upon Puttenham's case, 13 Eliz. cited before. And as to that which hath been said, that notwithstanding, that the capias was against the law, and so his imprisonment by colour thereof wrongfully, yet, de facto, he was in prison, and the sheriff hath taken him, and he shall excuse himself in a false imprisonment brought; yet I say, that this erroneous process appearing to you, you will not again err, by allowing these erroneous proceedings, but rather reform them: for the sheriff himself, who is a stranger to the record, cannot have error to reverse these proceedings, and so without remedy, unless the Court doth relieve him therein. And he said farther, that this capias, posito quod legitime emanavit, cannot fasten or work upon Francis Woodhouse, being imprisoned, and convict of felony; for being imprisoned, and restrained of his liberty, how can he (his restraint continuing) be de novo restrained before that he be enlarged and restored to his liberty? Nam omnis privatio præsupponit habitum; and ergo, imprisonment, liberty precedent. And so he concluded, that Francis Woodhouse, neque de facto, nor de jure, was in [87] prison: and that no capias lieth in the case, especially after the year, as here it was, and the party being convict and in prison, cannot be taken, &c. Manwood, If within the year a levari facias, or a fieri facias be sued forth and be retorned, not served, or that vicecomes non misit breve, and so the year passeth in the default of the sheriff; yet the plaintiff shall not be put to a scire facias. At another day it was argued by Tanfield for the defendant, that upon this scire facias no capias lieth, and then no lawfull execution, and then no escape. Where there is no capias in the original, there is no capias in the execution, but here in our case, there is not any original, because it is a scire facias upon a recovery, ergo, no capias can be where there is not any original. As to that which hath been said, that the ancient presidents and course in cancel. is against us; be it so; yet the course in the King's Bench and Common Pleas is with us, that a capias doth not lie in such case of scire facias. And the Chancery as to the common law ought not to vary from these Courts, for one and the same common law ought to be in all the said Courts, of things of the common law, and the presidents alledged of the other side are silent, and sleeping proceedings and presidents, slips of clarks, which were never drawn into question; the ancientest of which was hatcht but in the later part of the reign of King H. 8. And if the common law doth not warrant such executions, truly the presidents cannot make such imprisonments lawfull without Act of Parliament. It hath been said, that executions ought to be favoured, that is true, but also liberty, to which the law hath special respect: see the Statute of Magna Charta, nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur, nisi per legale judicium parium suorum, vel per legem terræ; and this is not lex terræ, but usage onely: and malus usus est abolendus, 26 Eliz. Error was brought upon a judgment given in Curia de Woodstock, which is a Court of Record, and error assigned, for that they had awarded execution secundum consuetudinem villæ, against one who had bailed the defendant without a scire facias first sued forth against him, i. the bailee, and it was adjudged error, and the custome could not maintain it, for the bailee might have a release or other matter of discharge to plead: and he cited the case of 13 and 14 Eliz. Dyer 306. that upon a scire facias out of a recognizance in Chancery, judgment was given for the plaintiff, and the warden of the Fleet was commanded to detain the conusor in his custody, in execution for the plaintiff, and afterwards the conusor escaped, the plaintiff not satisfied, and it was holden no escape, for his body was not liable; in case of a recognizance, to the execution: and see also the Book of Entries, 500 there is a rule put, if the recognizee will have execution within the year, he may have a fieri facias, or elegit, but not a capias ad satisfaciendum. And he conceived; that this process is not onely erroneous; but also utterly void: as a capias in a formedon, contrary where in debt a capias is awarded after the year where it ought to be scire facias, the same is but erroneous; for such process lieth upon such judgment, if he had not surceased his time. Another matter he moved, because this issue is not well tried, for it was tried by nisi prius out of the Exchequer, and the statute of West. 2. cap. 30. Mar. 14 E. 3. cap. 1. do not give nisi prius in causes out of the Exchequer but onely out of both Benches; but causes out of the Exchequer are tried by commission; and here their commission was insufficient; for it was directed, Chr. Wray and Williel. Periam, without saying, et eorum alteri; so as it was joynt, and not several, and Wray at the time of the trial, was at the Parliament at London, and so the cause was tried before Periam onely, and therefore coram non judice. At another day, the case was argued by the Barons of the Exchequer. And Clark Baron, conceived that the plaintiff ought to recover, and he said, that upon the escape, the common law gave an action upon the case against the sheriff; and the reason why the [88] sheriff shall be charged, is, that one cannot be in execution but once; and then if the sheriff should not be charged, the party plaintiff should by negligence of the sheriff lose his suit, and also his debt: and admit that a capias doth not lie in the case, yet the execution by force thereof is not void, but voidable onely; and error may be assigned as well in the execution, as in the judgment; which see 17 Ass. 24. where the recognizor in a statute merchant aliened the land, and afterwards the conusee sued forth execution, so as the land was extended, supposing the payment, i. Solvend. 14 E. 3. where as in truth it was 16 E. 3. and the feoffee brought a writ of error thereupon, and it was allowed; but the sheriff shall not take advantage of the same: and truly the common course is, that a capias lieth upon a recognizance: and 7 H. 4. 101. upon a recognizance acknowledged for the peace, a capias lieth for the King: and a recognizance is but an obligation of record; and wherefore should not a capias lie thereupon, as well as upon an action brought upon an obligation? The statute of West. 2. cap. 45. Si recens sit cognitio statim habeat querens breve de executione illius recognitionis: and the statute doth not speak in certain what manner of writ, or what manner of execution, therefore we ought to resort to the common law for it, as that is a capias. Gent, Baron argued and agreed in every point with Baron Clark.

Manwood, Chief Baron, argued, that the plaintiff should recover; and he put the case of recognizance: the plaintiff sueth two scire facias's, upon which two nichel's are retorned; and afterwards a levari facias, and upon that also nihil is retorned, and then issueth a capias ad satisfaciendum for to take the said Francis Woodhouse, who then was in prison for felony, upon which capias the sheriff did arrest him, and he being afterwards convicted of felony, escaped; upon this matter debt is brought against the sheriff. A recognizance taken in the Chancery is a thing upon record in a Court of Record, an obligation of record, and a debt upon record. It hath been objected, where no capias lieth in the process upon the original, there no capias lieth upon the execution: but it is good to examine the reason thereof; for lex plus laudatur quando ratione probatur: the capias upon a recognizance is not by 25 E. 3. but by the common law: for here is a debt upon record, wherefore shall not this body be subject to it, as well as in the case of a debt upon a bare obligation. I do admit the rule, that where there is no capias ad respondendum, there is no capias ad satisfaciendum, but that ought to be intended in cases where there is an original, and mesn process before judgment; but here is no original, nor mesn process before judgment, ergo, our case is not within the same rule: but I will put a good rule; it is debt upon record, ergo a capias lieth: in the King's Bench, if the defendant comes in by latitat, if the cause whereof the action is brought be of importance, he is to put in special bail; and those who bail him shall be bounden in a recognizance, &c. The defendant is condemned in the action: now if the defendant cannot be found, so as execution may be sued forth against him, then a scire facias shall issue forth against the sureties which bailed him, and upon that a capias, and that is very frequent there in use: so also is the course of the Court of Common Pleas; ergo it shall be so in the Chancery in case of a recognizance. If one be taken in execution upon a statute staple, and sueth an audita querela upon a release, or other matter, and be bound with sureties in the double value, &c. to the King, and to the party: if he be condemned in the audita querela, &c. and cannot be found, a scire facias shall issue forth against the sureties, and thereupon a capias. And this question, if the capias in this case lieth, or not? is to be decided either by audita querela in the Chancery, or by error in the King's Bench: for the said Courts have authority to affirm the proceedings, [89] or to disaffirm them. And here the question was, if Woodhouse were imprisoned or no? and not, if the capias erronice emanavit or not? And he took a difference where process is awarded out of a Court which hath not authority of the principal cause; there it is coram non judice, and the process is void; and if the sheriff taketh the party by force of such process, it is meerly void, and he a trespassor; but contrary if the Court hath authority of the principal cause, there if the process be misconceived, it is onely erroneous. An unskilfull man in Chancery makes an appeal of murther, retornable in the Common Pleas; and there an unskilfull clark makes a capias upon it, the same is coram non judice, and not all together void: but if in a writ of entry, in the nature of an assize, the demandant hath judgment to recover debt and damages, and thereupon issueth a capias, the same is not void, for it is but a misawarding of the process, & provide emanavit. If out of the Common Pleas immediately a writ issueth to the Sheriff of Chester, which is a County Palatine, where the King's writ doth not run, the same is void, and false imprisonment lieth upon such a taking. A formedon brought in the King's Bench, and upon that a capias, is void, & coram non judice; and the sheriff is bound to take notice of the law in such cases, that those of the King's Bench have not authority to hold plea in real actions. As to that, that Woodhouse was convict of felony, the same shall not avoid the execution; but I grant, that the King shall be satisfied before the subject, &c. And he relied much upon the said case cited before, 13 E. 3. Bar. 253. as to the matter of the capias: 19 H. 9. In escape the defendant pleaded a release of him who recovered to the prisoner being in execution, and it was holden no plea. And in the principal case judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXIII. BRIDGET CLARK'S CASE. ANTEA 30, 31.

The case was, Clark was indebted to Archdel by obligation, and afterwards delivered to Andrews certain hogsheads of wine to satisfie the said Archdel the said debt: and afterwards the obligation of Clark is assigned to the Queen for the debt of Archdel: and if the property of the said hogsheads of wine were altered by the delivery of them to Andrews before the assignment? was the question. Egerton, Solicitor, The property is not altered, for the bailor might have an action of account against Andrews before that he hath delivered the same over according to the bailment: but if he hath delivered them over, the same is a good bar in an account: but if one be accountable to me upon a bailment, and afterwards I do require him to deliver the goods over to A. the same is not in bar of account, but is good in discharge of account before auditors; for the same is matter after the bailment, not upon the bailment. If goods be bailed to bail over upon a consideration precedent of his part to whom they ought to be bailed, the bailor cannot countermand it; otherwise it is, where it is voluntary and without consideration; but where it is in consideration of a debt not countermandable, contrary, if it be to satisfie the debt of another. Manwood, Where the debtor of the King is sufficient there a debt due to him ought not to be assigned to the King, but onely where the debt of the King is doubtfull, and that was the ancient course; but now at this day multi videntur & habentur divites, qui tamen non sunt; and therefore omnis ratio tentanda est, for the recovery of the King's debts. But as to the case before us; the wife is executrix to her husband, who was indebted to Archdel, and she delivers the goods to Andrews to satisfie Archdel, and all that is before the assignment: and I am of opinion, that the property of the said [90] goods is altered; for, as the case is, Andrews was surety for Clark, and hath a counter-bond of Clark to save him harmless: if I borrow 100l. and deliver unto the lender plate for the security of it, the property general of it is in me, yet the bailee hath a special interest in it, untill he be paid. If goods be delivered to A. to pay unto B. A. may sell them. An executor hath goods of the testators, and he with his own monies payeth the debts of the testator, he shall retain the goods, and the property is altered. And here in our case, Andrews may by virtue of this bailment sell the goods, and with the monies arising thereof pay the said

Archdel. And afterwards judgment was given accordingly, that the property of the goods by the delivery over by Andrews was altered.

CXIV. FOSKEW'S CASE.

Francis Foskew, seised of the manor of Foskew in his demesn as of fee in consideration of a marriage to be had on Francis his son with M. daughter of Sir Edw. Huddleston, 9 Feb. 25 Eliz. covenanted to levy a fine of the manor aforesaid; and that the said fine should be to the use of himself and his wife for their lives, and after their deaths to the use of the said Francis their son, and M. and the heirs of their bodies begotten, with remainders over: the fine was levied accordingly: afterwards, 19 Octob. 27 Eliz. Francis the father acknowledged a recognizance to the Queen, and died, his wife died; and now this manor is extended for the debt to the Queen by force of the statute of 33 H. 8. And now Coke came into Court, and prayed that the said manor might be discharged of the debt to the Queen, because it is not chargeable by the said statute; the words of which statute are, All manors, lands, tenements, &c. which hereafter shall descend, remain, or revert in fee-simple, tail general or special, by, from, or after the death of any his or their ancestor or ancestors as heir, or by gift of his ancestor whose heir he is; which said ancestor or ancestors was, is, or shall be indebted to the King, or any other person or persons to his use, by judgment, recognizance, obligation, &c. In every such case, the said manors, &c. shall be charged, &c. This statute was made for the benefit of the King in two points: 1. To make lands entailed liable to the King against the issue in tail for the King's debts in the cases aforesaid, where they were not liable. 2. To make bonds taken by the officers of the King to the use of the King, as also of statutes. We cannot deny but that we have lands of the conusor, and of the gift of the conusor our ancestor, whose heir we are, who was indebted to the Queen, and yet we are not within this statute: was or shall be indebted, shall not be intended after the gift made; for if he first convey his land, and afterwards becomes indebted, the same is not within the statute: and where a mischief is to be remedied by a statute, the remedy in exposition of the statute is to be applied according as the mischief doth require: [shall be] is to be intended of future debts after the statute: and in our case, the father was not receivor, or other officer to the Queen; and if this statute should be so construed, the father might take 10,000l. for the marriage of his son, and assurance of lands unto him; and then if he will acknowledge a debt to the Queen, he should defeat the whole, which should be a very great mischief: the words are, [by gift after the debt acknowledged to the Queen.] And he cited the case, 19 Eliz. Plow. 191. betwixt Ludford and Gretton, upon the statute of 18 H. 6. the words of which are, [That whatsoever warrant hereafter to the Chancellor of England addressed, the [91] day of the delivery of the same it be entred of record in the Chancery; and that the Chancellour make letters patents upon the same warrants, bearing date the day of the said delivery in the Chancery, and not before: and all letters patents made to the contrary shall be void.] And the case was, that a warrant was directed to the Chancellour, for the making of letters patents, and delivered to him before the making of them, but the day of the delivery was not entred of record, &c. And it was holden, that notwithstanding that, the letters patents were good; for the mischief at the common law intended to be reformed by that Act, was not the post-dating of the letters patents, but the ante-dating, and therefore that ought to be principally taken into consideration: which mischief being understood, the words of the said statute are to be applied to it; ipsæ etenim leges cupiunt, ut jure regantur; i. with an equity according to the mischief, and not always according to the precise words: and in that case it is sufficient if the letters patents bear date after, and not before the delivery of the warrant, and that was the matter intended to be reformed. Also, as our case here is, we are not within this statute; for the words are, of the gift of his ancestour, but here the son hath not the lands of the gift of his ancestour, but rather by the Statute of Uses, and so he is in the post and not in the per, by his ancestour: for here the fine was levied to divers persons unto the uses aforesaid: and here the gift was not a mere gratuity to his son, but in consideration that he should marry the daughter of Sir Edw. Huddleston; and also the father was the King's debtor after the gift, and not before.

Popham, Attorney-General, to the contrary: The letter of the statute is with us, for he comes in of the gift of his ancestour, who was indebted to the Queen: and although that the gift was by way of use, yet the precedents in the Common-Pleas and other Courts are, that he may declare, of the feoffment of such a one, although it was by way of use: and he said, if A. be bound to enfeoff B. of such lands, if he maketh a feoffment to the use of B. and his heirs, he hath well enough performed the condition: and if the case should not be within the statute, then should that branch of the statute be idle, and to no purpose: for if the ancestour be seised, and becometh indebted to the Queen, and after makes a conveyance ut supra, the same is provided for by the first branch of the statute: for the land is liable to the recognizance or obligation made to the King, and that they shall be as effectual as a statute staple; and reason requires, that the son, who comes in by mere gratuity of his ancestour, should be charged: and it was a common practice before the making of that statute, that the King's officers would convey their lands to their children, and then become the King's debtors; for the remedy of which mischief the statute was made, and the statute of 27 Eliz. doth not respect the heir, because he is heir, but as a purchasor onely, and that upon good consideration: Coke, If any fraud can be found in our case, then without doubt we should be within the statute, but being upon good consideration, it is out of the statute; nor was there any purpose in the father when he made the said conveyance, to become the King's debtor, or officer to him, for if there were, then he is within the statute, also the gift had been a mere gratuity &c. And afterwards, at another day, the case was moved by Coke, and he said, that here is not any gift, because it was in consideration of marriage, and then no gift, for it is an old proverb, What is freer than gift? Egerton, The father giveth to his son and heir, the same is within the statute, and yet here is consideration, (scil.) of blood; Coke contrary, Where the father giveth to his younger son, or to his daughter, which is not his heir; and of that opinion was Manwood, Chief Baron; and afterwards, (as Coke reported) the son and his lands were discharged.

[92] MICH. 26 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH. ERROR.

CXV. AMNER AND LUDDINGTON'S CASE.

Error was brought in the King's-Bench by Amner against Luddington, Mich. 25 and 26 Eliz. Rot. 495. The case was, that one Weldon was seised, and leased unto Pierpoint for ninety nine years, who devised the same by his will in this manner, I bequeath to my wife the lease of my house during her life, and after her death I will that it go amongst my children unpreferred. Pierpoint died, his wife entred, and was possessed virtute legationis prædict. and took husband one Fulshurst, against whom one Beswick recovered in an action of debt 140l. upon which recovery issued forth a fieri facias, and upon that a venditioni exponas, upon which the sheriff sold the said term so devised to one Reynolds: Fulshurst died, his executor brought error to reverse the judgment given against the testator at the suit of Beswick; the wife did re-enter, and sold the land, and died. Alice, an unpreferred daughter of Pierpoint, did enter, and upon that matter found by special verdict in the Common-Pleas, the entry of Alice was adjudged lawfull: upon which judgment error was brought in the King's-Bench. And it was argued upon the words of the devise, because here the house is not devised, but the lease it self, (scil.) all his interest in the thing devised: and it is not like unto the case betwixt Welchden and Elkington, 20 Eliz. Plow. 519. where the case was, that Davis being lessee for years, devised that his wife should have and occupy the land demised for so many years as she should live; nor unto the case of Paramour and Yardley, 21 Eliz. Plow. 539. for there the lessee devised, that his wife shall have the occupation and profits of the lands until the full age of his son: for in these two cases the land it self is quodam modo devised, but in our case all the estate is devised, i. the lease it self. And also in those two cases a certain person is assigned and named in the will, who should take the residue of the term which should be expired after the death of the wife: but in the case at bar, there is not any person certain appointed, &c. but the devise, as to that, is conceived in general words, to children unpreferred; therefore neither any possibility, nor remainder in any person certain, therefore all the term is wholly in the wife, and then she might well dispose the whole. But all the Court was to the contrary, and that in this case the possibility should rise well enough to the death of the wife, to that daughter unpreferred. Another matter was moved, if the said term, being sold in the possession of the wife of the devisor by force of the execution aforesaid; if now, the judgment being reversed, the sale of the term be also avoided: for now the party is to be restored to all that which he had lost. And it was argued by Coke, that notwithstanding the reversal of the judgment, the sale did stand good; for the judgment for the plaintiff in a writ of error is, that he shall be restored to all that which he hath lost ratione judicii prædict. and the judgment was, that the plaintiff should recover 140l. and therefore by the judgment in the writ of error he shall be restored to so much, but the mean act, (scil.) the sale of the lease, shall stand, and shall not be defeated or avoided. As 7 H. 6. 42. a statute staple is bailed in ouster le main, the conusee brings detinue against the bailee, and hath judgment, and recovers the statute, and upon that hath execution: the baylee brings a writ of error, and reverseth the judgment given in the detinue, yet the execution shall stand, and audita querela doth not lie for the conusor: and see 13 E. 3. t. Bar. 253. Accountant found in ar-[93]-rearages, committed to the next gaol, escapes, and reverseth the judgment given against him in accompt, by an ex parte talis, yet the action upon the escape lieth: and the Court, as to that point, all agreed; but that point did not fall in judgment; for by the sale nothing shall pass, but the interest in præsenti, which was in the wife of the devisor; but the possibility to the children unpreferred, was not touched thereby; and afterwards the judgment was affirmed.

CXVI. EDWARDS AND HALINDER'S CASE.

See the Case reported in Popham's Reports fol. 46. very short, but not with the Arguments.

Rice Edwards brought an action upon the case against Halinder, and declared, that whereas one Banister had demised unto the plaintiff a cellar, to have from week to week, quandiu ambabus partibus placuerit; and also whereas the said Banister had leased to the defendant a shop, directly over the said cellar, there the defendant had laid so great a burthen upon the floor of the said shop, that thereby the said floor fell down, and brake certain vessels of the plaintiff's full of wine, by reason whereof the plaintiff lost his wine, to the value of, &c. to his damages, &c. The defendant said, that before the charging of the floor, ut supra, the said floor had sustained greater weight; and farther, that the said Banister let unto him the said shop, for to lay there the weight of 30 tun, and he had laid there but the weight of 12 tun; and also that the walls of the said cellar are so weak, that the floor of the said shop fell by reason thereof: upon which there was a demurrer in law. It was argued by Godfrey for the plaintiff; Where injury or wrong is done unto any, the law gives remedy to the party grieved; and although that the shop was let unto him to lay wares there, which he hath done, and that it was not his intent to surcharge the said warehouse, although the event be contrary, yet forasmuch as by the laying of wares there, a wrong and damage follow to the plaintiff, the defendant shall be punished; for the rule is sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lædas: if I have a house, and another buildeth so high over me, that rain-water descends and falls from his house upon my house, an action upon the case lieth, see F. N. B. 184. So if by his building he stops my light, as it was lately adjudged in the King's Bench, in the case betwixt Bland and Mosely: see 6 E. 4. 7. & 8. damages recovered for a wrong done against the will of the party:

and see other cases upon this learning, 13 H. 4. t. Action upon the Case 48. The plaintiff had sold certain trusses of hay to the defendant, within such a meadow, to be carried away from the said meadow within a certain time; but the defendant let the hay lie there without carrying the same away, so it putrified the meadow, by reason whereof the plaintiff lost the profit of his meadow for a great time; and thereupon brought an action of the case against the defendant, and the action was adjudged maintainable: see 22 E. 4. 8. where the owners of the plough in turning of the plough, according to the custome in the common fields upon the land of another; one of the plough cattel, against the will of the driver, takes a mouthful of grass, the same is justifiable, but if the driver of the cattel suffereth the same to continue, an action will lie against him: so 22 E. 4. 49. Where I am bound to enclose my land against another, and in default of enclosure, the cattel of the other escaped into my land and close, I shall not punish him; but if he after notice, doth suffer them to continue there, he shall be punished, although it be through my default: also it is alledged in our declaration, that the defendant intending to hurt and spoil the plaintiff's wines, did lay such a weight, &c. And the [94] defendant answers thereunto, that the floor fell in default of repairing of the walls of the cellar, or for the ruinousness of them, where he ought to have pleaded farther, absque hoc, that the shop was surcharged with the intent to hurt the plaintiff's wines; in an action upon the case, upon a trover, the defendant pleads, that the goods whereof, &c. were pawned unto him for the security of certain money not yet paid, the same is no plea without saying farther, absque hoc, that he did convert, &c. See 43 E. 3. 33. In an action brought against a smith, for his negligence in curing of a horse which he took upon him to cure; the defendant was driven to traverse, absque hoc, that the horse perished in default of his care: Dalton contrary, Where in doing of a lawfull act, by a mishap a damage cometh to another, against the will of the doer, no punishment shall follow: see the case cited by the other side in 6 E. 4. 7. & 8. If he might have done more than he had done to have prevented the mischief, he should be punished; but if he could not have done more than he hath done, or otherwise than he hath done to prevent it, he is dispunishable, and he may, uti jure suo, although it be to the prejudice of another: see 12 H. 8. 2. & 3. Harcourt's case: if I cannot otherwise let the water out of my land, I may justifie the letting of it in your land which is adjoining, although that your land be drowned thereby: sometimes ignorance of the party shall excuse the offence: as if my dog worry your sheep, if I do not know of such ill quality in him, I shall not be punished for the same. And it doth not appear that the defendant had notice of the ruinousness of the walls, although now it appeareth that they were ruinous, and for that cause the floor fell; for the defendant said, that the walls were ruinous, in occultis & absconditis partibus ipsorum; and here needs not any traverse: for it is confessed, that the floor of the shop was surcharged, but the same is avoided and excused, because that the walls were ruinous, in occultis & absconditis ipsorum partibus; and forasmuch as our landlord (who is also the landlord of the plaintiff,) hath let to us the shop, to lay there the weight of 30 tun, therefore the defendant hath good right, as to such weight against the lessor of the plaintiff, and all others, claiming under him. And here the plaintiff hath declared of a lease from week to week, quamdiu ambabus partibus placuerit, and hath not averred the continuance of his lease, &c. Godfrey, A lease is made from year to year, ut supra, &c. The lessor brings debt for the second year, he need not to aver the continuance of the lease; for when the second year doth begin, the lessor cannot put him out that year; but we, upon the matter, have averred the continuance, for we have said, Et sic possessionatus existens, &c. Manwood, The declaration is, that the defendant, nequitur & malitiose intendens, &c. tantum ponderis, was laid upon the floor, ita quod vi ponderis dirupta fuit contabulatio: and the plea of the defendant is, quod muri in partibus occultis & absconditis ruinosi fuerunt, &c. & ideo corruerunt. So as the plaintiff speaks of the floor, and the defendant of the walls, and so the defendant doth not answer the plaintiff; for the shopman ought not to go into the cellar, nor the cellar-man into the walls. But Dalton said, that the plea was, quod diruptio & fractio contabulationis fuit ex eo quod muri ruinosi fuerunt in partibus occultis & absconditis. At another day, it was argued by Flemming for the plaintiff, a voluntary and unlawfull act is laid to the charge of the defendant, who pleads special matter to excuse himself, but doth not answer the point of the action, but onely that the fall was sudden, et quia muri fuerunt ruinosi in partibus occultis, &c. whereas we have declared, that the weight was the cause thereof: 3 H. 6. Double Plea 31. In an action upon the case, for negligent keeping of fire, the house of the plaintiff was burnt, he ought to take a traverse, without that, that it was burnt by the ill keeping of the fire of the defendant: and he needs not to aver the continuance [95] of the tenancy at will: 38 H. 6. 27. A lessee for life assigns his estate to B. who leases at will to C. B. is disseised by D. and C. ousted, C. re-enters, and brings trespass, he must aver the life of A. but not of B. nor the continuance of the will. Atkinson contrary; I conceive there needs no traverse, for the matter of the declaration is expressly confessed, and avoided, 5 H. 7. 12. 13. where one makes title to common, or rent by prescription, if the other pleaded unity of possession, he needs not traverse; so where he claims B. for his villain, &c. B. saith, that he is a bastard, there needs no traverse. We have confessed in pleading, quod gravitate ponderis, the floor fell down; but we say farther, that the cause was, because the walls were ruinous, &c. and here is matter in law; who ought to repair them: the lease was made unto the defendant, 29 Julii, and the floor fell 30 Julii, the day following: and if by law the defendant ought to repair them, it was impossible for him to do it, and that shall excuse him: if one hath a shop, and another a cellar under it, and the shop minatur ruinam, there is a writ in the register, de reparatione facienda. 153, &c. And it lieth against him who ought to repair by prescription, or by the law. And we who are the lessee, are not bound to repair; for if the ground timber be in decay, and so the house ruinous at the time of the lease, it is a good plea in an action of waste, if the house fell in such defect; for the lessee is not bound to such reparation, (scil.) for great timber, which was rotten at the time of the lease. But if after the lease it becomes rotten for want of covering, it is otherwise, see 12 H. 8. 1. And here the plaintiff hath remedy against his lessor, for he is bound to the reparations by the law, and not the lessee; and as he may have the said writ, de reparatione facienda, before the mischief, so he may now have after the mischief: and therefore no law binds the defendant to repair; nor is there any custome pleaded to that purpose: and also for as much as the occasion of the cause of action was the ruinousness of the walls, the defendant shall not be charged with the same: and also he shall not be charged with a thing he could not prevent. Manwood, The defendant hath pleaded, that the fall of the floor was, eo quod, the walls were ruinous in partibus occultis, which was a secret thing, and unknown unto the defendant, upon which the plaintiff hath demurred, and so confessed the plea of the defendant to be true; and that he was ignorant of the feebleness of the walls, and therefore he needs not any traverse. And here the defendant hath pleaded, that the shop was demised to him for greater carriage. Gent, Baron, was of opinion, that the defendant had not fully answered to the declaration; for he is charged with the laying of so much weight upon the floor there, so as, vi ponderis, it fell down; to which the defendant hath said, that the walls were ruinous, in occultis partibus; and doth not answer to the surcharging, (scil.) absque hoc, that he did surcharge it: Clark, Baron, It is a general rule, that every material thing alledged in the pleading, ought to be traversed, confessed and avoided, which the defendant hath not done here but he would excuse himself through the default of another, and answer nothing to that with which he himself is charged: and afterwards judgment was given in the Court of Exchequer for the plaintiff. Whereupon, afterwards, the defendant brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber, where the case was argued again; but there the judgment given in the Court of Exchequer was affirmed. See this case reported short, in Popham's Reports lately published.

CXVII. LINACRE AND RHODE'S CASE.

The case was, That Linacre was bound in a statute; and his body taken in execution, and the sheriff voluntarily set him at large, and afterwards the conusee sued execution of the lands of the conusor; who thereupon brought an audita querela. It was moved by Yelverton, Serjeant, that by that voluntary discharge of him by the sheriff, the whole execution was discharged, for the execution is intire: see 15 E. 4. 5. Where the conusee in a statute merchant, hath the body and lands of the conusor in execution, and afterwards the conusee surrendreth his estate which he hath by extent; now the execution of his body is discharged; and the conusor shall have a scire facias, or audita querela to discharge his body: so if three conusors be in execution, and the conusee doth discharge one of them, the same is a discharge of them all, and in the principal case, the body is the principal, and therefore the discharge of the principal part of the execution is the discharge of the whole. Hammon, Where the conusee himself dischargeth the execution in part, it is good for the whole, but where discharged by the sheriff, nihil operatur: Anderson, If the conusor dieth in execution, yet the conusee shall have execution against his heir of his land, for the having of the body in execution, is not any satisfaction to the party; for his body is but a pledge untill the money be paid; and there is no reason, that the act of the sheriff should discharge the execution. Windham, to the same intent; And if the conusee sueth execution, and hath the body of the conusor in execution this day, he may the next day sue execution of the lands, and the next day after, of the goods; and if the conusee doth discharge the body, the whole execution is discharged, and it is true, that if A. recovereth against B. in an action of debt, and B. is taken by a capias ad satisfaciendum, and afterwards the sheriff permitteth B. voluntarily, to escape, here B. is discharged, although it be not the act of the party; for there the plaintiff had a full execution, which is not here; for in case of execution upon a statute-merchant, the execution by the body is not the full execution, and therefore although the sheriff hath discharged the body, yet the conusee may have execution of the goods and lands, but not of the body; and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff; that the audita querela did not lie, and that execution might be sued of the goods and lands but not of the body.

CXVIII. WEBBE AND MAINARD'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ, the case was, Walter Goldsmith, seised of certain lands, made a feoffment to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of John his eldest son in fee; proviso, that after his death, his said son shall pay unto his younger son, William, 30l. by 3l. per ann. at the Feast of St. Michael untill the entire sum be paid, and if he fail of payment, then to the use of the said William and his heirs; Will. Goldsmith the feoffor dieth, the money is not paid, but afterwards the said younger son makes an acquittance, and thereby acknowledgeth the receipt of the said money, according to the proviso, John dieth; now, if the younger son may enter? And first, if the [97] younger son be concluded by that acquittance, to say that the 30l. was not paid? And if he be not concluded, then if because that the words are but words of limitation, the younger brother hath title of entry? and then, if this entry be bound by the descent from John to his heir? or if John by continuance of the possession, after the breach of the proviso, be a disseisor, or not? were questions propounded to the Court, which the Court took time to consider of, yet it was then said, that the use was settled in William, and the possession executed unto it, but not such a possession upon which an assise or trespass lieth.

CXIX. WILLIS AND JERMINE'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ, it was found by special verdict, that the Dean and Chapter of Exeter leased the land, where, &c. to Jermine, rendering rent to be paid at their chapter-house at Exeter, and for default of payment, that such lease shall be void and cease; and that the said Jermine conveyed his interest to the defendant, and afterward the rent was demanded at the chapter-house, but not paid; and afterwards, the dean and chapter, by the name of Dean and Chapter of St. Mary of Exeter, where they are incorporate by the name of Dean and Chapter of St. Mary in Exeter, make an indenture of lease for forty years, in their chapter-house to Willis, and thereunto put their seal in the chapter-house, and made a letter of attorney to another to enter, and to make livery of the said deed, which was done accordingly: it was moved by Harris, Serjeant, that this lease made in manner, &c. is not good, for the corporation is misnamed, i. of Exeter, for in Exeter; but the Court disallowed that exception; for there is not any material variance, and so it was said, it hath been ruled. And he said, that for another cause the lease is not good; for when the dean and chapter in their chapter-house make this indenture of lease, and set their chapter-seal to it, it was their deed presently, without other delivery: and then Jermine being in possession at the time of the putting of the seal to it; they were out of possession thereof, and so the new lease void, because they were not in possession at the time of the making of it; for no delivery is necessary to the deed of a corporation; but the date of the sealing of it, makes it a perfect deed, and then the delivery of the same by the attorney is of no effect. Wiat to the contrary, This lease is good: for Jermine was but tenant at sufferance at the time of this lease; but if Jermine had been a disseisor, then delivery in the chapter-house was void, and then the second delivery upon the land good. And Harris agrees, that if Jermine be but tenant at sufferance, then the second lease made of the land was good enough. But it was agreed by the whole Court, that the lease is good enough for the manner, and there is not other form or means for a corporation to make a lease than this here: and it was moved; that the first lease was not utterly ceased without entry, and then the new lease being made before, entry is void; but Wray was clear of a contrary opinion; and said, that the dean and chapter might make such a lease before entry; but Gawdy, Justice, doubted of it, vide 28 H. 8. 6. Dyer and Com. 2. and 3. Ph. and Ma. 132. Browning and Beston's Case.

Harris the attorney hath not pursued his authority, for his warrant is to enter into the land in the name of the corporation, and claim it to their use, and then to deliver the lease made upon the land; [98] but the jury have not found such matter, but have found onely that he came by virtue of the said letter of attorney, and delivered the same upon the land, but do not find that he entred, and claimed the same to the use of the said dean and chapter, but the Court held the same good enough; for in a special verdict, every particular circumstance need not to be found, and in pleading it ought to be; and because it is found, that the attorney, by virtue of the said warrant of attorney, hath delivered the deed upon the land, he hath pursued his warrant in all. Gawdy, Delivery of the deed is as necessary in case of a corporation; as it is in the case of other persons.

CXX. Rymersly and Cooper's Case.

In an action upon the case, for slanderous words, the plaintiff declared, that where, by the custome of the City of London, it hath been used, if the mayor, recorder, or any alderman, being a justice of peace there, might take the deposition of any person produced before them, or any of them to be deposed in perpetuum rei memoriam ex parte alicujus personæ, which depositions are there recorded, in perpetuam rei memoriam; and are good matter to be given in evidence to any jury there to inform their consciences of the truth of the thing in question, and declared farther, that he himself was produced before one bond, as a witness to testifie his knowledge in quadam causa ibid. ex parte Edw. Stapleton, before whom he deposed, &c. The defendant spake these words in scandal of the plaintiff, Rymersly was forsworn in the said oath before, &c. The defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff made not any such oath, and upon that the plaintiff did demur in law. George Crook prayed judgment for the plaintiff, for the same is no plea; for the oath is but an inducement, and therefore not traversable; for the ground of the action is the speaking of the words; and admit there were not any such oath taken by the plaintiff, the offence of the defendant was the greater, nam peccavit in utroque, tam in juramento, quod nullum omnino fuit, quam in perjurio, quod sine juramento esse non potuit; for if one saith, A. Murdravit J. S. whereas there never was any such J. S. yet the action lieth for the scandalous words: also this plea doth amount but to the general issue, see 4 E. 6. Action, sur le Case 113. 34 H. 6. 28. And as to the words, they are actionable; for (forsworn) amounts to purjured, being spoken upon on oath taken in a Court of Record, and so was it lately holden in the case betwixt Brook and Doughty: Godfrey, contrary, The declaration is not good, for the custome in London is not well laid, or pursued; and therefore, upon the matter, it is but an oath taken before a private man; for he hath declared, that in the City of London, it hath been used, &c. but doth not say, that the City of London is antiqua civitas, as he ought. See the case of the Prior of Lantony, 12 E. 4. 8. and 22 H. 6. Prescription, 47. If a man alledgeth a custome within a town, he ought first prescribe, that the said town is an ancient town. Also it is not set forth in the declaration: that bond, at the time of the deposition taken, was a justice of peace in London, and then the custome is not well persued. But afterwards, the record was looked upon, and allowed to be good by the Court, and the Court conceived, that the plea of the defendant was good enough, as 13 E. 4. 8. In debt against an abbat, the plaintiff counted upon a borrowing by the predecessor, &c. the defendant pleaded, that he did not borrow, and it was holden a good plea, and yet the plaintiff in such case might plead the general issue, see [99] 26 H. 8. and 34 H. 6. Br. Action sur le Case, 103. 3. Ma. Dyer. 121. The Lord Mounteagle's case, 34 H. 6. 43. by Moile. In trespass, quare servientem suum verberavit, &c. It is a good plea, to say, that he was not the servant of the plaintiff; and if in the principal, the defendant plead, not guilty, he should thereby confess, that the plaintiff was sworn. Wray, Chief Justice, The plea of the defendant is good: and it was moved by Egerton, Solicitor General, that the custome to take oath, as is alledged, is not allowable, because it is not a reasonable custome, that such depositions should be taken, in perpetuam rei memoriam, if there be not a suit depending in the cause; and because that such custome not alledgable, it is not reasonable, and then the plaintiff ought not to have judgment; and such also was the opinion of Wray and Gawdy, Justices, but for the default in the declaration, that it is not alledged, that London is antiqua civitas, judgment was given against the plaintiff.

CXXI. ALEXANDER AND DYER'S CASE.

In debt for rent reserved upon a lease for years, the plaintiff declared, that he leased to the defendant 27 Sept. certain lands, to have and to hold from the Feast of St. Michael next ensuing, for a year, rendring 10l. rent, virtute cujus, 29 Sept. the said lessee entred, and enjoyed the said land, from the Feast of St. Michael, all the said year; and because the rent was behind, &c. And upon nihil debet pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that upon the plaintiffs own shewing, here is no rent behind, and then no cause of action; for it appeareth in the declaration, that the lessee entred 29 Sept. which is before the term begins; for the words of the habendum are, From the Feast of St. Michael, therefore the Feast of St. Michael is no part of the term, and then was the defendant a disseisor, and the day after, the term began, which cannot alter his estate, but that he continueth a disseisor, and then he is not in by force of the said lease, and so no rent can be due: Williams, As the declaration is here, the same is not any disseisin; for the plaintiff set forth in his declaration, that the lessee, the defendant hath occupied the land demised, the whole year, and so hath not admitted any disseisin, it being in his election to make it a disseisin or not: Clench, Justice, Be it a disseisin or not, or be it that the defendant entreth or not, he is to pay the rent: Gawdy, The lessee is a disseisor, and continueth a disseisor, and yet debt lieth against him for the rent, by reason of the privity of contract: which see Rysden's case, 24 H. 8. Dyer 5. And so in our case, quod fuit concessum per totam curiam, and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXXII. MONINGS AND WORLEY'S CASE.

In debt upon an obligation brought by Mary Worley, against Monings in the Common-Pleas. The condition was, that if Mary Worley the plaintiff in the said action doth not depart out of the service of the defendant without license of the defendant Monings; nor marry her self, but with his consent, then if the defendant shall pay to the said Mary within twenty eight days after demand by her made (of Monings) at his house at Waldersey, 100l. that then, &c. And the de-[100]-fendant in the said action pleaded, that the said Mary the plaintiff, in the said action, 4 Maii, 30 Eliz. departed out of his service without licence, the plaintiff Mary, by replication said, that 6 Septemb. the same year she departed out of his service with licence, and that 4 Octob. after, she demanded the said 100l. at Waldersey aforesaid, and he refused to pay it, absque hoc, that she departed out of his service 4 Maii, 30 Eliz. without licence, and the writ bare date, 18. of October, next after the demand; and it was found for the plaintiff, and judgment given for her in the Common Pleas; and now a writ of error is brought by Monings. Tanfield, The judgment ought to be reversed; for always the replication in such cases, ought to contain sufficient cause of action, and sufficient breach of the condition, or otherwise the plaintiff shall not have judgment, although that the issue be found for him: as 7 E. 4. 31. In trespass for taking of goods, of A. and B. A. pleads not guilty, B. justifies, the plaintiff makes title to the goods by a gift, B. traverseth the gift, and it is found for him against the plaintiff, A. is found guilty: now, although A. be found guilty, yet the plaintiff shall not have judgment against him; for it is found, that he hath not any title to the goods. As in debt upon a bond against A. and B. A. pleads non est factum; B. pleads the release of the plaintiff, and it is found the deed of A. and that the plaintiff hath released to B. the plaintiff shall never have judgment; for upon the verdict, it appears, that he hath not cause of action: and here in the replication, there is not a sufficient breach shewed of the condition; for although that Mary hath not departed from the service of the said defendant, yet the same is not material; but the defendant had twenty eight days after the demand, to pay the 100l. but the same is not so here, for the plaintiff hath prevented the defendant; for the demand is alledged to be 4. Oct. and the writ bears date 18. Octob. the same year, and so the defendant had not his time allowed him. Gawdy, The issue is taken upon the departure out of his service, so as the demand is not now material, and therefore the alledging of the same is surplusage, and shall not hurt: and the defendant hath pleaded in bar, the departure of the plaintiff out of his service, upon which he relieth, and the demand set forth in the replication, is not to be regarded, as to prejudice the plaintiff: as 3 Ma. Dyer 115. Lessee for years covenants that he will not cut any trees, the lessor assigns the breach of the covenant in succidendo twenty oaks, the lessee pleads, that he did not cut the twenty trees, nor any of them; the jury found, that the defendant had cut down ten trees, the plaintiff upon that verdict shall have judgment, for the rest is but surplusage; and more put in issue than there needs to be. Fenner, It is not any full plea to say, that the plaintiff did not depart out of the service of the defendant 4 Maii, for if she departeth at any other time, she shall not recover, for which cause she ought to have pleaded, that she continued in his service untill such a day, and then she departed with his licence, and the inducement to the traverse ought to be sufficient matter, otherwise it is not a full plea, nor the traverse is not good. And if it be surplusage, yet if it be not matter against her self, it makes the plea naught, which see 1 H. 7. 29. 6 H. 7. 16. Gawdy conceived, that the judgment was well given, for the defendant was at his liberty to plead the departure of the plaintiff without his licence, or to stand upon the demand. And now, although he pleads the departure, yet the demand is not confessed. And afterwards the judgment given in the Court of Common Pleas was affirmed.

The case was this, The father seised of lands, is bound in an obligation, and deviseth his lands to his wife untill his son cometh to the age of twenty one years, the remainder to the son in fee, and dieth; and no other lands descend or come to the son from his father. It was moved by Godfrey, that the heir in that case at his election might wave the devise, and take by descent or è contra: see 9 E. 4. 18. by Needham. But Gawdy and Shute, Justices, were of opinion, that the son should be adjudged in by descent: Clench contrary.

CXXIV. BENNET AND SHORTWRIGHT'S CASE.

The case was, The defendant sued the plaintiff in the Spiritual Court for tythes in kind, and now the plaintiff prayed a prohibition, and suggested, that they had used in the said parish, time out of mind, &c. to take the tenth sheaf in satisfaction of tythe of corn &c. and in those years in which the plaintiff had supposed the subtraction of his tythes, he had severed the tenth sheaf from the nine parts, and the parson would not take them away: and that he had offered that matter by way of plea in the Spiritual Court, but they there would not allow of it: and the Court was clear of opinion, that the suggestion was good; for if the parishioner setteth out his tythes, and the parson will not take them, or if they be destroyed by cattel by his laches, he shall not have tythes again: and therefore if the Ecclesiastical Court will not allow that plea, it is reason that the party have a prohibition, for after severance transit decima in catalla: but it was said by the Court, that if the parishioner doth set forth his tythes, and takes them again, he may be sued for tythes in the Spiritual Court, and the setting forth shall not excuse them.

CXXV. WALTER AGAINST PERY AND SPRINGE.

Walter brought a scire facias against Pery and Springe, sureties for one Brook upon bail in an action of debt: the defendants pleaded the death of Brook before judgment given against him: and all the justices (except Wray) held, that the plea was not good, for it is a surmise against the judgment: for judgment cannot be given against a dead man. Wray, The same is error in fact, and of such error the party may have advantage in this Court. Gawdy, The surety cannot take advantage of error, nor plead it, for he is a stranger to the record. Wray, He may plead, that the defendant is dead after the judgment, quod fuit concessum: but it was ruled, that the defendants should be sworn that their plea was true.

CXXVI. ALDERSLEY AND DUPARRIE'S CASE.

In debt upon an obligation bearing date 4. Julii, 30 Eliz. the defendant pleaded, that it was endorsed with condition to pay 50 li. before 15 Octob. 31 Eliz. and pleaded, that he had paid it before the 15. of Octob. aforesaid, scil. the ninth of June, 30. Eliz. which is three weeks before the date of the obligation, upon which the action is brought: and they were at issue, that the defendant non solvit before 15 Octob. &c. And the jury have found, that the defendant had not paid it before 15 Octob. and that matter was assigned for error; for that plea is contrary and repugnant in it self, to alledg the payment before the date of the obligation: but it was moved, that here the day of payment is not material, and but matter of surplusage; for the issue is, whether the defendant paid the money before the 15 day of October? and the jury have found the negative, so as the day in the scilicet is not material, and the alledging of that is matter of surplusage: as 20 H. 6. 15, trespass quare clausum fregit, & herbam consumpsit, continuand. transgress. from such a day usque ad diem impetrationis brevis prædict. scilicet, 14 F. 17 H 6. whereas the date of the writ fuit 12. Octob. 17 H. 6. scil. the October before February: but it was not allowed; for the day of the writ brought is certain enough, and the mistaking in the scilicet is not to any purpose. Wray, Payment before the day is not a good plea, if he doth not shew the day and place. It was adjourned.

CXXVII. PARKER AND BURTON'S CASE.

In an action upon the case for slanderous words, (scil.) that the plaintiff was perjured: the defendant doth justifie, that whereas a suit was prosecuted in the Exchequer Chamber at Westminster betwixt the defendant and another, and from thence a commission was awarded out of the said Court to divers persons, to examine certain witnesses at B. in Berk. and there, by virtue of the said commission, the plaintiff was deposed, & false deposuit, prætextu cujus, he spake the said words. The plaintiff replicando saith, de injuria sua propria absque tali causa: upon which issue was joined, and tried in Berk. and found for the plaintiff. And it was moved by Coke in arrest of judgment, that the said issue ought not to be tried in Berks. onely, but by both counties Mid. and Berks; for all the matter of justification doth arise out of both counties; the suit and the commission which was in Midd. and the execution of the commission and the oath which were in Berks; all which matters is but one case: as 2 H. 7. 3. and 4. Atkinson, The trial is well for the manner, for the matter of the justification is the perjury, and the suit and commission are but induction and conveyance to the action: also the defendant hath not shewed, that the Exchequer Chamber is in the county of Midd. as he ought: as where a man pleads a thing done in any Court, except in the Common Pleas, he ought to shew in what county the said Court was at the time that such thing was done, for communia placita teneantur in loco certo. Gawdy and Wray, When the defendant doth justifie by reason of the perjury, and the plaintiff replies without such cause, the same amounts to as much as if he had traversed the per-[103]-jury, which being supposed to be committed there, shall be tryed there. Coke, It was the case of one Loveday, 25 Eliz. In an action upon the case for slanderous words, the defendant did justifie, by reason of a robbery committed by the plaintiff in another county; and the plaintiff pleaded de son tort demesne sans tiel cause: the same shall be tryed by both counties: see 2 H. 7. 3. Also it was moved, that here it is not shewed in what county the Exchequer Chamber is: admit that it be in Berks, yet it ought to be tryed by both counties, and that was Chelderlie's case: and although it be not shewed in what county the Exchequer Chamber is, the plaintiff had judgment to recover, and the tryal was held good enough.

And now it was moved by Coke, that although the admiral had but an estate for life, yet the patents did continue in force after his death: as the Justices here in the Common Pleas, although they have their places but for life, yet they may grant offices which shall be in force after their deaths, &c. And because this matter is determinable at the common law, he prayed a prohibition; for in the Admiral Court they will judge according to the civil law: and the Court gave day unto the other side, to shew cause unto the contrary, or otherwise a prohibition should be awarded.

CXXIX. WESHBOURN AND MORDANT'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas he was possessed of a parcel of land called the Parsonage, lying adjoyning to a certain river, from the 29 of May, 29 Eliz. untill the day of the bringing of this writ, the defendant had the said twentieth day of May stopt the said river with certain loads of earth, and so it continued untill the fourteenth day of February, by which his land was drowned, and so he had lost the profit of it by that time. And it was moved in arrest of judgment, that upon the declaration there doth not appear any cause of action, for the plaintiff hath made title to the land drowned from the twentieth of May, so as that day is excluded, and the nusance is said to be made the twentieth day, and so it appeareth the nusance was before the possession of the plaintiff; and if it were so, then cannot he complain of any wrong done before his time: to which it was answered, that although the stopping was made before his possession, yet the continuance of the same is after, and a new wrong, for which an action lieth: as 5 H. 7. 4. It was presented, that an abbat had not cleansed his ditch, &c. by reason of which the highway is stopt: the successor shall be put to answer to the said indictment, by reason of the continuance of it: and see, that continuation of a nusance is as it were a new nusance, 14 and 15 Eliz. 320. And it may be that the plaintiff was not damnified [104] untill long time after the twentieth day of May, (scil.) after the stopping: and the words of the writ here are satisfied and true: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

In debt against executors, they plead, that they have onely expended such a sum of the goods of the testator in funeral expences, absque hoc, that they have administred aliter, vel alio modo; the plaintiff cannot reply and say, that they have administred aliter, vel alio modo, without shewing how. CXXXIII. TOLEY AND WINDHAMS CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas certain controversies were betwixt the plaintiff and defendant for the profits of certain lands which the father of the defendant had taken in his lifetime: and whereas he had brought a writ of subpœna out of the Chancery against the defendant for the said profits taken by the father of the defendant in his life, intending to put in a bill against the defendant in the said Court: the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff would stay his intended suit, promised, that if the plaintiff can prove, that the father of the defendant took the profits, or had the possession of the said land under the title of the father of the plaintiff, that he should pay to him for all the said profits: and farther declared, that he had proved, that his father had taken the profits under the title of the father of the plaintiff. Coke took exception to the declaration, because it is not shewed, how and by what means, under the title of the father of the plaintiff, he took the profits, as by lease, for that is traversable. Gawdy, Justice, The son hath not any cause of action or suit for the profits taken in the time of the father, therefore the staying of suit arising from such matter is not any consideration: but as to the other exception, because it is not shewed how, and by what title he took the profits, it is well enough. As unto the other exception, it was moved at another day, that there was a case betwixt Stone and Withypool; an infant promiseth to pay a simple contract, and thereupon there was a suit in the Chancery, but it was holden that it was not maintainable, for the promise was void, because there was no consideration. And it was agreed by all the justices, that this action would not lie; for the plaintiff hath declared, that where certain controversies were betwixt the father of the defendant and him, (scil.) the plaintiff himself, for the profits of certain lands, which the father of the defendant had taken in the time of the father of the plaintiff, &c. and he doth not shew, that he himself is heir or executor of his father, and therefore the Chancery cannot give him any remedy: and on the other side, if the plaintiff had any remedy, the same ought to be against the executors of the father of the defendant; and the plaintiff hath not alledged, that the defendant is executor to his father, and therefore he hath not any colour of suit against him, nor therefore is there any consideration. Fenner, The defendant by the law is not chargeable, nor in conscience, upon this matter he shall be charged; for by the same reason he should be charged for the simple contract of his father, and a promise to pay it will not bind him: and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

CXXXIV. Veal and Robert's Case.

In an ejectione firmæ, the plaintiff declared, how that John Veal leased to him, 30 Eliz. for twenty one years ten acres of land called M. The defendant pleaded, that before the demise and ejectment, one John Roberts was seised of the said ten acres called M. in fee, and 14 Eliz. demised the same to one John Cox for life, and afterwards 25 Elizab. [106] John Roberts dyed, and the reversion descended to the now defendant; Cox demised the land to John Veal for thirty years, who leased unto the plaintiff, as in the declaration, of which he was possessed quousque, &c. Cox dyed 30 Eliz. after whose death the defendant entred and ejected prout was lawfull for him to do, &c. The defendant by replication saith, that before John Roberts had any thing, one Wall of P. of Glocester was seised of the said ten acres inter alia, and 29 H. 8. demised to John Veal, father of the lessor of the plaintiff, the said land inter alia, by the name of two messuages and two yard lands in the county of Glocester, nuper in tenura J. S. and of two other houses and a yard land tunc in tenura E. H. nec non de ten acres vocat. M. lying inter C. & J. tunc in occupatione E. W. for term of years yet during, habendum dict. four messuages and three yard lands, in tenura J. S. & E. H. nec non the said ten acres to the said John Veal, à tempore mortis sur sum redditionis forisfactur. vel determinationis status vel terminor. prædict. J. H. & W. in eisdem, for sixty years; by force of which he was possessed of the interest of the term aforesaid: and afterwards 14 Eliz. the estate of the said E. W. in the said ten acres ended, for which the said John Veal entred, and 25 Eliz. dyed intestate; and administration was committed to J. S. lessor of the plaintiff, by force of which he entred, and leased to the plaintiff, and so he was possessed untill ejected: the defendant did rejoyn, and said, that long before John Roberts had any thing, William Roberts was seised in fee, and enfeoffed the said John Roberts before the ejectment supposed, who demised unto John Cox, and so as in the bar, absque hoc, that the said abbat demised to the said John Veal, modo and forma prout the plaintiff replicando allegavit, the which matter he is ready to aver, & petit judicium: the plaintiff said, that the abbat demisit ut supra, & hoc petit quod inquiratur per patriam: and it was found for the plaintiff. And it was objected by Snag, that this issue was not well taken, for the estate of John Veal was not to begin before all the estates, being in esse at the time of the making of the lease by the abbat of Glocester, are expired. Coventry contrary; and that the estates do begin severally, and singulatim, as the estates precedent shall end, and shall not expect untill the other estates be determined; which see Justice Needham's case, now reported by Coke, 5 part. 37 Eliz. and see Pollard's case there cited. At another day it was objected by Snag, that the new estate could not begin in any part untill all the former estates be determined; for if this new lease be made, reserving rent; and one part thereof is now come in possession, then he should pay for that part all the rent: but the Court was clear of opinion, that the lease in the ten acres did begin presently, without having regard to the other estates in demand, for the intent of the lessor was, that no mean time should be betwixt the expiration of the lease for ten years, and the beginning of the new: as in the case betwixt Wrotesley and Adams, 1 Eliz. Plo. Com. 198. A lease is made to begin after the expiration of a former lease for years; the first lessee takes a new lease of the lessor, which was a surrender of the former lease; if the lease, (scil.) the second lease, shall now begin? was the question: or should expect untill the first lease shall end by expiration, for the former lease is ended, but not expired, i. by effluction of time: and it was holden, that the said second lease should begin presently; for the intent of the lessor was that no mean time should be betwixt the end and beginning of the said estates. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

And to such a scire facias exception was taken, because the writ was coram nobis apud Westm. where it should be, ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia: and for that cause a supersedeas was granted. Egerton, Solicitor, moved, that the traverse was not good; for if a man be in prison in execution, and makes a promise to make a bond, for which he is inlarged, and within an hour after he makes the bond, the same is within the statute: and therefore this issue is not well joined, but it ought to be absque hoc, that it was pro deliberatione, &c. and of such opinion was Fenner and Gawdy, Justices: see Dive and Manningham's case, 4 E. 6. CXLIII. HOOPER'S CASE.

Hooper of Salisbury was brought to the bar, to wage his law in an action of debt, and upon examination, the matter appeared to be, that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff upon a simple contract, and upon communication betwixt them, it was agreed, that one J. S. should become bounden to the plaintiff in an obligation for the said debt, to be paid at a day certain, which J. S. became bound accordingly, and the defendant was also bound to the said J. S. in a counter-bond for to save him harmless against the plaintiff. And the Court was clear of opinion, that upon this matter, the defendant could not safely wage his law; for by this obligation, made by a stranger to the contract, the contract upon which the action is brought is not determined: and also here the obligation was made after the contract; but if J. S. had been bound, ut supra, upon the contract it had been otherwise; and upon that reason, the case of one Pudsey was adjudged. Where, upon the contract, a stranger to the contract being present, made promise to enter into a bond unto the party, &c. for the paiment of the money, agreed upon the contract, and afterwards became bounden accordingly; in that case the contract was determined, because the obligation was pursuant to the contract; and in the principal case, the Court would not admit the defendant to wage his law, although he earnestly desired it.

CXLIV. KNEVIT AND TAYLOR'S CASE.

Knevit enformed against Taylor in the Common Pleas, upon the Statute of Usury, and the parties were at issue, and the matter depended four terms untried after issue was joined; and now the defendant prayed, for his own expedition, that he might have nisi prius with proviso, as the course is in the Exchequer in such case, to send commissions into the countrey where the information is laid for the trial of the issue joined in the said Court, and that at the suit of the defendant. And it was much doubted, if the Court might grant such nisi prius, because the Queen is quodammodo a party to the suit. And by Fleetwood, Serjeant, the common course is so; but where the Queen herself is merely party, no such nisi prius shall be granted: and he said, that the informer might be nonsuit, although that the Queen be in such manner party. Nelson, Prothonotary, said, that he never saw such a precedent. See F. N. B. 241.

CXLV. ALFORD AND LEA'S CASE.

Alford brought debt upon a bond against Lea, and the case was, that the parties were bound the one to the other upon condition, to stand to the award of B. and C. who award, that the said Lea, before such a feast, shall make a release to Alford, but no place assigned where the release shall be delivered to the plaintiff. Lea, before the said feast, sealed a release according to the award, and delivered the same to one Pine, to the use of the plaintiff, who delivers it to one [111] Mason, one of the servants of Alford, the plaintiff, who two or three dayes after, offers it to Alford, but he refused it, it was holden by Wray, that the award upon this matter was well performed, notwithstanding the refusal of Alford, see Tawe's case, 1 Eliz. Dyer 167. A. enseals, quoddam scriptum obligat. and delivers the same to one C. for to deliver it to the obligee, who delivered it accordingly, as the deed of A. who refuseth to receive it; and after gets the obligation, and recovers upon it.

CXLVI. MARSH AND RAINSFORD'S CASE.

In an action upon the case: the case was, that a communication was had betwixt the parties, that the plaintiff should marry the daughter of the defendant, in consideration of which, the defendant promised the plaintiff to give him 200l. but they could not agree upon the days of payment of it, after which they stole away the defendant's daughter, and secretly married her, without the defendant's knowledge; yet afterwards the defendant gave his consent to it, and allowed of the said marriage; and in consideration of the said marriage, promised to pay the plaintiff 100l. Egerton, Solicitor General for the defendant, that the action upon this matter will not lie; for here the consideration is precedent to the promise, whereas the consideration in such cases, ought to be future and subsequent; and as the case is here, the plaintiff is out of the course of consideration of marriage; for he hath stolen away and married his wife, without the knowledge or consent of her father: see such case, 10 Eliz. Dyer 272. The servant of one A. is arrested in London, and two friends of his master bail him, and afterwards A. promiseth to them, for their friendship, to save them harmless from damages and costs, &c. It was holden that the action doth not lie, for here is not any consideration, for the bailment was of their own heads, and it is executed before the promise; but if the master before the enlargement of his servant had requested the plaintiff for to bail his servant, and he had so done, the action would have lien. Wrey, Justice, Although the consideration be precedent, yet if it were made at the instance of the other party, the action would have lien. But here the natural affection of the father to his daughter, is sufficient matter of consideration. If one cometh to a serjeant at law to have his counsel, and the serjeant doth advise him, and afterwards the client in consideration of such counsel, promiseth to pay him 20l. an action lieth for it. And so Popham said, it had been adjudged in the Exchequer: and it is the common practice in this Court, in consideration quod querens deliberasset to the defendant &c. He promiseth to pay him so much; and as it was late adjudged betwixt Style and Smith: if a physician, who is my friend, hearing that my son is sick, goeth to him in my absence, and helps and recovers him, and I being informed thereof, promise him in consideration, &c. ut supra, to give him 20l. an action will lie for the money; and afterwards in the principal case judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXLVII. Williams and Linford's Case.

Smith and Johnson's Case.

Williams brought an action upon the case against Linford, for slanderous words spoken of the plaintiff's land, viz. Williams is worth nothing, and do you think that the manor of D. is his? It is but a com-[112]-pact between his brother Thomas and him; and farther declared, that at the time of speaking of the words, he was in speech with one J. S. to give to the said J. S. the said manor of D. for his manor of K. and that by reason of the said slanderous words, the said J. S. durst not proceed in the said intended exchange. It was objected, that upon this matter, an action upon the case doth not lie; for the scandalous words were not spoken to him who was to be the purchasor of the said manor, but to a stranger. For in the case betwixt Smith and Johnson, Johnson was in speech with another to sell his lands to him; and Smith said to him who was to purchase them, Will you buy Johnson's land? Why, it is troubled with more charges and incumbances than it is worth. Wray, Justice, There is no difference, whether words be spoken to the party, or unto a stranger, for in both cases the title of the plaintiff is slandered, so as he cannot make sale of his lands: judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXLVIII. BAREFOOT AND LUTER'S CASE.

The case was, A. B. and C. joynt-tenants in fee, C. granted his part unto D. and afterwards A. B. and D. leased for years, rendring rent, and afterwards A. died, and they brought an action of debt for the rent reserved, and declared generally, and upon the evidence, the special matter appeared, that two parts of the rent did belong to B. and but the third part to D. And the opinion of the Court was; that the declaration ought to have been special upon the whole matter; for prima facie, it was conceived that each of the plaintiffs ought to have had the moiety of the rent, and that is a supposal of the declaration: but now upon the evidence, it appeareth to the contrary; so as the defendant nil debet, in that form; another matter was, the plaintiff declared of rent of a whole year, ended at the Feast of St. Michael last past, whereas the rent was not due at Michaelmas, as the plaintiff had declared, but the thirtieth day after.

CXLIX. BROWN AND ORDINACRE'S CASE.

Henry Brown, and Joice his wife, executors of Thomas Brown, brought an action upon the case against Van Ordinacre, alien, and declared, that where A. and B. were indebted to the testator, the defendant, in consideration that the testator respectuaret the said A. and B. pro solutione debiti prædict. per spacium unius septimanæ tunc proxime sequen. to pay the debt to the said plaintiffs, modo sequent. viz. one moyety within one week after, and the other moiety at the end of the said week; and farther declared, that the testator did forbear by the space of a week; and after imparlance, Joice was summoned, and severed. The defendant pleaded, that he did not promise, modo & forma prout prædict. Brown allegavit, and that it was alledged by both executors. And by a jury, de medietate linguæ, it was found for the plaintiff. It was objected by Coke, that here is not any issue, prout Brown querens allegavit, where in truth, it was alledged by both the executors, before severance, and not by Brown onely. Also here is not any sufficient consideration alledged; for the plaintiff hath declared, that he hath forborn by a week, without saying, next following, as the con-[113]-sideration is laid in the declaration; but that was not allowed, for so it shall be intended. It was also objected, that the declaration is contrary to it self; for it shewed, that in consideration that the testator should forbear for a week, he promised to pay him within a week; but that exception was not allowed: for the week, in the assumpsit, shall be construed, the week after the week in the consideration. Another exception was against the trial; for the defendant being an alien, the venire facias was to summon twelve persons, quorum quilibet eorum habeat 4l. in lands of annual rent, and that cannot be; for aliens cannot have lands, not being made denizens: by the common law before the statute of 27 E. 3. an alien by the grant of the King, might have an action depending betwixt him and a denizen, per medietatem linguæ, which see 22 E. 3. 14. and afterwards to make the same a general law, the statute of 27 E. 3. was made; but the same doth not extend to cases where the King was party, which defect was supplyed by the statute of 28 E. 3. cap. 13. Afterward came the stat. of 2 H. 5. by which it is enacted, that where the debt or damages amount to 10 marks every juror retorned for the trial, should be able to expend lands of the value of 40s. which was mischievous as to aliens; and for the remedy of that, the statute of 8 H. 6. cap. ult. was made, which took away the effect thereof, as unto aliens; then came the statute of 27 Eliz. which enacted, that every juror, &c. should expend 4l. lands, but that is where 40s. was required onely, and doth not extend to our case; and therefore the venire facias in our case, was not well awarded, to which it was said by the clarks, that after the stat. of 27 Eliz. it had always so been, to make the venire facias generally according to the statute; but that is not a thing material, and the sheriff needs not regard that: wherefore it was holden; that the venire facias in the principal case was well awarded.

CL. MINGEY AND EARL'S CASE.

In debt upon an obligation, the defendant pleaded, that the obligation was with condition, that whereas the defendant had sold to the plaintiff certain wood, growing upon certain lands, called S. in the county of Sussex. If the plaintiff might quietly take and enjoy the said woods; and if the ground whereupon it groweth be four miles from the town of Rye, that then, &c. And for plea he said, that the plaintiff had quietly taken and enjoyed the said wood, and that the said land, by the next high and usual way for carriages, is 4000 paces from the town of Rye, reckoning to every pace five foot; upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. Gawdy, Justice, For the computation of a mile, in common understanding, it is 1000 paces, and if it shall be counted by the common way, is the doubt; but the meaning of the parties was, that the plaintiff by felling of that wood, should not encur the damage of the statute of 23 Eliz. cap. 4. And the statute doth not respect the way of carriage, but that altogether, and to all intents, it be the distance of four miles betwixt the place where, &c. and the said town of Rye; and here it is not material which is the common and usual way to Rye for carriages; but the nearness of the place where, &c. Quomodocunque, is the matter; and therefore the defendant ought to have pleaded, that the place where, &c. is every way distant four miles from Rye; and as to that, that he hath answered four miles, with 4000 paces, the same is well enough; for although he doth not answer directly the words; yet if he doth [114] answer in effect, it is well enough; for 1000 paces, and a mile, are all one in substance: Wray, The distance shall be accounted the nearest way, not as a bird may fly.

CLII. WELLOCK AND HAMMON'S CASE.

This case is reported by Sir Edw. Coke, in his 3 reports: see the principal case there. Here is a limitation, and not a condition; for if it should be a condition, it should descend to the heir at the common law, which is the devisee, and so shall be extinct in his person, and then the restraint is of no effect, for there shall be then no means to compell the heir who hath the land, to pay the legacies, nor have the legatories any remedy to compell the son to pay the legacies, which shall not have effect, if it be not taken by way of limitation: and to that intent, Scholasticas case was cited, 15 Eliz. Dyer, 317. And this word, paying, in a devise, shall never be construed to be a condition. And it was holden by the justices, that where a man deviseth lands to his younger son, paying such a sum unto such, the devisee hath a fee-simple; and if he do not pay the monies accordingly, his estate shall determine, by the same limitation, and shall go to the heir without any other limitation, and the quantity of the monies, be it great or small, is not material: and they were of opinion also, that here the monies were not payable, but upon request: Coke, If a man be bound to perform covenants, and one covenant is to pay legacies, there he needs not pay them without a demand; but where one is expresly bounden to pay such a legacy, there he must pay it at his peril. And he said, that the case, 28 H. 8. Dyer 33. is not law; for there it is holden by Fitz-herbert and Baldwin, that where land was devised unto the prior, and convent of S. Barthol. ita quod reddant annuatim Decano & Capitulo Sancti Pauli. 5l. and they fail of payment of it, that their estate shall cease, and the dean and chapter, &c. shall have, &c. such conditions void. And that upon one fee-simple, another fee-simple cannot be limited; for by Coke, Common experience is otherwise, that upon a fee-simple determinable, another fee-simple may be limited; which Gawdy, Justice granted: and as to the principal case, judgment was given, with the limitation.

The defendant pleaded, that the custome of the realm of England is, that the Lord Admiral for the time being, might grant the said office, and that such grant should be good but for the life of the grantor; and shewed farther, that the Lord Clinton, Lord Admiral; granted the said office unto the plaintiff and the defendant, and died; and that the Lord Howard was appointed Lord Admiral, and that he 27 Eliz. granted the said office to one Wade, who ousted and interrupted him, before which time, the defendant did suffer the plaintiff to enjoy the said office, and to take the profits of it, upon [115] which the plaintiff did demur in Law, Coke argued for the plaintiff, that the plea of the defendant is not good; for he hath not entitled the Lord Admiral to grant the office; for he hath said, that the custome of the realm of England is, and that cannot be good, for it cannot be tried; for a visne cannot be from the realm of England: also if it lie through all the realm, then the same is common law, and not custome, which see, Br. Custome 59. and see 4 & 5 Ph. & Ma. 152, 153. an express case of the same office, and there he prescribed, per consuetudinem in curia, &c. and also that such grant is good but during the life of the admiral who granteth it: also he doth not answer to any time after the grant of the Admiral Howard; for if we were lawfully put out by Wade, yet the defendant against his bond, shall not put us out, or interrupt us: as 5 E. 4. 115. A. brought an action of covenant; the defendant pleaded, that before the day of payment the plaintiff ousted B. of his farm: it was moved by Godfrey, that it was no plea, because this is a collateral sum, and not for rent issuing out of land: also the defendant is a stranger to the contract for the farm: but the opinion of the Court was to the contrary; for the defendant hath covenanted, that the lessee shall pay for the said farm and occupation 40l. so it is as a conditional covenant, and here is quid pro quo; and here the consideration upon which the covenant is conceived (scil.) the farm, and the occupation of it, is taken away by the act of the plaintiff himself.

Perce, upon speech of a marriage to be had betwixt the said Anthony, and the mother of Margaret, covenanted by indenture with certain friends of the mother, to pay to all the daughters of the mother 20l. a piece at their several ages of four and twenty years, and to perform the covenant, was bound to the said friends in an obligation. Anthony Perce made his will, and willed, that his executors should pay to each of the daughters 20l. at their several ages of four and twenty years, in discharge of the said covenant, and died; now the said Margaret sued the executors in the Spiritual Court for the 20l. bequeathed to her, and upon this matter, the executors prayed a prohibition: and by the Lord Anderson, a prohibition will lie; for here is no legacy, but the will refers to the covenant, and is in discharge of the covenant: as if A. be indebted to B. in 20l. And if A. by his will willeth that his executors shall pay to the said B. 20l. in discharge of the said debt, the same is not any legacy, but a declaration that the intent of A. is, that the debt shall be paid. Periam, Justice, was of the same opinion as the Lord Anderson; and Anderson said, if a legacy be bequeathed to me, and the executor covenants to pay [120] me the said legacy, and afterwards J. sueth the executor in the Spiritual Court, he shall have a prohibition; quod cæteri justiciarii negaverunt, see F. N. B. 44 Br. If the testator by his will charge his executors to pay his debts and his creditors, they do not pay them, and the creditors sue them in the Spiritual Court, they shall not have a prohibition, which Anderson vehementer negavit; and afterwards the justices looked and advised upon the indenture, and found that the indenture and obligation were made to the friends of the mother of the daughters, and not to the daughters themselves, to whom the legacies were give and bequeathed; and therefore were of opinion, that a prohibition did not lie.

CLXV. THORP AND TOMSON'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ, it was found by special verdict, that one Thimblethorp was seised of the lands where, &c. and by contract, sold the same to Thorp, but no assurance was yet made; and afterwards, Thorp before any assurance made, sold likewise the said lands to Tomson, and afterwards, Thimblethorp made assurance thereof to Tomson, and afterwards Tomson being seised, devised the lands to his younger son, by these words: I bequeath to R. my son, all the lands which I purchased of Thorp, whereas, in speaking the truth according to law, he purchased them by immediate assurance of Thimblethorp, although he did contract with Thorp for the same; and the opinion of the whole Court was without argument either at bar, or at the Bench; that the devise was good; for in the repute of the people, they preseised of Thorp, for Tomson paid the monies for the same to Thorp, and the Court commanded judgment to be entred accordingly: and afterwards exception was taken to the verdict, because it is not found by what service the land devised was holden, socage, or knight-service; nor that the devisor is dead; and these were holden to be material exceptions, and for that cause, the judgment was stayed, and afterwards the verdict was rejected, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

CLXVI. GROVE AND SPARRE'S CASE.

An action of trespass was brought by Grove against Sparre, process continued untill Sparre was outlawed; and now it was moved unto the Court, to avoid the outlawry, that the original writ, and all the judicial process thereupon are directed Vicecom. Wigorn. and in the filazar's roll, in the margent is written, Hereford, and in the body of the said roll is written, Et prædictus Grove obtulit se quarto die post, et vicecomes modo mandat. quod prædictus Spar non est inventus, &c. Ideo præceptum est vicecom. &c. and at the capias retorned, it is entred in the roll as before, Hereford: whereas the capias is directed Vicecom. Wigorn. as of right it ought to be: and the roll was perused by the Court, and it was, ut supra, and that without any suspicion of rasure; for which the Court gave day to the Queens Serjeants to advise themselves to maintain the outlawry; and the defendants council prayed, that a recordatur be made in what estate the roll now is, for doubt of amendment by way of rasure, or otherwise; which was granted by the Court.

CLXVII. RUSHTON'S CASE.

See this Case vouched in C. 4 part, in Palmer's Case.

Rushton was indebted to the Queen in 200 marks, upon which issued an extent against him out of the Exchequer to levy the said sum to the sheriff of Suffolk; and it was found by inquisition, that Rushton 22 Junii, 22 Eliz. was possessed of a lease for the term quorundam annorum adhuc venturorum; and the debt of the Queen did begin 12 Febr. 17 Eliz. Exception was taken to this office, because that the term is not certainly found but generally quorundam annorum; and it was said by Coke, that the office was good, notwithstanding that exception, for the Queen is a stranger to the lease, and therefore ought not to be forced to find the precise certainty; which see in Partridge's case in Plowd. The defendant had made a lease pro termino quorundam annorum contra formam statuti: also Rushton came not to the lease by contract, but by compulsary means, as by execution, &c. And here we are not in the case of pleading, but of an office, where such precise form is not requisite: as if it be found by office, that J. S. was seised in tail, without shewing of whose gift the same was, it is good; so an indictment, de morte cujusdam hominis ignoti, the same is good, but such endictment taken before the coroner, is not good: and that a lease for years may be extended, see 21 Ass. 6. If a man be indebted to the Queen, being a lessee for years, and afterwards before any extent comes, sells his term, the same cannot be extended after. And here it appears, that this lease was to begin at a day to come, and that the lessee did enter before the day, by which he was a disseisor; and so he said he had lost his term. Tenant for the life of another is disseised, and dieth, he remains a disseisor, and the occupancy doth not qualifie such disseisin: and afterwards the inquisition for the incertainty aforesaid was holden void, and a new commission was awarded.

CLXVIII. HOLLAND AND BOIN'S CASE.

In a replevin by Thomas Holland against William Boin's, who made conusans, as bailey to Thomas, Lord Howard, and shewed, that the prioress of the late dissolved priory of Hollywell was seised of the manor of Priors in the county of Hertford, and granted the same by words of dedi & concessi pro certa pecuniæ summa, to Thomas Audley, Chancellor of England, and his heirs, who entred and died seised, and that the said manor, inter alia, descended to Mary, daughter and heir of the said Thomas Audley, who entred, and also died seised, by force whereof the said manor descended to the said Thomas Lord Howard, &c. and shewed, that the said conveyance, by the prioress to Audley bore date 4 Novemb. 29 H. 8. and then enrolled in the Chancery. The plaintiff in bar of the avowry, shewed, that after the making and enrolling of the said conveyance, the said prioress leased the said land to Sir H. Parker for 99 years, and conveyed the said land to him, and shewed farther, that the said conveyance specified in the conusans was primo deliberatum, 4 Nov. 31. H. 8. Absque hoc, that the said prioress, the said 4 Novembris, 29 H. 8. dedit & concessit, the said manor to the said Audley, upon which it was demurred in law; and the Court was clear of opinion, that the averment of primo deliberatum, [122] against a deed enrolled ought not to be averred, for by the same reason it may be averred never delivered, and so upon the matter, non est factum: and it was farther objected, that bargain and sale by a corporation is not good; for a corporation cannot be seised to another use, and the nature of such conveyance is to take effect by way of use in the bargainee, and after the statute to draw the possession to the use; but the Court utterly rejected that exception was dangerous, for such was the conveyance of the greater part of the possessions of monasteries: and by Shuttleworth Serjeant, Although such a corporation cannot take an estate to the use of another, yet they may charge their possessions with an use to another.

Note, Pasch. 30 Eliz. it was adjudged for the plaintiff in the replevin; (scil.) the conveyance of the prioress was not well pleaded; for it ought to be plead as a bargain and sale, and not as a grant: and judgment was given accordingly.

MICH. 28 & 29 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH.

CLXIX. VENABLE'S AND SERJEANT HARRIS'S CASE.

The case was, a lease was made to A. and B. for their lives, the remainder to Thomas Venables in tail, who 3 Eliz. was attainted of felony; 23 Eliz. was a general pardon: Thomas Venables 24 Eliz. levied a fine, and suffered a common recovery to the use of Harris Serjeant. An office is found, Harris traverseth the office, and upon that there is a demurrer. Leke argued, that traverse doth not lie in this case: 4 H. 7. 7. where the King is entitled by double matter of record, the party shall not be admitted to traverse, nor to his monstrans de droit, but is put to his petition, which see, 3 E. 4. 23. in the case of the Earl of Northumberland, where the tenant of the King is attainted of treason, and the same found by office: see also 11 H. 4. in the case of the Duke of Suffolk, and that is not helped by the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 8. for the words are untruly found by office, but here the office is true. By this attainder, Thomas Venables is utterly disabled to do any act; for by Bracton, a person attaint, shall forfeit patriam, regnum & hæreditatem suam: 11 H. 4. one was attainted of felony, and before office found, the King granted over his lands: also he is not helped by the general pardon; for before the general pardon, he had a special pardon, so as the general pardon non operatur. But the justices said, the forfeiture did remain untill the general pardon. Harris, contrary; And he put the case of Sir James Ormond, 4 H. 7. 7. where the King is entitled by matter of record, and the subject confesseth the King's title, and avoids it by matter of as high nature as that is for the King, traverse in that case lieth: and if the King be entitled by double matter of record, if the party doth avoid one of the said records by another record, he shall be admitted to his traverse; and so here we have the pardon, which is a record, and that shall avoid the record of the King: see 3 E. 4. 24. in the Earl of Northumberland's case; and here the pardon hath purged the forfeiture, in respect of the offence: and he said, tenant in tail being attainted of felony, shall not lose his lands, but the profits onely, for he hath his estate by the will of the donor, and there is a confidence reposed in him: as in Walsingham's case, he cannot grant his estate over: and see Wrothe's case; an annuity granted, pro consilio impendendo cannot be granted over or forfeited, for there is confidence: and see Empson's case, and Dyer 2. 29 Ass. 60. If the issue in tail be outlawed of felony in the life of his father, and getteth his charter of pardon in the life of his father, after the death of his father he may enter; but by Thorp, if the issue in tail getteth his charter of pardon after the death of his father, then the King shall have the profits of the lands during the life of the issue: and the case of [123] Cardinal Pool was debated in the Parliament, 27 Eliz. that he being Dean of Exeter, was seised of lands in the right of his church, and was attainted of treason: it was holden, that he should forfeit the profits of such lands: but admit, that by this attainder the land be forfeited, yet the party hath the freehold until office found: see Nicols's case in the Commentaries: and see also the case of the Dutchy in the first Commentaries. And here the pardon hath dispensed with the forfeiture. Tenant of the King alieneth in mortmain, before office found, the King pardons it, this is good. The Lord Poynings conveyed all his lands to Sir Adrian Poynings, who was an alien, and afterwards is made a denizen, and the King pardons him, and releaseth unto him all his right in the said lands without any words of grant; and it was adjudged, the same shall bind the King. And he said, that he had found a good precedent, 14 H. 7. where a general pardon before seisure into the King's hands was allowed, contrary after seisure without words of grant. See Br. 29 H. 8. Charter of Pardon 52. If a man be attainted of felony, and the King pardons him all felonies, & executiones eorundem, the same shall not serve for life and land, if no office be found, but it shall serve for the goods without words of restitution and grant; for the King is entituled to them by outlawry without office, but the King is not entituled to the lands untill office be found: see ibid. 33 H. 8. 71. The heir intrudes, and before office found the King pardons; now the heir is discharged as well of the issues and profits, as of the intrusion it self, and also of livery: but a pardon given after office is available for the offence, but not for the issues and profits: and he cited the case of Cole in the first Commentaries, where a pardon was granted mesne betwixt the stroke and the death: see 35 H. 6. 1. 1 E. 4. 1. 8 Eliz. Dyer 249. Brereton's case, 11 Eliz. Dyer 284, 285.

Egerton, Solicitor to the contrary; This traverse is not good; for he that traverseth, hath not made title to himself as he ought, upon which the Queen may take issue; for it is at the election of the Queen to maintain her own title, or traverse the title of the party. At the common law, no traverse lay but where the livery might be sued;

but that is helped by the statute of 34 E. 3. cap. 14. but where the King is entituled by double matter of record (as in our case he is) no traverse is allowed until 2 E. 6. cap. 8. And in such case two things are requisite: 1. That the office be untruly found: 2. That the party, who is to be admitted to his traverse, have just title or interest of estate of freehold, &c. But in our case, the office is confessed by the traverse to be true, although that the conveyance be not truly found: also Harris, at the time of the office found, had not just title but an interest came unto him long time after the office found: also the traverse is not good, for he traverseth the matter of the conveyance, which is not traversable; for if the King hath title, non refert quomodo, or by what conveyance he hath it. As to the matter in law (scil.) tenant in tail in remainder is attainted of felony, if the King during the life of tenant in tail shall have the freehold: and he conceived that he should, for it shall not be in abeyance, and it cannot be in any other; for when he is attainted, he is dead as unto the King. The chief lord cannot have it, for tenant for life is alive, and also he in the remainder in fee, &c. the donor shall not have it, for the tenant in remainder is not naturally dead, but civilly: and the land cannot revert before the tenant in tail be naturally dead without issue: but if there were any other in whom the freehold might vest and remain, then the King should not have the freehold, but onely the profits. So if the tenant be attainted, the lord shall have the lands presently; 3 E. 3. 4 E. 3. The husband, seised in the right of his wife, is attainted of felony; the King shall have but the profits, for the freehold vests in the wife, and if the lord entreth, [124] the wife shall have an issise. And tenant in tail may forfeit for his life, as he may grant for his life: see old N. B. 99. If tenant in tail, for life, dower, or by the curtesie, be attainted of felony, the King shall have the lands during their lives; and after their deceases, he in the reversion shall sue unto the King by petition, and shall have the lands out of the King's hands: and there it is farther said, that the lord by escheat cannot have it, for the party attainted was not his very tenant, nor he in the reversion, for the term yet endures. But now it is to see, if the freehold be in the King without office: and he conceived and argued, that it was: where the King is entituled to an action, there the King ought to have an office, and a scire facias upon it: as where the King is entituled to a cessavit, action of waste, &c. 14 H. 7. 21. where the entry in case of a common person is necessary, there it is requisite that there be an office for the King: as if a villain of the King purchaseth lands, or an alien born, &c. so for a condition broken, mortmain, &c. And in some cases, an office is onely necessary to instruct the King how he shall charge the officer for the profits which may be supplied as well by survey, as by office: as if the King be to take by descent, or as the case is here. And true it is, that a person attainted of felony may during his attainder purchase lands, and yet he cannot hold it against the King: and it is clear, that by the common law in such cases, the land was in the King, but not to grant, for the statute of 18 H. 6. was an impediment to it: but now that defect is supplied by the statute of 31 H. 8. cap. 20. So that now the King may grant without office: see Doughtie's case, 26 Eliz. And in our case an office is not necessary to entitle the King, but for explaining of his title: and see 9 H. 7. 2. The lands of a man attainted of high treason are in the King without office; so where the King's tenant dieth without heir; or tenant in tail of the gift of the King dieth without issue: see Br. Office before the Escheator 34. and see 13 H. 4. 270. A man is attainted of treason, the King before office grants his lands and goods. Things which lie in grant, as advowsons, rents, remainder, such things upon attainder are in the King without office. As to the general pardon of 23 Eliz. he said, that that doth not extend to this case; and that this interest of the Queen by this attainder doth not pass by that pardon out of the Queen, so if the Queen had but a right or title onely.

Popham, Attorney General; By this attainder the estate of him in the remainder in tail, accrueth unto the Queen for the life of him in the remainder; for by our law, felony is punished by the death of the offendor, and the loss of his goods and lands for the examples of others, therefore nothing is left in the party: tenant for life is attainted of felony, the King pardoneth him his life, yet he shall have his lands during his life, and he may dispose of the same for his life: and so is it of tenant in tail, for he may forfeit all that which he hath, and that is an estate for his life, which is a freehold. If lands be given to one and his heirs for the term of the life of another, and the donee be attainted of felony, the King shall have the land during the life of cestuy que vie, for the heir cannot have it, because the bloud is corrupt, and there is not any occupancy in the case: for 17 E. 3. the justices would not accept of a fine for the life of another, because there might be an occupant in the case: but for a fine of land to one and his heirs for the life of another, they would take a fine, for there is no mischief of occupancy. Land is given to A. for life, the remainder to B. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of A. who is attainted of felony; B. dieth, now the King hath the fee executed. And here in our case, if the tenant for life had been dead, no præcipe had lien against him in the remainder [125] being in possession, but the party who hath right is to sue unto the King by petition. 4 E. 3. If one seised of lands in the right of his wife for life be attainted, the King shall have exitus & proficua: but he conceived that case not to be law: for see F. N. B. 254. D. The husband seised in the right of his wife in fee, is outlawed for felony, the King seiseth, the husband dieth; now shall issue forth a diem clausit extremum, the words of which writ in such case are, quia A. cujus terr. & tenement, quæ ipse tenuit de jure & hæreditate N. uxoris suæ adhuc superstitis occasione ejusdem utlagar' in ipsum pro quadam felonia unde indictatus fuit, &c. in man. domini H. patris nostri extiterunt, &c. therefore the King had not the issues onely, but also the lands: see to the same purpose the Register 292. b. Stamford's Placita Coronæ, 186, 187. affirms, that tenant in tail being attainted of felony, shall forfeit his lands during his life. And he said, that the estate of Thomas Venables was in the King without office not to grant, for that is restrained by the statute of 18 H. 6. but it is in him before office, so as he who hath right ought to sue to the King by petition, if he will have his land: yet he conceived, that before the statute of 18 H. 6. the King might grant the land before office, as it appeareth by Thirning, 13 H. 4. 278. who was before the said statute: so if the King's tenant makes a lease for years, the remainder over to another in fee, who dieth without heir; the remainder is in the King without office, because a common person in such case cannot enter, but a claim is sufficient, and therefore it shall be in the King without office. As to the pardon, he said, that it doth not extend to this estate, for this is a freehold, ergo, not within the pardon: as if the King's tenant be attainted of felony, and the King pardons him all offences, and all things which he may pardon, these words shall not go nor extend to freeholds, but onely unto personal matters, and such punishments and peins which do concern chattels. But it may be objected, that by this pardon, title of quare impedit, and re-entries for conditions broken are excepted; and therefore if they had not been excepted, they had been remitted by the pardon; and therefore this pardon shall extend to inheritances and freeholds: as to that, I say, that such exceptions were not in use in the time of H. 4. and yet inheritances and freeholds were not taken to be within such pardons, and such exceptions did begin 5 Eliz. And he said, he had been of council in such cases where it hath been taken, that such pardons did not extend to freeholds: as an abbat was disseised, and afterwards during the disseisin the abby is dissolved; the King makes such pardon, the same doth not transfer the right of the King, and in that pardon are divers exceptions of goods and chattels in many cases, and therefore it cannot be intended that the pardon doth extend to freeholds. And see the said Act of pardon: the Queen grants all goods, chattels, debts, fines, issues, profits, amercements, forfeitures, sums of moneys; which word [forfeiture] shall be intended of a personal forfeiture, & non aliter, for it is coupled with things of such nature. And as to the traverse, he said, it did not lie in this case; for the office is not untrue, but true in substance, although void in circumstance: and also the King here is entituled by double matter of record, (scil.) the attainder and the office: and he said that the statutes of 34 and 36 E. 3. which gave traverse, are are to be intended of offices found virtute officii, and not virtute brevis, for then escheators were very troublesome: and the statute of 2 E. 6. doth not give traverse, but where the office is untruly found; as if tenant of the King be disseised, and the disseisor be attainted; the Queen seiseth the land: now the disseisee hath not remedy by traverse upon the statute of 2 E. 6. but is put to his monstrans de droit, for the office is true: but if I [126] be tenant of the King, and seised of land accordingly, and it was found that J. S. was seised of my land, and attainted, &c. whereas in truth he had not any thing in my land, there traverse lieth, for the office is false; and so in our case, for the traverse it is at the common law: and it was true that Venables was seised.

Coke to the contrary; and he said, that by the attainder the Queen hath gained but a chattel; and that notwithstanding this forfeiture, if Venables had been in possession, a præcipe should be brought against him: and where it hath been said by Mr. Attorney, that writs set down in the register are the best expositours of our law, the same is not so; for the register saith, that waste lieth notwithstanding a mesn remainder, which is not now law, but it hath been clearly ruled to the contrary: and see accordingly 50 E. 3. the register therefore and the writs are subject to the judgment of our law; and the writ of diem clausit extremum is not to the contrary; for I confess, that in such case the land shall be seised into the hands of the King, but the King shall not have but a chattel therein: it hath been argued, it may be granted, therefore it may be forfeited; nego consequentiam: for a man seised in the right of his wife, may grant, but not forfeit: gardian in socage may grant, but not forfeit; the husband may grant a term for years, which he hath in the right of his wife, but he cannot forfeit it. A woman inheretrix taketh a husband, who afterwards is attainted of felony, the King pardons him, they have issue, the husband shall be tenant by the curtesie, which proveth, that the King hath not the freehold by that attainder. Before the statute of Westm. 2. tenant in tail, post prolem suscitatam, might forfeit his lands, but now the statute hath so incorporated the estate tail to the tenant in tail, that it cannot be devested, even a fine levied by him ipso jure nullus, although as to the possession it be a discontinuance; and that is the reason wherefore tenant in tail shall not be seised to another's use. See Stamford 190. The husband seised in the right of his wife is attainted of felony, the King shall have the profits of the lands of the wife during the life of the husband, &c. So if tenant in tail be attainted of felony, and that is but a chattel in the lands of the wife, and also in the lands of the tenant in tail: and if the possessions of a bishop be seised into the Queen's hands for a contempt, in such case the Queen hath the possession, and not the profits onely: the same law of the lands of tenant in tail, or for life, being attainted of felony: so of seisure for alienation without license, or of the possessions of priors, aliens. See Brook Reseiser 10. So where the seisure is for ideocy. And he said, that in the principal case nothing is in the King until office: and as to the case of 13 H. 4. 6. he confessed the same; for at that time many, and amongst them lawyers and justices, were attainted by Parliament, and so was Sir John Salisbury, whose case it was; and their lands by Act of Parliament given expresly to the King: and therefore I grant that their lands were in the King before office. Tenant in fee of a common lord is attainted of felony, his lands remain in him during his life until the entry of the lord, and where the King is lord untill office be found: but in the case of a common person, after the death of the person attainted, they are in the lord before entry, and in the case of the King before office, for the mischief of abeyances. And see the Lord Lovel's case, 17 and 18 Eliz. 485, 486. Plow. where it is holden, that upon attainder of treason by Act of Parliament, the lands were not in the King without office in the life of the party attainted, upon the words of the Act, shall forfeit. See Stamford Prerogat. 54, 55. acc. He said, that this interest which came unto the King by this attainder, is but a chattel, and then it is remitted by the pardon; and so he conceived, if it be a freehold: for the words of the [127] general pardon are large and liberal [pardon and release all manner of treasons, &c. and all other things, causes, &c.] and here forfeitures are pardoned; and this word [things] is a transcendent, &c. and although it be a general word, yet by the direction of the Act of General Pardon it ought to be beneficially expounded and extended, as if all things had been specially set down: also the words are [pardon them and their heirs,] therefore the pardon extends to inheritance, for otherwise there is no use of that: and he conceived, that by the first branch of this Act, that the same extends to inheritances, and to acquit the lands of all incumbrances, for every offence not excepted, for there is the word [heirs,] and the third branch concerns onely chattels, and that is by the word [grant,] where the first is by words of acquittal: see 33 H. 8. br. Charter of Pardon 71. Tenant of the King dieth seised, the heir intrudes, office is found; by pardon of Parliament all intrusions are pardoned; in that case the offence is pardoned, but not the issues and profits of the lands; but by a pardon before all is pardoned. But here in our case the office is not void; for the statute makes all precepts, commissions, &c. void, being awarded upon such forfeiture. See also in the second branch, vexed or inquieted in body, goods, or lands: and see also among the exceptions, that persons standing indicted of wilfull murther, and forfeiture of goods, lands, tenements, grown by any offence by such person: by which he said, that if such exception had not been, the land of such person, if he had been attainted upon such indictment, should be forfeited: as to the traverse, he said, that because the office is true, our plea is in the nature of monstrans de droit, although it concludes with a traverse: we vary from the office in number of the persons, and in the day of feoffment, and every circumstance in case of the King is to be traversed, and our plea in substance confesseth and avoideth the offence. Although that here the King be intituled by double matter of record, (scil.) the attainder and the office: yet one of the said records, (scil.) the attainder, is discharged by another record, (scil.) the pardon, and then but one record remains, (scil.) the office, and therefore our traverse well lieth. And he said, that by the common law there was a traverse; as where it was found by office, that the lessee of the King had committed waste, or had cessed for two years; and that in such case the lessee and tenant, in an action brought against them, may traverse the offence; therefore there was a traverse at the common law, where the King was entitled by single matter of record: so upon office finding alienation without licence, there was a traverse by the common law: see traverse in such case in the case of William de Herlington, 43 Ass. 28. See Br. Traverse of Office 54. Petition is by the common law, and traverse by the statute: Frowick in his Reading. See Stamf. Prerogat. 60. That traverse in case of goods was at the common law, but for lands by office, by 34 E. 3. 14. for before the remedy was by petition. See Co. 4. part the Sadler's case 55, 56. Traverse was at the common law concerning freehold and inheritance, but that was in special cases, (scil.) when by the office the land is not in the King's hands, nor the King by that is in possession, but onely by the office is entitled to an action, and cannot make a seisure without suit, for there in a scire facias brought by the King in the nature of such action to which he is entitled, the party may appear to the scire facias, and traverse the office by the common law. It was adjourned.

CLXX. SCOTT AND SCOTT'S CASE.

In a replevin, betwixt Scott and Scott, the case was, George Scott, 2 H. 8. being tenant in tail of certain lands, suffered a common recovery to the use of his last will; and 15 H. 8. made his will, by which he did declare, that the recoverors should make a good and favourable lease to Hugh Scott his younger brother: and 25 H. 8. they make a lease of the same land to the said Hugh for 199 years according to the will of the said George Scott, rendring rent, 11l. 6s. 8d. payable at the Feast of the Annunciation and S. Michael, by equall portions, and that to the recoverors, their heirs and assigns; and there was a covenant, that after the death of the recoverors, the said rent should be paid to cestuy que use, his heirs and assigns, any thing in the said indenture notwithstanding. Proviso, that if the lessee make his heir male his assignee of that term, that then he shall pay the said rent to the recoverors, their heirs and assigns, and the lessee shall not pay the rent to the heirs of cestuy que use, upon which a distress is taken, and thereupon a replevin brought. Drew argued for the plaintiff: When a condition is created, the law saith, that it shall be taken and construed favourably in the behalf of him who is to perform it: as if one be bounden to appropriate such a church to such a house before such a day at his own costs, and the obligor grants a pension out of the said parsonage, and afterwards appropriates the said church, it was holden that the condition was well performed, 3 H. 7. 4. A lease for years upon condition, to scowre the ditches, if the lessee scowreth them once, it is well enough; and as to this word proviso, it is to see, if here it be a word conditional: in some cases, this word pro, makes a condition, as 45 E. 3. 8. Grant of a ward, pro bono servitio, if the grantee departeth out of his service, the grant is void: so if an annuity be granted unto a physician pro consilio impendendo, the same is a condition, 41 E. 3. 6. for the grantor hath not means to compell the grantee to give his council; but in some cases, this word pro, doth not make a condition: as if before the statute of West. 3. land was given pro homagio suo, there, if the homage be not done, the feoffor could not re-enter, but he ought to distrain. And I conceive, that in our case, proviso doth not make a condition. 7 H. 6. 44. A feoffment in fee with warranty, proviso, that the feoffee shall not vouch: so a grant of a rent-charge, proviso, that the grant shall not extend ad onerand. personam of the grantor; for here the proviso is rather an exception than a condition: a lease for years without impeachment of wast, proviso, that he shall not do voluntary wast, the same is a qualification of the liberty for doing wast. Grant of a manor, proviso, that it shall not extend to wood growing upon the manor, the same is an exception, not a condition. See the Bishop of York's case, 5 Eliz. Dyer 222. The said bishop made a lease for certain years of certain lands, proviso, quod tempore vacationis, the rent shall be paid to the chapter, it was holden that the proviso was not a condition. And here in this case, the will of George Scott was, that the recoverors should make to the said Hugh, a favourable lease, which cannot be, if it be a conditional lease; another point was; because the rent is not well demanded; for he hath demanded the whole rent of the year, whereas but half a years rent was onely due. Coke, contrary: Where the proviso is parcel of one sentence which contains a covenant, or abridgeth the covenant, there it shall not amount to a condition, but to an exception, as a grant of a rent-charge, [129] proviso, that he shall not charge the person, abridgeth the force of the grant: so a lease without impeachment of wast, proviso, that the feoffee shall not do voluntary wast, the same abridgeth the liberty; but in our case, this proviso makes a condition, and not a qualification of the sentence, or of any covenant contained in the sentence, nor doth it participate altogether with the sentence, but stands substantively, for it was a full sentence before: a feoffment in fee with warranty, proviso, that when he is impleaded, he shall not vouch J. S. the same is a good condition, for J. S. is a stranger: contrary, that he shall not vouch the feoffor: and a proviso never makes a covenant, and therefore it shall be either a condition, or void. And he said, that by the devise, Hugh Scott had a lease without any lease to be made by the recoverors. As unto the demand of the whole rent, where but half a years rent was due, the same is good enough. And so was it adjudged in a case betwixt Andrew's and the Lord Cromwell; for he is at his peril to pay the one moyety, and in as much as he denieth the whole, he denieth every part. It was adjorned.

CLXXI. HAWKINS'S CASE.

One Hawkins was seised of three messuages in Bury in his demesn as of fee, and had issue, Robert, Christian, and Joan; and devised all his said messuages to his wife for life, the remainder of one of the said messuages to his son Robert and his heirs; the remainder of another of his said messuages to his daughter Christian and to her heirs, and the remainder of the third messuage, to Joan and her heirs. And farther, by his will devised, that if any of the said issues die without issue of his body, that then the other surviving shall have totam illam partem, &c. between them equally to be divided. The devisor dieth, the wife of the devisor dieth, Joan dieth, having issue, Robert dieth without issue, Christian entreth into all the house of Robert, and dieth, and her husband holds in as tenant by the curtesie. Coke, The surviving child shall have the whole, and the issue of Joan shall have nothing; and he said, that by this devise, they have an estate in tail, for the fee doth not vest in any of them; for it is written, who shall survive: but when one overlives, he shall have in fee, for these words, totam illam partem, go to the whole estate, as well as to the whole land. I devise my land wholy to one, he hath fee thereby: and he said that the three devisees have fee-tail, and fee expectant each severally as to the messuage to him limited. Golding, contrary; Each hath an estate tail in the house devised to him, and but an estate for life, expectant upon the death of the other without issue, for there are no words by which it may appear what estate he shall have by the survivorship. I grant the case which Perkins denies, but Littleton affirms (scil.) a devise to one of lands in perpetuum; for there the intent appeareth; but where there are not words of inheritance, nor words amounting to so much, then it shall be but an estate for life: and as to the words, totam partem illam, the same is all one as if he had said, partem illam without the word totam. And also he said, that where one onely survives, no farther the estate vests; for there ought to be two to take by the survivor; for the words are, equally to be divided betwixt them, and then if it cannot accrue by survivor, then it shall descend; and if it had accrued to two by the survivor, they shall be thereof tenants in common, not joynt-tenants by reason of these words, equally to be divided. Clench, Justice, The words, totam illam partem, go to the house, and not to the estate in it: Shute, Justice, accordingly: and he [130] said, if both daughters had survived, they should have fee in the house of Robert, but not by the will, but by descent in coparcenary: also when two are dead, the son and one daughter, then it cannot be divided, therefore the will as to that is void, and then the common law shall take place, and put the house to the issue of one daughter, and of the other daughter surviving. Gawdy, Justice, Here is but an estate for life in the survivor; it hath been objected, that then having but an estate for life, the same estate is drowned by the descent of the fee-simple, so as now the estate limited by the will, is void; to which it may be answered, that although now, upon the matter it be void, yet, ab initio, it was not so; for it became void by matter of later time, (scil.) by the descent of the fee-simple; for if one of the daughters had died without issue before the death of Robert, so as the house of such daughter should have come to the said Robert and the other sister, there is no coparcenary, for the son hath all the fee, and the moyety of the same is executed, and the other moyety expectant, and the sister hath a moyety for life, and then the devise not void: also here are not two survivors, so nothing is to be divided, and therefore the law shall say, that the house of Robert is descended, (scil.) the fee of it to the daughter of Christian and Joan, and so judgment was given against the husband, who claims to be tenant by the curtesie of the whole messuage.

CLXXII. Wye and Throgmorton's Case.

In debt upon a bond by Wye, against Throgmorton, the condition of the obligation, was to perform covenants in a pair of indentures; and the covenant wherein the breach was assigned was, that if R. W. brother of the plaintiff, should say, make assurance of such a manor to the defendant, as the council learned of the said defendant should advise, then if the defendant pays unto the plaintiff 50l. the obligation to be void; the defendant by advice of council, demanded a release with warranty, &c. And by Periam and Windham, the same is not any assurance, but a means to recover in value. Anderson, contrary: That it was a collateral warranty, &c.

CLXXIII. Cropp and Hambleden's Case.

In trespass by Cropp against Erasmus Hambleden, upon the special verdict, the case was, that one Martin Hastings was seised of the lands, where, &c. in the right of his wife, for the life of the wife; and that they both did lease unto the defendant for years, rendring rent, payable at the Feast of S. Michael, and the Feast of the Annunciation, &c. with clause of re-entry, if the rent be behind, by a month after any of the said feasts, and after the Feast of S. Michael, 26 Eliz. and before the month expired, the lessee, the now defendant, sent his servant unto the house of the lessor, for to pay to him the rent then due; the servant went unto the house of the lessor, and there asked for him, to whom it was answered by one Mary Briggs, daughter of the wife of the lessor, who there dwelt in the said house with her mother, that the lessor was not at home, for which the said servant delivered the said rent to the said Mary, requiring her to deliver the same over to the lessor, upon his return to the house, in the name of his servant; [131] Mary received the said rent, and upon the return of the lessor, at his house, told him all the matter aforesaid, and that the servant of the lessor, the defendant, had required her to tender the said rent to the lessor, in the name of the defendant, and thereupon offered and tendered to him the said rent, and the lessor refused it. And the jury found, that the third half year before the tender mentioned before, the lessor commanded the said Mary to receive the rent then due, who did accordingly, and that the next half year then following, the said Mary did receive the said rent, without commandment of the lessor, but after the lessor agreed unto it, and that the immediate half year before this tender in question, the defendant paid the rent then due, to the lessor himself, who received it, and it was the opinion of Wray, Chief Justice, that this tender was good, and it is not like unto the case of an obligation; for there the obligee cannot have an action of debt before the last day: but here the lessor might have distrained, or have had an action of debt before the month expired, and so the lessor is bound by this tender; and by Gawdy, Justice, this tender cannot be said a tender by a stranger, for here Mary came in privity of the servant of the lessee, and as it is found by verdict, Mary tendered it to the lessor, as being requested by the servant of the lessee: and afterwards, upon consideration had betwixt the justices themselves; the justices viz. Clench, Gawdy and Wray, (for Shute was then sick) it was clearly resolved against the plaintiff, and that the said tender, as it is found in the verdict, is a good and sufficient tender; and the Lord Wray delivered the reason, as before, and farther said, that if the said rent had been reserved payable at the feasts aforesaid, or within a month after each of them, there the tender as above, had not been good, nor should bind the lessor; for in such case the lessor could not distrain, or have an action of debt for the said rent before the month expired. And this is a case of extremity, and deserves no favour; and here is no mischief to the lessor, for he might have had his rent in due time if he would, and his captious refusal shall not avail him; and judgment was given accordingly.

CLXXIV. Bostock and Covert's Case.

Bostock and his wife brought a writ of dower against Covert, son and heir of her former husband, who pleaded, that the husband of the demandant was seised of lands, amounting to the number of 300 acres; and held the same by knights-service, and died seised, after whose death, by virtue of the statute of 34 and 32 H. 8. he entred into 100 acres of the said lands, as the third part of the said lands descended, and held the same in severalty, being the third part of the clear yearly value of the whole discharged of dower; and that the wife ought to have all her dower out of the two parts devised. And Anderson said, that the plea was not good; for the heir who will take advantage of the statute in that point, ought to enter generally as tenant in common with the devisee, and then in a writ of dower it is a good plea: so if after his entry as tenant in common partition be made betwixt him and the devisee, such a plea is good; but here he hath entred severally into a third part, distinct from the residue, and so hath ousted the devisee of a third part severally; for which cause he cannot have advantage of this plea: to which the rest of the justices, non contradixerunt.

CLXXV. SIR JOHN SOUTHWEL'S CASE.

Sir John Southwel of the county of Lancaster, 7 Julii, 19 Eliz. made a conveyance of his lands to divers feoffees and their heirs, upon condition, that they should find him and his wife, and so many persons in his house, &c. prefer his daughters in marriage, pay his debts, &c. And if there fell out at the years end upon accompt made by the feoffees any surplusage, that then at the end of every such year, they should answer such surplusage as should then remain in their hands unexpended of the rents and profits of his said lands; with clause of revocation, &c. Afterwards, the said conveyance being in force, came the statute of 23 Eliz. concerning recusants; upon which statute, the said Southwel is now endicted; and afterwards upon a commission issuing out of the Exchequer to the Sheriff of Lancaster, to enquire of the lands of the said Southwel, although against the said conveyance it was given in evidence, that after the said conveyance, the said Sir John Southwel had granted trees from off the said lands, and had received fines and incomes for leases, &c. yet the jurors charged to enquire, would not find that the said Sir John Southwel had any lands, &c. And by special command from the Queen, it was referred out of the Exchequer, to all the Judges of England, if the lands of the said Sir John Southwel conveyed as aforesaid, were subject to the said statute, and the penalties thereof. And upon a great deliberation, it was by them all resolved and agreed, that notwithstanding the said conveyance, the said lands were liable to the said statute. And as to the jurors, who against the evidence given to them for the Queen, gave their verdict (ut supra) process was awarded against them out of the Court of Exchequer, for to appear before the Lord Treasurer and the Barons. And for their said contempt, they were committed to the Fleet, and each of them fined 50l.

CLXXVI. MOORE AND SAVIL'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, by Moore against Savil, the case was, that tenant in tail leased the land to the father, mother and son for their lives, by indenture, in which it was comprehended, that forasmuch as the lessor is but tenant in tail, and so cannot by law limit these estates by way of remainder, but jointly in possession; and his intent was, that because this lease was procured and obtained at the special suit, and costs and charges of the father, that the said son should suffer his father, and after him his mother, to take the profits of the said lands demised, and to occupy and hold the said lands to their onely profit without interruption of the said son, notwithstanding his joint estate in possession with them, provisum igitur est, that if the said son shall challenge, claim, demand or take any profits of the lands so demised, or enter into the same, during the life of his said father or mother, that then the estate to him limited by the said indenture should cease and be utterly void. And it was the clear opinion of the whole Court, that this condition and proviso was utterly void, for it is contrary to the estate limited before; as in the case cited by Coke at the bar. If I lease to you my lands for 20 years, proviso, that you shall not occupy the same the two first years, the same proviso is void and contrary, and repugnant to the estate.

[133] MICH. 28 ELIZ. IN THE STAR CHAMBER.

CLXXVII. LORD CROMWEL AND TOWNSEND'S CASE.

Henry Lord Cromwel, exhibited a bill in the Star Chamber, against Roger Townsend, Esquire, for that the said Roger Townsend, in an action betwixt James Taverner plaintiff, and James Cromwel farmor, of the said Lord Cromwel defendant, in trespass, in the favour and unlawfull maintenance of the said Taverner, did procure a partial jury to be retorned. And upon the hearing of the cause, the matter given in evidence was, that the said Taverner was a copiholder of the said Lord Cromwel, and that the said Lord Cromwel, pretending that the said Taverner had forfeited his copihold, caused the said James Cromwel to make an entry, in the right of the said lord, upon the said Taverner; upon which entry, Taverner brought an action of trespass against the said James Cromwel, in which action the parties were at issue upon the forfeiture. And before any venire facias issued forth, Taverner hearing that one Steward, who was bailiff of the franchize, under the Earl of Arundel, and who ought to make the pannel, &c. was purposed to have made the said pannel not duly; viz. to retorn therein, great gentlemen of the county, who were lords of manors, in favour of the said Lord Cromwel, went unto the said Roger Townsend, who was then one of the principal servants and agents of the said earl, and shewed to him, that if those great persons and lords of manors be retorned for the trial of that issue, peradventure they would not so easily appear for the expedition of the parties, as people of lesser condition; and also many of them being lords of manors, and having customary tenants, and therefore not indifferent to try that issue, and prayed his order to the said Steward, for the making of an indifferent pannel; where, upon a conference with the said Steward for the making of an indifferent pannel, and shewing to him, the making of the said pannel was not convenient, or any equal course to retorn knights, esquires or lords of manors, but rather such sufficient persons, for the greater expedition of justice, and indifferency of the trial; and afterwards the said Taverner exhibited a petition, shewing all the special matter, and praying him to give order for the making of an indifferent pannel for the trial of that cause, which petition was delivered to the said earl by the said Townsend, in the name of the said Taverner. Upon which the earl did refer the said matter to three of his chiefest agents and counsellours, i. Dicksey, Townsend and Carrel, and delivered to them the book of freeholders within the said franchise, who, according to their commission made a pannel, which was retorned; and the jury passed with the said James Cromwel in the right of the said lord: and if this intermedling of Townsend with this matter, as abovesaid, &c. especially his conference with the bailiff, be maintenance or not, was the question. And by the Lord Anderson and the Lord Wray, Chief Justices, it was delivered for law, that because the said Townsend was in manner a servant of the said earl, who had retorn of writs, and one of his principal counsellours and agents, and hearing, ex insinuatione, of the said Taverner, the misdemeanour of the bailiff of his lord could not do better, than to shew to the bailiff his duty, for it concerned the honour of his lord, and also his inheritance in the franchise; but if the said Townsend had been a mere stranger to the said earl, so as no such privity had been betwixt them, it had been clearly maintenance in Townsend; as it was lately adjudged in this Court, in the case of one Gifford; where the parties being at issue, and a venire facias was to the sheriff to retorn a jury, a stran-[134]-ger wrote to one of the jurors who was retorned in the pannel, praying him to appear at the day, and to doe in the cause according to his conscience; and that was adjudged maintenance. And afterwards, upon the full hearing of the cause, the said Townsend, by the sentence of the said court, was acquitted of every maintenance, with great allowance and approbation of many lords of the council there present: Bromley cancellario tantum exclamante.

CLXXVIII. Sir Moil Finch's Case.

The case was this; the King and Queen, Philip and Mary, leased for seventy years for certain rent payable at the Feasts of Saint Michael and the Annunciation; proviso, that if the rent be behind, and not paid by the space of forty days after any of the feasts aforesaid, that the lease shall cease and be void. At Mich. 9 Eliz. the rent was not paid according to the proviso, but a month after the said forty days it was paid, and acquittance given for it; and so the rents due after unto 30 Eliz. were duly paid, and acquittances given for the same. The Queen gave and granted the reversion in fee to Sir Thomas Henage, &c. and after it was found by office that the rent was arrear, ut supra: Sir Thomas Henage entred, and leased for years to Sir Moil Finch, who being ejected, brought a quo minus in the nature of an ejectione firmæ, &c. It was argued by Coke, that this lease upon the matter aforesaid is avoidable by the patentee, and that without office; for the conclusion of the proviso is not, that the Queen shall re-enter, but that the lease shall cease and be void: and the Queen is not driven to demand her rent, as in such case a subject is tied. And he compared it to the case of a common person; if a common person leaseth for years, upon condition, that if the lessee doth not build upon the land demised a house within a year after, that the lease shall be void, and afterwards grants the reversion to a stranger: the grantee shall have advantage of this condition, be it broken before or after the grant; for the lease in such case is void, not onely voidable; and the reason is, because the condition is collateral: which see 11 H. 7. 17. A lease for years is made upon condition, that if the lessee doth not go to Rome before such a day, that the lease shall be void; the lessor grants the reversion over, the lessee attorns, and doth not go to Rome within the time appointed, the grantee may re-enter; contrary, if the conclusion of the condition had been by way of re-entry, for then it should run in privity by the common law: but where a lease with such condition was made for life, with this conclusion of the condition, that the lease shall be void, the grantee shall not take advantage of that by the common law, for there the estate is not void untill re-entry, for there is a freehold which ought to be avoided by entry: but in our case the condition is upon the matter collateral, for no demand is requisite to take advantage of the condition. And he said it is a general rule, where in the case of a common person an estate may be devested without entry, there in the case of the Queen there needs not any office: but here in our case, if it had been a case of a common person, the estate should be devested without entry, therefore in the case of the Queen without office: see Stamford for the Major Proposition 55. but it doth not vest to have trespass before entry: and he vouched the case of Browning and Beston, Plow. 136. where such lease after such condition broken, is merely void and dissolved. And he said, that it was the opinion of the Justices of the Common Pleas, now late, [135] that by a release to such lessee, after the condition broken, nihil operatur; for after the condition broken he is but tenant at sufferance; and a lease for years, being but a cattel, may begin without ceremony, and end without ceremony: 2 H. 7. 8. If the King make a lease for years, with clause of re-entry for not payment of the rent, although the rent be behind, yet the King shall not re-enter before office found; and there ought to be a seisure, for the lease is not void by the non-payment of the rent, but onely voidable: but if the lease be void for not payment, as in our case it is, to what purpose shall an office be: for by the mere contract the lease ceaseth, without re-entry, or without office: but admit that the lease shall not cease without office, and before office the Queen grants the reversion over, yet an office found after the grant shall avoid the lease as well as if it had been found before the grant. A lease is made upon condition, that if the lessor build a house upon the land leased, and pay to the lessee 20l. that then the lease shall be void; the lessor builds the house, and afterwards grants the reversion, the grantee pays the 20l. now the lease is void, although the condition be partly performed in the time of the lessor, and partly in the time of the grantee. So here, although the grant of the Queen be mesn between the non-payment of the rent, and the office; for the Queen is not entitled by the office to the land, but by the condition broken, and the office is onely to inform the Queen of her title; and when the office is once found, it shall relate unto the time of the condition broken, and shall be of such force as if then it had been found: and here in our case an office was necessary for to entitle the Queen to the mean profits due betwixt the rent arrear, and the grant of the Queen, with which the Queen by her grant hath not dispensed; and without office he could not have them; for the arrearages of the rent do not pass to the patentee, no more than if the Queen be seised of an advowson, and the church become void, if the Queen grant the advowson unto another, the avoidance shall not pass. The King seised of a rent which is arrear, grants the said rent, the arrearages shall not pass: so here of the mean profits, for they are flowers faln from the stalk, &c.

Godfrey contrary; and he said, that the lease is in being not impeached by the condition, or the office: and he said, that notwithstanding that the words of the lease are, that the lease shall be void, yet before that an office be found, the lease shall not be avoided: in all cases where the Queen is entitled to any thing, or to defeat the estate of another, an office is necessary; and that ground is taken in the case of Lord Berkley, Plow. Com. 229. by Brown, therefore here, it ought to be found by office: see also the case of the Bishop of Chichester, Fitz. Abridg. Forfeiture 18. 46. E. 3. The bishop leased for life certain lands given by the progenitors of the King, as parcel of the barony of the bishoprick, rendring 30l. rent; and afterwards, by assent of the dean and chapter, released a great part of the said rent; the lease and the rent ought to be found by office. So an alienation in mortmain ought to be found by office, because the interest of another is to be defeated: so where the King's tenant ceaseth, &c. the villein of the King purchaseth lands, or but a lease for years: so where the King is but to have annum, diem & vastum, waste committed by the committee of the King: lessee of the King for years makes a feoffment in fee; in all these cases the King, without office, shall not be entitled. The same law is in case of a condition broken; which see 2 H. 7. 8. Plow. 213. Frowick in his reading puts this case: A subject leaseth for years upon condition, which is afterwards broken, and afterwards the lessor becomes King, here needs no office, for at the time of the breach of the condition the lessor was not King. The case betwixt Sir Martin Forbisher and one Bunny was, that the Queen made a lease [136] of dutchy land upon condition, which was broken: it was holden, that here there needs not any office, for the Queen had those lands severed from the Crown by Parliament, and they passed by the dutchy seal by livery and attornment of the tenants: the Queen leaseth for years, proviso, that the lessee shall not alien; such alienation against such a condition ought to be found by office: and therefore at this day, where a forfeiture is given to the King, &c. by statute, the words are, that the King shall be seised without office; and as to the relation of an office, he said, that an office may have a relation as to mean profits, but not as to vest the interest from the time of the title accrued. And although that in the grant of the Queen to Sir Thomas Henage there be these words, non obstante, the not finding any office, yet in this case an office is necessary, for the Queen cannot dispense with the law, so to alter or change the law, as to make lands in borough-English descendable at the common law: so if the King make a lease for years, with clause of re-entry, and afterwards grants the reversion over to a subject; and farther grants, that if the rent be behind, that the lessor may re-enter without demand; yet the grantee ought to demand the rent. And, as our case is here, there needs not any office to entitle the Queen to the mean profits; for although that the rent was not paid at the day, yet it was paid after, and all rent due afterwards, and acquittances given for the same; which matter we have specially pleaded to the intent aforesaid, upon which the other side have demurred, and thereby have confessed it, &c. But this office doth not give any interest to the Queen in the thing leased, for she hath granted them over before, by which she hath disabled herself to take advantage of the condition aforesaid, for she hath surceased her time: 8 H. 5. Traverse 47. Tenant for life forfeits his estate, and before the King seiseth, the tenant for life dieth, he in the reversion may enter, and the King shall not seise, for the King hath surceased his time. And if the Queen should have advantage of this condition, she should avoid her own grant, which should be a great inconvenience; the Queen leaseth for years, proviso, that the lessee shall not do waste; the Queen grants over the reversion after waste done, office is found, the Queen gains nothing by it. It was agreed in the case betwixt Knight and Beech, 28 Eliz. that the grant of the Queen mesn between the award of the commission, and the return of it was good; for the title of the Queen appeareth of record, although that the commission was not returned before the grant made: and if an office should relate unto the time of the condition broken, it should be in vain to argue that point: for in the said case it was holden a record, when the jurors had put their seals to it, before that it be enrolled: the acceptance of the rent, and the acquittances thereof are pleaded, 1. To prove, that there is no cause to find an office in this case, for the Queen is answered the mean profits: 2. To prove, that the Queen hath waved and refused to take the benefit of the condition, but not to conclude the Queen, and then you cannot force her to take the benefit of the condition: as the King, lord, and tenant, the tenant dieth, his heir within age, the King accepteth of the services of the heir, and afterwards grants over the seignory, after office is found, the King shall not have the wardship, &c.

At another day it was argued by Popham, Attorny General, for the plaintiff; and he said, that upon not payment of the rent, the lease is ipso facto void, without any office found thereof, and that by reason of these words, [shall not be void;] for he said, it is not a condition, but rather a limitation: as if the King make a lease to three for eighty years, si tam diu vixerint, one of them dieth, the lease is determined without office: so a lease made by the [137] Queen for years, so long as the lessee shall pay the rent reserved, or so long as the lessee shall there inhabit: in these cases upon a lease made by a common person, the lessor before entry might grant over, and the grantee shall have advantage of it, for it is a limitation, and by the limitation the lease is determined before the grant; contrary, if it had been by words of re-entry. A lease for sixty years, proviso, that if the lessee shall die within the term, that the lease shall cease; the lessor grants the reversion over, the grantee shall take advantage thereof by the common law: see the case 11 H. 7. 17. it is a limitation, and not a condition. And he said, in this case an office is necessary, not to avoid the lease, for that was void before; nor to punish the lessee as a trespassor, or to fine him for the continuance of his wrongfull possession; but to make him responsable as an accountant. In the lease of a common person, where the clause is, that the lease shall cease; if after the rent behind, the lessee continueth his possession, yet the lessor shall not punish the lessee as a trespassor before his entry, for the lessee by his continuance is but tenant at sufferance, for his first entry was lawfull; and he agreed the books, 14 H. 8. and 2 H. 7. that such advantages that a common person cannot have without entry, the Queen cannot have without office: but a common person before entry cannot punish another by way of trespass, therefore neither the Queen, without office, shall punish one as an intruder: and as to the case, now lately adjudged betwixt Knight and Beech, the same doth not extend to our case; for there an office was requisite before the grant of the Queen, because the per-close of the condition was, that the prior should re-enter: and it is very clear, that chattels vest in the Queen without office. And in this case an office is necessary for two purposes: 1. To make the grant good: 2. To make the occupier accountable for the mean profits, and to give recompence, which the Queen is not enabled unto without office. And here the patentee shall have advantage of the cesser of this lease: for, 1. He hath the inheritance lawfully: and 2. The lease is determined. If there were no non obstante in the letters patents, the said lease ought to have been recited, if it had not been determined; and if it be determined (as this case is) it ought to be recited, if there were not a non obstante; for non constat to the Queen, if it be determined or not: and he said, that leases which are of record, are to be recited in patents of the King, but not those which are not of record, for leases on record may be easily found, but contrary of leases in fait: but in our case all is helped by the non obstante; for the words of the letters patents are, non obstante, that no office be thereof found, misrecital or non-recital of the former leases, &c. It hath been objected, that because that the law of the land is, that in grants of the King, all former estates ought to be recited, the non obstante of the Queen shall not help it: to that he said, that where the law makes for the Queen, there the Queen, for a particular respect may dispense with the law. If the Queen be deceived by the not recital, that makes the letters patents naught; but if the Queen be not deceived by the not-recital, the same shall not hurt. And it is clear that the Queen may dispense with a statute law, although perhaps not with the common law; the Queen grants upon suggestion, if the suggestion be false, the patent is void because the Queen is deceived in her grant: and if the suggestion rest in articles, and some of the articles be false, the patent for that is void: but if in the patent such clause be, that be the suggestion true or false, the patent shall be good: if the King seised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, grant the manor, cum pertinentiio, the advowson shall not pass: but if the grant be in tam amplis modo & forma, &c. prout ipse Rex tenuit, the advowson shall pass. And he [138] said, that the office here is not necessary to determine the lease, but to enable the Queen to punish the lessee for the continuance of his possession: and if the conclusion of the condition had been by way of re-entry for non-payment of the rent, and after the rent is behind, and afterwards the Queen accepts the rent due after, the Queen is not bounden by that, but upon an office found she shall avoid the lease.

Drew, Serjeant, contrary; and he said, that here is a condition, but not a limitation; for here is the natural word of a condition, (scil.) proviso. Some cases put by Popham are conditions, and not limitations: as a lease for years, proviso, that if the lessee die within the term, that then the lease shall be void, the same is a condition: and in many cases many words (less apt than these in our case) shall make a condition: as a feoffment, dummodo solvat, &c. And he said, that without an office the lease is not void: see 35 H. 6. 57. The King giveth to religious use certain lands, ad effectum, to find a certain number of monks, to hold in frankalmoign: the King in that case cannot have cessavit, for the services are not certain; but if it be found by office, that they have not their number, or do not make their prayers, the King shall cease; by Br. Tit. Offic. 4. And he said, that this was often done in the time of King Henry the Eighth; lands given, habend. pro erectione Collegii Cardinalis Eborum, &c. Where the King is to have lands but as a pledge, as for an alienation without licence, office ought to be found of such alienation: so of a feoffment made to an alien; otherwise it is in case of necessity, because the freehold cannot be in abeyance: tenant of the King is attainted of treason before 33 H. 8. the King shall have the land in point of common escheat untill office be found, and afterwards by force of the attainder. So if the tenant of a subject be attainted of treason before office found, the land shall be in the lord, but after office it shall be in the King: 7 H. 4. If the King's tenant dieth, his heir within age, the King may seise the body, and grant it over without office, but not the lands: see for the same, 5 E. 6. Br. Office 55. in the case of Charles Brandon, 35 E. 3. Villainage 22. The villein of the King purchaseth goods and chattels, the property of them is in the King before office or seisure, but in the case of lands he ought to seise: if this had been the case of a common person, the lease should not be avoided without demand, therefore neither in the case of the King without office: for as the lease it self was made by matter of record, so it ought to be avoided by matter of record, otherwise it shall not be taken void in law, notwithstanding that the words are, that the lease shall be void. By the statute of 11 H. 7. alienations and discontinuances by women are made void, the same ought not to be holden altogether void as betwixt such women and the alienee, but onely betwixt the women and the heir, the statute of 1 Eliz. enacts, that all leases made by a bishop above the term of twenty-one years, shall be void; the same shall not be construed to be void, but onely as to the successor, for it shall bind the lessor himself, as it was adjudged 5 Eliz. in the case of the Bishop of Bath. As unto the office here in our case, the same shall not enure to avoid the lease, but onely to enable the Queen to punish the party for the mean profits after the breaking of the condition: but in our case, nothing is due to the Queen for the mean profits, for we have shewed the payment of all the rents and the arrearages thereof, after the breach of the condition, and before the grant of the King; and therefore this office, being for no use, shall be void, unless it had been found, that the land was of more yearly value than the rent, &c. As in the case of common experience of chantries, the lands shall not be intended to be of greater value than the rent to be paid out of it, if not that it [139] be found by office: when the Queen hath after received the rent, and granted over the reversion, now the forfeiture is purged, not by way of conclusion, but it amounts to as much as if the Queen had said, that she would not take benefit of it: 4 H. 6. Champernoun's case: the King, by taking in ward of the heir of the donee, hath waved the heir of the donor: see Plow. in the Lord Barkley's case, 3 Eliz. 237. and F. N. B. 143. And here in our case, when the Queen grants over the reversion, here the whole use of an office is gone; for no office shall be found for the benefit of a subject: and as to the Queen, no benefit shall accrue unto her by such office, for if she by such office shall be entituled to the possession, she should avoid her own grant of the reversion; for she ought to have as great an estate by the breach of the condition, as she had at the time of the condition: and in this case the office comes too late for the Queen, &c. as in the Lord Lovel's case, Plow. 18 Eliz. 482. A lease for years is made unto an alien, upon condition, that if the alien pay such a sum of money to the lessor at any time during the lease, that he shall have fee; the alien is made a denizen, the money is paid, and all that is found by office: the Queen shall not have the fee, for at the time of the vesting of the fee the lessee was denizen; and the office shall not relate to the time when the fee vests, and no farther, but to avoid incumbrances: and so in such case the office comes too late. And if the King's villain purchaseth lands, and the King make him free, and afterwards office is found, the same shall not entitle the King, but the villain manumitted shall hold the land: so in our case, the Queen after this grant shall not take the benefit, of this office, or breach of the condition found by it.

And afterwards, Manwood, Chief Baron, gave order, that those who do argue after shall speak but to two points:

1. Where the queen leases for years, rendring rent payable at the receipt at West. in which lease there is a proviso, that if the rent be behind, the lease shall be void, if now the rent not being paid, the lease shall be void without any office?

2. To what effect an office now shall be, being found after the Queen hath granted the inheritance over.

At another day, Owen, Serjeant, argued to the contrary; and he said, the lease is void without any office: for as a lease for years may be made by contract, so it may be avoided by words of contract, otherwise it is of freehold; so that a lease shall be avoided without entry, 6 E. 6. 137, 138. Plow. Browning and Beston's case; offices are of two sorts: first, entituling the Queen, as purchase of an alien, purchase of villain, alienation in mortmain; and offices informing the Queen, where she hath interest in the land before, as in our case here: admit that the office was necessary to find the breach of the condition; the patentee shall take the benefit of it: for being found by office, that the Queen hath made such a lease with condition to be void for non-payment of rent, and that at such a day the rent was behind, now, being of record, every subject shall take advantage of it: as where a husband makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, of the land of his wife, and dieth; if the heir enter for the condition broken, now may the wife enter upon him; for now the discontinuance is avoided: see 11 H. 7. 17. Where the grantee of the reversion shall take advantage of a condition, ut supra, concluding, that the lease shall be void: and see 136. Plowd. Browning and Beston's case. And although after the default of payment, the rent due afterwards was accepted, yet that shall not conclude the Queen; for this acceptance is not under the Great Seal, but onely done by the office: also the lease being void, for the non-payment, cannot be made good by acceptance afterwards.

[140] Atkinson, contrary, Although that the lease be void, de facto, yet until it appeareth to the Court, the Court cannot say it is void, or not void: therefore office is necessary to ascertain the Court: the Queen is a body politick, and the chief body politick above others, because she is the maker, authour and creatour of all other corporations; and that is the reason, that the King cannot speak without writing; and this is the most solemn writing: i. writing of record; so she cannot take but by record: and in our case, it doth not appear by any writing of record, the rent was behind; and it is agreeable to the majesty of a King to do nothing without matter of record; which see 4 Eliz. in the case of the dutchy: and he said there is no difference betwixt the case in 2 H. 7. and our case: in each case it is a lease for years, rent reserved, in this onely differing, that there is a clause of re-entry; and here the conclusion of the condition is that the lease shall be void; but in both cases, none can say that the rent is behind, untill it be found by office, therefore none can say, that the lease is void, untill office found: see by Thorp, 35 E. 3. chattels personals of the King's villains, are in the King without office, for such things may be lost or worn, contrary of chattels reals, as a lease for years; for land cannot but continue: and such things which may be in the King without writing, he may grant without writing, as a chain of gold, or a horse, deodands, felons goods, wreck, &c. vest without office, because chattels personals: see 20 E. 4. 11. contrary, when they are chattels reals, and permanent; for there an office is necessary: in the case of year, day and waste, an office ought to be found, ergo, à multo fortiori, in case of a lease for years, which is a greater interest, &c. 49 E. 3. 11. There is a general rule, quo modo quodque ligatur, eo modo dissolvitur: that which passeth by livery ought to be reduced by re-entry, that which begins by record, ought to be determined by record; and here in our case, the land cannot depart from the King without record, therefore it shall not revert without record; although that the breach of the condition be but matter of fact, yet the proof of that ought to be of record: and here in our case, is a condition, and not a limitation. And he said, that in the case often cited before of 11 H. 7. 17. it is a limitation, and not a condition; for if it were a condition, the grantee by the law could not take advantage of it, because not privy: and he was clear of opinion, that where the words are, that the lease shall cease, or shall be void; yet in such cases there ought to be an office, for in leases of the King there needs no re-entry, because the King (to speak properly) cannot re-enter. And the words, [that the lease shall be void] do amount to words of re-entry, and he said, that in the case of a common person upon such a condition broken, the land shall not be in the lessor, without re-entry, no more shall they be here in the case of the Queen without an office: also the rent reserved upon this lease was behind, and the lessee continuing the possession, the Queen by acceptance of the rent, hath affirmed the party tenant, and afterwards granted the reversion over before any office found of that matter; now the lessee is discharged, and shall never be impeached for the said rent behind; and the grant, ex certa scientia, &c. after found, shall not defeat this grant by any relation. And the Queen by her grant hath included all the advantage which accrued unto her by the breach of the condition, and as to that which hath been objected, that in the letters patents there are these words, Notwithstanding the not finding of any office, &c. truly the same makes the matter more clear for us; for by these words, it is apparent, that the Queen would not have an office found; & if so, then the land passeth as in reversion, and the Queen may dispense with a thing concerning her self: as of late it was adjudged in the case of one Michel. The Queen makes a lease for years, rendring rent, si petatur, it was holden in such case, that the rent in such case, [141] ought to be demanded by the Queen's officer; and in such case the Queen may well enough dispense with her prerogative; and here the Queen conceived, that she should not have an office, nor have her title found by it. Manwood, Chief Baron, The Queen leaseth for years upon condition, that if the lessee doth not marry within two years, that the lease shall be void, whether here there ought to be an office or not. Atkinson said, that here ought to be an office.

At another day, it was argued again by Godfrey, This lease is not void, ipso facto, for the non-payment of the rent, which is but matter in fact: and as this lease hath his beginning by matter of record, so also his end shall be by matter of record: in cases of a common person there ought to be a demand, therefore in case of the King an office, as in the case of a common person demand ought to be as well where the condition is by way of re-entry, as that the lease shall be void; therefore in both cases, in the case of the King there shall be an office: and he said, that if the lease and the condition be in the case of a common person, that the lease shall be void, without any demand of that rent, then there needs no demand; for demand is a part of contract: and here, before office found, the lease is not merely void, for a release unto the lessee before office, is good; and the Queen is not entituled to the profits before office found; it was argued by Coke to the contrary, The lease is void without any demand, without any office, for it is parcel of the contract to be so void, and he said, that this lease before office is void in interest and property, but not in possession: where a common person shall not have the land without action, the King shall not have it without office, and scire facias; as cessavit, wast. contra formam donationis, &c. and where a common person shall not have before entry, the King shall not have before office, for office is in the place of entry, wardship, mortmain. It is clear, in the case of a common person, that if the condition be, that the lease shall be void without any demand, that there demand is not requisite, therefore nor in the case of the King: see Browning and Beston's case, that such a lease with such a condition, after the rent behind, cannot be made good: and it is a general rule, that where the certainty of the term appears by record, and the King is to have but a chattel in it, there the King upon matter in fait shall have it without office; as the temporalties of the bishop upon his death, which is matter in fait: see F. N. B. 174. The widow of the King marries her self without licence of the King, the King shall seize the lands, and that without office, and there the marriage is matter in fait: the King leaseth for years upon condition, that if the lessee marry, that then the lease shall be void, if the lessee marry her self, the lease is void without any office; and if so, then every stranger in the world shall have advantage of it, as the case is, 11 H. 7. as was the case of Ralph Thomas; the husband seised of land in the right of his wife, leaseth for years, and afterwards he and his wife levied a fine to a stranger, the husband dieth, the conusee shall avoid the lease, because it was merely void by the death of the husband: so of a rent charge granted by the husband, &c. But although this lease be merely void, yet a bill of intrusion doth not lie against the lessee before office, for in such case, a common person shall not have trespass before entry; but yet if the lessee dieth after the rent behind, ut supra, the lease shall not be said assets to the executors, for the not payment of the rent is a nullity of the lease by the intent of the original contract: and also the lessee is not become tenant at sufferance after the condition broken, for tenant at sufferance takes the profits to his own use; also none can be tenant at sufferance to the Queen, for then he should have the profits of the lands by laches, which shall never be imputed to the Queen: now it is to see, to what purpose this office is? A common person makes a [142] lease upon condition, that if the lessee alien part, and that be found by verdict, that the lease shall be void, the lessee alieneth part, the lessor grants the reversion over; after the alienation is found by verdict, the grantee shall have advantage of it; if the case had been, that if the rent be behind, and office found of it, that the lease should be void, the rent is arrear, and the King grants the reversion, and afterwards office is found, now the lease shall be void against the grantee: also this office shall have relation, and comes in as good time, as if it were found before the grant; tenant of the King alieneth in mortmain, the King grants over the seignory, office is found; now by this office, the King is entituled, not unto the land, but unto the profits before the office: and although the Queen hath granted the reversion over, yet she hath not granted inclusive the mean profits: a common person hath a rent which is arrear, he grants the rent, the arrearages do not pass: as where the King is seised of an advowson which becomes void, and afterwards grants the advowson to another, the avoidance shall not pass thereby; and that was Giles's case: see 16 H. 7. 7, 8. and in our case, this office doth not entitle the grantee, for how can an office entitle a common person? If the lease were but voidable, perhaps, so long as the lease should continue unavoided the Queen should not be answered the profits, contrary, where it is void. And a common person shall have advantage of it.

Egerton, Solicitor General, To the same intent; and be said, that this lease is altogether void, in privity, property, right and term: in the case of a common person, after the rent behind, in such case the lessee should be tenant at sufferance, which cannot be in the King's case; and if tenant at sufferance, then no privity; for a release by the lessor to the lessee cannot enure, and that for want of privity; Lit. 109. and such lessee cannot attorn, and if the lessor after that accepts of the rent, the same doth not make the lease good, and all for want of privity; therefore here is no privity: as to property, such a lease shall not be said assets in the hands of an executor, nor shall be sold upon an extent, nor forfeited by outlawry; and here in this case, the Queen cannot be said to take any thing by the breach of the condition, but hath her reversion discharged of the lease; and he said, that the office is found well enough for time, and it shall relate to the time when the title accrued, that is, when the rent was behind, and the arrearages of the rent do not pass by the grant of the land, or the reversion: the Queen hath a rent-charge out of lands which is behind, the lands come to the Queen, and she grants the same over, yet she shall charge the lands with the said arrearages; but contrary, in case of an injury done upon the land of the Queen: as the tenant of the King aliens without licence, and afterwards the lands so aliened came to the King's hands who grants them over; the grantee, nor the land shall be charged, but onely he who was party to the alienation, his lands, and his executors; so of an intrusion: tenant for life of the King makes a feoffment in fee, the King grants over the reversion, and afterwards the tortious feoffment is found by office; this office is soon enough for time, and the grantee of the reversion shall have advantage of it, and the King the mean profits from the time of the alienation: and afterward in Mich. Term, 33 Eliz. the case was argued by the barons.

Clark, Puisne Baron, The lease is conditional, and with a limitation also; so conditional and limitation mixt together, 3 Ass. 10. Land given to one untill he come from foreign parts; lands given to one so long as he shall continue sole, is an estate for life with limitation upon her marriage; so during the coverture, &c. and these limitations are not collateral, but begin with the estates, when the estates are limited; but conditions always come when the estate is settled, as it is in our [143] case, yet if the intent and substance of the contract betwixt the King and the subject be well considered, there shall not be any difference, &c. Lands devised to one, proviso, that if the devisee shall disturb the executors of the devisor, his estate shall be void, and the land remain over, &c. the same is a good remainder, for it is a limitation conditional: see Scholastica's case, Plowd. Com. 14 Eliz. 413. concerning an estate tail with a limitation: and Fitz. James case there put by Dyer: see Browning and Beston's case before cited, and Martin Dockra's case where a condition is conceived in words of covenant, &c. Gent, Baron, argued to the same intent: Manwood, Chief Baron, to the same intent. The rents reserved upon the leases of the Queen, are to be paid to receivors, baileys, or at the receipt of the Exchequer: the Queen shall not make any demand of her rent, for she hath an infinite number of farmors, and if demand be necessary, she were to send an army of receivors, or baileys to receive and demand her rents. If the rent of the King be to be paid at the Exchequer, if the King's fermor be there, and tender the rent at due time, and none be there to receive it, he hath saved his lease, for he hath done his possible endeavor, although the words of the condition in the lease be behind and unpaid, yet not tendred, shall be understood: as in the common case of mortgages and obligations. But in all the record before us, there is no words of any tender, therefore, according to the words of the condition, the lease is meerly void, and determined in right, in privity, and in tenure; for so is the pleasure of the prince expressed in her letters patents under the Great Seal of England, that it shall be then void, and of no effect: Then, i. whensoever the rent shall happen to be behind; and therefore as soon as the rent was behind the lease was determined: so that if after the non-payment a stranger had entred upon him (scil.) the lessee, upon which he brings ejectione firmæ, the defendant might have pleaded the special matter against him, judgment if action: so as the lease is void in right: it is also void in privity and tenure; for a release to such lessee, after the rent is behind, is altogether void; for he was not then lessee, and so the privity is gone, and no acceptance can make such lease good. And if such a lessee after his rent would surrender, and in consideration of such surrender obtain a new lease from the Queen, this new lease is also void, for here upon the matter is no surrender: also such a lease is void in property; for if the lessee in such case dieth, his interest, such as it is, shall not be accounted assets in the hands of his executor: upon the breach of this condition for the rent, although that the lease be become void, yet the possession of the land is not resetled in the Queen without office: and although the office doth not make the lease void, which was void before for non-payment of the rent, yet before office found the possession is not vested in the Queen; for before office found we cannot award process against such a lessee for his continuing the possession after the rent behind, and untill office found the lessee cannot be found an intruder; and tenant at will he cannot be, for no other will appears of the Queen, but that in the letters patents, and that is to have the lease void, whensoever the rent shall be behind, and that estate is gone because the rent is behind; tenant at sufferance he cannot be in this case. In case of a common person, when lessee for years holds over his term, he is become tenant at sufferance, and such a tenant shall not pay rent, for it is the folly of his lessor to suffer his lessee at sufferance to continue possession of the land after his term, so as every tenancy at sufferance is made by the laches of the lessor, which laches cannot be imputed to the Queen: therefore here, this lessee, when the condition is broken, is not a tenant at sufferance, nor shall have the profits of the lands to his own use, but the law shall account him to be a bailiff of his own wrong, and so be ac-[144]-countable to the Queen, but no intruder till office be found: and that appears in our books, 1 H. 7. 17. The King's tenant dieth, his heir within age, if any entreth into the land of the heir, he shall not be an intruder untill office found, but the heir or a stranger who entreth before office, and takes the profits, shall be brought by process into the Exchequer to make their accounts, and to answer the issues and profits; but if he intermeddle after office, he shall be an intruder. Tenant of the King alieneth without licence, by that the King is to have the profits, untill he compound with the King, and purchaseth his pardon; and if the feoffee taketh the profits after the alienation, he is a pernor of the profits, and shall answer for them; but he is not an intruder untill office found. Tenant of the King is attainted of felony, the King is entitled to the land from the time of the felony committed, yet if he take the profits untill attainder, he is not an intruder, but he taketh the profits without title, therefore he is bailiff of his own wrong, and so accountable to the King. And it is not a new thing, that a conveyance or an estate shall be void as to the right onely, and not as unto the possession. The Statute of Doms. West. 2. finis ipso jure sit nullus: i. as to the right of the entail; yet, as unto the possession, the issue in tail is bound untill he hath recovered it by a formedon: upon the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 13. by acceptance of another benefice against the said statute, the first benefice shall be void, &c. yet the same shall not be construed so as to possession, but that the same shall remain with him untill it be taken away from him: the Queen leaseth for years, proviso, that if the lessee commit waste, the lease shall be void; when first waste is done the lease is determined in right, but not as to the possession before office finding the waste: so if the condition be for the building of a house, for by the breach of the condition, the lease, as unto the right and interest, is determined, and after office found it shall revest the possession also: and if a lease of the King expire by effluction of time, and such effluction appeareth here of record, if the lessee in such case continueth his possession, he shall be an intruder. Sir Robert Chester's case, Dyer 4. Eliz. 211. Sir Robert Chester was receivor of the King by patent, upon condition to render account yearly at such a day, and before such a day to pay the arrearages; the condition is broken, the patent was void without office thereof found, but yet it is not altogether void, for a scire facias shall be brought against the patentee. The King leaseth unto A. his manor of D. and after he leaseth also to the said A. his manor of S. proviso, that if the lessee doth not surrender his first lease of the manor of D. at such a day, that then the latter lease of the manor of S. shall be void: the surrender is not made, now the lessee, if he continue his possession in the manor of S. after, he is an intruder. Now is to see of what effect the office is, not to make the lease void, but to vest the possession in the King again: it hath been objected, that, as the case is, the office is not to any purpose, for the Queen hath granted the inheritance over, so as the possession cannot be revested in the Queen by that office against her own grant, nor can the Queen punish the lessee as an intruder for his continuance of the possession after the office, nor can seise the land by such office, and there is not any such office for the benefit of a subject, therefore the office is meerly void. Let us compare our case unto the case of cessavit; the tenant of the King ceaseth for two years, the King grants the seignory over in fee, the cesser is found by office, the grantee of the seignory gains nothing by it; but that is not like unto the case in question, for there when the office is found, the tenant may tender the arrearages, for the King is not absolutely entitled by the cesser, because by tender of the arrearages the tenant may save his tenancy: but in this case, after the condition is once broken, [145] there is not any means for the tenant to save the forfeiture: also the King by his grant, after the cesser, hath not granted the thing which accrued unto him by the cesser, (scil.) the tenancy, but onely the seignory: but in our case the King hath granted the thing forfeited, i. the land demised: and here is a full forfeiture, contrary in the case of cesser: and in our case the King hath granted onely the land demised, and not the profits encurred mean between the breach of the condition, and the grant of the King, but these remain to the Queen, and to that purpose the office is good, (scil.) to entitle the Queen to these profits. And as to that which hath been objected, that the lessee hath always paid the rent unto the Queen after the condition broken, and hath an acquittance of the receipt of it, therefore no profits due to the Queen, for she hath the rent in lieu of the profits; and it is not reason, that the lessee shall pay an annual rent, and also shall be accountable for the mean profits, and so the office, as unto the mean profits (which in truth upon the matter aforesaid are not due unto the Queen) is void, and then altogether void, quia nihil operatur, to that he answered, that the King shall not be bound off the mean profits in that case by the payment of the said rent, for by intendment the true annual value of the land is more than the rent reserved; and it is not reason but that the Queen shall be answered of the surplusage or overplus above the rent, and therefore the office entituling the Queen to part of the profits is good enough: tenant of the King for life, or for years, makes a feoffment in fee, although that by this Act he cannot pluck any thing out of the King, yet because he hath attempted to do such a wrong, it is a forfeiture, and the lease for years utterly extinct by it; for it cannot be in the feoffor against his own act, by which he hath departed with all his interest, &c. And the feoffee cannot have it, for if he hath any thing, it ought to be a fee-simple, or nothing at all; and a fee-simple he cannot have, for that remains in the King, and so neither have estate, then is all in the King, and the King hath title to have the profits, &c. But put case, that after the feoffment the King grant over the land in fee, and after that tortious feoffment is found by office, he who occupieth the land after the forfeiture, untill office be found, shall be accountable to the King for the issues and profits, &c. as pernor of the profits, or baily of his own wrong, and he who occupieth the land after the office shall be punished as an intruder. There was a case very late in this Court betwixt Sir Tho. Henage and one Hungate, which was thus; the Queen leased for years unto Hungate, provided that he should not do waste; waste is done, the Queen granted the reversion to Sir Tho. Henage, office is found, the grantee entred, and his entry was adjudged lawfull, and that the Queen should have the mean profits from the time of the waste done untill the time of the grant. Some say, that that case was not adjudged, but compounded: and he vouched Sir Walter Midmay's case: the Lord Sturton held lands of the Queen in knights-service, and was attainted of felony, by which the lands escheated to the Queen, who granted those lands; and it was holden, that the Queen should have the mean profits betwixt the time of the felony committed, and the grant. And after in the principal case judgment was given for the plaintiff, (scil.) the patentee of the Queen against the lessee; who cast in a writ of error, and by his council prayed, that the writ of error be not broken open untill the judgment be entered. Manwood, The judgment hath reference and relation unto the first day of this term, and therefore do not doubt of that.

CLXXIX. STED'S CASE.

Sted, of Great Melton in the county of Oxford, was assessed to 7s. for fifteens, and upon refusal to pay it, the collectors distrained the beasts of Sted, and sold them: Sted brought trespass thereupon in the King's-Bench; and the collector exhibited his bill into this Court against Sted, who shewed by his council, that the statute of 29 Eliz. which enacted this fifteen, provideth, that the said fifteen shall be levyed of the movable goods and chattels, and other things usual to such fifteens and tenths, to be contributary and chargeable; and shewed farther, that the cattel distrained were tempore districtionis upon the gleab land of a parsonage presentative, which he had in lease, which gleab land is not chargeable usually to fifteens granted by the temporalty, nor the chattels upon it. But it was the opinion of the whole Court, although that the parson himself payeth tenths to the King, yet the lay-farmor shall pay fifteens, and his cattel are distrainable for it, even upon the gleab land of the parsonage; and therefore it was adjudged, that in the principal case the distress and sale were good and lawfull.

CLXXX. THE DEAN AND CHAPTER OF WINSORS CASE.

In this case it was moved, if one hath a rectory impropriate, and by the statute of 26 H. 8. cap. 3. is to pay an annual rent for the same in the name of a tenth, and by that is discharged of tenths and first fruits; if he shall have the privilege of the Exchequer? for he is to pay the same sum yearly: and the Barons were of opinion, that he should not; for so every one, who is to pay any tenths or first fruits, should draw another who sueth him into the Exchequer, and so all controversies concerning tithes and parsonages should be drawn hither, which should be a great prejudice to the Spiritual Courts. But Egerton, Solicitor, vouched a case, (scil.) Conier's case, where the King gave a parsonage to a priory in frankalmoign, and the tithes thereof being withdrawn, the prior impleaded him who withdrew his tithes in the Exchequer; and in that case it was holden, that the prior should have the privilege, for the King is in danger to lose his patronage, or rather his foundership, if the rectory be evicted. Gent, Baron, The tenant of the King in chief, or he who pays first fruits, or he who holds of the Queen in fee-farm, shall not have in such respect the privilege here. Quære.

CLXXXI. CONY AND BEVERIDGE'S CASE.

In debt upon a bond, the case was, that the plaintiff leased unto the defendant certain lands lying in the county of Cambridge, rendring rent; and afterwards the defendant became bounden to the plaintiff in a bond for payment of the said rent: upon which bond the plaintiff brought an action of debt in the county of [147] Northampton, to which the defendant pleaded payment of the rent, without shewing the place of payment: and upon payment they were at issue, and found for the plaintiff by nisi prius in the county of Northampton: in arrest of judgment it was moved, that the issue was mis-tryed; for here the payment of the rent being pleaded, without shewing the place of payment, it shall be intended that the rent was paid upon the land, which is in the county of Cambridge: see 44 E. 3. 42. Anderson was of opinion, that no judgment should be given for the cause aforesaid: Rhodes and Windham contrary; for it doth not appear that the issue is mis-tried, because that no place of payment is pleaded; and it might be, for any thing is shewed, that the rent was paid in the county of Northampton.

TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH.

CLXXXII. BERRY AND GOODMAN'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, upon a special verdict, the point was, one intruded upon the possession of the Queen into lands in Kisgrave in Suffolk; and during this intrusion, the Queen granted these lands to A. B. by her letters patents; and the patentee, before any entry made in the said land, granted the same over. Some held, that the grant was good, for the intruder had gained nothing against the Queen, and by the grant of the Queen, and the assignment over, nothing accrued to him: and where a man hath possession of lands, his continuance therein cannot gain to him any interest, or increase his estate, without some other act done of later time. If the guardian do continue in possession after the full age of the heir, he is not a disseisor, nor hath any greater estate in the lands: and upon the book of 21 E. 3. 2. this case was collected; the tenant of the King dieth, his heir within age, a stranger intrudes, the heir at full age sueth his livery out of the King's hands, the intruder dieth in possession; the same descent shall not take away entry.

Coke, contrary, The intruder cannot be tenant at sufferance, for at first he enters by wrong, and none can be tenant at sufferance but he who comes in by title: and it is clear, that the intruder by his first entry doth not gain any estate in possession, upon which he can have an action of trespass, but after the grant of the Queen he hath presently fee by wrong: 8 H. 4. 129. A stranger enters upon the King to which he hath right in the right of the ward, yet the freehold doth remain in the heir. And he said, that if A. levyeth a fine to B. sur conusans de droit, &c. now the conusee hath possession in law, but not in fact; and if before the entry of the conusee W. entreth, and dieth seised, he hath no remedy, for he hath not possession in fact, so as he might have an assise, or an action of trespass: so the law is now taken; A. deviseth his lands to B. and dieth, and a stranger entreth and dieth seised before any entry by the devisee, now is the devisee without remedy: and here in our case, the intruder hath not gained any possession in the lands by his intrusion, no more than if the King gives lands to one in fee, and before the patentee enters, a stranger enters, now cannot the patentee grant it over, if he doth not reduce the estate by entry: see Dyer 9 and 10 Eliz. 266. The Queen seised of the manor of Beverley, a stranger erected a shop in a vacant plat of the manor, and afterwards took the profits of it, without paying any rent for the same to the Queen, and afterwards the Queen granted the manor to the Earl of Leicester, and he never entred into the said shop, nor took any rent for the same, and afterwards the occupier of the [148] shop, died in possession, and his son and heir entred; and the better opinion was, that the same was not a descent against the patentee, because at the first it was not a disseisin against the Queen: another question was moved, as to a path-way then in question: and the jury found that one side of the path-way was the land of the parson of the church, and the other side the church-yard, and prayed the opinion of the Court therein, to whom the interest of the path-way did belong; to which it was said by the Court, that that ought to be found by the verdict; for although that both be the freehold of the parson, yet the soil of the path-way might be conveyed by an express grant unto another. But the Court seemed to incline, that the soil of the path-way did belong to him who had the lands on both sides, and that is the case, as well of a high-way as of a path-way; and it is also good evidence to prove such matter, who hath used to cut down the trees, or to cleanse the way.

CLXXXIII. Wiseman's Case.

In the Court of Wards, before the Lord Treasurer, Master of the Wards, Wray, Chief Justice, Anderson and Periam assistants to him; the case was, that Wiseman was seised of certain lands holden by knight's-service in capite, had issue by a former wife who died; and made a feoffment in fee to the use, of her who should be his wife, for life, and afterwards to the use of himself and of his issue of the body of such wife to be begotten, the remainder over; Wiseman took a wife, and had issue, and died; if now, living the wife, the issue shall be in ward, was the question? it was argued by Coke, that he shall not be in ward: and first, it was agreed of both sides, and also by the justices, that it was a remainder and not a reversion; and that at the common law, the descent of a remainder, during the estate for life, doth not entitle the King unto wardship; and there we are to see, if upon the statute of 32 H. 8. the last branch of it; where two or more persons hold any lands of the King by knights-service, jointly to them and the heirs of one of them, and he that hath the inheritance thereof dieth, his heir being within age, in every such case, the King shall have the ward, and marriage of the body of such heir, so being within age, the life of the freeholder, or freeholders of such lands notwithstanding: see 33 H. 6. 14. That the father, to prevent wardship, may alien, and take to him and his son, and the heirs of the father, which mischief was intended to be remedied by the said statute: but these words shall not in construction thereof extend farther than the words especially, because they cross the common law, and go to charge the inheritance of others; and therefore they shall be taken strictly, and not by equity: as the statute of West. 2. cap. 40. Cum quis alienat jus uxoris suæ, concordat. est, quod de cetero secta mulieris aut ejus hæredis non differatur propter minorem ætatem hæredis, qui warrantizare debuit, that statute is taken strictly; for if the vouchee voucheth over, the second vouchee shall have his age, quod vide 18 E. 4. 16. Also the stat. of West. 1. enacts, that where the disseisor dieth seised, the disseisee shall have his writ upon the disseisin against the heir of the disseisor of what age soever he be: so the heirs of the disseisee, yet it is holden, 9 E. 3. If the disseisor leaseth for life, and dieth, and the lessee be impleaded, and makes default after default, upon which the heir of the disseisor prayeth to be received, being within age, he shall have his age, notwithstanding the said statute, which shall be taken strictly, because it controlls the common law, and chargeth the inheritance of the subject: so [149] upon the statute of West. 1. cap. 39. That none shall vouch out of the line upon that statute, although the tenant to the action against whom the præcipe is brought, is bound by the statute, yet tenant by receit is at large, and he may vouch at the common law: 2 H. 7. 2. 16 H. 7. 1. for these statutes go in abridgment of the common law, and therefore shall be taken strictly: now, according to this statute, it is of the same nature as the other before remembred, and therefore shall not be extended in construction beyond the letter. As Sir Rowland Hill's case, grandfather, father and son, the grandfather seised of land, ut supra, makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of the son in fee, the grandfather dieth, the father dieth, the son shall not be in ward, causa qua supra, for this statute shall not be construed by equity, and by it the words thereof [preferment of children] shall not extend unto the childrens children, but to the children onely of the King's tenant, who makes the conveyance: and the words in this statute [or otherwise] shall not be intended to other persons than are remembred in the statute. There was a case late, where the statute was construed in such a manner, quod vide 18 Eliz. 345. Thornton's case; A lady, seised of lands in chief, made conveyance of her lands, for the advancement of her bastard-daughter, the same conveyance is not within the statute: see also the Lord Powes's case, 14 Eliz. Dyer 313. So in the case of Sir Hugh Calverley, the law was taken, that where the husband dieth seised in the right of his wife, and they levy a fine unto the use of the husband and wife, for the advancement of the husband; such conveyance and disposition is not within the statute of 32 H. 8. Popham, contrary, And as to the case of making this statute, it was not to overthrow a foundation, as it hath been said; but it was rather a gratuity of the subjects to the King for his bounty towards them; for whereas by the Statute of Uses, uses were executed in possession, so as the subjects could not dispose of their lands, by their wills, as before the uses: now, by this statute, the King was pleased to give his Royal assent to an Act, by which lands might become devisable, in respect of which, the subjects added to this Act, the last clause, to give him wardship, where it did not lie before by the common law, and that as a recompence from the subjects for the King's bounty, and therefore it ought to be construed beneficially for the King. And to prevent covin and fraud, was not the scope of this statute; for if three purchase lands unto them, and to the heirs of two of them; now it is uncertain whose heirs shall inherit, for non constat, which of them shall survive, and therefore no covin is averrable in such case; and yet if the survivor of two to whom the fee is limited dieth, his heir within age, such heir shall be in ward: so if such lands be given to two, and to the heirs of him of those two who shall first come to the Church of Paul; now it is uncertain which of them shall first come to the Church of Paul, yet if he who first cometh to the Church of Paul dieth, his heir within age, he shall be in ward; which cases prove, that covin and fraud were not the cause of making this statute, but onely the thankfulness of the subjects unto the King for his bounty, as abovesaid; for if this Act had not been made, the subjects should not have power to dispose of their lands for the advancement of their children, but all should descend: so as now the King hath lost the wardship and primer seisin of two parts of the lands of his tenant, and hath also lost the averment of covin, which he had by the common law, where estates were made by the King's tenant for advancement of their children. In respect of which losses, the subjects gave unto the King wardship in case where the lands continue in jointure: as to that which hath been said; that this statute shall not be taken by equity, I conceive the contrary; the words of the statute are, in every such case, i.e. in every like case, not [150] onely where two, or more persons hold jointly to them and the heirs of one of them, but also in every the like case; as the case now in question, and in every case where the life of him who hath the freehold, is the sole impediment, quo minus, the heir hath not the land by descent in demesne: and it may be resembled unto the Statute of Marlbridge of Collusion, which speaks of leases for years, quas tradere voluerint ad terminum annorum; and yet a lease for life, or lease for years is within the said statute; for the statute was made in restraint of an ill liberty, that the tenants had by the common law in prejudice of their lords, which see 4 E. 6. 53. & Plow. 59. And as to the word [otherwise] that may be construed, for payment of his legacies: and as to equity enlarging, the statute speaks [where many hold, and to the heirs of one;] yet, if two hold, to them and the heirs of one of them, the same is within the statute: and as to equity restraining, he puts this case; Land is given to the husband and wife, and the heirs of the body of the wife, who have issue, the wife dieth, the issue within age, he shall not be in ward; and yet he is within the letter of the statute, but because that other matter, that the estate for life, in the husband is an impediment, quo minus, he shall be in ward: it is a maxim of the common law, that the father shall have the wardship of the son and heir apparent, therefore he shall not be within the meaning, although he be within the letter of the statute: so, if lands be given to my villain, and to another, and to the heirs of my villain, who dieth seised, his heir within age, I seise the villain, and claim the remainder, he shall not be in ward; and yet he is within the letter of the statute: but I conceive, in our case, the King shall have two wards, simul & semel, the heir general of Wiseman, and the issue in tail; the heir general by the common law, by reason that his father was the King's tenant, who disposed of his lands for the advancement of his children: and therefore the Queen shall have the third part in ward: and also the heir special shall be in ward, for that part of the statute. And it is no new thing to have two wardships for one and the same lands: as 14 H. 8. of the heir of cestuy quæ use, and also of the feoffee; and if the tenant dieth seised, having issue a daughter, who is his heir, the lord seiseth the daughter, and marrieth her, and afterwards a son is born; he shall have the wardship also of him: so of the heirs of the disseisor and disseisee; and he said, if lands holden in chief be leased for life, the remainder to A. in fee, A. dieth, his heir within age, he shall be in ward, and that by reason of these words in the statute, [in every such case] it is not the same case, but the like case; for if he who hath the fee dieth, so as the freehold survives to the other; now the estate becomes as an estate for life, the remainder over. It was adjourned.

6 Co. Weeden & Baldwin's case.

CLXXXIV. THE LORD HOWARD AND THE TOWN OF WALDEN'S CASE.

Betwixt the Lord Howard and the town of Walden, the case was, that the King made a feoffment in fee of lands, parcel of his Dutchy of Lancaster, tenend. in feodi firma reddend. inde sibi, & hæredibus suis, aut illi cui de jure reddi debet, 10l. The question was, how, and of whom the tenure should be? it was argued by Plowden, that it should be holden of the King, as of his dutchy; he said, the King is not bounden by the Statute of Quia Emptores Terrarum; but here, upon this feoffment, the feoffee shall hold of the King, as of his dutchy: all grants of the King, notwithstanding that they be of lands, yet they savour of the person of the King and his prerogative being wrapt [151] up in his person; shall guide the disposition of the land: and he said, that this tenure shall be implyed by reason, and in respect of his person: and the Statute of Quia Emptores Terrarum, extends to tenants onely, libere tenentes magnatum & aliorum; but the King is not libere tenens alicujus magnat. 32 H. 6, 21, 22. The King hath an advowson in the right of his dutchy, to which being void, he presents; he may repeal his presentment: and he vouched divers presidents of grants of the King of such lands to hold of him, as of his dutchy, and sometimes of others: and the King by his dutchy seal may give lands in mortmain; and the King under his dutchy-seal, hath made divers corporations within his dutchy, and although this rent be a new thing, never parcel of the dutchy, yet, because it is issuing out of the dutchy lands, and reserved thereout, shall be of the same nature, and accounted parcel of the possessions of the dutchy: if before the statute of West. 3. one seised of lands on the part of his mother, made a feoffment in fee, tenend. by such services, and died, the seignory should go to the heir on the part of his mother, and should be descendable as the land it self, in lieu of which it came: and if tenant in tail: now after the statute of 32 H. 8. makes a lease for years according to the statute, rendring rent to him and his heirs, it shall be expounded such heirs which are inheritable to the land, according to the entail. Manwood, Chief Baron, demanded of Plowden, this question; the King makes a feoffment in fee of lands of his dutchy, is the same a matter of record? who answered, yes, Manwood, truely no, for then there needed not any livery. Egerton, Solicitor, argued to the contrary, and he argued much upon the statute of 1 H. 4. and 1 H. 7. of the separation of the Dutchy of Lancaster from the Crown, which see in the Comment. 215. in the case of the Dutchy of Lancaster; by which Acts, the possessions of the dutchy were devested out of the body politick of the King, and vested in his body natural, and are as their corporal holding in the King, as they were in the Duke of Lancaster, being a subject; who if he had made a feoffment, the feoffee should not hold of him, but of the King; ergo, so shall it be in the case where the King himself makes a feoffment: and he cited a case, put in the end of the Dutchy case, 4 Eliz. 223. The Queen made a feoffment of lands of the dutchy out of the County Palatine, to hold of her in capite; the feoffee shall hold of her in capite as of her Crown of England. The case went farther; the King after this feoffment, granteth the fee-farm, the question is, if the rent reserved upon this feoffment shall pass by such grant or not: and he said, that this rent is not parcel of the fee-farm, but rather a collateral charge upon the land; for in all cases where there is a tenure expressed in fait, or implyed in law, there the rent reserved after, shall not be parcel of the tenure, but a rent in gross by it self: as in our case, tenend. in feod. firm. makes a tenure; therefore the reddend. after shall not make the sum reserved parcel of it: 33 E. 3. Annuity 52. before the Statute of Quia Emptores Terrarum; a man makes a feoffment in fee, tenend. de dominus capital. rendring the rent of 20l. that rent is a rent in gross and not parcel of the tenure. King E. 6. granted to Cranmer Archbishop, and his heirs, tenend. by the fifth part of a knight's fee, reddend. 6l. per ann. Cranmer made feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of his son in tail, the remainder to the use of the right heirs of Cranmer made a fee, who is attainted of treason, by which the remainder to his right heirs escheats to the King, and so the seignory is extinct; but it was adjudged, that the rent was in esse, and not extinct by the escheat of the remainder, for it was not parcel of the seignory: so here in our case. Another matter was moved; if this rent, being a new thing created, de novo, and not parcels of the possessions of the dutchy, 1 H. 4. nor [152] 1 H. 7. shall be accounted in law in the right of the Crown, or of the dutchy; and if of the Crown, then it cannot pass by the dutchy seal: and the statute of 1 H. 4. speaks of such lands and tenements which were to his ancestors, Dukes of Lancaster; but this rent never was in them, &c. and the Queen cannot enlarge the possessions of her dutchy by her own act; and therefore, if J. S. being tenant in fee-simple, be impleaded in a præcipe quod reddat, and saith that he holdeth for life, the remainder to the King in fee in the right of his dutchy; now this remainder is vested in the King in the right of his Crown, and not in the right of his dutchy; for it is onely an estoppel: so the villein of the King, in the right of his dutchy, purchaseth lands, the King seiseth, he shall have the lands in the right of his Crown, and not in the right of the dutchy: if the King giveth common out of his lands, parcel of his dutchy, and afterwards makes a feoffment in fee of the lands out of which the common is granted, and afterwards the commoner dieth without heir, the King shall have the same in the right of his Crown, and not in the right of the dutchy: so, although the rent doth follow the nature of the lands out of which it is issuing, yet it is not so to all intents; and he said, that by the statute of 2 & 3. Phil. & Ma. the King could not enlarge the possessions of the dutchy; and therefore by the said Act, authority is given for to annex possession unto the dutchy by letters patents; and there is another clause in the said statute, that if any part of the possessions of the dutchy have been aliened, or granted unto any subject, and are reverted to the Crown by escheat, attainder, forfeiture, purchase, &c. they shall be deemed and accepted parcel of the dutchy; which case proves, that if the King makes a feoffment of such lands, the same is a tenure in chief; for if it were a tenure of the dutchy, then upon escheat, it should be parcel of the dutchy again, without the help of that statute. Now, this rent being a rent in gross, and not parcel of the seignory, reddendo Domino Regi, hæredibus & successoribus suis, aut domino, aut dominis feodi, when the King grants the seignory to the Lord Audley, it hath been moved, that it was in the election of the feoffee, to pay the rent to the King, or to the Lord Audley; but that is not so, for although the law be so betwixt subjects, yet in case of the King it is otherwise; for the King shall never be over-reached by an election: and therefore he shall pay the rent to the King. It was adjourned.

CLXXXV. The Executors of Sir William Cordel and Clifton's Case.

The case was, The Earl of Westmerland, seised of a manor, whereof the demeans were usually let for three lives, by copy, according to the custome of the manor, granted a rent-charge to Sir William Cordel, pro concilio impendendo, for the term of his life; and afterwards conveyed the manor to Sir William Clifton in tail; the rent is behind, Sir William Cordel dieth, Sir William Clifton dieth, the manor descends to John Clifton, who grants a copyhold to Hempston: the executors of Sir William Cordel distrain for the rent; it was agreed by the whole Court, that the copyholder should hold the land charged. Windham, Justice, It hath been adjudged, that the wife of the lord shall not be endowed against the copyholder, which Periam granted, but gave the reason of it; for the title of the dower is not consummated before the death of the husband; so as the title of the copyholder is compleated before the title of dower; but the title of the grantee of the rent is consummated before the dower, [153] Fenner conceived, that the executors could not distrain upon the possession of the copyholder, and he argued, that this case is not within the statute of 32 H. 8. of Wills; for by the preface of the said statute, he conceived, that the said statute did extend but to those cases for which by the common law no remedy was provided; but in this case, the executors by the common law, might have an action of debt, ergo: but Periam and Windham, contrary; for this statute doth intend a farther remedy for that mischief, (scil.) not onely an action of debt, but also distress and avowry: see the words of the statute, distrain for the arrearages, &c. upon the lands, &c. which were charged with the payment of such rents, and chargeable to the distress of the testator; or in the seisin or possession of any other person or persons claiming the said lands, onely by and from the same tenant by purchase, gift, or descent, in like manner and form as their testator might or ought to have done in his lifetime: and it was moved by Fenner, that here the said land charged, doth not continue in the seisin or possession of the tenant; and here Sir John Clifton was issue in tail, and therefore he doth not claim onely by the father, but per formam doni; and therefore he is not liable; therefore neither his copyholder.

Shuttleworth, Serjeant, contrary, that Sir John Clifton was chargeable; and he claims onely from them who immediately ought to have paid the rent, and the copyholder claims by purchase from Sir John Clifton, so he claims from Sir William Clifton the tenant, &c. although he doth not claim immediately from him: for if the tenant ought to have paid it, and dieth, and the land descendeth to his heir, and the heir maketh a feoffment in fee, the feoffee shall be charged within this statute, although he doth not claim immediately: so where land descends from the tenant which ought to have paid it, and so from heir to heir. The statute of 1 R. 3. wills, that all grants, &c. shall be good against the donor, his heirs, &c. claiming onely as heirs to cestuy que use, &c. Yet if cestuy que use granteth a rent-charge, and the feoffees are disseised, the grant shall be good against the disseisor; and yet he doth not claim onely by cestuy que use: and although Sir John Clifton be tenant in tail, and claims per formam doni; yet, because the estate tail cometh under the estate of him who grants the rent, he shall be subject to the charge. And this statute extends not onely to him who claims by the tenant, but also to the heir of him who grants, &c.

And by Windham and Rhodes, the copyholder doth not claim onely by the lord, but he claims also by the custome; but the custome is not any part of his title, but onely appoints the manner how he shall hold, &c. The possession continues here in Sir John Clifton, for the possession of his copyholder is his possession; so as if the copyholder be ousted, Sir John Clifton shall have an assise: and so the strict words of the statute are observed, for the seisin and possession continues in Sir John Clifton who claims onely by Sir William Clifton who was the tenant in demean who ought to pay the rent. But Fenner said to that; that the seisin and possession intended in the statute, is the very actual possession, (scil.) pedis dispositio, and such a possession in which the distress may be taken and that cannot be taken in a freehold without an actual possession.

A. seised of land in fee, by his will in writing, granted a rent-charge of 5l. per an. out of it to his younger son, towards his education and bringing up in learning, and if in pleading, the devisee ought to aver that he was brought up in learning was the question: and it was holden by Dyer, Manwood and Mounson, that such averment needs not; for the devise is not conditional; and therefore, although he be not brought up in learning, yet he shall have the rent: and the words of the devise, are towards his bringing up; and he well knew, that 5l. per an. would not, nor could extend to maintain a scholar in learning, in diet, apparel, books, &c. and this rent, although it be not sufficient to such purpose, yet he shall have it; and Dyer said, that such a case was here: two were bound to stand to the award of certain persons, who awarded that the one of them should pay unto the other 20s. per an. during the term of six years, towards the education and bringing up of such a one an infant, and within the two first years of the said term the infant died, so as now there needed not any supply towards his education; yet it was adjudged, that the yearly sum ought to be paid for the whole term after; for the words [toward his education] are but to shew the intent and consideration of the payment of that sum, and no word of condition, &c.

CLXXXVII. West and Stowel's Case.

In an action upon the case, by Thomas West against Sir John Stowell, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff promised to the defendant, that if the defendant shall win a certain match at shooting, made between the Lord of Effingham and the defendant, then the plaintiff should pay to the defendant 10l. and promised to the plaintiff, that if the said L. Effingham shall win the same match of the defendant, that then the defendant would pay to the plaintiff 10l. and farther declared that the Lord Effingham won the match, for which the action is brought. It was moved, that here is not any sufficient consideration; for the promise of the plaintiff to the defendant, non parit actionem, for there is not any consideration upon which it is conceived, but is onely, nudum pactum, upon which the defendant could not have an action against the plaintiff. And then here is not any sufficient consideration for the promise of the defendant. Mounson, Justice conceived, that here the consideration is sufficient, for here this counter promise is a reciprocal promise, and so a good consideration, for all the communication ought to be taken together, Manwood, Such a reciprocal promise betwixt the parties themselves at the match is sufficient; for there is consideration good enough to each, as the preparing of the bows and arrows, the riding or coming to the place appointed to shoot, the labour in shooting, the travel in going up and down between the marks: but for the bettors by, there is not any consideration, if the bettor doth not give aim: Mounson, A cast at dice alters the property, if the dice be not false; wherefore then is there not here a reciprocal action? Manwood, At dice the parties set down their monies, and speak words which do amount to a conditional gift; (scil.) if that the other party cast such a cast he shall have the money.

CLXXXVIII. Dunne's Case.

Dunne possessed of divers goods in divers dioceses died intestate at Bristow; the Bishop of Bristow committed administration to Jones and his wife, who administred; and afterwards the Bishop of Canterbury, by reason of his prerogative, committed administration to Austen and Dunne, and they brought an action of trespass against Jones and his wife, for taking of the goods of the intestate; it was holden by Wray and Southcote, that the letters of administration granted by the Bishop of Bristow, were void: Gawdy and Jeofreys, contrary; for the granting of letters of administration, de mero jure, doth belong to the ordinary; and it might be that neither the Ordinary, nor the parties to whom he granted the letters of administration had notice that the intestate had bona notabilia in another diocese, and therefore it should be hard to make the defendants trespassors; exception was taken to the declaration, because it is shewed that the Archbishop of Canterbury, by reason of his prerogative, committed administration, &c. without shewing that the intestate had bona notabilia, &c. but the exception was not allowed, for so are all the precedents, as the declaration is here, which all the clerks in Court did affirm; and afterwards exception was taken to the bar, because it is there pleaded, that the defendant had paid a certain sum of money to one A. to whom the intestate was indebted by bond, and did not shew how the bond was discharged, as by release, acquittance, cancelling of the bond, &c. And that was holden to be a material exception: for the defendants in such case, ought to shew such discharge, which is sufficient, and by which the plaintiffs may be discharged; and for that cause the plaintiff had judgment to recover.

CLXXXIX. Kingwell and Chapman's Case.

In an action of debt upon a bond, by Kingwell against Chapman; the defendant pleaded, that it was endorsed upon condition, that where divers debates were betwixt the plaintiff and one J. brother of the defendant, the said plaintiff and J. put themselves to the award of one Copston, and the defendant was bound by bond to the plaintiff, that his brother should perform the award of the said Copston: and the award was, that the said J. should pay to the plaintiff 30l. viz. at the Feast of the Annunciation 20l. and at Michaelmas after 10l. and shewed, that the said J. had paid the said 20l. at the Annunciation; and as to the 10l. he pleaded, that the said J. died before the said Feast of Michaelmas, upon which there was a demurrer: and by Wray, Southcote and Gawdy, Justices, the bond is forfeit. First, because the sum awarded by the arbitrament, is now become a duty; as if the condition of the bond had been for the payment of it: secondly, day is appointed for the payment of it, 10 H. 7. 18. Thirdly, the executors cannot perform the condition. But if I be bound by bond to enfeoff the obligee at such a day, and before the said day I die, my executors shall not be charged with it; for the condition is become impossible by the act of God, for the land is descended to the heir.

CXC. LODGE'S CASE.

Lodge, an Attorney of the Common Pleas, was indebted unto Booth in 34l. payable at a day to come, and Booth was indebted to Diggs in 40l. Diggs, according to the custome of London, attached in the hands of Lodge 34l. to be paid to him at the day, as part of his debt of 40l. Lodge brought a bill of privilege, directed to the Mayor and Sheriff of London, and that every person, who had cause of action against Lodge, sequatur ad com. legem, &c. si sibi videbitur expedire, &c. At the retorn of which writ, Bendloes prayed a procedendo. And by Harper, Justice, The privilege shall not be allowed, because that this attachment is by custome, and not allowable here; and if Lodge should have the privilege, then is the other party without remedy: and if an attorney of this place be impleaded in London upon a concessit solvere debit. alterius, he shall not have the privilege Manwood contrary; For according to the common law, Lodge owed nothing to Diggs, but is his debtor by a custome: and as to the case of concessit solvere, there the promise was to the party himself, who brought the action; and he hath no other remedy; but in the case at bar, Diggs, who is a stranger, veres Lodge, who ows him nothing, having remedy against his proper debtor, which Dyer granted, and farther said, that the privilege of this Court ought not to be impeached by any custome: and the prothonotaries cited a case adjudged in the point; that such a privilege was allowed in the case of one Underhil, and afterwards in the principal case the privilege was allowed.

21 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CXCI. SEGAR AND BAINTON'S CASE.

In an action of trespass, the case was, that King Hen. 8. an. 27 of his reign, gave the manor of D. to Sir Edw. Bainton knight, and to the heirs males of his body; Sir Edw. Bainton had issue, Andrew his eldest son; and the now defendant his younger son, and died; Andrew Bainton covenanted by indenture with the Lord Seymore, that the said Andrew Bainton would assure the said manor to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of the said lord and his heirs; and the said lord in recompense thereof, should assure other lands to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of the said Andrew Bainton in tail, who, 37 H. 8 levied a fine of the said manor without proclamations to two strangers, to the uses according to the said agreement, and before any assurance made by the said lord, the said lord was attainted of treason, by which all his lands were forfeited to the King: and afterwards the said Andrew Bainton made a suggestion to Queen Mary of all this matter; and upon his humble petition, the said Queen by her letters patents, reciting the said mischief, &c. Et præmissa considerans, & annuens petitioni illius, granted to him the manor aforesaid, and farther, de ampliori gratia sua, did release to the said Andrew Bainton, all her right, possession, &c. which came to her, ratione attincturæ præd. vel in manibus nostris existant, vel existere deberent; after which, 5 Eliz. Andrew Bainton levied a fine to the plaintiff, with proclamations, and died without issue, and the defendant, as issue in tail, entred.

Puckering, Serjeant: First, it is to see, if by the words of the patent of Queen Mary; viz. de ampliori gratia, &c. the reversion in fee which the Queen had, shall pass or not? Secondly, admitting that [157] the reversion doth not pass, then if the fine levied by Andrew Bainton, 5 Eliz. to the plaintiff, the reversion being in the Queen, be a bar unto the issue in tail? for as unto the first fine levied, 37 H. 8. which was without proclamations, the same shall not bind the issue in tail, neither as to the right, nor as to the entry, for it is not any discontinuance, because the reversion is in the King; as of things which do not lie in discontinuance, as rent, common, &c. for such a fine is a fine at the common law, and not within the statute of 4 H. 7. and such fine is void against the issue: but if such a fine without proclamation be levied of a thing which lieth in discontinuance, then such a fine is not void, but voidable by formedon: and therefore this fine in the case at Bar being levied without proclamation of lands entailed, whereof the reversion is in the King at the time of the fine levied, shall not bind the issue: and by such fine the conusee hath nothing but a fee determinable upon the life of tenant in tail, which fee was forfeited to the Queen by the attainder of the Lord Seymore, and that the Queen moved of pity, did restore the same to A. B. in recompense; for the indentures of themselves were not sufficient to raise any use: see 1 Mariæ, Dyer 96. As to the first point, it seems that nothing passed of the reversion, for the grant hath reference to the words, All her right, possession, &c. which came to her ratione attincturæ, and all the residue of the grant ought to have reference to that, to the ratione attincturæ, which was the foundation of the whole grant: and here the intent of the Queen was not to any other intent but onely to restore A. B. to the said manor, or to his former estate in it; and nothing appears in the letters patents, by which it may appear, that the Queen was knowing of her reversion which she had by descent, and therefore the same cannot pass by general words. If the Queen grants the goods and chattels of all those which have done any trespass, for which vitam amittere debent, the goods of him who is attainted of treason shall not be forfeited to the grantee by such general words: 8 H. 4. 2. The King grants omnia catalla tenentium suorum, qualitercunque damnatorum, the same shall not extend to the goods of him who is condemned of treason: see 22 Ass. 49. So in our case the patent shall not serve to two intents, but to a restitution of the manor, and then nothing passed by this patent but the fee determinable, which was conveyed to the Lord Seymore, and forfeited by his attainder. Then we are to see, how after this grant the said A. B. is seised. And he said, that he shall be in of the said fee determinable, and not of the estate tail against his own fine; and then if he be not seised by force of the entail at the time of the fine levied, 5 Eliz. the same fine cannot bind the tail: but admit that at the time of the second fine levied he was in of an estate in tail, yet the same fine shall not bar his issue: for first, this fine cannot make any discontinuance, because that the reversion in fee is in the King, which is not touched by the fine: see the case of Sanders, where A. makes a lease to begin at a day to come, and afterwards levies a fine to a stranger with proclamations; the five years pass, and afterwards at the day of the commencement of the lease the lessee enters, his entry is lawfull, and he shall not be bound by the non-claim. And so it was adjudged 21 Eliz. between Sanders and Starky. After the making of the Statute of 4 H. 7 of Fines, it was much doubted, if the issues of common tenants in tail should be bound by a fine with proclamation, forasmuch as upon the death of their ancestours they were as new purchasors per formam doni: and therefore it was provided by the statute of 32 H. 8. that the said statute of 4 H. 7. should extend to such common entails; but there was no doubt of the estate tail of the gift of the King: and see betwixt Jackson and Darcy, Mich. 15 and 16 Elizab. Rot. 1747. in a partitione [158] facienda, the case was, tenant in tail, the remainder to the King after the statute of 32 H. 8. levied a fine with proclamations, and adjudged, that that should bind the issues: and the Act of 32 H. 8 doth not extend, but where the reversion is in the King, but no mention is there of a remainder, because the words of the said Act are general, of all tenants in tail, the makers of the said Act perceiving that it might be a doubt, that the generality of the said words might exclude estates tail of the gift of the King, they have restrained the words in a special manner, as appeareth by the last words of the same Act: nor to any fines heretofore levied, or hereafter to be levied by any person or persons of any manors, &c. before the levying of the said fine to any of his or their ancestors in tail by letters patents, or Act of Parliament, the reversion whereof, at the time of the levying of such fine, was in the King: and so such estates are excepted, and that in such cases where such fines are levied, they shall be of such force as they should have been if the said Act had not been made; and therefore he conceived, it appeared at the said Parliament, that such estate tails of the gift of the King were not bound by 4 H. 7. for otherwise that proviso or exception had been frivolous.

Walmsley, Serjeant, to the contrary; and he agreed, that the first fine doth not make any discontinuance; and yet he conceived, it is not altogether void against the issues before that they enter, for no right remains in the conusor against his fine:

and he conceived also that this clause, ex uberiori gratia nostra, did extend to pass more than passed before, for he conceived that the Queen intended more liberally, viz. the reversion, for this same is not any matter of prerogative, but this is a matter of interest which might even in the case of the King pass out of the King by general words: and see 3 H. 6. 6 and 7 Br. Patents; a grant of the King ex insinuatione shall not hinder the force of the words ex mero motu. And the opinion of the Court was, that the reversion which was in the King did not pass by this grant: for the scope of the whole patent was, as was conceived, to grant the same onely which the Queen had ratione attincturæ.

Anderson held the patent insufficient, because that the prohibition was not full and certain: also he said, that ex speciali gratia, &c. would not help this case, if it were well argued, for the estate tail is not well recited, but onely that he was seised de statu hæreditario, &c. so as the Queen was deceived. Periam, contrary; The Queen was apprised well of the mischief and grant aforesaid, viz. of such estate, with which he departed by the fine. And as to the other point, it was the opinion of Walmsley, that the fine with proclamation did bind the entail. And as to the objection which hath been made, that the conusor, at the time of the fine levied, was not seised by force of the entail, the same had been good matter to avoid a common recovery, to alledge such matter in the tenant to the præcipe, but not to this purpose: for if tenant in tail levieth a fine, although he was not seised at the time of the fine levied by force of the entail, yet such a fine shall bind the issues: so if the tenant in tail doth discontinue, and disseiseth the discontinuee, and so levieth a fine. And he conceived, that the issue in tail is bound by the statute of 4 H. 7. even of the gift of the King. And see 19 H. 8. 6. and 7. where it is holden, that the issue in tail is bound by the Act of 4 H. 7. And whereas it hath been objected, that it doth not extend, but to such fines which make a discontinuance at the common law: the same is not so: for if tenant in tail of a rent or common levieth a fine with proclamation, it is very clear, that the issues shall be barred thereby: and he relied much upon the book of 29 H. 8. Dyer, 32. Tenant in tail of the [159] gift of the King levyeth a fine, or suffereth a common recovery, although it be not a discontinuance, because the reversion is in the King, yet it is a bar unto the issue. But note, that that was before the statute of 34 H. 8. And see now Wiseman's case, 27 Eliz. Co. 2. part. and see the Lord Stafford's case, 7 Jacob. Co. 8 Reports, fo. 78.

CXCII. Pleadal's Case.

The case was, that a man seised of lands in fee, took a lease by indenture of the herbage and pawnage of the same land: it was the opinion of the whole Court, that the same was no estoppel to him to claim the soil or the freehold: and it was said by Plowden, and agreed by the Court, that if the father and son be joint-tenants for an hundred years, and the son takes a lease of his father of the lands for fifteen years, to begin, &c. the same shall conclude the son to claim the whole term or parcel of it by survivor.

CXCIII. 21 Eliz. In the Star Chamber.

Note, that in the Star Chamber it was resolved, by the advice of many of the justices, that an infant having levyed a fine, may declare the uses upon it, and such declaration is good, notwithstanding his nonage: and Mr. Plowden affirmed, that so it was adjudged in his own case, by which he lost lands of the yearly value of 40l. So a declaration by a man in duresse is good, which Anderson denyed.

CXCIV. The Lord Awdley's Case.

The Lord Awdley, 12 H. 7. enfeoffed Hoddy and others of certain lands in the county of Sommerset, and afterwards by indenture reciting the said feoffment, and the date of it, and also that it was to the intent that his feoffees should perform his will, as follows in effect; viz. My will is, that my said feoffees shall stand seised to the use, that the said Hoddy shall receive of the yearly profits of the said lands one hundred pounds, which he had lent to the said Lord Awdley: and also stand seised to pay all his debts upon bills signed with his hand; and after the debts paid, that the said feoffees shall make estate of the said lands unto him the said Lord Awdley, and Joan his wife, and to the heirs of their bodies, &c. with divers remainders over. The said lord had issue by the said Joan; and also had issue by a former wife a daughter: the feoffees never made any estate to the said lord and his wife. And it was the opinion of divers of the justices and sages of the law, that upon this matter no use was changed, for it is not a last will but an intent. And although that the feoffees shall be seised unto the use of the feoffor and his heirs, because that no consideration was, for which they should be seised to their own use; yet the same cannot make a new use unto the said lord and his wife in tail, without conveying an estate; for the wife is a stranger [160] unto the land, and also to the other use. And it cannot be a testament or last will; for the estate mentioned in the said writing, ought to be made to the said lord and his wife, who cannot take by his own will. And this matter was depending in the Chancery; and the advice of the justices being there required, they did deliver their opinions, that by this writing, no use was changed, nor any estate vested in the said lord and his wife; and a decree was made accordingly, until proof might be made of such an estate made.

CXCV. Borough and Holcroft's Case.

In an appeal of murther, by the son of the Lord Borough, of the death of his elder brother, Henry Borough, against Thomas Holcroft, who pleaded, that heretofore he had been indicted of the murther of the said Henry Holcroft before J. S. coroner of the verge, and also coroner of the county of Middlesex, within which county the verge was; and upon that indictment he was arraigned, and confessed the indictment, and prayed his clergy, &c. and demanded judgment; if the plaintiff should have this appeal? The plaintiff, replicando, said, by protestation, nul tiel record, and for plea did demur in law. Dalton, for the plaintiff, took exception to the plea, for the conclusion of it, viz. judgment if appeal; where it ought to be, judgment, if he shall be again put to answer: and he took a difference, where a matter is pleaded against the plaintiff, to which the plaintiff is party: as where a man pleads a fine levied by the plaintiff himself, there he shall conclude judgment if action: but where the fine is pleaded levied by the ancestors of the plaintiff, there he shall plead, judgment, if against such fine, &c. vide, 9 H. 7. 19. At the common law before the statute of 3. H. 7. such conviction at the suit of the King did discharge the party convicted from farther trouble; but if the indictment upon which he was arraigned be insufficient, then it is not any plea. And here the indictment is insufficient; for by the Statute of Articuli Super Chartas, cap. 3. the coroner of the county, together with the coroner of the King's houshold shall do the office which belongs to it, and send the roll, to which office two coroners are requisite: but here, in the taking of this inquisition there was but one person although two capacities, id est, coroner of the county, and also coroner of the verge: and so the indictment was taken, coram non Judice: see the statute of the Star Chamber, which is, that the Chancellor, &c. calling to them one bishop, and one temporal lord of the King's Council, &c. If the Chancellor be a bishop; yet another bishop ought to be called &c. If I devise that my lands shall be sold by two bishops, and J. S. hath two bishopricks, yet his sale is not sufficient. Egerton, contrary, Although here is but one person, yet there are two coroners: quando duo jura concurrunt in una persona æquum est, ac si essent in diversis. At the common law, before the Statute, de Articulis Super Chartas, the coroner of the verge by himself might enquire of murther; but because the Kings Court oftentimes removed into another county, by reason whereof no enquiry could be made for the remedying thereof, that statute was made, which is in the affirmative, and doth not abridge the common law before, and therefore it shall have a reasonable construction: see the statute of West. 1. cap. 10, by which it is enacted, that sufficient men shall be chosen coroners, of the most loyal and the most [161] sage knights, this statute shall not be taken, stricto sensu, that none shall be chosen coroners, but knights; but the statute requires, that sufficient persons shall be chosen. As to the statute of 3 H. 7. it is to be known that the common law [before acquitted] was a good plea, and the cause was for the great regard that the common law had to the life of a man; in which case a great mischief, as the statute recites, did ensue, that to save the appeal of the party; they would not arraign the party within the year and day after the murther, within which time, the offender did compound with the party interessed; and so after the year expired, all the matter concerning the prosecution, at the King's suit, was put in oblivion: wherefore it was enacted, that such offender shall be within the year arraigned at the suit of the King; and if the party be acquitted at the Kings suit, within the year and day, that the justices before whom, &c. should not set the party at large, but to remain in prison, or to let him to bail, untill the year and the day be past; and within the said year and day, the wife, or next heir to the party slain may take their appeal against the party so acquitted or attainted, the said acquittal or attainder notwithstanding; and he said, that these words [person attainted] did not extend to person convicted; for they are two distinct conditions in law, for attainder procures corruption of bloud, but the same is not wrought by conviction: and every treason imports in it self felony; but yet notwithstanding they are distinct offences: see 22 E. 4. Coron. 44. where it was ordered by all the justices of England, that none should be arraigned of the death of a man, at the suit of the King, within the year and day; so as the suit of the party be saved. And the justices counselled all men of law so to do, and that the same be executed as a law without alteration, upon which rule of the justices, arose an inconvenience; for after that order of the justices was known, the offender would practice with the party to whom the appeal by the law belonged, to obtain from him a release for some sum of money, and then when the year and day passed, the heinousness of the murther was out of memory; this mischief being espied, was the occasion of the making of the statute of 3 H. 7. But the said statute doth not meet with our case; but our case is at the common law, for this statute extends onely unto persons attainted; but a person convicted is not touched by it, and therefore being out of the words of the statute, it shall be also out of the meaning of it; for being a penal law, it shall be taken by equity, as all statutes which give attaint shall be, stricti juris, and shall not be taken by equity. It hath been objected, that the Statute de Frangentibus Prisonam, 4 E. 1. hath been taken by equity, the same is not so; for it is not any penal law, but the same mitigates the rigor of the common law; for before that statute, the breaking of the prison was felony in every case, but now it is not felony, but where the party was committed to prison for felony, &c.

CXCVI. 21 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In a formedon of a manor, the tenant pleaded joynt-tenancy by fine with J. S. The demandant did aver the tenant sole tenant, as the writ doth suppose, and upon that issue was taken, and found for the demandant; upon which, a writ of error was brought, and error assigned in this. That whereupon joynt-tenancy pleaded by fine, the writ ought to abate without any averment by the demandant against it, the averment hath been received against the law, &c. Southcote, at the common law, If the tenant had pleaded joynt-tenancy by deed, the writ should abate without any averment; but that was remedied by 34 E. 1. but joynt-tenancy by fine did remain as [162] it was at the common law, for he hath punishment enough in that by that plea, if it be false, he hath by way of conclusion given the moyety of the land in demand to him with whom he hath pleaded joynt-tenancy; and the law doth not intend that he would so slightly depart with his land for the abatement of a writ; as in a præcipe quod reddat, the tenant acknowledgeth himself to be villein to a stranger; the writ shall abate without any averment, if frank and of frank estate; for the law presumes, that the tenant would not enthral his condition. Wray, to the same intent: But the demandant may confess and avoid the fine, as to say, that he that levied the fine was his disseisor, upon whom he had before entred, &c. And if tenant in fee-simple be impleaded, and he saith that he is tenant for life, the remainder over to A. in fee, and prayes in aid of A. the demandant shall not take averment, that the tenant, the day of the writ purchased, was seised in fee. Note that in this fine joynt-tenancy was pleaded but to parcel. It was holden by Wray and Southcot, that the whole writ should abate; as in a writ the misnosmer of one shall abate the whole writ against all the defendants; and so where the demandant enters into parcel of the land in demand, if the thing in demand be one intire thing, it shall abate the whole writ. In this case, the demandant ought to have in his writ de forsprise of the land in demand, whereof the joynt-tenancy by fine is pleaded, per availe, and under the gift of which the formedon is conceived, and therefore in respect of the title of the demandant, it remains in right, parcel of the manor, and therefore ought to be demanded accordingly with an exception: but if A. give to B. a manor, except ten acres in tail, there if after upon any discontinuance, the issue in tail have a formedon, in such case there needs no exception, for the said ten acres were never after the gift, parcel of the manor which was given in tail, for they were severed from the manor upon the gift; but if land in demand was several, as twenty acres except two, an exception is not good, for he might demand eight acres: see E. 1. F. N. B. 866. Præcipe unam bovat. terræ, except a seleon, and the writ was abated, for every demand ought to be certain, but a seleon is a parcel of land uncertain as to quantity, in some places an acre, in some more, in some less. Another point was, that because the tenant hath admitted and accepted this averment (scil.) sole tenant, as the writ doth suppose; if the Court notwithstanding the admittance of the tenant ought without exception of the party, ex officio, to abate the writ; and Wray conceived, that they should, for it is a positive law; as if a woman brings an appeal of murther upon the death of her brother, and the defendant doth admit it without challenge or exception, yet the Court shall abate the appeal, 10 E. 4. 7. And see the principal case there, non ideo puniatur dominus; and if an action be brought against an hostler upon the common custome of the realm, and in the writ he is not named common hostler, and the defendant doth accept of such writ, without exception to it, yet the Court shall abate the writ, ex officio, 11 H. 4. 198. and 38 H. 6. 30.

CXCVII. 24 Eliz. In the King's Bench.

The case was this: King Henry the 8. seised of certain lands in the right of his Dutchy of Lancaster, granted them unto another, tenend. in fee-farm, reddend, dicto Dom. Regi, & hæredibus suis, aut illi cui de jure reddi debet 10l. And if this land should be holden of the King in capite, or holden of the dutchy, was the question? Egerton Solicitor General, argued much upon the statute of 1 H. 4. by which the dutchy and possessions thereof were severed from the Crown: see [163] Plowden in the case of the Dutchy of Lancaster, 213. And see ibid. the statute of 1 H. 4. entitled, Charta Regis, Hen. 4. 1. De separatione Ducas Lancastr. à Corona; by which it is enacted, that the Dutchy of Lancaster, taliter & tali modo deducatur, gubernetur & pertractetur, &c. ac si ad culmen dignitatis Regiæ assumpti minime fuissemus: so as by that Act the dutchy is dis-joined from the Crown, and in such point as to possession, as it was in a common person. But the possession of the dutchy doth not bind the person of the King: as 10 H. 4. 7. The King brings an action for certain lands to him descended from his uncle, the Duke of Lancaster, and the writ was, non omittas propter aliquam libertatem, and exception was taken to the writ, because that such clause ought not to be in the King's writ, but where the King sueth as King, but that writ he sueth as Duke of Lancaster, but the exception was not allowed; the King cannot sue otherwise, but as King: for the person of the King ought not to be measured according to his possession, so as it was a severance in order, survey, government and process, and not in respect of the person. But after the statute of 1 H. 4. the said Act of Separation was repealed; and farther enacted, that the said King should hold the said dutchy to him and his heirs, Kings of England; so as thereby the dutchy is settled in the politick body of the King; afterwards came the statute of 1 H. 7. by which it is enacted, that the King shall hold the said dutchy, and the possessions thereof, in such manner and form, and so separated from the Crown as King Henry the Fourth and King Henry the Fifth did hold the same, so as the dutchy was devested out of the body politick of the King where it was setled, 1 H. 4. and vested in the body natural of the King so as the possession of the dutchy, as to their government, &c. are in the King, as they were in the Duke of Lancaster before he was King: and if the Duke of Lancaster had made a feoffment, &c. the feoffee should not hold of him, but of the King: so if the King himself maketh a feoffment of lands of the dutchy, the feoffee shall hold of the King, &c. which see in the dutchy of Lancaster's case, in the end of it: and he conceived, that notwithstanding the union of the Crown and the dutchy, yet the privity of the tenure doth remain, being preserved by the said Act of 1 H. 4. Another matter was, that here, the tenure reserved is tenend. in feodi firma reddend. 10l. &c. And he said, that this rent is not parcel of the tenure, but rather a rent-charge collateral to the tenure: for in all cases where there is a tenure expressed in suit, or implied in law before, there reddendo following shall not make the thing rendred parcel of the tenure, but it shall be a rent in gross: and here tenend. in feodi firma, makes the tenure, &c. and the reddendo after shall not make the rent reserved parcel of the tenure: see the case 33 E. 3. Annuity 52. before the Statute of Quia Emptores terrarum, a man makes a feoffment in fee tenend. de dom. capital. feod. &c. reddend. 10s. rent; here, because that the tenure was reserved, capital dom. feodi illius, this rent reserved is not parcell of the tenure, but a rent in gross: King Edward the Sixth gave certain lands to Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, tenend. by the fifth part of a knight's fee, reddend. inde 6l. per ann. Cranmer made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his eldest son in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of Cranmer, who is attainted of treason, by which the remainder in fee escheated to the King, by which the seignory is gone. But it was adjudged, that notwithstanding that escheat, the rent did remain, for the rent was not parcel of the seignory. Now this rent being a thing newly created, and not parcel of the possessions of the dutchy in 1 H. 4. nor ever descended from any ancestor of the King, being Duke of Lancaster, shall be accounted to be in the King in the right of his Crown, and so cannot pass by the dutchy-seal: see the [164] said statute of 1 H. 4. and the King cannot enlarge the said dutchy, nor the possessions thereof beyond the possessions which were of the dutchy at the time of the making of the said Acts: as if J. S. seised in fee is impleaded, and he saith, that he holds the lands in demand for life, the remainder to the King in the right of his said dutchy; now the said remainder is vested in the King, not in the right of the said dutchy, but in the right of his Crown. The villain of the King in the right of his dutchy of Lancaster, purchased lands, the King seizeth, he shall be seised thereof in the right of his Crown, and not of the dutchy: the King grants common out of certain lands parcel of his said dutchy, and afterwards makes a feoffment of the said lands to another, the grantee of the common dieth without heir, so as the common escheats to him; now he shall have the common in the right of the Crown and not of the dutchy; so although it is said, that the rent shall follow the nature of the land out of which, &c. yet the same is but to some intents, and not to every intent: see the statute of 2 and 3 Phil. & Ma. cap. 20. by which it is enacted, that all the lands which have been granted or severed from the dutchy to any person or persons, and after such grant, have come or reverted to the King in possession, reversion or remainder, or otherwise by attainder, escheat, forfeiture, &c. shall for ever be united to the said dutchy, and shall be adjudged and esteemed as part and member of the same; which proves that such lands were not holden of the King, as Duke of Lancaster, but as

King; for if they had been holden of the dutchy upon the escheat, they should be parcel of the dutchy again, without help of that statute. See the special reservation; reddendo domino Regi, & hæredibus suis, aut illi cui de jure reddi debet, &c. Now, when the King grants the seignory to the Lord Audley, it was in the election of the ter-tenant, to whom he would pay the rent, if it had been in the case of a common person; but it is otherwise in the case of the King: as if A. holdeth of two several lords by owel feoffment, and dieth, his heir within age; the lord which first gets the ward shall have him; but in the case of the King it is otherwise; Plowden, The King is not bound by the statute of West. 3. But in this case, in the making of this feoffment with this tenend. & reddend. the feoffee shall hold of the King as of his dutchy; for all grants of the King savour of the person of the King; and then his prerogative wrapt in the person, shall guide the same; and see the statute of West. 3. extends to all who make feoffments, tenend. de feoffatoribus: but the King is not tenant to any one. And if the King be seised of an advowson in the right of his dutchy, and the same becomes void, and the King presents to the same, he may repeal his presentation: and he vouched divers precedents of patents made to many great lords, to hold of the dutchy, and also to hold of others: and the King by his dutchy-seal may give lands in mortmain. And he argued, that this rent, although newly created, yet in so much as it came, and accrued in respect of the land which was parcell of the dutchy, it should be accounted also parcel of the dutchy; as if before the statute of West. 3. A. seised of lands in fee, of the part of his father makes a feoffment in fee, tenend. by such services, &c. the same seignory shall go to the heirs of the part of the father, in lieu of which the seignory is come: tenant in tail after the statute of 32 H. 8. makes a lease for years, according to the said Act, rendring rent to him and his heirs, it shall be intended, heirs in tail. It was adjourned.

CXCVIII. FORSTER AND WALKER'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, by Foster against Walker, the case was, that Richard Meager was seised of a house in London: and 6 E. 6. he devised the same to his wife for life, the remainder to John his son in tail, the remainder to the Master and Wardens of the Cordwaynors in London, and died; the wife entred and died, John died, the master, wardens and commonalty of the Cordwaynors entred, and leased the plaintiff upon whom the heir general of the devisor did enter. The onely question was, inasmuch as the Cordwaynors of London are incorporated by the name of Master and Wardens and Commonalty of Cordwaynors, if this devise made to them by the name of Master and Wardens of the Cordwaynors of London be good or not? It was argued by Daniel, that the devise by the manner was good enough; and he insisted much upon the favour which the law gives to wills, and to legatees in the devises and construction of them, even in devises and grants to corporations: and as to grants to corporations, he cited the case of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich: decanus & capitulum sanctæ & individuæ Trinit. and they make a lease, leaving out these words [sanctæ & individuæ] and yet held the lease was good, notwithstanding that, for the words left out, are not words of substance of the name, but for the beauty and ornament of it: but in the case of devise, if the name be mistaken in matter of substance, yet if upon the devise the intent of the devisor sufficiently appeareth, it is good enough: for the intent of the devisor shall guide the devise, and therefore by devise, the fee-simple shall pass without the word [heirs.] And he said, that the opinion of Wray, Chief Justice, was in the case of the Dean of Pauls: If I devise that my executors shall assign my lands to J. S. the same, implicative, is a devise of the lands themselves to my executors; for otherwise they could not assign. So, if I will and devise, that A. shall pay yearly out of my manour of D. to J. S. 10l. the same is a good devise of the lands to A. So if in the case at bar this house had been devised to the Cordwaynors by the name of the Society of Cordwaynors, such devise had been good enough: Cooper contrary; and he said, that the intent of the devisor ought to agree with the law, otherwise the Judges are not to regard it in point of judgment; and he put the case of 39 H. 6. 10. A. deviseth his lands, and afterwards is disseised, and before any entry dieth; now, notwithstanding the intent of the devisor, the devise is void; and he said, The defect of a will in words, in making of an estate shall be supplied by intent, but the defect in words, in naming of the devisor or devisee shall never be supplied, see 49 E. 3. 3. & 4. the case of Whitavers. And he cited a case, 25 H. 8. A stranger of the low-countries being made a denizen in England, returned into his countrey, and dwelling there became sick: and in making of his will, he was advised by council, that by devise of all his goods, his lands deviseable would pass, and therefore by such words he declared his will with the intention aforesaid; (scil.) to pass his lands, and died, and afterwards the states of the low-countries wrote unto King Henry the 8. acquainting him with the intention of the devisor, and also of the opinion of their laws there upon the said will, and all in favour of the devisee; whereupon the King referred the consideration of the matter to Norwick, then Lord Chief Justice, who declared his opinion to the King to be, that by that devise, the lands did not pass, notwithstanding the intent of the devisor.

CXCIX. CRABDELL'S CASE.

Crabdell was bound by recognizance to his good behaviour; upon which the Queen brought a scire facias, and surmised, that after the recognizance acknowledged, the said Crabdell was arrested and taken by the constable for suspicion of felony, and of his own wrong escaped: it was objected on the part of Crabdell, because it is not alledged by matter in fact, that a felony was committed. But the whole Court was of a contrary opinion; for it is not material, if the felony were committed or not; for if a subject be arrested by a lawfull officer, it is not lawfull for him to escape; but he ought to stand to the law, and to answer unto the matter with which he is charged. And so Crabdell was forced to answer.

CC. BASSET AND PROWE'S CASE.

In debt upon a bond, the case was, that Basset was bound with Prowe as his surety, to one Preston, in a bond of 500l. and that was upon a corrupt and usurious contract against the statute; and Prowe was bound unto the plaintiff in a bond as a counter-bond, to save the plaintiff harmless from the said bond of 500l. Basset is sued by Preston upon the said bond, and so damnified; and thereupon sued Prowe upon the counter-bond, who pleaded against Basset, the Statute of Usury, pretending that all assurances depending upon such usurious contract, as void by the statute; but by the opinion of Wray, Chief Justice, the same is no plea, for the statute is, that all bonds, collateral assurances made for the payment of money lent upon usury, shall be utterly void; but the bond here upon which the action is brought, was not for the payment of the money lent, but for the indempnity of the surety.

And then the plaintiffs council took exception to the supersedeas, because it was not subscribed with the hand of Gawdy, but, non allocatur; for the seal is sufficient.

CCIV. SCOTT'S CASE.

William Scott was indicted upon the statute of 23 Eliz. of Recusants, by the name of William Scott of Southwark, gent. and upon that indictment judgment given for the Queen; upon which Scott brought a writ of error, and assigned for error: that in the indictment Scott is not named of any parish, but generally of Southwark; for within Southwark, there are divers parishes, and by the said statute it is ordained that the penalties accruing by the said statute ought to be divided in three parts, whereof one part is to be applied to the relief of the poor resident in the parish where the offence was committed, and therefore it ought to appear upon the indictment of what parish the party indicted is, or otherwise, non potest constare curiæ, to which parish the third part of the penalty doth belong, so that full execution may be made according to the statute: but the whole Court was clear of opinion, that the indictment is good enough, notwithstanding that exception; for all the penalty which accrues by the said statute, belongs first to the Queen; viz. a third part thereof to her own use, another third part for the relief, ut supra, to be delivered by warrant by the officers of the receipt of the Exchequer. And afterwards the inhabitants of the parish in which the offence was committed, are to sue in the Exchequer for their third part of the penalty, and surmise in their bill, that the offence was committed within their parish; and rule was entred accordingly.

CCV. GERRARD'S CASE.

Gerrard, Master of the Rolls, presented Chatterton, Bishop of Chester, to the church of Bangor; to which church, one Chamber's also presented his clerk, by which several presentments the said church became litigious: the Archbishop of York being loci illius ordinarius, awarded a jure patronatus, &c. depending which, the archbishop admitted the said bishop; whereupon Chambers libelled in the Spiritual Court against the said bishop, because the said archbishop, dicto Episcopo plus æquo favore admisit dictum Episcopum, pendente the jure patronatus, in which case, by the law of the church, the admittance is void; for, lite pendente, nihil movetur: and now came the said bishop, and prayed upon that matter a prohibition, which was granted because that the right of the patronage came in debate, after which came the said Chambers, and prayed a consultation, because he did not meddle with the right of the patronage, but onely with the tortious admittance. To which it was said by the Court, that the awarding of the jure patronatus, is not a thing of necessity, but at the will of the ordinary, and so for his better instruction; but if he will at his peril, take notice of the right of the patronage, he may admit which of them he will, without a jure patronatus awarded: and it may be in this case, that after the jure patronatus awarded, and before any verdict given upon it, the archbishop was satisfied of the right of the now plaintiff in the prohibition to the patronage, and thereupon admitted the clerk, &c. and if he was deceived to subject himself unto a quare impedit, whereof he had discharged himself, if he had attended the verdict in the jure patronatus: and by the clear opinion of the Court, the consultation was denyed.

CCVI. BARKER AND TAYLOR'S CASE.

The case was; that a woman, tenant in tail, within the statute of 11 H. 7. accepted of a fine, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. and by the same fine, rendred back the lands to the conusor for 100 years. It was moved, if this conveyance and disposition be within the penalty of the said statute; for the statute speaks of discontinuances, &c. And it was the clear opinion of the whole Court, that it is within the statute; for by such practice, the meaning of the statute might be defeated; and if such a render for 100 years should be good, by the same reason, it might be for 1000 years, which is like mischievous, and as dangerous unto him in the reddition, as a discontinuance; and by Rhodes, Justice, it hath been adjudged, that if a woman, who hath title of dower, before that she be endowed, will enter, and levy a fine, that the same is within the said statute, and yet she is not tenant in dower: see Dyer, 5. CCVII. MORRIS AND WEBBER'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, by George Morris against Webber, alias Turnor, the plaintiff declared upon a lease by Humphrey Bury, &c. And upon not guilty, the jury found this special matter: that Hen. Bury was seised, et cepit in uxorem quandam Willmottam Gifford. 4 Mariæ. And afterwards: 1 Eliz. she libelled in the Spiritual Court against the said Henry, in causa divortii de nullitate matrimonii; and found upon the libel, in hæc verba, and all the sentence upon it; viz. In Dei nomine, amen. Per depositiones & examinationes medicorum, & aliorum fide dignorum, & honestarum, & expertarum matronarum comperimus & invenimus: quod prædict. Henr. & Willmotta legit. ætatis & plenæ pubert. exist. per duos annos integros simul cohabitaverunt, & in uno lecto concubuerunt. & licet dict. Willmotta operam liberis dare cupierit, nunquam tamen per carnalem copulam cum dicto Henrico conjungi, aut ab illo cognosci potuit, aut potest, idque propter vitium perpetuæ frigiditatis & naturæ impotentiæ generandi, quæ nulla medicorum opera curari pot. idque prædict. Humphrid. sæpius confessus est, se nunquam cum prædicta Willmotta tanquam virum cum uxore conjunctum fuisse, aut conjungi potuisse. Igitur invocato primitus Dei nomine; matrimonium prædict. irritari, cessari quatenuscunque de facto processit cassum, irritum, nullumque in lege, juribus juris omnino carere, & carere debere decernimus, & declaramus, ipsosque quatenus sunt de facto matrimonialiter ad invicem conjuncti a vinculo matrimonii separamus, &c. Humphry made a feoffment in fee unto the use of himself for life, and after to the use of the first, or eldest son of the body of the said Henry in tail. Willmot married Cary, Henry took to wife Phillippam Mountjoy scientem matrimonii prædict. & definitivæ sententiæ prædict. & durantibus ambobus matrimoniis, tam inter dict. Cary & Willmotta, quam inter dictos Henricum & Phillippam, dicta Phillippa exitum habuit per dict. Henricum, Humphrey the lessor, upon which lease the plaintiff declared, Humphrey died: Henry entred, and leased to the plaintiff. Shuttleworth, Serjeant, argued for the plaintiff, that this divorce not reversed or undone by appeal, or otherwise, should stand in force, and according to it the law of the land should judge: see 47 E. 3. 17. casu ultimo. Five manner of divorces are mentioned: 1 Causa professionis: 2 Præcontractus: 3 Consanguinitatis: 4 Affinitatis: 5 Frigiditatis; upon a divorce, causa professionis, the wife shall be endowed, and the heir shall inherit, but in the other not. And the principal cause is reported by the Lord Dyer, 2 Eliz. 179. where Cary and Willmott levying a fine of the lands of Willmott, as husband and wife; and it was moved, that such fine ought not to be engrossed, because that now the divorce is avoided; for Henry in his second marriage hath issue, therefore there is no perpetua frigiditas, &c. but at the last it was engrossed, because the sentence of the divorce doth continue in its force, and then Humphrey, born in the second marriage, is the first son of Henry lawfully begotten; and so capable of the use to him limited upon the feoffment of Henry 22 E. 4 Fitz. Consultation, 51. by Catesby: where my father and mother are divorced without lawfull cause, and afterwards they marry themselves elsewhere, and die, the said divorce, as long as it is in force shall bind me in point of inheritance, and I cannot have an action as heir, &c. during the divorce, is in force: for the divorce being a spiritual judgment shall not be reformed but in the Spiritual Court; and therefore this sentence of divorce, causa perpetuæ frigiditatis, as long as it is in force not repealed or reversed, shall bind all persons: but [170] in some cases, such a divorce shall not disable the party to sue; as if a man bringeth an action, de muliere abducta cum bonis viri, where after the trespass committed, the husband and wife are divorced, yet the action lieth, for this action is not in the right, but in possession onely, and in such action, never accoupled in legal matrimony, is not any plea, but the defendant ought to answer to the possession, not his wife; for although they are divorced, yet the action lieth; and if judgment is given in the Spiritual Courts, the Courts of the King shall receive and admit of them, as long as they are in their force. The Abbat of Fountain's case, 9 H. 6. 32. the custome of the abby was, that at every vacation of the abbat, the monks should proceed to a new election, and that he who should be chosen by the greater number of the monks, should be abbat: and the case was, that upon such avoidance, one A. was elected by the greater number of voices, (scil.) 22 monks. And B. was chosen by the lesser number, (scil.) 20 monks; but notwithstanding that, B. entred and carried himself as abbat, by the institution of the visitor, and made a deed by consent of the covent, and died; it was holden, that the said deed should bind the house: for here is a spiritual act, (scil.) the institution of the visitor, which being in force, shall bind us, and our law, 34 H. 6. 38. upon contention betwixt two patrons, claiming the presentment unto a church, the bishop awarded, jure patronatus; which found for one of them, upon which the bishop admitted the clerk of him for whom it was found by the jure patronatus; and afterwards, the other party brought a quare impedit, and it was found for him : now this judicial act done by the bishop, shall excuse the bishop from any disturbance. Fenner, Serjeant, contrary, Although that the sentence of this divorce be set down in peremptory and final terms, as matrimonium cassum, irritum, nullum, yet our law shall respect the cause and ground of it, (scil.) perpetua frigiditas, &c. and now it appeareth by the success of the second marriage, (scil.) the issue Humphrey, that the cause and matter upon which the divorce was grounded, &c. was an offence of the time, and not of nature for he is now recovered ; and in as much as the church hath erred in the sentence of this divorce, which error is now apparent ; this Court shall adjudge according to the truth of the matter, as the spiritual law ought to have adjudged, and not as they have adjudged : and he cited Fox's case, 16 Eliz. The said Fox being parson of a church, was deprived in the Parliament time for incontinency, and by the same Parliament, all incontinencies were pardoned ; now upon the matter, we are to adjudge this deprivation meerly void without any other spiritual act. At another day, the case was argued by Walmsley Serjeant, that the sentence definitive of the Spiritual Court, in cause of divorce, causa frigiditatis, should stand ; and he argued much in what manner the law of the church, and the law of the land should determine marriage : and he argued that the right of marriage, was determinable by the spiritual law ; and he said, that such sentences ought to be passed by our law : and taken notice of ; and therefore he who pleads a divorce, ought to shew before what Judge the divorce is had, to the intent the Judges may know to what persons they shall write for the trial of it ; and it appears in our books, that our law takes upon it the conusance of the competency of an Ecclesiastical Judge ; which see, 2 E. 4. 15 and 16. The Judges of the Temporal Courts of the King, have determined, that the Pope is not a competent Judge within this realm : and it is true, the common law doth yield unto the law of the church the trial and determination of the right of marriage ; but the trial of the possession of the marriage retains to it self : as if an infant marrieth within the age of consent, and afterwards at full age of consent, doth disagree, now the common law shall determine that the same is not any marriage : so [171] 11 H. 4. 167. The Temporal Court shall adjudge upon marriage in fact and in possession, but if the party will plead, that they were never accoupled in lawfull matrimony, a writ shall go unto the bishop to certifie the same ; and in trespass, de muliere abducta cum bonis viri, and in cui in vita, &c. this issue, not his wife, is to be tried by the Temporal Court of the King : for the right of the marriage is not in question, but it is sufficient, if it were a marriage in fact and in possession : see 44 Ass. 12. & 13. and see 21 H. 7. 39. The Temporal Court shall determine of the marriage, if void or voidable : a deacon marrieth a wife, that marriage is not void, so of a priest ; but if a man marrieth a nun, the marriage is void : but in our case, here is a sentence definitive, in a cause of divorce, in which case it doth not belong to us to examine the cause, but be the divorce right or wrong, it shall stand, &c. 10 E. 3. Bar. 296. Nisi sit quoad thor. tantum, vel causa castitatis : and see by Shelley, 28 H. 8. 13. If they of the Spiritual Court give judgment in any cause, be it true or false, untill it be defeated or reversed, it shall bind all the world : see 22 E. 4. Fitz. Consultation 5. Corbet's case, 4 H. 7. 14. by Oxenbridge, 18 E. 4. 30. by Chock ; and 9 E. 4. 24. He who pleads a divorce, ought to shew before what Judge the divorce was had ; but that is not to examine the matter, but to know to what person the Court shall write for the trial of it. It is true, that in case of resignation and deprivation, but in case of divorce, the cause thereof ought to be shewed ; for some divorces dissolve the marriage utterly, and do bastardize the issue, and disable the wife to be endowed ; and some divorces do not dissolve it : as that which is but à thoro & mensa, 11 H. 7. 27. But generally, in spiritual judgments, the causes of them do not fall in judgment in any Temporal Court : 3 H. 4. 34. An excommengement pleaded without shewing of any cause ; and although in our case, the cause of this divorce being for frigidity, sublata jam causa toleretur effectus ; and now, the party in whom such frigidity is assigned, is become whole, as appeareth by his success in his second marriage, having now issue ; yet we ought not to regard that, for then we should resort unto the cause of the divorce, with which we are not to meddle. Gawdy, Serjeant, to the contrary : and first he confessed, that the determination of the right of marriage doth belong unto the Spiritual Court ; but as unto the case in question, (scil.) the divorce in causa frigiditatis, it appeareth by 44 Ass. 13. by Knivet, that the party may receive his nature, in which case he may have again his wife, and there need not in such case a new marriage; and because that here it appeareth, that Bury hath recovered his nature forasmuch as he hath now issue by another wife, the divorce is become of no force, which see Dyer 2 Eliz. 179. where the case now at the bar was in debate; where a woman inheritrix took a husband, from whom she was divorced, causa frigiditatis, the wife afterwards was married to Carie, by whom she had issue, and gave all her inheritance to her said second husband: and the first husband also took a wife, of whom he had issue; in that case, the opinion of the doctors was, that the first husband and his wife should be compelled to cohabite together as man and wife, because ecclesia decepta fuit in priore judicio. Anderson, That which we have argued is very clear; (scil.) that the Ecclesiastical Court hath authority to determine the right of marriage; but the point of this case is, if this judgment of divorce being given for cause of frigidity, which was adjudged to be perpetual, and now by matter subsequent it appeareth that the party is not frigidus, but he hath recovered his nature, if the divorce shall be accounted ipso facto void, without other circumstance of the spiritual law: and although their sentence be definitive in terms, yet upon this special matter, ex post facto, if the force thereof shall fail. And I have conferred with many learned in the canon law, which are of such opinion; and of that opinion was Doc-[172]-tor Dale; and therefore it is convenient, that your clients, each of them do retain one who is learned in the said law, who can inform us what their law is. And Rhodes, Justice, agreed in this case to what the Lord Anderson said, and put the case which was in the King's Bench, 16 Eliz. Foxe's case, which is before vouched, and it was adjourned. And after, at another day, by the appointment of the justices, the case was argued in Court by the civilians and canonists: Goldingham, on the part of the plaintiff, and Steward on the part of the defendant: and first it was said on the plaintiff's part, that by the sentence, all the matter, transit in rem judicatam, and therefore we shall not resort to the matter censured, the sentence being in its force. And as to that, it was answered by Steward, that transit in rem judicatam, but not in case of marriage, and in the like cases, where vertitur periculum animæ; for in such cases the sentences are subject to the success; as if after it appeareth, ecclesiam fuisse deceptam per errorem licet probabilem (ut illi loquuntur) for then periculum animæ vertitur, for then they should continue their adultery, unless the sentence of the church be annulled. Goldingham, It transit in rem judicatam, non quoad instantiam, non quoad causam: so that as long as the sentence is in force, it is causa judicata; yet the cause is subject to the censure of the church. Steward, In our case here, all our books are, matrimonium sit nullum: Goldingham, The words are also in such, reparabitur matrimonium, in which it is implied, that some solemnity of the holy church is requisite in such reparation of marriage. Steward, Where a man is divorced, causa frigiditatis, it is prohibited by such sentence that he shall not marry again, and if he doth marry, he is holden in our law perjured, and an adulterer; and to that purpose he cited divers authorities of the canon law. Goldingham, This sentence is not properly a divorce, for here was never properly a marriage: as in cases de præcontract. Divorce upon that cannot be said properly a divorce, but a sentence of the church upon the errour of the parties: and he put many degrees of impositions in such cases, perpetua frigiditas, & naturalis impotentia generandi; frigiditas ex malefacio: i.e. quoad unam aliquam personam, and many others, quæ possunt matrimonium contrah. & dirimere contractum: and the sentences which in our law, are contra jus constitutionis: as where there is not any citation, declaration, or that the sentence is of another thing than that which is contained in the libell, in such cases the sentence is utterly void; but sentences there given, contra jus partis, are voidable onely; see panormit. fraternitatis: si notorie apparet sententiam divortii fuisse injustam, libet revocari, non obstante quod non fuerit appellat. sententia cessat cum notorie constat de injustitia: et in institutionibus juris. can. 189. si vir causetur arctitudinem in muliere, per quam non est habilis ad coeundum, & ex eo separatur, si mulier postea aliquem invenierit qui seras reserare possit, ad primum conjugium redire compellandi sunt: vid. corpus canon. 357. conjugium confirmatur officio, sed postquam confirmatur officio non licet viro uxorem dimittere, nec uxori à viro discedere nisi causa fornicationis, verum antequam confirmatur impossibilitas officii solvit vinculum conjugii: and panorm. fratern. propter arctitudinem mulieris, si apparet quod præter divinum miraculum absque periculo corporis

Et alibi: si ecclesia se deceptam invenierit ex hoc quod impedimentum quod judicavit perpetuum, apparet temporale, redintegrabitur primum matrimonium, &c. And afterwards the case was adjourned.

Afterwards, that is to say, Mich 30. and 31 Eliz. the case was moved again, and judgment was prayed for the plaintiff; and then the Lord Anderson, ex assensu sociorum, commanded that judgment should be entred for the plaintiff; and shewed unto the council of both parties, that about the certificate, which the four doctors have shewed unto us, of their opinions upon the point, we our selves have conferred with the said doctors, who have given us their answers, that the said sentence of divorce being yet in force, not reversed is peremptory, and not subject to the success: and although in the examinations and depositions taken in the Ecclesiastical Court, no matter appeareth, upon which such peremptory divorce might be granted, yet it might be, as we are informed by the said doctors, that upon the examination of physicians and matrons, sufficient matter did appear to the said Ecclesiastical Judges, (which for modesty sake ought not to be entred of record) and that appeareth within the sentence; i. habito sermone cum matronis & medicis, which speech not entred of record (causa qua supra) might be the cause that induced the Ecclesiastical Judges to give sentence for the divorce, notwithstanding that the matter within the record be too general to prove, naturalem frigiditatem generandi, but rather maleficium; and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff, and so the sentence is bound by the divorce, as long as the sentence doth continue in force: see this case in Coke, 5 Part. where upon a writ of error brought, 41 Eliz. the judgment was affirmed.

CCVIII. GITTINSON AND TYRREL'S CASE.

Gittinson brought an action of debt against Tyrrel, warden of the Fleet, by a bill of privilege, but he would not appear; and the Court was in great doubt, what remedy the plaintiff hath to compell the defendant to appear. For he cannot be fore-judged the Court, because he hath an estate of inheritance in the said office; and afterwards it was surmised to the Court, that the said Tyrrel had made a lease of his said office to another for three years, and then the Court was clear of opinion, that the said Tyrrel should not have the privilege; for now during the lease, he is not officer, but the lessee.

CCIX. HARRIS AND THE LORD MOUNTJOY'S CASE.

[See Ex parte Morris, In re Duke of Newcastle, 1869-70, L. R. 5 Ch. 173; 4 H. L. 661.]

Harris affirmed a plaint of debt in the Guildhall in London, against the Lord Mountjoy, and made an attachment of the goods of the said lord in the hands of Sir Drew Drewrie; the lord removed the matter into the Common Pleas, by a writ of privilege; if now the said lord shall find bail was the question, because that he is a

Lord of the Parliament, &c. And the opinion of the whole Court was, that he should find bail, for that is the course of the Court, whosoever is party. And by Anderson, admitting the law to be, that the body of a Lord of Parliament shall not be taken in execution (which I do [174] not believe) yet notwithstanding that bail shall be found in such case: for the condition of bail doth consist upon two points: first, that he render his body to prison in execution, if judgment be given against him. Secondly, or to pay the condemnation: and therefore if the body of a Baron of Parliament is not subject to execution, yet the bail shall stand for the second; i. e. to pay the condemnation; and all the justices were of clear opinion, that for execution upon a statute-staple; merchant, upon the Statute of Acton Burnel, or upon the statute of 23 H. 8. the body of a Baron of Parliament shall be taken in execution; for by these statutes, such persons were not exempted.

Note, it was said, that the division of a great meadow into many parcels, by making of ditches, is not waste; for the meadow may be the better for it; and it is for the profit and ease of the occupiers of it: and by Windham and Rhodes, Justices, if a termor converteth a meadow into a hop-garden, the same is not waste, for it is imployed to a greater profit, and it may be a meadow again: Periam, Justice, Although it be a greater profit, yet it is also with greater labour and charges; and the conversion of a meadow into an orchard is waste, although it may be to the greater profit of the occupier.

CCXI. Mich. 29 & 30 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In a replevin, the defendant avowed for damage feasant, and upon issue joined, it was found for the avowant, and damages assessed; and now issued a retorno habendo, upon which the sheriff did retorn, averia elongata, whereupon a withernam was awarded, and now came the plaintiff and tendred in Court the damages assessed by the jury, and prayed stay of the withernam, and threw the moneys into Court; but the whole Court was clear against it, for in this case the plaintiff ought to pay a fine, because he had essoigned the cattel, which is a contempt; wherefore the Court assessed a fine of three shillings four pence upon the plaintiff, and then the plaintiff had his prayer.

CCXII. Shrewsbury and the Inhabitants of the Hundred of Ashton.

An action upon the Statute of Hue and Cry, was brought by Shrewsbury against the inhabitants of the hundred, of the three hundreds de Ashton in the county of Bucks: it was moved on the part of the defendants, that if upon such hue and cry the inhabitants do their endeavours, as much as in them is, to follow and take the malefactors, and yet they cannot apprehend them, that in reason they ought not to be charged by the said statute. But the whole Court was strongly against it: and by Anderson, The inhabitants of the hundred, in which the robbery was done, are bound to apprehend the felons, or satisfie the party robbed. And the party robbed is not bound to give notice to the inhabitants, nor to direct them which way the felons took their flight, but the inhabitants are bound to follow the felons without [175] any such instruction, and after the enquest was taken, and gave a verdict in this manner: that whereas the plaintiff had declared, that the robbery was done in the parish of D. in the hundred aforesaid, the jury found, that the place where the robbery was done, is a lane within the said hundred; and that the one side of the said lane is within the parish of S. and the other side within the said parish of D.

and that the robbery was done in the side of the said lane, which was in the parish of S. and prayed the opinion of the Court upon that matter. And the Court was clear of opinion, that notwithstanding that exception, the plaintiff should have judgment; for here is the right hundred which ought to be charged; and the mistaking of the parish is not to any purpose. But then it was moved on the part of the plaintiff; that for as much as the verdict aforesaid was special, by reason of the doubt which the jurors conceived upon the mistaking of the parish, in the plaintiff's declaration, that the charges of the jurors should be indifferently born by both parties, as the course is in cases of special verdicts; but the whole Court was clear against that, and commanded that the plaintiff alone should pay the said charges, for the matter here found specially is not any doubt; but out of all question, for it is clear that the action is well brought, for as much as the hundred is charged, the mistaking of the parish shall not hurt.

CCXIII. HELLYARD'S CASE.

A habeas corpus was to the warden of the Fleet, to bring the body of one Hellyard, who retorned the writ, that the said Hellyard was committed to the Fleet, per mandatum Francisci Walsingham, militis unius principalium Secretariorum Dominæ Reginæ, &c. and because the warden did not shew in his retorn for what cause the said Hellyard was committed, the Court gave him day to amend his retorn, or otherwise the prisoner should be delivered.

CCXIV. MICH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Upon a recovery in a writ of entry, sur disseisin of two acres of land, habere facias seisinam was awarded, the sheriff as to one acre retorned habere feci; as to the other tarde. And the retorn was shewed to the Court; and all the justices but Periam held, that the sheriff should be amerced for that retorn, contrary and repugnant in it self; but by Periam, it may be, that the acre of which no seisin is had, was so far distant from the other acre, whereof seisin was, that the sheriff, for want of time, could not make execution of both, being so remote the one from the other. To which it was answered, that if the truth of the case was such, then might the sheriff make execution in one acre in the name of both acres. And if upon a capias ad satisfaciend. against two, the sheriff doth retorn as to one, cepi, and to the other tarde, he shall be amerced, for those several retorns cannot stand together.

Edgar recovered against Crispe in debt, and afterwards released to Crispe, and afterwards, notwithstanding the release, Edgar sued for a capias ad satisfaciend. against Crispe, and pursued the same untill [176] Crispe was outlawed: and it was the opinion of Anderson, Cheif Justice, that Crispe should have an audita querela, notwithstanding the outlawry; and if the audita querela passeth with Crispe, the outlawry also should be avoided.

CCXVI. FRANKWELL'S CASE.

In trespass for carrying away of tithes, the case was; that Frankwell, parson of the church of D. was accused, in forma juris, before the High Commissioners, who pleaded, that the same cause and crime was prosecuted against him in the Arches, and prayed that he might not be doubly vexed for one and the same offence; and notwithstanding that he was deprived, and another clerk presented to the same church by the patron, and was admitted, instituted and inducted; and upon entry, brought trespass against the former incumbent. And note, the manner of the deprivation, as it was found by verdict: that the Bishop of London, with the assent of the other Commissioners, gave sentence of deprivation against him; and it was shewed, that the High Commissioners had not power by 1 Eliz. to give sentence of any thing which is dependant in another Court: for it was not the intent of the said Act, to take away the jurisdiction of the other Ecclesiastical Courts; for then it is in vain to have such Courts: it was also moved, because the pleading is, that the Bishop of London, ex assensu of the other Commissioners, gave sentence, the same is a void sentence; for it ought to be the sentence of all the Commissioners, for they shall have equal authority: and to this purpose, he cited the case, 29 H. 8. Dyer 40. where a lease is made of lands, whereof the dean and chapter are seised, in common, per nomen decani ex assensu, & consensu totius capitul. but it was holden a void lease; for the chapter ought to be party to such lease; contrary, where the lease is made of the land which is the proper and peculiar inheritance of the dean: but that exception was not allowed; for the form of entries in all cases, hath always been so. Coke, posito, that the Commissioners ought not to proceed in this case, yet, because they have so done, the same ought not to be examined here; for the Judges here, ought to think that this deprivation was duly made; for, cuique credend. in sua arte, which Wrey granted: and it was said by him, that the Court was created for two causes: 1 For the expedition of the causes depending in the Spiritual Courts: 2 To give to such Judges authority to punish offences in more high degrees; for before they could not but onely excommunicate, but now they may imprison; and if the party had libelled against him in the Spiritual Court of the Arches, it is no reason but that the party for his own expedition, and for to procure due punishment against the offender, may send the cause into the high Court; and after judgment was given according to the deprivation: and afterwards error was brought thereupon, and the error assigned upon the matter in law, whether the said deprivation was lawfull or not? Coke, I remember the reason of the judgment given by the Court was, that admitting that the sentence of the High Commissioners was erroneous; yet it shall bind untill it be reversed by appeal, Fenner, If the party grieved might be restored by appeal, I agree, that such sentence should bind untill it were reversed; but in our case, no appeal lieth from the High Commissioners, wherefore we ought to be helped here; or otherwise we are without remedy. Coke, If the delegates give sentence, no appeal lieth, and yet the party grieved shall [177] not be helped here. Fenner, 16 Eliz. One Foxe was deprived the last day of the Parliament for incontinency, which offence was pardoned by the same Parliament, and that sentence of deprivation was holden void. Anderson, In your case, the offence it self was pardoned and discharged: also it is against a general statute, of which every one ought to take notice Periam, When the case was in the Common Pleas, it was moved; if of a sentence given by the High Commissioners, an appeal did lie; and it was certified by Clark, doctor of the civil law, that it did; for the Commissioners are as the delegates of the Queen: and as by the canon law one might appeal from the delegates of the Pope, unto the person of the Pope; so now, one may appeal from the High Commissioners, to the person of the Queen: see for that, 24 H. 8. 12. another error was assigned, because that the commission gave authority to the Commissioners, to adjudge upon confession of the party, or upon the witnesses; but here none of these two ways is found by the verdict; but sentence was given upon his plea, that he was sued in the Arches for the same cause, and so they have not pursued their authority: for the Act is, that such Commissioners shall have authority by vertue of the said Act, and of the said letters patents to exercise, &c. and they are directed by the letters patents, that they shall proceed upon due proof had by confession or true witness, to give sentence. Periam, Although they have not observed the due form prescribed unto them by the letters patents; yet such sentence is not void. Anderson, If the party appeareth and will not answer, it shall be taken pro confesso, and he shall be condemned.

TRIN. 38 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCXVII. SIR JOHN SAND'S AND PACKSAL BROCAS'S CASE.

Sir John Sands brought an action upon the case against Packsal Brocas, upon a trover of goods and houshold-stuff; the defendant pleaded as to parcel, that they were fixed to his freehold in S. in Hampshire, absque hoc, that he found them in other manner; as to the part, that the plaintiff gave them to him at D. in Hampshire, and as to the other part, he pleaded, not guilty: for the first part, the plaintiff caused it to be entred, non vult ulterius prosequi, and took issue upon the two other; and it was found for the plaintiff by several juries, in several counties, and damages and costs assessed by the juries: and now the defendant brought error, and assigned error, i. because the plaintiff as to the first had entred, non vult ulterius prosequi, which is a non-suit, and non-suit in part, is non-suit in all. Anderson, It is a question, if this be a non-suit? the entry is, querens venit, & gratis concessit, that as to the goods mentioned in the first pleas, non vultulterius prosequi; ideo, consideratum est quod nihil de iisdem versus the defendant fiat, est ille & pleg. in miseric. & the defendant eat inde sine die. Periam, A non-suit is, when the plaintiff is demanded and doth not appear; but when he comes into Court, and saith, quod non vult ulterius prosequi, the same is a retraxit: Nelson, Prothonotary, Non-suit is upon default; but here the plaintiff appears, and this is the usual form of entry of a retraxit. Another error was assigned, because both juries have assessed costs, and judgment given according; whereas the last verdict ought to do it. And where two juries are to try the issue, the form of the entry after the first verdict is, cesset executio, untill the other issue be tryed: vid. 21 H. 6. 51. 36 H. 6. 13. Anderson, Several issues cannot sever the costs, although they may the damages, for it is but one suit; therefore but one costs; and that is the reason that judgment shall not be given untill the last issue be [178] tryed, because that costs shall be but once assessed, which was granted by the whole Court: and by Periam, The first jury may assess costs for the whole suit, quod fuit concessum. Coke, Here are several judgments for the costs; and although it be void for the later issue, yet it is good for the first. Periam, How shall it appear unto us which verdict was the first, and which the last? although that the one verdict be entred of record before the other, the same doth not make that it was first given; wherefore, the whole shall be reversed.

CCXVIII.

A man, 30 Eliz. made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his first son, and his heirs; the father and the feoffees before issue, for money, by deed, give, grant, and enfeoff J. S. and his heirs, who hath not notice of the use; the tenant for life hath issue, and dieth, the issue entreth: Glanvile, The use limited to the first son is destroyed; for without regress of the feoffees, it cannot rise; and that the same is gone by their livery: see Plowden's Com. 340. and also he vouched the case of the Earl of Kent, whereby the release of the surviving feoffee, a sleeping use was destroyed, and could not afterwards be revived. Harris, The use may rise without entry of the feoffees: and he put a difference between uses created before the statute and uses created after; for in the first case, they ought to enter; and if they be disabled by any Act, as in the case betwixt Gascoign and the Earl of Kent, they shall never rise, but in the later case, all the authority and confidence is by the statute out of the feoffees, and the uses contingent shall rise without aid of the feoffees by the operation of the law; for the land is bound to the uses, and charged with them: as upon a recovery in a warrantia chartæ, the land of the defendant is charged, pro loco & tempore; and according to the common experience in conveyances for the payment of the debts of the King: as in the case betwixt Breden and Dennis. The debtor of the King makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his heirs, untill he makes default of payment of such a sum unto the King at such a day, and upon default, to the use of the King and his heirs. Cooper, There needs no entry of the feoffees; and he put the difference put before by Harris, betwixt an use created before and an use created after the statute: and now the feoffees have not any power to revive or destroy such cases, but are onely as instruments to convey the uses; for the use is created upon the livery, and is transferred by the statute, if the person to whom the use is limited be capable thereof at the time of the limitation thereof; but if not, the law shall preserve the same, and it cannot by any means be prevented. And he put the case of Bro. Feoff. to Uses, 50. 30 H. 8. And there is a great difference betwixt an use limited before the statute and after the statute; for now, after the statute, the feoffees have not any seisin, whereof they may make a feoffment: and he put the case between Cheney and Oxenbridge; Cheney leased to Oxenbridge for 60 years, and afterwards enfeoffed Oxenbridge to the use of the said Cheney and his wife for their lives, with divers remainders over; and it was adjudged in the Court of Wards, that by that feoffment the term was not extinct: and he put the case of the Lord Paget in the King's Bench adjudged. A feoffment was made unto the use of the feoffor for life, the remainder to him whom the feoffor should name at his death, in fee; the feoffor and the feoffees for good consideration, levied a fine unto a stranger, and afterwards the feoffor named one and died, the party named by the feoffor shall have the land, notwithstanding the fine. Beaumont, The contingent use here, is utterly destroyed [179] by the feoffment aforesaid; and it appeareth by the preamble of the Act of 27 H. 8. that the makers of the Act did not favour uses, but their intent was utterly to extirpate uses: and if contingent uses which are not, nor cannot be executed by the statute should stand in force, the mischief would be, that no purchasor should be secured and safe in his purchase, but should always be in danger of a new born use, not known before; and he grounded his farther argument upon the reason of Manwood and Dyer, where a man makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his wife which shall be, and afterwards he and the feoffees, and those in remainder, make a feoffment to divers new feoffees, and to new uses; and afterwards he takes another wife, and dieth: it was the opinion of the said two Judges, that by that feoffment, ut supra, the contingent uses are destroyed: for when the estate which the feoffees accept is taken away, which was the root and foundation of the uses which are the branches and fruit of the body of the said tree, it necessarily followeth, that they be also taken away; and because the feoffees by their livery, are barred to enter to recontinue the estate which should yield such uses, they also are gone and extinguished. Yelverton was of opinion, that notwithstanding the said feoffment, that the use should rise in his due time according to the limitation of it. It was adjourned.

CCXIX. The Lord North's Case.

The Queen granted unto the Lord North and his heirs, the fines, pro licentia concordandi, and one would not pay him the fine; for which cause, the Lord North brought an action upon the case against him, and declared upon indebitatus assumpsit, &c. Godfrey moved this matter to the Court, to know their opinion, if such action would lie for the matter or not. Fennor, For a fine in a court-baron, or court-leet, debt lieth; but as he conceived, here this action doth not lie, for it is a real fine, and there is no contract betwixt the parties; but the same is given by the law: and some were of opinion, that debt lieth for a relief, for there is a contract by fealty. Gawdy conceived, that the action doth well lie; for it is not any casual profit and therefore debt lieth for it, although it be an inheritance: and see Dyer 28 H. 8. 24. The heir shall have an action of debt upon a nomine pœnæ reserved by his ancestour. Wray, I do not see that he hath any other remedy, and therefore I am of opinion that this action will lie.

CCXX. MRS. PASCHALL'S CASE.

Mistress Paschall was bound with sureties, for her appearance before the High Commissioners, that she should not depart without licence under the hands of three of them; and she pleaded the general pardon at the last Parliament, in which there is an exception of all bonds and recognizances, except only such bonds and recognizances as are for appearance: and Atkinson argued, that she ought to be discharged, by the exception; for although the departure without licence be not specially named, yet it is within the sense; for the not departure without licence, is no other thing, than to continue her appearance. Popham contrary: for, the non departure without licence, was set down in the condition to this purpose, that she should [180] not go into the countrey to be corrupted there, or to corrupt other, and receive seminaries, &c. therefore it is another thing than appearance: between Hore and Hare, the case was, one was bound to make his appearance at such a day, and in the mean time thrice every month to repair unto such a preacher to be better informed in religion, although the non appearance was pardoned; yet the other point, i. the resorting to the preacher, is to be answered. Atkinson, There the resorting to the preacher is collateral, and a several point from the appearance: but in the case at bar, the not departure is pursuant to the appearance. And the opinion of all the Barons was, that the pardon did not extend to the same.

CCXXI. TRIN. 31 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

An action was brought against an executor, who pleaded, that he refused the executorship, upon which the parties were at issue. The bishop certified, quod non recusavit, whereas in truth, he had refused before the commissary of the bishop. Fenner, Serjeant, moved to have the advice of the Court upon this matter, and argued, that the Court ought to write to the commissary, which was denied by the Court, for he is not the officer to this Court as to that purpose, but the bishop himself is our officer: and the party cannot have an averment against the certificate of the bishop, no more than against the retorn of the sheriff: and the Court also held, that the onely remedy for the defendant, was by an action upon the case against the bishop for his false certificate: but it was moved, that the issue joined upon the refusal, ought to be tried by the countrey, and not by the certificate of the bishop; and such was the opinion of Windham and Walmsley: Periam, Where the issue is, that the executor refused before such a day, or after, there the issue shall be tried by the countrey; contrary, where the issue is upon the refusal generally, for the refusal is before him as Judge, as also resignation is.

CCXXII. GILES'S CASE.

A writ of error was brought in the King's Bench, to reverse a judgment given in an action upon the case, in the Court of Common Pleas; where the writ brought against the defendant there in that case, was, quare exaltavit stagnum per quod pratum of the plaintiff was inundatum: the defendant in the action there pleaded, not guilty, and the jury found, that the defendant erexit stagnum; and they said, that if the Court shall judge, that erectio and exaltatio be all one, then they find, that the defendant is guilty; and afterwards judgment was given in the said Court of Common Pleas for the plaintiff: whereupon this writ of error is brought. And Glanvile, Serjeant, who argued for the plaintiff, in the writ of error alledged the general error; viz. that judgment was given for the plaintiff, where it ought to be found for the defendant: and he said, that erigere stagnum est de novo facere, exaltare, is erectum majoris altitudinis facere, deexaltare est ad pristinam altitudinem adducere: prosternere stagnum, est penitus tollere: and in every action upon the case, such apt and precise words are to be in the writ, according as his case requires, unto the end that judgment may in such action be given to the plaintiff according to his plaint, and his damages, in 7 E. 3. 56. In assise [181] of nusans, quare exaltavit stagnum ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui: the defendant pleaded, that he had not inhanced it after it was levied; and there it was said by Drew, Serjeant, that there is not any other writ in the Chancery, but quare exaltavit stagnum. But that was denied by Herle: for that he said that the plaintiff might have a writ out of the Chancery, quare levavit stagnum: and there by that book it is assigned, that levare stagnum, & exaltare stagnum do differ: and therefore he said, that in this case, the writ should abate for the using of one word for another, 8 E. 3. 21. Fitz. Nusans 5. by Chauntrel, in a writ of nusans, quare levavit, if it be found that he levied it to the nusans, &c. the whole shall be destroyed; but in a writ quare exaltavit, nothing shall be pulled down, if it be found for the plaintiff, but that which is enhaunced onely: so 8 Ass. 9. Br. nusans 17. the same case is put. And see 16 E. 3. Fitz. Nusans, 11. If the nusans be found in any other form than the plaintiff hath declared, he shall not recover: and in 48 E. 3. 27. the writ was, quare divertit cursum aquæ, &c. and the plaintiff shewed, that the defendant had set piles, and such other things in the water, by reason whereof the course of the water was straitened; and because the plaintiff might have had a writ, quare coarctavit cursum aquæ, the writ was abated: another exception was taken, viz. that the assise of nusans ought to be brought against the tenant of the freehold, and therefore it would not lie in this case; it not being shewed that the defendant was tenant of the soil: vid. 33. H. 6. 26. by Moile, if a way be straitned and impaired, an action upon the case lieth; but if it be altogether stopped up, then an assise must be brought; but there it is said by Prisoit, that if the stopping up of the way be done by the tenant of the land, then an assise lieth; if by a stranger, then an action upon the case: but for common nusances no action lieth, but they ought to be presented in the Court-leet or turn, and there redressed: and such was the opinion of the whole Court in this case. Then it was moved, that one of the plaintiffs in the writ of error had released; and the question was, whether that release should bar his companion? to which nothing was said: at another day the case was moved again, and Drew, Serjeant, said, that exaltare and erigere, are all one; but all the justices were against that; for that erigere is de novo facere, and exaltare is in majorem altitudinem attollere, and afterwards judgment was affirmed.

CCXXIII. Freeman and Drew's Case.

In an action upon the case by Freeman against Drew, the defendant pleaded, that after the assumpsit whereof the plaintiff had declared, there was an agreement betwixt them, that the defendant and two others should be bound in a bond to the plaintiff for the sum promised; and that they entred bond accordingly: the plaintiff confessed the agreement, and that the bond was made according to the agreement, and that the parties bound did deliver the same as their deed, cuidam ignoto, to the plaintiff; the defendant said, that they did deliver the deed to one J. S. and gave notice thereof unto the servant of the plaintiff, and that they are now ready to deliver it to the plaintiff, upon which there was a demurrer: Godfrey argued, that the said plea of the agreement specially executed, ut supra, was good, as in a case lately adjudged between Alford and Leigh, Tr. 29 Eliz. where the arbitrament was made, that Leigh should release unto Alford before the Feast Petri ad vincula, and before the said feast, Leigh sealed and delivered such a release unto the use of the said Alford, [182] and after the feast he tendred it to Alford, but he refused it, and brought debt upon the bond for performance of the arbitrament; and it was adjudged, that the action would not lie; for if he do recover upon that action, he also should take advantage of the release. Coke, In Alford's case, a tender was to the plaintiff himself, which is not in this case;

and although that it was after the feast, yet it was before the suit commenced, and also in our case the tender is depending the suit. Gawdy, If the plaintiff should recover in this action, he might plead the recovery in bar of the suit upon the obligation. Wray, Let the plaintiff release the bond, and take judgment here, which was done accordingly.

CCXXIV. Somers and Sir Richard Buckley's Case.

In the case betwixt Somers and Sir Rich. Buckley; where the plaintiff prayed a prohibition to the Court of Admiralty; the case was, that the defendant sued in the Admiral Court for the moyety of a ship and prize taken by them upon letters of reprizal; for the civil law is, that if two ships meet at sea together, although they do not go forth as consorts, and the one ship in the presence of the other taketh a ship with goods in it, the other ship which was present shall have the moyety, or one half of the ship and goods taken; for although it did not take the ship, yet the presence thereof there at the time of the taking, was a terrour to the other ship which was taken, sine quo, the other ship could not be so easily taken: and now the plaintiff for the prohibition did surmise, that after they were arrived in England, they did agree amongst themselves, that the plaintiff should have four parts of the said ship and goods so taken, and the other five parts: and the plaintiff said, that he had pleaded this matter in the Court of Admiralty, and they would not allow the plea, and thereupon he prayed a prohibition, which was granted; but afterwards it was moved on the other side, that the said Court of Admiralty would allow the plea, and there trie it; and thereupon a conditional consultation was granted by the Court; so that that Court allow that plea, and trie it there: and it was said, if the Court there should not allow the plea, that they should incur the offence of contempt of this Court, and the other party should have a prohibition.

CCXXV. Sir Richard Buckley's Case.

Sir Richard Buckley was indicted upon the Statute of Præmunire of 13 and 15 R. 2. and the effect was, that whereas one Griffeth Matthew had murthered one Robert Footman at Beaumarris; and whereas one Owen Wood prosecuted the said Griffeth Matthew for the said murther; the said Griffeth Matthew, præmissorum non ignarus, sed intendens, the said murther, a Curia Dominæ Reginæ ad aliud examen, &c. pro quodam supposito contemptu Curiæ Admiralitatis traxit in placitum: the said Owen Wood, coram Julio Cæsar. in the Court of Admiralty holden at Islington, supposing the said murther to be done upon the high sea, and thereupon caused him to be arrested, and being under arrest, to enter bond unto the Lord Admiral, that he should not prosecute the said murther against the said Griffeth Matthew, nor examine any witnesses concerning the said murther, and that the said Sir Richard Buckley [183] was abettor and procurator of the said Griff. Mathew therein. To this indictment many exceptions were taken by Coke: in placitum pro quodam contemptu, and doth not shew the contempt in certain; for it is too general, and so not good: see 18 Ass. for the stealing of certain sheep, without shewing what sheep they were, is not a good indictment. And here he doth not say; concerning the said murther, or concerning the premisses: 2 Although that the matter of the indictment be true; yet the Stat. of Præmunire doth not extend to it, for the statute inflicts a punishment as well upon the Judge, (scil.) the admiral, as upon the party: see 10 H. 4. 164. If one libelleth in the Court of Admiralty for a thing done upon the land, and it appeareth upon the libel, that the thing was done upon the land, and they, notwithstanding that hold plea of it; a præmunire lieth upon it. But if the same doth not appear within the libel, then it is not within the statute; but a prohibition shall onely issue: so in the case of tithes; if the parson sueth for tithes severed from the nine parts, and that appeareth in the libel, the same suit is within the Statute of Præmunire; and that was Cardinal Woolsey's case: 3 It is alledged, that Sir Richard Buckley procured him to do it, but it is not shewed any place where the procurement was had: and that was resolved in the case of the Lord Paget, and the Bishop of Coventrey and Lichfield: where the bishop was indicted, that he commanded J. S. to enter into the close of the Lord Paget, and to do a trespass there, and because the place of the commandment was not set forth in the indictment, the bishop was discharged. M. 25 and 26 Eliz. Another matter was objected, because that the words are, that the said Sir Richard Buckley did abet and procure, in hac parte; without shewing what thing. As to this last objection, the Court was of opinion, that the words (in hac parte) did refer to the whole offence contained in the indictment: Wray, It is hard, that the matter of the indictment should be within the Statute of Præmunire; for by the suit it is supposed, that the offence was done upon the sea; and the admiral hath jurisdiction to punish murthers committed upon the sea, so in some degree the Admiral hath conusance to enquire of murther; but if they hold plea of any thing of which in no degree they have conusance, it is otherwise. And as to the place where the commandment was made, the Court was clear of opinion, that it ought to be shewed.

CCXXVIII. ASHPERNON'S CASE.

One Ashpernon was indicted at the sessions, in the county of Sussex, for an unlawfull assembly and entry into the close of one A. called, the parsonage land, before two Justices of Peace there, and exception was taken to it, because it is not set down in the indictment, that one of the justices was of the quorum, but that the exception was disallowed; for the indictment is sufficient, if none of them be of the quorum, for they may enquire, but not determine; another exception was, because the contents of the close is not set down in the indictment; (scil.) the number of the acres, nor if it be arrable, pasture, or meadow; but that was disallowed also; for this is but an indictment of trespass, contrary, it is upon an indictment upon the statute of 8 H. 6. for there the party grieved is to have restitution, but so he is not here: another exception was taken, because that in the indictment no time is set down when the trespass was done, but onely of the assembly; but that was disallowed also; for both shall be taken to be done together all at one time.

Gawdy, The same is good enough; for domus in the declaration, contains all things contained in the new assignment. But if the declaration had been of a close, and the new assignment of a barn, it had not been good. CCXXXI. SAVACRE'S CASE.

A writ of error, was brought by Savacre and the Bishop of Gloucester, M. 31 and 32 Eliz. upon a judgment given in a quare impedit, for the Queen. And error assigned: 1. An attachment was awarded against the defendant in the quare impedit; retornable Quind. Pasch. at which Savacre appeared, and cast an essoin; and notwithstanding that, a distringas was awarded against them both, retorned, Crast. Trin. and the awarding the distringas was erronious; for the essoin was as an appearance for to save, &c. and therefore against him no distringas ought to have been awarded: and upon alledging of diminution, the record of the essoin was certified; for the same did not appear upon the plea roll. 2. The record is, ipsi in misericord. and so both of the defendants are amerced for the default of appearance, Quind. Pash. whereas Savacre was then essoigned, and so no cause of amerciment of him. Coke, The original writ was here sued, Mic. 26 Eliz. retornable Quind. Hillar. and then both the defendants made default, for which an attachment was awarded retornable, 15 Pas. and then Savacre appeared, and judgment was given, quod ipsi sint in misericord. in which point the error is assigned: but I conceive, that it is not error; for upon the attachment, the parties ought to put in sureties for their appearance: and the said sureties took upon them, that the defendants, and each of them should appear, and if they, or one of them maketh default, the sureties should be amerced; and so here, this judgment, ideo ipsi in misericord. shall refer to the sureties, not to the parties: for the defendants shall not be amerced untill the end of the suit, and but once onely in one action, which see, Book of Entries, 464. where there was but one defendant; and therefore, if the amerciment shall refer to the defendant, then it should be, ideo ipse, not ipsi, &c. and that is the reason, wherefore neither the Queen nor an infant shall find pledges, for no amerciament shall be upon their default, therefore in vain for them to find pledges, &c. And if the pledges be amerced where they ought not to be amerced by the law, yet the defendant shall not have error upon it, for he is not the party grieved by that amerciament. And upon this reason it is, that in a scire facias against the bail, if erronious judgment be given against him, the defendant in the action shall not have a writ of error, the awarding of the distress upon the roll against both, where the one of them onely makes default, is not error, especially as this case is; for though that one of them was essoigned untill the day aforesaid, yet at the said day they make default, and so the distress is well awarded against him; and although that the writ were ill awarded; yet when they appear, Cr. Trinit. at the day of the retorn of the distress, all mean defaults in the process are saved, and so the misawarding of the distress, by appearance afterwards is supplyed: as 39 E. 3, 7. The law requires that in an action grounded upon the Statute of Præmunire, 27 E. 3. the defendant hath warning by two months; yet if the defendant having not had such warning appeareth, the process is well enough: so 9 E. 4. 18. where, upon any [186] process the defendant appeareth, although the day of appearance be not lawfull, yet the parties shall be put to answer: and see many cases there to the same purpose: and such was the opinion of the Court in the principal case. And as to the second error, that the judgment, ideo ipsi in miseric. shall be referred to the sureties onely, and not unto the party; and that the defendant shall be but once amerced in one action, the same is true, that he shall be but once amerced for one default; but if many defaults be, the defendant shall be severally amerced for every default: and it should be unreasonable that the sureties should be amerced, and that the defendant who is as principal should go free: see the Book of Entries, 193. Ipsi & plegii sui in misericordia, &c.

Farnam, schoolmaster, and others, were indicted upon the statute of 8 H. 6. for entring, in domum rectoriæ de Putney, ac in cert. terras eidem domui part. jacen. in Putney, &c. Exception was taken to the indictment, because it recited the two parts of the statute: 1. Expulsion and disseisin with force: 2. Holding out; and there is not any offence in it contained as to one of them; (scil.) holding out; and although it was not necessary to recite the statute, yet the party meddles with it, and doth not apply it to the special matter, the same is naught: see for that the case between Strange and Partridge, Plow. Com. 2. The entry is supposed, in domum & certas terras eidem domui pertinen. jacen. in Putney; which is incertain, as to the lands, and it is naught for the house also; for it is not shewed in what town the house is, for this clause, ac certas terras eidem domui pertin. jacen. in Putney, is a distinct clause by it self, and refers onely to the lands, and doth not extend to the house: as to the first exception, it was disallowed; for it is not like unto Partridge's case, for there the statute is recited, which needs not, and therefore, being misrecited, made the indictment insufficient; but here the statute is well recited, and therefore as unto that matter, the indictment is sufficient: as to the second exception, the justices were of opinion, that the indictment in that respect, was too general and incertain:

the third exception was not allowed; for the latter words, i.e. in Putney, do refer to the whole, and extend as well unto the house as unto the lands: but as to these words, lands to the said house belonging. See the case between Partridge and Croker, 7 E. 6. 85. where it is good enough, because that the number of the acres is set incertain. MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE CHANCERY.

CCXXXIII. GRAY A BENCHER OF THE TEMPLE'S CASE.

Gray, a bencher of the Temple's case, was this; it was found by office, that one H. was seised in fee of certain lands called Drayners, and Codred, alias Codreth, in the county of Hertford, in his demesne as of fee, and thereof enfeoffed certain persons, unto the use of himself, and Anne Capel, with whom he afterwards intermarried, and of the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and of such estate died [187] seised; and farther it was found, that the said H. was also seised of other lands, in Barmesden in his demesne as of fee, and therefore died seised; and now came Gray into the Chancery, and shewed that the said H. was seised of the said land, called Drayners, in his demesne as of fee, and thereof enfeoffed certain persons unto the use of himself, and the said Anne Capel, for the term of their lives, and afterwards, by his indenture, dated the 23 of Decemb. and enrolled, bargained and sold the reversion thereof to the said Gray, &c. by force whereof, &c. Absque hoc, that he was seised in tail, and absque hoc, that he thereof died seised in his demesne, as of fee-tail, as it is found by the said office: and for the land in Barmesden, he said, that the lady Judde was seised thereof for the term of her life, the reversion to the said H. in fee, who granted to him the said reversion in fee, &c. absque hoc, that he died seised in his demesne as of fee, &c. And upon that, the Queen's attorney joined issue, and the venire facias issued, De Cottred & Barmesden; and the jury found, that H. did not make the feoffment to the use of himself and Anne his wife in tail; and farther found for Gray in all, &c. And it was objected here, that the same is not a good and lawfull trial: for the land is alledged to be in Codrett, and the venire facias is of Codred, &c. And although the venire facias be well awarded, as unto Barmesden, yet being naught in part, it is naught in all, which was granted by the whole Court; and then a new venire facias shall issue forth for the whole. Another objection was, because he pleads that the Lady Judde was seised of that land for the term of her life, in which case Gray, who is in reversion, ought not to be admitted to this traverse, because that tenant for life, for any thing that is pleaded to the contrary, is yet alive; and it is clear, that none shall be put to his traverse, but the party grieved; and here he in the reversion upon an estate for life, cannot be restored to the possession, and by consequence shall not have traverse; see for that, 6 H 7. 15. and 37 Ass. 11. &c. 2. The seisin in tail ought to be traversed, and not the descent, or dying seised; for if they were seised and disseised, and so died, the Queen shall have the ward. Coke, contrary, for Codred and Cottered, idem sonant, &c. And although that it be found by office, that H. was seised of lands in Codred, alias Codreth, yet the defendant supplies the said matter; for he saith thus as unto the land in Codred prædicta: which words import that the said land was known by the one name or the other; for this word prædicta, is as an averment: which see 33 H. 8. Br. Averm. 42. And so here, this word prædicta is an averment, that Cottered and Codred are one: and if so, then the venire facias is well awarded. The statute of 18 H. 6. gives traverse to those who find themselves grieved by such offices, or which are put out of their lands or tenements; and we are within the words of it, for upon the whole matter, we are out of possession, as it was ruled in the case of one Stukely in the Court of Wards the last term. If it be found by office, that A. died seised of my manor, and that he held the said manor of the Queen: now I am out of possession; and for that cause, the bargain and sale of Dorrel to Sir Francis Walsingham was holden void by the whole Court: and 4 H. 6. 12. Traverse is given in lieu of petition; but he in the reversion may have petition, therefore he shall be also admitted to traverse: and this case may be resembled to the case of 2 E. 3. 23. where a præcipe was brought against tenant for life, and he in the reversion for life prayed to be received: it was said by Thorp, that is not within the case of the statute, for he is tenant onely in the remainder, and it is possible that neither shall have any thing; and the statute speaks onely of reversion; and yet it was awarded, that he should be received, otherwise great prejudice would follow. And here we are at prejudice; for now, by reason of this office, we cannot have our action of waste: also here we need not to [188] traverse the dying seised in tail, but it is sufficient to traverse the gift in tail; for if there be not a gift in tail it is not possible that he should die seised in tail, which see 2 E. 4. 15. by Laicon. Gawdy, Justice, conceived, that the trial is not good; for the venire facias is not from the place where the land is; and this word (prædicta) doth not amount to an averment; and the case cited before is but the opinion of Brook. Wray said, that as to the first exception, that it was good enough, for both the names, idem sonant; and as to the office, by that the Queen hath gained possession; so as he who traverseth cannot have an action of waste: and so he is prejudiced by the office, &c.

CCXXXVI. TOMPSON AND TRAFFORD'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, the case was, that the warden and fellows of New College in Oxford, 8 Eliz. leased a mansion house in the burrough of Southwark, to one Standish, for 21 years, and afterwards, 25 Octob. 21 Eliz. they demised the same mansion house to the said Standish for 21 years, to commence the Michaelmas after: and the stat. of 14 Eliz. cap. 11. and 18 Eliz. cap. 11. were also found: and if this second lease shall be said a lease in reversion, and so be void by the statute of 14 Eliz. was the question. Foster moved, that it is a lease in reversion; for the first lease doth continue untill Michaelmas; and so was the opinion of the Justices of Assise at the trial. Towse contrary: For when Standish accepted the second lease, the same is presently a surrender of the former lease; for he giveth power unto the lessor for to contract for the house presently; and to that purpose he cited Corbet's case, 8 Eliz. Coke, It is a surrender presently, for you cannot apportion the term. It was adjourned.

CCXXXVII. WOOD AND AVERY'S CASE.

Debt upon a bond by Wood against Avery; the condition was, that where the plaintiff had demised to the defendant for term of years, two messuages, &c. If the defendant at all times, during the term, shall maintain, sustain and repair the said two messuages with good and sufficient reparations, that then, &c. And the defendant pleaded, that he had performed the conditions in all, but as to one kitchin, which was so ruinous at the time of the demise, that he could not maintain or repair, and therefore he took it down, and rebuilt it again, in so short a time as he could possible, in the same place, so large, and so sufficient in breadth, length and heighth as the other kitchin was; and that the said kitchin all times after the re-edifying of it, he had sustained and maintained, and well repaired, and demanded judgment, &c. upon which plea the plaintiff did demurr in law; and by the Court, the plea were a good plea if it were in an action of waste, but here where he hath by his own act tied himself to an inconvenience, he ought at his perill to provide for it: and here it was said, that if the condition be impossible the bond is single: contrary, where a man is charged by an Act in law.

CCXXXVIII. BOSTWICK AND BOSTWICK'S CASE.

Dorothy Bostwick brought dower against Bostwick an infant, and the case was, that the husband of the demandant was seised of certain lands holden by knight's-service of M. C. and by his last will, devised two parts of the premisses to his executors, during the non-age of his heir, and died, his heir within age; after whose death M. C. entred into the third part, descended as guardian in knight's-service, and the executors into the other two parts, upon which the demandant brought one writ of dower against the guardian, to be endowed of the third part; and another writ of dower against the heir within age, in whom the freehold of the two parts was; the heir appearing by attorney, pleaded to issue, which was found for the demandant; but the judgment was afterwards reversed, because the heir, being within age, did not appear by guardian but by attorney; for which cause she again brought a writ of dower against the heir, and the sheriff did retorn him summoned, but the heir made default; for which cause the Court was moved in the behalf of the demandant, to have the aid of the Court in this case: for if upon default of the tenant, a grand cape should issue forth, and so a recovery by default should follow; the same would be error: which see 6 H. 8. Br. Liver. Defaul. 50. And therefore it was prayed, that some person be appointed guardian to the heir, who may appear and plead for him, for otherwise the demandant is at great mischief; for the guardian now will not suffer the heir to appear in person: and if the widow now demandant should stay for her dower untill the heir should come of full age, it would be a great mischief: but by Walmesley, Periam and Windham, We cannot appoint a guardian to the heir for his appearance here, unless the heir be here in person in Court before us; and he was appointed to be brought in person into Court.

CCXXXIX. SIR ANTHONY DENNY'S CASE.

Sir Anthony Denny, seised in fee of the manor of Chessam, extending into Chessam, and in the town of Hertford, and also of other lands in Hertford, by his last will, devised the manor of Chessam to Henry Denny his son and heir in tail; and his lands in Hertford, to Edward Denny his younger son, &c. It was holden by Walmsley, Periam and Windham, (absent. Anderson) that the younger son should have that part of the manor of Chessam, which lieth in the town of Hertford. Another point in the case was, that upon the death of Sir Anthony, an office was found without any mention of this devise; for which cause, the Queen seised, and leased all the lands so devised to a stranger, during the minority of the heir; the heir comes of full age, and hath livery of the whole, and without any express entry, leaseth the lands for years, rendring rent; the lessee entreth, and payeth the rent to the heir, the heir dieth, the lessee assigns over his term, and the rent is yearly paid to the right heir of Sir Anthony: and now Edward Denny entred, and per Curiam his entry is lawfull; for if the heir entreth in this case, and many descents follow; yet the devisee may enter at any time, for his entry doth not make any abatement or wrong, but may well stand with the devise; for if the devise be waved, or the devise doth defer the execution of the devisee; it is reason that the heir enter and take the profits, untill the devisee entreth: but if a stranger abateth after the death of the devisor, and dieth seised, the same shall take away the descent.

CCXL. THE CASE OF THE TOWN OF LEICESTER FOR TOLL.

An action of trespass, tam pro Domina Regina, quam pro seipso; and shewed, that the town of Leicester is an ancient town, and ancient demesne, and the inhabitants there have used to be discharged of toll; and that the Queen by her letters patents, gave command to all bailiffs, sheriffs, mayors, &c. that those of Leicester should be discharged of toll; and notwithstanding that, that the defendant took toll, &c. Exception was taken, because that the suit was prosecuted, tam pro Domina Regina, quam pro seipso: whereas the party grieved was onely to have the information. See the case, 49 E. 36. where the writ is, ad respondend. tam pro nobis, quam, &c. and no exception is taken to it: another exception, the plaintiff declares, that Leicester is an ancient town, and ancient demesne, and doth not shew that it is parcel of a manor: see 20 E. 3. Ancient Demes. 25. such exception is taken, but after, the defendant pleads, that all such towns, whereof the land in question is parcell, is ancient demesne; and such plea was holden good: see 30 E. 3. 12. parcell of a manor, which is ancient demesne; and the plaintiff replied, absque hoc, that it is parcell of the manor: another exception, that lands holden in socage onely, and no other ought to be discharged of toll; and here it is not shewed in the declaration, that the place where, &c. is holden in socage, to which it was answered, that the same needs not to be set down in the declaration; for that is implied in these words, ancient demesn. for otherwise it cannot be but socage land onely, and of no other tenure: a fourth [191] exception, the letters patents here shewed in discharge, are of no value; for the King by his letters patents cannot disinherit any one, erg. nor discharge one of toll which is a kind of disinheritance; to which it was said, that the plaintiff doth not declare of any grant, but of an usage or custome, for those of ancient demesn; and farther, hath commanded by the said letters patents, that such customs and usages should hold place; and upon the custome, and the contempt, this action is grounded: a fifth exception, because the plaintiff hath not shewed, that the toll whereof the plaintiff hath counted, was concerning things for provision for their houses, manurance of their lands, &c. 7 H. 4. 111. In an action upon the case for not paying of toll, the defendant said, that he held certain lands of R. lord of the manor of H. which manor is ancient demesn, of which manor all the tenants have been free, to sell or buy beasts or other things, for the manurance of their lands, and maintenance of their houses, without paying toll in any market or fair, &c. and so justifies, that he came to the same market, and bought certain beasts, as the plaintiff had declared, and that some of them he used about his manurance of his lands, and some of them he put into pasture to make them fat, and more fit to be sold, and afterwards, he sold them at such a fair, &c. and the opinion of the Court was with the defendant: and by Godfrey and Coke, Such tenants shall be discharged of toll, not onely for buying of things which concern their sustenance, provision, and manurance of their lands, but also for all things bought, as common merchandizes: 28 Ass. ult. by Thorp, Green and Seton, of all things bought by any for his own use, they shall be quit of toll: and then, if the privilege of tenants in ancient demesn, shall not be quit of toll, but for things bought for their sustenance, provision and manurance of their lands, they have no more favor than ordinary subjects: see 19 H. 6. 66. Some are of opinion, that such tenants shall not pay toll for things sold and bought, coming upon their lands, and touching their sustenance: see F. N. B. 228. D. such tenants are discharged of toll for all things by them sold and bought, by way of merchandize; as also of things of necessity, as sustenance: and see Crook, in the cases of Itiner. 138. he conceives, that such tenants for merchandizes shall pay toll as other merchants; but see the writ of F. N. B. 228. the words are de bonis, & rebus suis, and Coke said, that he had found the reason wherefore such tenants should be quit of toll throughout the realm, in an ancient reading, viz. that all the lands in the hands of Edw. the Confessor and Wil. the Conqueror set down in the Book of Doomsday were ancient demesn, and so called terræ Regis, and they were to provide victuals for the Kings garrisons, for then they were troublesome times; and for those causes, and because they made provisions for others, they had many privileges, amongst which this one; ut quietius aratra sua exercerent, & terram excolerent: the lord himself, in ancient demesn shall not have such privilege, for his seignory is pleadable at the common law: vid. F. N. B. 228. B. and he said, that the plaintiff ought to alledge, that his lands are parcel of such a manor; for there cannot be ancient demesn, if there be not a Court and suitors, &c. and he granted, that such a town might be ancient demesn of the Crown, but yet they shall not have the privileges and liberties which the tenants in ancient demesn have. Towns were before manors: London hath the name of ancient demesn, and yet they have not such liberties, nor the lands in it pleadable by writ of right close. 7 H. 6. 31, 32. Shute, Justice, was of opinion, that an inhabitant within ancient demesn, although he be not tenant shall have the privileges; see for that, F. N. B. 228. B. Tenants at will in ancient demesn shall be discharged of toll, as well as tenants of the freehold for life, or for years, 37 H. 6. 27. by Moile. London is ancient demesn; for they prescribe, that a villein who hath [192] there dwelt, &c. shall not be taken from thence by capias, or attachment, Billing. London is not in the Book of Doomsday. Moile, They make their protestation in a writ of right patent. Littleton, That is used in divers places, and at this day in Exeter. And by Clench, If a tenant in ancient demesn levyeth a fine of his lands, then he shall not have the privilege, untill the fine be reversed, quod fuit concessum: if the lord of a manor in ancient demesn, purchaseth all the tenancies, the whole privilege is gone, which Coke denyed. CCXLI. LENNARD'S CASE.

In the case of Lennard, Custos Brevium, who was plaintiff in an action of trespass for breaking of his close; the defendant pleaded, that William Heydon was seised of the lands, and enfeoffed him: and upon ne enfeoffa pas, the parties were at issue; and it was found by special verdict, that the said William Heydon was seised, and leased the lands to the defendant for years; and afterwards he made a deed of feoffment to the same lessee of the same lands in fee, by the words of dedi & concessi, with a letter of attorney within the said deed, to make livery to the lessee; and the deed of feoffment was delivered to J. to deliver the same to the said lessee, who delivered the same accordingly: the lessee delivered the same to the attorney named in the deed, who made livery accordingly: and it was moved by the council of the plaintiff, that upon all this matter, here is not any feoffment: and by Walmesly, Serjeant, This deed so delivered took its effect presently as a confirmation; and then the livery and seisin comes too late; for as soon as the said deed was delivered to the lessee for years, the law gave to it, its operation to this effect, to vest the fee and the freehold in the lessee by way of confirmation: see for that, Littl. 532, 533. But the whole Court was of a contrary opinion; for it is in the election of the lessee to take the conveyance as a feoffment, or as a confirmation: and here it appeareth upon the deed, that the intent of both parties was, that the lessee should take by way of feoffment, and not of confirmation; for otherwise, to what use should be a letter of attorney inserted in the deed? and here the lessee hath liberty to make his election how he will take; either by feoffment, or by confirmation, which election he hath determined by the acceptance of the livery: and by Anderson, If tenant in tail be disseised, and makes a charter of feoffment, and delivers the same to the disseisor, who delivers the same to the attorney, named in the charter, who makes livery accordingly: here is a good feoffment, and a discontinuance; and afterwards, after many motions made, and day given to shew cause, judgment was given, that the plaintiff should be barred.

CCXLII. ROOKE AND DENNY'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, by Rooke against Dennis, for misusing of the plaintiff's horse, by occasion of which misuse, the said horse became blind of one eye, and gall-back'd. the plaintiff counted, that the said horse was stolen by three felons, after whom the plaintiff made fresh suit, and that the felons were apprehended, and attainted [193] at his suit before Justice Windham: and that the said horse came unto the hands of the defendant, who misused it, ut supra: the defendant said, that before that, and the said attainder of the said felons, the said felons had waived the said horse within his manor; in which manor he had waife and estray, &c. And it was holden by the Court, that the same was no plea, without traversing the fresh suit, whereof the plaintiff hath declared; for by the fresh suit, the property of the plaintiff in the said horse was preserved; and so upon that misuser of the horse by the defendant, an action well lyeth: and judgment was given for the plaintiff accordingly.

CCXLIII. PRETIMAN AND COOKE'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ, the case was, that one Hawkins was seised of three messuages in Bury, and had issue, Robert, a son, and Christian and Joan, daughters; and by his will, devised his three messuages to his wife for life, the remainder of one of them to Robert his son and his heirs, and the remainder of another of them to Christian his daughter, and her heirs; and the remainder of the third messuage, to Joan his daughter, and her heirs: and farther willeth, that if any of his said three issues should die without issue, of his, or her body, that then the other surviving, shall have, totam illam partem, betwixt them equally to be divided; the devisor died, the wife died, one of the daughters died, having issue; the son died without issue, the sister surviving, entred into the whole part of Robert, the son, and died; her husband held in the land as tenant by the curtesie; and the question was, if the surviving daughter should have all the part of him that died without issue, or she and the issue of the other daughter; Coke, The survivor shall have the whole: and he said, that the devisees have an estate in tail, for the fee doth not vest in them, for it is incertain which of them shall survive; but when one surviveth, then he shall not have for life, but in fee; for the words, totam illam partem, goe as well to all the estate, as to all the things. A. tenant for life, the remainder to B. in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of A. A. grants, totam statum suum, both the estates pass, and the grant includes the whole; see 41 E. 3. Fitz. Br. 541. In ravishment of ward, supposing the ravishment of two daughters, quarum maritagium ad ipsum pertinet, and it was challenged, because he doth not say maritagia, but the challenge was not allowed; and he said, that if a man deviseth his land wholly to A. that he hath a fee-simple: see the case, H. 28 Eliz. the case between Higham and Harwood: and Coke said, that they had by this devise a fee-tail, with a fee-simple expectant, each of them severally in the messuage to them limited: Golding, Each of the devisees hath an estate-tail in the messuage, to them devised, and but an estate for life in the messuage which is to accrue upon the death without issue, &c. For no estate is limited expressly, nor what estate the survivor shall have; for here are not any words which do import a fee-simple, as (according to Littleton) imperpetuum; or to do what he will with, &c. See for that 22 E. 3. ad terminum qui præteriit: but here are onely bare words, of which no farther construction can be made, but for life: and as to the words, totam illam partem, the same doth not extend farther, than if he said, partem suam: and he said, that nothing vests in him who survives; for there ought to be two to take by the survivor, or otherwise nothing shall accrue to the survivor; for the words of the devise are æqualiter inter eos dividend. and that which accrues by survivor shall be divided betwixt two, otherwise nothing shall accrue. And if it cannot survive to two, then it [194] shall descend to the issue of the sister who is dead, and to the surviving daughter, and they shall be tenants in common, and not joint-tenants. Clench, These words, totam illam partem, go onely to the house, and not to the estate in it, which Shute granted: if both the daughters had survived Robert, they should have fee in the house of Robert not by the will, but by descent; and this devise shall not take effect otherwise, and the devise as to that is void, and then the common law shall hold place, and that is, to descend to the issue of the one sister, and the surviving sister: and here the survivor hath but an estate for life in the house of Robert, and then by the death of Robert, the fee-simple accruing to the surviving sister, the moyety of her estate for life is extinct. And if one of the daughters had died without issue before Robert, the house of such daughter had come to Robert and the other sister, as co-parceners; for the son is to have all the fee, and a moyety of the same executed, and a moyety expectant, and the other sister should have a moyety for life, and so the devise not void. And afterwards judgment was given against the husband of the surviving daughter.

CCXLIV. Hurlston's Case.

Hurlston brought a writ of error against the Queen, upon a judgment given for the Queen, in the County Palatine of Chester; it was moved by Gawdy, the Queens Serjeant, that the writ did not lye; for he ought to sue to the Queen by petition, which see 2 3. E. 22. A writ of error cannot be granted, absq; speciali gratia Dom. Regis: see also 22 E. 3. 3. and the case was, that judgment was given for the Queen in a scire facias, to reverse the patent of the constableship of the castle of Chester, and by him in Chester, there are many Courts; King's Bench, Common Pleas, Exchequer, Chancery: and here a judgment or decree in the Chancery cannot be reversed, but by Parliament; and so he conceived of a judgment given in the Chancery at Chester, and it cannot be reversed in the King's Bench: also they have a custome in Chester, that they may reverse within certain months the judgment before. Clench, There needs no petition, for both the patentees claim from the Queen; and whether there be error or not, the Queen is not prejudiced: Coke, There needs no petition, for it is now past, for the Queens Attorney's hand is to it; 11 Eliz. In one Haunce's case, a writ of error was brought against the Queen, and they were compelled to sue to the Queen by petition: Coke, In the Exchequer, if an erronious judgment be given for the Queen in a bill of intrusion, the party shall have a writ of error against the Queen without any petition. It was the case of one Eliz. Mordant, 15 Eliz. she brought a writ of error to reverse a fine, levyed by her, during her minority, against the Queen, and the proceeding in it was stayed, because she had not sued to the Queen by petition first: Wray, Many outlawries have been reversed by error without any petition, and yet in such case the Queen hath an immediate interest. 4 Len. 160.

CCXLV. GOMERSALL AND GOMERSALL'S CASE.

In an account, the plaintiff charged the defendant as bailiff of his shop, curam habens, & administrationem bonorum: the defendant answered to the goods onely, and said nothing to the shop: Tan-[195]-field moved the same matter for error in arrest of judgment: as 14 H. 4. 309, 310. One charged another as bailiff of his house, et curam habens bonorum in eo existen. the traverse was, that he was not bailiff of the house, pro ut: that is good, and goeth to all, but he cannot answer to the goods, and say nothing to the house: see 49 E. 3. 7. Br. Accomp. 21. A man brought an accompt against one as bailiff of his manor, habens curam of twenty oxen and cows, and certain quarters of corn: and by Belknap, if he have the manor and no goods, yet he shall accompt for the manor, and it shall be no plea, to say that the plaintiff sold him the goods without traversing, without that, that he was his bailiff to accompt render: and as to the manor, he may say, that the plaintiff leased the same to himself for years, without that, that he was his bailiff: another exception was taken by him, that the plaintiff chargeth him with moneys, ad merchandizandum; and he traverseth, that he was not his receivor denarior. ad computandum pro ut: and so he doth not meet with the plaintiff, and so it is no issue. And it is not helped by the Statute of Jeofailes, 32 H. 8. but mis-joining of issue is helped by that statute, 19 Eliz. W. an attorney of the Common Pleas, did charge another attorney of the same Court, with a covenant to have three years board in marriage with the defendant's daughter; and he pleaded that he did not promise two years board, and so issue was joined and tried, and the same could not be helped by the statute, because it was no issue, and did not meet with the plaintiff: so if one charge in the debet & detinet, and he answers to the detinet onely, it is no issue; and therefore it is not helped by the statute. In 29 H. 6. in trespass for entring into his house, and taking of his goods, the defendant pleaded, non intravit, and the issue was tried, and damages given; and because the taking of the goods was not also in issue, all was void, 4 E. 3. One shall not accompt by parcels, because the action is intire; see 3 E. 3. 8. and Book of Entries, 202. A precedent, 14 H. 7. that the verdict was not full, and did not go to the whole, and therefore was void. Hele, Serjeant, contrary: and as to the first point he said, that there is a case in 9 E. 3. Accompt. 35. where the plaintiff chargeth the defendant in accompt as bailiff of his house, and that he had the administration of his goods; viz. forty sacks of wooll; and upon issue joined, the jury found, that he was not bailiff of his house; but they farther find, that he had received the forty sacks of wooll, to render accompt of the same; and the plaintiff in that case had judgment for the sacks of wooll; although there was no verdict found for the house: see 5 H. 7. 24. Where if a jury be charged with several issues, and the one of the issues is found, and the other not; that the same makes no discontinuance: or if one of the issues be discontinued, yet it is no discontinuance as to the whole. But admit the same be not helped by the common law, yet he said it is helped by the Statute of 32 H. 8. of Jeofailes; which is, non obstent. discontinuance or miscontinuance. Daniel, to the same purpose: and he said that the books before cited of 14 H. 4. and 49 E. 3. are not ruled, nor the cases there adjudged; in the one book the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff gave the goods unto him, and in the other book, that he sold the said goods unto him, and demanded judgment of the action: and he said, that it is no good answer; for they are pleas onely before the auditors, and not in an action upon accompt: and farther he said, that although the verdict be found but for part, yet it is good; for no damages are to be recovered in an accompt: in trespass, it is true, if one issue be found, and not the other, and joint-damages be given; the verdict is not good for any part, but if several damages be given, then it is good, as it is ruled in 21 H. 6. Coke, 26 H. 8. is, that the plaintiff cannot declare generally of an house, curam habens, & administrati-[196]-onem bonorum; but he must farther say: twenty quarters of corn, or the like, &c. In the principal case, it is a joint-charge and but one for the shop and goods; and he answers unto one onely, but he ought to answer to all, or else it is no answer at all. But Coke found out another thing, viz. that there is a thing put in issue which is not in the verdict, nor found, nor touched in the verdict, and that was the verdict of all which is found not to be good, and it is not helped by the Statute of 32 H. 8. of Jeofailes. I grant, that discontinuances are helped by the statute of 32 H. 8. but imperfect verdicts are not helped thereby: it was a great case argued in the Exchequer Chamber, and it was Brache's case: an information was against Brache, for entring into a house, and an hundred acres of lands in Stepney; he pleaded, not guilty, the jury found him guilty for the hundred acres, but said nothing as to the house; upon which a writ of error was brought, and judgment was reversed: and he said, it was not a discontinuance, but no verdict for part. Daniel, That was the default of the clerks who did not enter it, and it hath been the usage to amend the defaults done by the clerks in another term: all the justices said, That is true, if the postea be brought in and not entred; but here it is entred in the roll in this form. Daniel, Where I charge one in accompt with so much by the hands of such a one, and so much by the hands of such a one, although there be but one absque hoc to them all, yet they are as several issues. The Court answered, Not so, unless there be several issues joined to every one of them. But by Gawdy, Justice, If there be several issues, and the one be found, and the other not, no judgment shall be given: Clench, Justice, in the principal case, It is not a charge of the goods, but in respect of the shop, therefore that ought to be traversed: Shute, Justice, The traverse of the shop alone is not good: Egerton the Queen's Solicitor said, that the books might be reconciled, and that there needed not a traverse to the goods, for the traverse of the shop, prout, is an answer to all: but now he takes issue upon the goods onely, which issue is not warranted by the declaration; and he said, that if one charge me as bailiff of his goods, ad merchandizandum, I shall answer for the increase, and shall be punished for my negligence; but if he charge me as his receiver, ad computandum, I shall not be answerable, but for the bare money, or thing which was delivered.

CCXLVIII. DIGHTON AND CLARK'S CASE.

Dighton brought debt upon a bond, the condition of which was, that whereas the plaintiff was in quiet possession of such lands, if now neither J. S. nor J. B. nor J. G. did not disturb the plaintiff in his possession of the said lands by any indirect means, but by due course of law, that then, &c. that defendant pleaded, that neither J. S. nor J. D. or J. G. did disturb the plaintiff by any indirect means, but by due course of law; upon which there was a demurrer. Godfrey, The plea in bar is not good; for there is a negativa pregnans, (scil.) a negative which implies an affirmative: see 21 H. 6. 9. In a writ of entry, sur disseisin, the defendant saith, that the demandant by his deed, after the darrein continuance, did confirm and ratifie the possession of the tenant, &c. The demandant said, not his deed after the darrein continuance; and the same was holden to be, negativa pregnans; see more there, and see also 5 H. 7. 7. And see farther, 39 H. 6. 8. 9. Another exception was taken to the plea in bar, because he hath pleaded, that neque J. S. neque J. D. neque J. G. had disturbed the demandant by any indirect means, but onely by due course of law; and that issue cannot be tried; not by the countrey, for they cannot know what is a due course of law; and by the Court it cannot be tried, for the defendant hath not certainly shewed by what due course of law the demandant hath been disturbed, which see 22 E. 4. 40, 41, &c. The Lord Lisle's case. In debt upon a bond, the condition was, that if the defendant before such a day, or any other for him, and in his name, come to B. and there shew unto the plaintiff, or one of his council, by him assigned, a sufficient and lawfull discharge of an annual rent which the plaintiff claims out of two houses of the defendant in B. aforesaid, that then the said bond shall be void; and the defendant said, that he at the day assigned, contained in the condition, that A. and B. by assignment of the defendant came to B. and tendred to shew to N. and W. of the plaintiff's council, a sufficient discharge of the said annual rent, and that they did refuse to see it, upon which there was a demurrer in law: and judgment was given for the plaintiff, and that the plea was no plea, for the defendant ought to have shewed in his plea, what manner of discharge he would have shewed, as a release, unity of possession, &c. But as the case is here: if the plaintiff shall traverse the plea in bar, the issue joined upon it cannot be tried, for the jury cannot know which is a lawfull and sufficient discharge, but the same shall be tried by the Court; for if the defendant had tendred to the plaintiff a discharge by unity of possession, the jury cannot know if it be a sufficient discharge: and as the plea is here, he hath not shewed what dis-[198]-charge he would have shewed to the said council; and therefore we cannot judge of the same: if one be bound to plead a sufficient plea before such a day, in such a Court, in such an action, it is not sufficient that he hath pleaded a sufficient plea, but he ought to shew what plea he hath pleaded, otherwise the Court cannot judge if the plea be sufficient or not: vid. 35 H. 6. 19. and 37 H. 8. Br. Cand. 16. where a man will plead that he hath saved the party harmless, he ought to shew how. Shute, Justice, and Clench, Justice, If the defendant had pleaded, not disturbed by any indirect means, such a plea had been good enough: Gawdy, Justice, If he had pleaded, not disturbed contra, formam conditionis præd. it had been a good plea; in a writ of entry, ne entra pas, contra formam statuti, he did not alien within age, is a negative pregnant: but the party may say, he did not alien, modo & forma; all the part to this plea which comes after the but, is surplusage, and negation: Gawdy, It is a plea which is pleaded with all the words of the condition intirely. Clench, The case put by Godfrey, 22 E. 4. differs from the case at bar: for there he pleaded all in the affirmative, therefore in such a case he ought to plead specially; but in the case at bar all is in the negative, in which case such special pleading is not necessary. If I be bounden that I shall not go out of Westminster-hall untill night, but tarry in the hall till night, in an action against me upon that bond, I may plead in iisdem verbis: if I be bound upon condition, that I will not return to Serjeant's-Inn the direct way, but by St. Giles, I shall plead, in totidem verbis: Godfrey, I agree those cases, for the matter which comes after the but, is triable by the countrey, but so it is not in the principal case: Clench, But is but a word of surplusage, and if that, and all which follows had been left out, it had been well enough. It was adjourned.

CCXLIX. COURTNEY AND KELLOWAY'S CASE.

Courtney brought an action upon the statute of 5 Eliz. concerning perjury, against Kelloway, and declared, that where Sir Gawen Carew had heretofore brought an action upon the case against the now plaintiff for slanderous words, viz. because that the said now plaintiff had affirmed, that the said Sir Gawen had had the pocks, to which declaration, the now plaintiff had pleaded, that Kelloway, the now defendant, reported to the said now plaintiff, that he himself, i.e. Kelloway, had heretofore healed the said Sir Gawen of the pocks, absque hoc, that he spake them simply of his own head; upon which they were at issue, and the said Kelloway was produced as a witness on the part of the said Courtney; and the said Kelloway, upon his oath, deposed at the trial of the said issue, that he never had reported to the now plaintiff, that he himself had healed the said Sir Gawen of the pocks; for which the jury found for Gawen, and also assessed greater damages in respect that they found, that Courtney spake the said words of his own head, &c. and not of the report of Kelloway. It was the opinion of the whole Court, that the now plaintiff should have this action; for notwithstanding that that oath doth not trench much unto the proof or disproof of the issue, yet because that by reason of the oath the jury have aggravated the damages, the action doth lie, as in case of trespass of breaking his close, and spoiling his grass, the defendant pleads, not guilty; and at the trial of the issue a witness is produced on the plaintiff's part, who deposeth upon his oath, that the land where, &c. was so rich in grass, that it was ready to be mowed whereas in truth none, or very little grass was there [199] growing, yet if the jury find upon other evidence the defendant guilty, it is an occasion to induce the jury to tax the greater damages: all which the Court granted.

CCL. HOLLAND AND DRAKE'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, brought by Holland against Drake, and five others; Drake pleaded, not guilty; the other five, quoad 20 acres, pleaded not guilty also; and as to the residue, that long time before that, Andrews (lessor of the plaintiff) had any thing in the land; that Hen. Lord Cromwel was seised, and leased the same to them for two years, and afterwards granted the reversion to Andrews, to whom they attorned; Andrews within the said term, entred upon them, and leased to the plaintiff upon whom they re-entred, as was lawfull for them to do, the plaintiff by replication, said, that long time before the said Lord Cromwel had any thing, &c. Andrews himself was seised, until by the said Lord Cromwel disseised, and leased to the defendants, ut supra, and granted the reversion to the said Andrews with attornment, who entred, and leased to the plaintiff, who entred, and was possessed, untill by the said defendants ejected, modo & forma, pro ut, &c. And upon this replication, the said five defendants did demur in law. It was argued, that the plaintiff in his replication, hath departed from his declaration; for by his declaration, he hath supposed himself to be ejected by all the six defendants; and in the replication he saith, that he was possessed untill by the said five defendants, who plead in bar he was ejected; so he hath departed from his declaration in the number of the ejectors; for he ought to have said, untill he by the said five, and also by the said Drake was ejected: as 12 E. 4. 6. in trespass upon entry upon the statute of 5 R. 2. against J. and E. J. died pendant the writ, and E. pleaded in bar, and the plaintiff did reply and conclude, and so was he seised untill the said E. simil cum dicto: J. named in the writ, entred upon the plaintiff, &c. But the opinion of the whole Court was clear to the contrary; for here in the case at bar, Drake, by his several issue, which he hath joyned with the plaintiff, upon not guilty, is severed from the other five defendants; and then when they plead in bar, the plaintiff ought to reply to them without meddling with Drake, who upon his several plea, and issue joyned upon it, is a stranger to them; as if the said five had been the onely defendants: but if he had not replyed to Drake, as if Drake had made default, or had died after the writ brought; as in the case before cited of 28 E. 4. there he ought to have replyed, as it is objected: so in an ejectione firmæ of twenty acres, the defendant, as to ten acres pleads, not guilty; upon which they are at issue; and the plaintiff replies, and says, as to the other ten acres, and so was he possessed, untill by the defendant of the said ten acres he was ejected; this is good without speaking of the other ten acres, upon which the general issue is joyned. And the Court was ready to have given judgment for the plaintiff; but they looked upon the record, and seeing that one issue in this action was to be tryed between the plaintiff and the said Drake: and although the plaintiff offered to release his damages, and the issue joyned, and to have judgment against the five defendants who had demurred; yet the Court was clear of opinion, that no judgment should be given upon the said demurrer, untill the said issue was tryed; for the action is an ejectione firmæ, in which case the possession of the land is to be recovered; and it may be, for any thing that appeareth, that Drake, [200] who hath pleaded the general issue, hath title to the land, &c. But if this action had been an action of trespass, there in such case, ut supra, upon release of damages, and the issue joyned, the plaintiff should have judgment presently.

CCLI. FRENCH'S CASE.

It was presented before the coroner, that John French was, felo de se, and that certain goods of the said John French, were in the possession of J. S. and this presentment was certified into the King's Bench; upon which process issued forth against the said J. S. and continued untill he was outlawed. And now came J. S. and cast in his writ of error, to reverse the said outlawry, and assigned for error, because that in the presentment upon which he was outlawed, there is not any addition given to the said J. S. And at the first, it was doubted; if upon that presentment process of outlawry did lye: and Ive, one of the Chief Clerks of the Crown Office, said to the Court, that such process in such case did lye; and that he could shew five hundred precedents to that purpose. Another matter was moved upon the Statute of 1 H. 5. 5. of Additions: if this outlawry by the statute aforesaid, ought to be reversed by default of addition; for as much as the said statute speaks onely of outlawries upon original writs in personal actions, appeals and indictments; but it was agreed by the whole Court, that as to this purpose, the presentment should be accounted in law as an indictment, and afterwards the outlawry against French was reversed.

CCLII. MICH. 26 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH.

A lease for thirty years was made by husband and wife, if they so long should live, and if they die, &c, that the land should remain to A. their son, during the term aforesaid. And it was holden by Wray, Justice, that if the husband and wife do die within the term, that the son should have the land, de novo for thirty years: but Gawdy was of opinion, that he shall have it for so many years, which after their death should be expired.

CCLIII. COOPER'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, the case was, that the husband and wife had right to enter into certain lands in the right of the wife; and a deed of lease for years is written in the name of the husband and wife, to one A. for to try the title; and also a letter of attorney to B. to enter into the land, and to deliver the said deed of lease to the said A. in the name of the husband and wife, and as well the letter of attorney as the said deed of lease are sealed by the said husband and wife with their seals, and entry and delivery is made accordingly; the said A. enters, and upon ejectment, brings an ejectione firmæ, and the whole matter aforesaid was found by special verdict; and the plaintiff had judgment to recover, for the special matter found by verdict, i.e. the deed of lease, and the letter of attorney, do maintain the declaration well enough; and here is a lease made by husband and wife, according to that, the plaintiff hath declared.

[201] CCLIV. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH.

In an action of trespass for breaking of the plaintiff's close, and killing of eighteen conies there; the defendant, as to all the trespass, but to the killing of the conies, pleaded, not guilty: and as to the killing of the said conies, he said that the place where, is a heath, in which he hath common of pasture, and that he found the conies eating the grass there, and he killed them, and carried them away, as it was lawfull for him to do: Cowper, Although conies be, feræ nature, yet when they are in ingrounds, they are reduced to such a property, that if they be killed or carried away, I shall have an action of trespass, vid. 43 E. 3. 24. And if a deer be hunted by the plaintiff in a forest, and afterwards in hunting it be driven out of the forest, and the forrester doth follow the chase, and the plaintiff kill the deer in his own grounds, yet the forrester may enter into the land of the plaintiff, and re-take the deer, 12 H. 8. 9. And although the defendant hath common in the soil; yet he cannot meddle with the wood there, nor with the land, nor with the grass, otherwise than with the feeding of his cattel, for he hath but a faint interest; and if he who hath the freehold in the land, bringeth an action of trespass against such a commoner for entring into his land, and the defendant plead, not guilty, he cannot give in evidence that he hath common there: and it hath been late adjudged, that where commoners prescribe, that the lord hath used to put in such a pasture but so many beasts, that such a prescription is a void prescription: it was argued on the other side, that the owner of the soil, hath not the true property of the conies in him, but a kind of property: and see F. N. B. 86 and 87. Quare clausum fregit, and 20 cuniculos cepit: against a stranger he may have an action, but not against the commoner, because he hath wrong in his common by the feeding of the conies there; for although he hath not an interest in the soil, yet he hath an interest in the profits of it, and a commoner may distrain the beasts of him who hath not right of common for damage-feasance, as the books are, 4 H. 7. 3. 15 H. 7. 15. and there the commoner hath not any remedy, if he cannot enter and kill the conies, for he cannot take them damage-feasance, nor can impound them; for no replevin lyeth of them: if the owner of the soil ploweth the lands, yet the commoner may put in his cattel, claiming his common, and he may well justifie the same, because the wrong beginneth in the owner of the soil. At another day, the case was moved again; and then it was argued by Coke, and he said, the point is; whether a commoner having common of pasture, may kill the conies which are upon the ground; and he argued, that he might not. And first, he said, it is to be considered, what interest he who hath the freehold may have in such things as are, feræ naturæ; and then what authority a commoner hath in the ground in which he hath common. As to the first point, he said, that although such beasts are, feræ naturæ, yet they are reduced to such a property when they are in my ground by reason of my possession which I then have of them, that I may have an action of trespass against him who taketh them away: as in the book in, 42 E. 3. If one hath deer in his park, and another taketh them away, he may have an action of trespass for the taking of them: see 12 H. 8. If a keeper or forrester follow a buck which is chase out of the park or forrest, although he who hunteth him killeth the buck in his own ground, yet the keeper or forrester may enter into his ground, and seize the deer, because the property and possession of the deer is yet in them by their persuit: in 7 H. 6. It is holden, that if a wild beast doth go out of the park, the owner of the soil hath lost his property in it; but upon the said book, it [202] may be well collected, that whilest it remains in the parke, that the owner of the park hath property in it; for 18 E. 4. 14. It is doubted, whether a man can have property in such things, which are, feræ naturæ: but in 10 H. 7. 6. it is holden, that an action of accompt lyeth for things which are, feræ naturæ, and see 14 H. 8. 1. In the Bishop of London's case, and 22 H. 6 59. that as long as such things are in the parties ground, they are in his possession, and he hath a property in them; and in an action brought for them; the writ shall be, quare damas suas cepit, by Newton; and see in the Register, fol. 102. where an action was brought, quare ducent. cuniculos suos pretii, &c. cepit. It hath been objected on the other side, that the defendant hath common there; to that I answer, admit he hath common, yet he hath not an interest in the soil; for he cannot meddle with the wood, grass, or other profit arising of the soil, but the interest which the commoner hath, is onely the feeding of the grass with the mouths of his cattel: and if he who hath the freehold in the ground, doth bring an action against the commoner for entring into his land; if the defendant pleads, not guilty, he cannot give evidence that he hath common there; for such evidence will not maintain the issue: see 22 Ass. A commoner cannot take in the cattel of a stranger to agist upon the common; and therewith agreeth the book of 12 H. 8. and so it hath been adjudged in this Court. Godfrey, contrary: and he argued, that it is lawfull for the commoner to kill the conies feeding in the common: and he agreed all the cases which were put by Coke; and farther he said, that the owner of the ground hath not an absolute, but a kind of a qualified property in the conies; and therefore see the book of 3 H. 6. and F. N. B. If a writ of trespass be brought, quare cuniculas suas cepit, the writ shall abate; and yet he hath a kind of property, or a possession rather in them. I grant that against a stranger the plaintiff might have his action for killing of his conies, but not against the commoner, because the commoner hath a wrong done unto him by the conies, eating of his common, and therefore he may kill them; and although the commoner may not meddle with the land, because he hath not an interest in it; yet in some cases he may meddle with the profits of it, and he may distrain the cattel of a stranger there, damage-feasance; as the book is in 15 H. 7. I grant that it is not lawfull for tenant for life to kill the conies of him who hath free-warren in the land. For if a man bringeth an action of trespass, quare warrenam suam intravit, & cuniculos suos cepit: it is no plea for the defendant to say, that it is his freehold. See 43 E. 3. accordingly. In L. 5 E. 4. in trespass, quare clausum fregit, & cuniculos suos cepit: the defendant said, that the plaintiff made a lease at will to J. S. of the land, and that he, as servant to the said J. S. did kill the conies there, and it was holden a good plea; and yet it is there said, that by the grant of the land, the conies do not pass; but the reason of the book might be, as I conceive, because the feeding on the land with the conies, is to his damage, and therefore, that he might justifie the killing of them: and so are the books of 2 H. 7. and 4 E. 4. If I have common of pasture in lands, and the tenant ploweth up the land, I shall have an action upon the case in the nature of a quod permittat. And in 9 E. 4. if one hath lands adjoining to myl and, and levyeth a nusance, I may enter upon the land, and abate the nusance: so if a man taketh my goods and carrieth them unto his own lands, I may enter therein, and seize my goods: so if a tenant of the freehold plows the land and soweth it with corn, the commoner may put in his cattel, and therewith eat the corn growing upon the land: so if a man do falsly imprison me, and put me in his house, I may justifie the breaking open of his house to get forth. In 21 H. 6. all the inhabitants of a town do prescribe to have common in such a field every year after harvest, if one particular [203] man who hath freehold land, with the said field sowed, will not within convenient time gather in his corn, but suffer the same to continue there of purpose to bar the inhabitants of their common, the inhabitants of the town may put in their cattel into the said field, and therewith eat his corn, and he shall have no remedy for their so doing; and he put the question, what remedy the commoner should have for the eating and destroying of his common which his cattel should have, for that he can neither distrain them damage-feasance, nor impound them: for a replevin doth not lie of conies; and therefore he said, he hath no other remedy but to kill and destroy the conies. See 19 E. 3. and F. N. B. If the lord doth surcharge the common, the commoner may have an action against him; but in this case he can have no action: Gawdy, Justice, The commoner cannot destroy or kill the conies, because he may have other remedy: Shute, Justice, A commoner cannot take or distrain the beasts of the tenant of the land for damage-feasance, therefore he cannot take or destroy the conies which are upon the land, because he may have other remedy; for he may have an action upon the case, or an assize for putting of the conies upon the land, if the owner of the land leave not sufficient common for the cattel of the commoner; and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

HILL. 29 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER-CHAMBER.

CCLV. MANWOOD AND BURSTON'S CASE.

Manwood, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, brought an action upon the case against Burston, and declared, that whereas Agnes Griffin was possessed of the third part of the manor and rectory of Higham for term of years, by demise of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College in Cambridge, made to Worthington; and whereas John Sutton was possessed of another third part of the said manor and rectory by the same demise; and whereas John Palmer was possessed of another third part of the said manor and rectory for the same term, the said Burston, 20 Aprilis, 28 Eliz. in consideration that the said plaintiff, obtinuisset de præd. Agnet. totum terminum suum assurari ipsis Rogero Manwood, and the defendant; (scil.) unam medietatem dictæ tertiæ partis dicto Rogero, & alteram medietatem, unto the said defendant, apud London, in such a ward, assumpsit eidem querent. quod si idem querens procuraret dictam Johannem Palmer, to assent and sell his third part, the one moyety to the plaintiff, and the other to the defendant for 320l. That the defendant solveret æquam portionem inde, (scil.) 160l. And licet, the plaintiff, had procured the said Palmer, 22 Aprilis, an. supradict. to assent and sell the third part for 320l. to be paid 3 Maii, the same year, and the rest at another day; and licet, the said plaintiff was ready to pay his part, and offered the same, (scil.) 160l. And licet the said Palmer was ready and offered to sell and convey his term aforesaid, &c. yet the said defendant, solvere æquam partem suam, (scil.) 160l. Non fuit paratus sed recusavit. for which the said Palmer, noluit vendere his part or interest, by which the plaintiff was damnified, &c. The defendant pleaded, that after the assumpsit, the plaintiff did discharge the defendant of the said promise; upon which they were at issue; and it was found for the plaintiff, who had judgment to recover. Upon which Burston brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber. And divers errors were assigned: 1. It is not shewed at what time the term of Agnes Griffin did begin: 2. The lease of the college is not shewed to be by writing: 3. It is not shewed for what term Palmer was possessed: 4. It is not shewed at what time the plaintiff had obtained the part of Agnes: 5. The as-[204]-sumpsit is laid to be, apud London, in warda de Farrington extra, and so apud London; and extra London, which is repugnant: 6. The plaintiff hath declared, that the colledge had leased to Worthington; and that A. and B. were possessed, virtute dimissionis præd. To these errors, the Chief Baron put in his answer in writing: as to the two first, they are in the recital, and but matter of induction to the consideration, and not traversable, nor otherwise material to be alledged for the commencement of them, or for the rent, but onely the ending of the term to come is sufficient: as in an action upon the case; that whereas the defendant was indebted unto the plaintiff in divers sums of money, amounting to 40l. the defendant, in consideration thereof, promised, &c. the plaintiff needs not to shew any certainty of the contract, or other circumstance, how, or in what manner the debt did accrue, or begin: as in an action upon the case, the plaintiff declares, that whereas he hath married the daughter of the defendant, the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff would assure to his said wife, land to the yearly value of 20l. for her jointure, as shall be advised by the council of the defendant, that he will pay unto the plaintiff 100l. And licet the plaintiff hath made such a jointure of land in S. unto such yearly value for the use of his wife, by the advice of the council of the defendant, &c. here the plaintiff needs not to shew what manner of conveyance, or assurance was advised; for it is sufficient, if the consideration recited be proved in evidence with the circumstances; but in pleading, it is not traversable nor issuable. The third error is mistaken: the fourth is answered as the two first; for it is but matter of recital; and the consideration past and executed before the assumpsit, and not at the time of the assumpsit, and but an induction or conveyance to the promise; the fifth matter is mis-construed; for there are two wards of Farrington, infra, and extra; infra, the walls, and extra, the walls, and yet both, apud London, and extra is to be referred to Farrington, and not to London; and there ought to be made a point after extra; as Farrington extra; London. The sixth is mistaken; for there is no error in that: for the assignee is possessed, virtute dimissionis; for the original lease is the virtue and strength of the possession of the assignee: but if these exceptions had been material, yet forasmuch as the issue is not upon the assumpsit, for that is confessed by the defendant, and by that the recital, consideration, and all the special matters confessed to be true: but the defendant hath pleaded a new matter after the assumpsit, in discharge of the assumpsit, which discharge is found against him, all the particulars in which the errors are assigned, are out of the book; and now the matter of discharge is onely material: as in debt for arrearages of rent reserved on a lease for years, if the time and place of the making of the lease be not set forth in the declaration, the declaration is not good. But if the defendant plead a collateral matter; as release of the arrearages, or other such matter, now all the imperfections of the declaration are waved, &c. At another day the matter was argued again. There are three manner of considerations upon which an assumpsit may be grounded: 1. A debt precedent: 2. Where he to whom such a promise is made, is damnified by doing any thing, or spends his labour at the instance of the promiser, although no benefit cometh to the promiser; as I agree with a surgeon to cure a poor man (who is a stranger unto me) of a sore, who doth it accordingly, he shall have an action: 3. Or there is a present consideration, &c. The first exception was, because the assumpsit being laid to procure such a lease which another had, i.e. one A. it is not shewed in the declaration, in facto, that A. had such a lease, and if he had not any such lease, then there cannot be any consideration to procure it: for, ex nihilo, nihil fit. Secondly, the declara-[205]-tion is, that A. was possessed of a lease for years, to be ended and determined in an. 1606. without shewing any beginning of it; and although that lease be but matter of conveyance and inducement, yet, because it is the ground of the action, it ought to be certainly and sufficiently set forth. Thirdly, the lease to be procured, is laid to be made by a college in Cambridge, and it is not shewed for what term of years, i.e. for 21 years or under; for if it be above, then such lease is void. Fourthly, it is not laid in the declaration, that the lease was by writing, and then void; for a college cannot make a lease without writing; and it shall be intended it was made without deed, because it is not laid to be by deed: as if a corporation makes a lease for life, and afterwards granteth the reversion for years, he that will entitle himself to the said reversion, ought to say in pleading that he made the lease for life by deed, although the lease for life in such case be but matter of conveyance: fifthly, it is not laid in the declaration, that the lease to be assured was in esse, and had continuance at the time it was to be assured; for although it be laid to be in esse, at the time of the promise, yet being a particular interest, it shall not be intended to continue, if it be not specially shewed: as 10 H. 7. 26. Sixthly, here the plaintiff hath not cause of action, but Palmer, for the assumpsit upon which the action is grounded, the money is to be payable to Palmer, not to the plaintiff, 2 E. 4. 5. My bailiff lets my land to farm, rendring rent, he shall not have an action for the rent, but I my self, in whose right he leased: 25 Eliz. It was the case of one Crewe, I promised unto J. S. that in consideration that he will make unto me a lease for years of such lands, I will assign the same to his servant. If he will not make the lease, not J. S. but his servant shall have action upon the promise: and although the defendant hath pleaded collateral matter, by which the promise is confessed, yet the same doth not amend the matter; for if the declaration be insufficient, the Court, ex officio, ought to stay judgment: as 6 H. 7. 10. In trespass, the defendant pleads, that there was an accord betwixt them, that in satisfaction of the said trespass, he should pay to the plaintiff such a sum, and make two windows, the which sum he had paid, before the day, without speaking any thing of the windows, the plaintiff pleaded, no such accord, and it was found for the plaintiff; and although the plaintiff doth admit the plea as good, yet the Court, ex officio, shall stay the judgment: see the Book of Entries 4. A carpenter brought an action upon the case, and declared generally upon the assumpsit, pro diversis rebus vocat. Carpenters wares, & pro diversis laboribus per querent. at the instance of the defendant, in arte lignaria, &c. and holden good without any particulars. It was adjourned.

Sir Moile Finches Case.

A writ of error was brought by Payne, Treasurer of the Records of the King's Bench, in the Exchequer Chamber, upon a judgment given in the Court of Exchequer, upon an assignment of a lease for years, by the Earl of Oxford, to the Queen: one error is assigned, that whereas the issue was joined upon intrusion, in taking of the profits, and so two matters put in issue; the jury have found Payne guilty of intrusion; but have said nothing of the taking of the profits, and so the verdict doth not fully meet with the issue; but the great matter of the case was upon this point; the information is, that the assignment to the Queen was 16 Maii, the intrusion, 17 Maii, the [206] inrollment of the deed of assignment, the 18. of May. So it appeareth upon the record, that the intrusion is supposed to be done before the Queen hath any interest in the lands, in which the intrusion is supposed, for nothing was in the Queen before the inrollment; for the Queen is a corporation of State, of such prerogative and excellency, that she cannot give or take interest in any lands without matter of record: and this lease is a chattel real, and interest in lands: see as to the inrollment, 1 H. 7. 30, 31. 5 E. 4. 7. 7 E. 4. 16. But I grant that if the lessee for years be outlawed, the lease shall be in the King, without office, for the outlawry it self is a sufficient record to entitle the King to it: if the Queen makes a lease for years of land, rendring rent, with clause, that if the rent be behind, that the lease shall cease if the rent be not paid, it was agreed here in Sir Moile Finche's case, that the lessee continuing his possession, shall not be accounted an intruder before office thereof found; but he shall be accountant to the Queen for the profits, as bailiff of his own wrong. But here we are charged with intrusion: it hath been doubted, if personal things be in the King without office, 37 H. 6. but now it is clear that it is: as 35 E. 3. Br. Prærogat. 113. The villain of the King purchaseth goods, the property thereof is in the King without seisure, and so of all personal chattels, because transitory, 1 H. 7. 17. 4 H. 7. 1. 39 H. 6. 26. And here it appeareth upon record, that this deed of assignment, was delivered to Baron Clark, the 16 of May, at Westminster: and to that we say, that the said day was, Dies Ascentionis, & sic non juridicus, and so no Court there then holden, and then the said deed was not delivered in Court of Record, and then not delivered unto him as a Judge, but as a private person, although it was delivered to the use of the Queen: but in 37 H. 6. there is some opinion, that if such a deed be delivered in Court to one of the Barons, or be put into the King's coffers, that then it is a record. Atkinson contrary, And as to the first exception; it is to be known, that in every plea, where a contempt is laid to the charge of the defendant; he ought first to execute or clear the contempt; and therefore here, the exordium of the plea is, quoad venire vi & armis, & quicquid est in contemptum Dominæ Reginæ, nec non de tota ulteriore transgressione & contemptu per ipsos fieri supposit. ipse in nullo est inde culpabilis: and afterwards plead over; and so it is in an action of trespass: and also upon the statute of 8 H. 6. of forcible entry; and here the issue upon the contempt follows the other issue: for if the one issue be found against the defendant, so also is the other. As to the other point, I grant, that a corporation cannot take, or speak without writing: and the King being the corporation of corporations, and the chief of corporations, and who makes all corporations, cannot take without a writing of as high a nature: (scil.) record. And we have a record here (as it is granted of the other side) being inrolled the 18. of May, which was delivered the 16. of May; and then Payne, upon the whole matter, was the 17. of May an intruder, by relation of the deed to the time of the first delivery: and an intruder by his entry cannot gain any thing out of the Queen; and therefore the information upon the intrusion is, diversis diebus, & vicibus intrusit: although it be but one continued possession; and therefore at every instant, during his possession, he is an intruder: as unto the delivery of the deed of assignment upon the day of the Ascention, which is not dies juridicus, the same is not material, as is 12 E. 4. 8. by Pigot: if the day of the return of a writ, i.e. quarto die falls out in Die Dominica, yet it is good enough, although no Court can then be holden, but the day following, and the plea is not discontinued; and this delivery of the deed of assignment, might be out of term, and therefore at any day within the term, which is not dies juridicus, but contrary, of a thing which is necessarily to be done within the term: as in the case [207] between Fish and Broket, of proclamations made upon a fine: for a man may acknowledge a recognizance, or a deed to be inrolled in the time of Vacation, &c. Tanfield: As to the interest, the inrolment hath relation, but not as to the profits; for Payne cannot be an intruder, the 17 of May by any relation. Popham, the Queens Attorney, When an information upon intrusion and taking of the profits is here exhibited, the defendant ought to justify his entry; and if the entry be found against him, so as his entry is an intrusion, then the unlawfull taking of the profits is found also; and he said, that the deed acknowledged, and delivered to the Baron, is a record, although it be not enrolled, be the acknowledgment thereof either out of Court, or in Court: if an information upon a penal statute be exhibited unto a Baron of the Exchequer out of Court, and afterwards another informer exhibits another information upon the same statute for the same offence against the same person, and that is brought into the Court before the first, the first information shall be preferred, and the defendant shall answer to that, and not to the other; and for the exhibiting of it in Court, or out of Court, it is not material: and the assignment, when it is inrolled, hath relation unto the acknowledgment of it: a reversion is granted to one for life, the remainder to the King, the particular tenant attorns, the remainder is not in the King by the attornment, but if the deed be afterwards inrolled it shall be said to be in the King from the time of the attornment, and the King shall have the benefit of the whole mean profits from the time of the attornment: a lease for years is made by the King reserving rent, with clause of distress; that if the rent be not paid, that the lease shall be void, the rent is not paid, ten years after an office is found, the King shall be answered all the profits from the time of the default of payment of the rent; and although no intrusion can be laid on the information, 17 Maii, yet it shall be for the 18 day of May. Coke, The judgment for the Queen upon an information of intrusion, quod defend. de intrusione, transgressione, & contemptu prædict convincantur, &c. and afterwards a commission shall issue forth, to enquire of the mean profits, and there the defendant may shew the matter for to mitigate the damages: and if the intrusion be at any time in the information, it is well enough to have judgment; and in our case, the continuance is laid 18 Maii. Egerton, Solicitor General, The record doth warrant the judgment given upon it; for possession laid in the Queen is sufficient to maintain this information; and here Payne doth not answer to the title of the Queen, but traverseth the intrusion, and therefore being found an intruder by verdict, judgment ought to be given upon it, for the jury have found the intrusion generally, and not specially, the 17 of May, and that cannot be assigned for error; for it is part of the verdict of which error doth not lye, but attaint: for if any error was, the same was in the jury and not in the Court; which Manwood granted: Tanfield, As unto the case of continuance of an intrusion, it is clear, that every continuance ought to have a beginning; for a thing which hath not a beginning cannot be continued; and here is not any beginning; for the beginning which is laid in the information, is pretended to be, 17 Maii, and that cannot be for the cause aforesaid: Popham, If an information be brought of intrusion, as appears in many memorandums in the Exchequer, where, in truth, there is not any record to prove it, and the jury find the intrusion: will you have a writ of error upon it? and every continuance of intrusion, is intrusion: Anderson, The same matter had been good evidence, sed non habet locum hic.

CCLVII. BEALE AND LANGLEY'S CASE.

John Beale was plaintiff in a replevin, against Robert Langley and Roger Hill: the case was, that Henry, Earl of Arundel was seised of the manor of Bury in his demesn as of fee, whereof the place in which, was parcel demised and demiseable, according to the custome of the said manor by copy in fee, whereof Langley was a copiholder in fee, &c. and the said earl so seised, enfeoffed divers persons of the said manor unto the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of the Lord Lumley, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of the said earl, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, who made a lease of the said customary lands by indenture unto the plaintiff for 100 years; and the question was, if by this lease, the lands be so severed from the manor, that the copihold is extinct: Walmesly took exception to the pleading; for that Langley pleads, that the custome within the manor is, that if any copiholder seised of customary lands of the said manor dieth thereof seised, having many sons, that the youngest son shall inherit; and he sheweth, that the lord of the said manor granted to his father and his mother the said customary lands, by copy, to have to his said father and mother, and the heirs of his father, &c. And that his father died, and that his mother survived him and died, and he as youngest son, according to the custome entred, and he said, that this custome, set forth by the defendant, doth not maintain his entry; for the custome intendeth but a general and immediate descent upon a copy made unto a man, and to his heirs, but such is not the descent here, for the wife surviveth; during whose life, the heir cannot enter; nor is there here such estate in the father of the defendant unto whom the custome set forth in the avowry can extend; for the custome is alledged, where a copyholder hath a copyhold estate to him and his heirs. And here the title of the defendant is, that a customary estate was granted to the father and the mother, and the heirs of the father, so as this estate is not within the letter of the custome; and to that purpose he cited the case of Sir John Savage, late adjudged, where one entitled himself to a copihold in this manner; that within the manor, there is such a custome, that if one taketh to wife any customary tenant of the said manor in fee, and hath issue by her, he, if he over-live such wife, should be tenant by the curtesie, and the case in truth was. That he married a woman, who at the time of the marriage, had not any copihold, but afterwards, during the coverture, a copihold descended to her. In that case, it was holden, that no tenancy by the curtesie did accrue by that custome, which did not extend, but where the wife is a copiholder at the marriage; and a custome shall be in construction taken strictly, and shall not be extended beyond the words of it. And as to the matter in law, he said, that by this lease, the custome was gone, and then by consequence, the customary tenancy, as to that land is determined; for the estate of the copiholder is, secundum consuetudinem manerii. ad voluntatem dom. And now by the lease, Langley cannot hold, secundum consuetudinem manerii; for now the services reserved upon the copy, and the advantages of waste, and other forfeitures, are extinct; so that if notwithstanding the lease, the customary interest should endure, then such a copiholder should hold this land, discharged of all services, &c. in better estate than any freeholder at the common law, and because the services in law are discharge, and cannot be recovered, for that cause the customary interest [209] is determined; for the case is, 7 E. 4. 19. by Danby, that the copiholder shall have remedy against his lord, if he put him out, for he payes a fine when he enters; but here, during this lease, no fine can be paid upon any descent, &c. and the fine is the cause, for which the copiholder shall maintain his possession against the lord: but here no descent or surrender can be presented; for there is not any tenant who can do it; see 21 E. 4. 80. by Brian, as long as the copiholder payeth unto the lord the customs and services, if the lord putteth him out, he shall have an action of trespass: 42 E. 3. 25. If the copiholder will not do his services, the lord shall seize the lands: and he resembled this case, to the case where the King grants lands, pro. bis hominibus de D. the same is a good grant, and that onely in respect of the rent, and for the reason of that, it is a good corporation: but if the King releaseth the rent, the corporation is dissolved, and the grant is become void: Fenner, Serjeant, contrary; and he said, that by this lease, being the act of the lord himself, the customary interest is not determined, &c. And the whole Court was of clear opinion with Fenner, that the copihold did remain, for otherwise, by such practices of the lords, all the copiholders in England might be defeated; and if any prejudice be grown to the lord by this act, it is of his own doing, and against his own act he shall not be relieved: and by Periam, Justice, the lord by his act, i.e. the making of the lease, hath destroyed his seignory, and lost the services, as to this land: and Windham, Justice said, that the lord himself had destroyed the custome as to the services, but not as to the customary interest of the tenant; but the Lord Anderson was of opinion, that the rents and services do remain: and if the copiholder, after such lease committeth waste, that it is a forfeiture to the lord; and that will fall in evidence upon a trial, although such waste cannot be found by an ordinary presentment: and the same law which alloweth the copiholder his copihold interest against this lease, will allow unto the lord his rents and services: and he said, that the lord shall have the rents and services, and not the lessee, quod mirum, against his own lease; see 33 Eliz. between Murrel and Smith now reported by the Lord Coke in his 4 Report. fol. 20.

CCLVIII. Russel and Broker's Case.

Russel brought trespass against Broker, for cutting down of four oakes. The defendant pleaded, that the place where, &c. and that he is seised of a messuage in D. And that he, and all those whose estate he hath, &c. habere consuerunt, rationabile estoverium suum, for fuel, ad libitum suum capiendum in boscis, subboscis, & arboribus, ibidem crescentibus: and that, in quolibet tempore anni, but in fawning time; the plaintiff by replication, said, that the place where, is within the forrest of, &c. and that the defendant, and all those whose estate, &c. habere consueverunt rationabile estoverium suum de boscis, &c. per liberationem forrestarii, vel ejus deputati, prout boscus pati potest, & non ad exigentiam petentis: and upon that replication, the defendant did demur in law: and the opinion of the whole Court was, that judgment should be given against the plaintiff; for if he should oust the defendant of his prescription by the law of the forrest, he ought to have pleaded the law of the forrest in such case; viz. lex forrestæ est, &c. for the law of the forrest is not the common law of the land, and we are not bound to take notice of it, but it ought to be pleaded, or otherwise the plaintiff ought to have traversed the prescription of [210] the defendant, for here are two prescriptions; one pleaded by the defendant by way of bar, the other set forth by the plaintiff in his replication without any traverse of that with is alledged in the bar, which cannot be good; but if the plaintiff had shewed in his replication, lex forrestæ talis est, &c. then the prescription of the defendant had been answered without any more; for none can prescribe against a statute. Exception was taken to the bar, because the defendant had justified the cutting down of oaks, without alledging, that there was not any underwood, but the exception was not allowed; for he hath choice, ad libitum suum. Another exception was taken, because he hath not shewed, that at the time of the cutting, it was not fawning time; for at the fawning time his prescription did not extend to it and that was holden a good material exception; but because the plaintiff had replied; and upon this replication, the defendant demurred; the Court would not resort to the bar, but gave judgment upon the replication against the plaintiff.

CCLIX. Mich. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A black-smith of South-Mims, in the county of Middlesex, took a bond of another black-smith of the same town, that he should not exercise his trade or art of a black-smith within the same town, nor within a certain precinct of it; and upon that obligation, the obligee brought an action of debt in the Common Pleas, depending which, the obligor complained to the justices of peace of the said county upon the matter against the obligee, upon which the matter being found by examination, the justices committed the obligee to prison; and now, upon the whole matter, Puckering, Serjeant, prayed a habeas corpus for the said obligee to the Sheriff of Middlesex, and it was granted: and Fleetwood, Recorder of London, being at the Bar, the Court told him openly of this matter, that by the laws, justices of peace have not conusance of such offences, nor could meddle with them; for their power is limited by their commission and the statutes; and the recorder did much relye upon the opinion of Hull, 2 H. 5. 5. But by the clear opinion of the whole Court, although this Court, being a high Court, might punish such offences appearing before them on record, yet it did not follow that the justices of peace might so do: but as to the bond, the Court was clear of opinion, that it was void because it was against law.

CCLX. Trin. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A justicies issued forth to the Sheriff of H. for the debt of 40l. and the plea was determined before the under-sheriff in the absence of the sheriff, and it was now moved by Puckering, Serjeant, if a writ of error, or a writ of false judgment did lie in that case: and first, the opinion of the justices was, that the sheriff himself in his person ought to hold plea of a justicies; and if he maketh a precept or deputation to another, the same is meerly void: 34 H. 6. 48. And see the said case abridged; Fitz. Bar. 161. and it was said, that a justicies is not an original writ, but a commission to the sheriff, to hold plea, ultra 40s. and upon a judgment given upon a justicies, a writ of false judgment lieth, and not a writ of error: see for that, 7 E. 4. 23. And it was the opinion of Anderson, Chief Justice, that such judgment is utterly void, and coram non Judice.

Hamper was indicted upon the statute of 5 Eliz. of perjury, and in the body of the indictment, the record was, that he, falsa deceptive deposuit; whereas the statute is, wilfully; and although in the perclose of the indictment, the conclusion is, et sic commisit voluntarium perjurium: yet the opinion of the Court was, that the same doth not help the matter; and for that cause, the party was discharged: for, contra formam statuti, will not help the matter, nor supply it; and yet it was moved and urged, that contra formam statuti would help it, and it was holden in this case, that if a witness doth depose falsly, but the jury doth not give credit to it, nor give their verdict against his oath, although the party grieved cannot sue him: yet he may be punished at the King's suit.

Broccus, lord of a manor, covenanted with his copiholder, to assure to him and his heirs, the freehold and inheritance of the copihold, and the copiholder in consideration of the same performed, did covenant to pay such a sum. And it was the opinion of the whole Court, that the copiholder is not tied to pay the money before the assurance made, and the covenant performed: but if the words had [212] been in consideration of the said covenant to be performed, then he had been bound to pay the money presently, and he should have his remedy by covenant.

CCLXV. FOSTER'S CASE.

Note, it was said, and holden by the whole Court in this case, that in debt brought against executors, if the defendants plead, that the testator was bound in a recognizance, in such a sum, beyond which they have not any thing in their hands; that it is a good replication to say, that the recognizance was entred into for performance of covenants contained in certain indentures, of which covenants none are yet broken.

CCLXVI. PARTRIDGE'S CASE.

A quo warranto was brought against Partridge, in which case, it was holden by all the justices, that a man may prescribe to hold a leet oftener than twice in one year, and at other days than are set in the Statute of Magna Charta, cap. 35. because the said statute is in the affirmative; but Popham said, that one cannot prescribe against a statute, see for the same, Book of Entries, 13 E. 3. Leet 12. and he said, that the want of a tumbrel and pillory, is a good cause of forfeiture of the liberty: which Coke denied. And it was farther moved by Popham, that if a general pardon be granted with general exceptions in it, he that will take advantage of the same, ought to plead it, and shew that he is not any person excepted; for otherwise the Judges cannot allow him the benefit of it, because they do not know if he be a person excepted or not; but if there were special persons excepted by name, and none other excepted, but onely those persons, there the party needs not to plead it, for the Court may discern J. B. from J. D. See 8 E. 3. 7. and 26 H. 8. 7. If a man commits felony, and also treason, and afterwards comes a general pardon for the felony, but treason is excepted, and the party is arraigned of felony: by Coke, He shall have the benefit of the pardon; but Popham contrary, for he is disabled by the treason. And it was agreed by the whole Court, that in a quo warranto, it is not sufficient for the defendant to say, that such a subject hath lawfull interest to hold a leet, without making title to himself; for the writ is, quo warranto he claims, &c. And afterwards judgment was given for the Queen.

In a prohibition, the surmise was, that the exposition of statutes doth belong unto the Queen's Temporal Courts; and Arscot had sued in the Spiritual Court for tithes, whereas in truth, for not reading of the articles according to the statute of 13 Eliz. he was deprived, ipso facto, and so he was not parson: for which cause, Gawdy prayed a prohibition; for he said, that the surmise was good and suffi-[213]-cient: for the question is, parson, or not parson? and that shall be tried here by the common law. And I do not know that it hath ever been ruled here to the contrary before. Clench, Justice, It hath not been ruled to the contrary; yet because great inconvenience may arise upon the admitting of it, the Court hath taken order, that no prohibition shall be granted upon such a surmise, without great probability of the truth of the surmise: where a prohibition is awarded upon such a surmise, the party needs not to prove his surmise according to the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 13. for this surmise is conceived upon a cause of later time, since the said statute, and was not any cause to have a prohibition at the time of the said statute.

CCLXVIII. WINTER AND LOVEDAY'S CASE.

In an action of covenant by Winter against Loveday; it was found by special verdict, that Winter, by deed indented mortgaged to Loveday, a certain lease upon condition to pay 400l. to Loveday at a day certain, at the porch of such a church; and upon such payment, Winter to have back his lease; and Loveday covenanted, that upon repayment of the money he should have back all his evidences concerning the same: and it was farther found, that at the day of payment one Cornwallys sent unto Loveday to know if Loveday would receive the money which Winter owed to him, at his house, who answered that he was content, and he came there, and the money was told and delivered in bags to Loveday; but afterwards some contention did arise between Winter and Loveday for certain writings; for which cause Cornwallys said, that if they would not agree betwixt them, that they should not have his money. Whereupon Winter requested Cornwallis, that he might have the money to carry to the said porch of the said parish church, who was contented, and there Loveday came to receive it, and Winter would not pay it. Tanfield moved, that the same was a good payment to discharge the mortgage; for the money was told in the house of Cornwallis, and Loveday there put it up into bags; and the same is a good payment and receit: Coke contrary, Here is not any payment, for it was not the money of Winter, but of Cornwallis, as appeareth by the words of Cornwallis; (scil.) If they could not agree they should not have his money: also Winter requested Cornwallis, that he might have the money to carry to the porch of the parish church aforesaid, by which it appeareth, that it was not Winter's money. And for that cause, it was also the opinion of the Court, that the same was not any sufficient tender. See for this, the case of Watkins and Astwick, Hil. 28 Eliz.

CCLXXI. RICHMOND AND BUTCHER'S CASE.

In a replevin, the case was this; a man made a lease for years, reserving rent to the lessor, his executors and assigns, where the lessor had a fee-simple in the lands; it was holden by the Court, that the rent should go to the heir, notwithstanding the special reservation, because the words of the reservation are, During the term, and the other words, To his executors and assigns, shall be void, and then the rent shall go with the reversion to the heir, which see, 27 H. 8. 19. by Awdley: and it was said by some, that a rent reserved during the term shall go to the heir with the reversion: and 12 E. 4. was cited, where a rent reserved to the lessor and his assigns, should not go to the heir, and that these words, During the term, did not mend the matter; for the lessor might well overlive the term. But in the principal case, it was said by Periam, Justice, that the executors should not have the rent, for they have not the reversion; but if the lessor grants over the reversion, the grantee shall have the rent. And afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff; for it was in a replevin, and judgment was given for the avowant, who was heir to the lessor.

CCLXXII. Mich. 30 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In an action of trespass brought by a poor woman for breaking of her close; she declared of a continuando of the trespass, by six years and upon nihil dicit pleaded, she had judgment to recover; upon which issued forth a writ of enquiry of damages; and now came the poor woman, and shewed to the Court, that the jury had found too little damages, i.e. but 10s. whereas the land is worth 4l. per ann. and the trespass had continued by six years together, and prayed that the said writ might not be received, and that the Court would grant her another writ to have a melius inquirendum of the damages, but the whole Court denied to grant any such writ, for so there might be infinite enquiries: but sometimes, at the prayer of the defendant, when excessive damages are found, or any misdemeanours alledged in the plaintiff, procuring or using such a writ of enquiry of damages, we use to relieve the defendant, by granting and issuing forth of a new writ, but to the plaintiff never, because the suing forth of the writ is his own act: and by Rhodes, Justice, The late Countess of Darby [215] brought a writ of dower, and had judgment to recover; and she surmised that her husband died seised, and prayed a writ of enquiry of damages, and had it granted unto her; and because too small damages were found, she would have suppressed the said writ, and procured a new writ, but she could not obtain it; and at last she was driven to bring in the first writ, and so it was done.

CCLXXIII. Scrog's and Griffin's Case.

In an action upon the case, upon a promise by Scrogs, against Griffin; the plaintiff declared, that whereas such a day, one Brown and another, did run for a wager, from Saint-John-Street, to High-gate, that he of the said two, that first got thither, and came again, should have 5l. which wager, the said Brown did win; and whereas after the said match so performed, the said plaintiff affirmed, that there was deceit and covin in the performance of the said match, upon which the defendant, in consideration of twelve pence, to him delivered by the plaintiff, promised, that if the plaintiff can prove, that any deceit or covin was used, or practised in the performance of the said match, that then upon request, he should pay to the plaintiff 5l. And upon non assumpsit pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff, and it was moved by Foster, in arrest of judgment, that here is not any request set forth in the declaration: and also, that this deceit is enquired of in London, whereas it ought to be in Middlesex where the race was run: and it was agreed by all the justices, that the proof ought to be made in this action, as in the common cases of voyages: and that request now is but matter of conformity, and not of necessity. Wray, Justice, It is clear, that always proof ought to be as it is here; if not, that the matter be referred to a special proof, before a person certain. And as to the trial, the deceit is not in issue, but onely the promise; and therefore the issue is well tried in London: also this action here includes proof and request: for there cannot be made any other proof, and the proof is the effect; for which cause he concluded, that judgment should be entred for the plaintiff, which was done accordingly.

CCLXXIV. FULLER AND TRIMWELL'S CASE.

[See Durant & Co. v. Roberts and Keighley, Maxsted & Co. [1900], 1 Q. B. 649.]

In a replevin by Fuller, against Trimwell, who made conusance, as bailiff to one house for damage fesance, the plaintiff in Bar of the conusance shewed, that one A. T. did pretend right to the land where, &c. and the defendant, in the right of the said A. T. took the cattel, &c, Absque hoc, that he took them as bailiff to the said house, upon which the defendant did demur in law; and it was argued by Shuttleworth, Serjeant, that the traverse is not good, which see, 26 H. 8. 8. 5 H. 7. 2. Not his bailiff; but if the truth of the case be so, he may plead of his own wrong, without such cause, &c. And see also, 28 H. 6. 4. The commandment is not traverseable, but in special cases, where the commandment determines the interest of the other party, which see, 13 H. 7. 12, 13. in the case of the Earl of Suffolk in trespass, the defendant pleaded. that before the trespass, the plaintiff was seised, and thereof enfeoffed one B. by whose commandment he entred, to which the plaintiff said, that after the feoffment, and before the trespass, the said B. leased to the plain-[216]-tiff, to hold at will, absque hoc, that the said B. did command him; and that was holden a good traverse; for the commandment determines that lease at will; and in the principal case, all the justices were of clear opinion, that the traverse is good; and they all said, that the custos brevium had shewed to them many presidents thereof, see 15 H. 7. 17. and see also, 7 H. 4. 101, 102. In trespass for taking of cattel, the defendant did justifie as servant to such a one for rent arrere, due to his master; the plaintiff, replicando said, that the defendant was not bailiff at the time of the taking, where it is said by Gascoigne, that if the defendant takes the cattel, claiming property, as a heriot due to himself, although that afterwards the lord agrees to the distress, as taken for rent arrere; yet he cannot be said his bailiff at the time of the distress, which was granted by Rhodes, Periam and Windham: and as to that which hath been objected, that if this traverse be allowed, the meaning of the party shall be drawn in question; i.e. the meaning of him who took the cattel, the same is not any mischief, for so it is in other cases; as in the case of recaption, see 9 H. 6. 1. 45 E. 3, 4.

PASCH. 16 ELIZ. IN THE KING'S BENCH.

CCLXXV. HUMPHRESTON'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, it was found by special verdict, that W. Humphreston seised of the manor of Humphreston, suffered a common recovery to be had thereof by Kinnersley and Fowk in the writ of entry in the post, to the intent that they should make an estate to the said W. Humphreston, and Elionar his wife for their lives, the remainder, seniori puero dicti W. and to the heirs of the body dicti senioris pueri legitime procreat. the remainder to the heirs of the body of the said W. Humphreston, with divers remainders over. And afterwards the recoverers in December following, by indenture made an estate accordingly, and made livery to W. Humphreston and his wife; and afterwards, in November, 2 E. 6. by indenture between the said W. Humphreston of the one party, and Kinnersley on the other part, the said W. Humphreston did covenant with the said Kinnersley, to do all such lawfull and reasonable things for to assure the said lands unto the use of the said W. Humphreston and Elionar his wife for their lives, and afterwards, to the use of the eldest child of the body of the said W. Humphreston lawfully begotten, and to the heirs of the body of the said eldest child of the body of the said W. Humphreston; and after to divers other uses over; and afterwards, Ter. Pasch. 2 E. 6. W. Humphreston and Elionar his wife, levyed a fine of the said land to C. and B. in fee, to the use of the said indenture; Elionar died, W. Humphreston married another wife, and had issue a daughter, named Frances, and afterwards had issue a son, named William, and died. William the son, being of the age of six years, entred into the lands, and leased the same to the plaintiff for years, who being ejected by the defendant, brought the ejectione firmæ: and this special verdict. And the points moved upon it were argued by Atkins, Phetiplace, Fenner, Fleetwood, Plowden and Bromley, and afterwards this case was argued by the justices: and Gawdy, puisne Justice conceived, that judgment ought to be given for the plaintiff: first, he conceived, that this lease for years made by the infant, without deed and without rent reserved is not void; so as every stranger shall take advantage of it, but onely voidable; for an infant may make a bond, and a contract for his commodity and profit, and the same shall bind him; as for his meat and drink, apparel, &c. But [217] if upon such lease he had reserved a small rent, as one peny, where the land was worth 100l. per ann. such a lease had been void; and in our case, this lease was made upon the land, and was made for to try the title to it, which is a good consideration, and to the profit of the infant, and for his advancement, and then the lease is not void. It hath been objected, that here the recovery being suffered to the intent that the recoverers should make an estate, ut supra, &c. that the use shall rise presently upon the recovery to him who suffered the recovery, and then the recoverers could not make livery unto him; he held strongly, that the use and the possession should be adjudged in the recoverers, untill they made the estates, &c. for they otherwise could not make the estates, &c. and these words [to the intent] shall be construed, that they shall have the lands, untill they made the estates, &c. and he held, that the remainder limited, seniori puero, where there is not any, in rerum natura, is good enough: as a remainder limited to him who shall first come to Pauls. And he conceived, that the son should take this remainder, and not the daughter: and he conceived, that the estate tail here, was not executed, i.e. the second intail; divers authors of grammer, have been produced to prove, that puer, may be taken both ways, tam puer, quam puella, Deporterius, Calapine, Melancthon, and the grammer allowed, but I conceive, that puer is a word proper for a boy, and puella for a maid; and where we have proper words, we ought not to judge but according to them; and because the word is doubtfull, we ought to consider the cause upon the circumstances, and therefore it is to be intended that W. Humphreston had a greater desire that his son should have his inheritance, than his daughter, if there be not some special matter to prove that the intent of the father was for his daughter. Southcote, Justice, agreed with Gawdy in the first point; and also that the recoverers have convenient time to make the estates; and that they are to make the same without request for the benefit of the wife, who is a stranger to it, and is to have the lands for her joynture; and he cited the case of the Abbat of York, 44 E. 3. 8. and 9. where the difference is taken between a feoffment made upon condition to re-enfeoff the feoffor, or to enfeoff a stranger: and here in our case the feoffment is made in convenient time, and here is sufficient consideration, that the recoverers shall be seised to their own uses, untill, &c. And these words, [ea intentione] shall be taken for a condition: and also that this remainder limited, seniori puero, is good notwithstanding that there be not any senior puer alive at the time. And as to the word (puer) he held, that it did extend to both sexes indifferently; and because it is doubtfull what sex the father intended, we are to construe the same upon the circumstances, which appear upon the parts of the indentures: and here it appeareth upon the indenture, that he hath explained his mind, (scil.) eldest child, be it male or female: as if I have two sons named J. and I devise my lands, or limit a remainder to J. my son, the law shall construe this devise to extend to my younger son; for without devise or limitation my eldest son should have it. But if J. S. hath two sons, known by the names of A. and I devise lands to A. son of J. S. there I ought to explain my meaning openly: and he conceived, that the estate tail is executed defeasiable in W. Humphreston, upon issue afterwards had; and that the daughter should have the lands, and not the son; and if the fine destroy the remainder in abeyance limited to the eldest child, then the said eldest child shall have it, de novo, by the later conveyance. And as to the warranty of the fine, because the possession of the conusees is removed by the statute of 27 H. 8. to the daughter, she shall not have the benefit of the warranty as to vouch, but she shall rebutt: as 22 Ass. 37. 69.

where a feoffment in fee is made to my villein with warranty [218] and before that the feoffor dieth, I enter upon my villein, so as the warranty upon the death of the warrantor is not attached upon the possession of my villein, I shall not have advantage of that warranty: a disseisor makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, the disseisee re-leaseth the feoffee with warranty, the disseisor entreth for the condition broken; now the disseisor shall rebutt by that warranty, but not vouch. And here in our case, the fine is a discontinuance, so as the son is put to his action, if he had right, and then the warranty shall bind him; but contrary, if his entry be lawfull. And as to the lease made by the infant, he conceived that it being made without rent, it was meerly void, for it was without consideration. Wray, Chief Justice, As to the first point, he was of opinion, that the recoverers shall be seised to their own use, untill they make the estate for that was the use implied; for all uses are directed and ruled by the intent implied or expressed of him, to whom the land is; and his intent was, that such estates should be made, and to such purpose the recovery was suffered: as if I enfeoff A. unto the use of B. for his life, there it is implied, that B. shall be seised of the fee to my use, I covenant, that J. S. shall take the profits of my lands for his life, this is a good use of the lands for his life; and he held, that the recoverors should be seised to their own use, untill, &c. and the recoverers ought to make the estates within convenient time, or otherwise the use should be revested again in him who suffered the recovery; and here the estate was made within convenient time: and he said, that in every case where a remainder is limited in abeyance to one by a proper name, the same is not good, but by a general name it is good enough if the party be in esse when the remainder falls: as a remainder limited upon an estate for life unto the first son, or daughter of J. S. where J. S. at the time hath not any son or daughter, the same is good, if such person shall be in esse, at the time of the death of the tenant for life, 17 E. 3. A remainder limited filio primo genito, &c. and 3 E. 3. Fitz. Tail. 8. Land given to J. S. et uxori quam primo matrimonio duxerit in uxorem, and afterwards he taketh a wife, she shall take by the same conveyance. And as to the warranty, this fine with warranty was levyed to C. and B. unto the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of the eldest child, &c. and he intended, that the daughter should not have the benefit of this warranty: for by the statute, the possession is removed, and transferred in the post before the warranty could attach: and therefore the same shall not bind the son, neither by voucher, nor by rebutter: but tenant by the curtesie shall have benefit of the warranty; for although he be in the post, yet he continueth the estate which was made to the wife. And as to the point in question, we ought to consider, that the Statute of 27 H. 8. of Uses is, that cestuy que use shall have the lands in such plight as he had the use, which was without warranty; and therefore it shall be transferred into possession without warranty: as to the lease made by the infant without rent, profit, or other recompence, he conceived the same to be utterly void; as if he grant a rent, or an advowson, he may say, that he did not grant, &c. for the thing included in the deed, doth not pass, although he delivereth the deed of grant, with his own hand: two joynt-tenants within age, one makes a lease of years, and dieth, the other shall avoid it; for the lease is utterly void, of which every stranger may take advantage; but of acts voidable it is otherwise: as two infants joynt-tenants, the one leaseth for life, and makes livery in person, and dieth, the other shall not avoid it: two joynt-tenants, the one maketh a feoffment upon condition, and dieth, the other shall not take benefit of the condition; but here the lease is meerly void, of which every stranger shall take advantage, and therefore upon this point the plaintiff shall be barred. And also he was of opinion, that [219] this remainder in abeyance limited, seniori puero, was not destroyed by the fine, for it is in the consideration of the law, and so preserved by the law; and therefore a descent in the time of vacation of an abbat, shall not bind the successor; and so where the party is beyond the seas; for such persons and their estates, the law privilegeth and preserveth: so a remainder limited to the right heirs of J. S. And where the King seiseth by reason of a ward, and during such seisin of the King, a descent is cast, the same shall not bind him who hath right; for he could not enter upon the possession of the King: and by the statute of 32 H. 8. a recovery had against tenant for life, the remainder unto the right heirs of J. S. who is alive at the time of the recovery, is not helped by the statute of 32 H. 8. For the words of the
